

International LAW

Eighth Edition

Malcolm N. Shaw

CAMBRIDGE

International Law

Eighth Edition

International Law is the definitive and authoritative text on the subject, offering Shaw's unbeatable combination of clarity of expression and academic rigour and ensuring both understanding and critical analysis in an engaging and authoritative style. Encompassing the leading principles, practice and cases, and retaining and developing the detailed references which encourage and assist the reader in further study, this new edition motivates and challenges students and professionals while remaining accessible and engaging.

Fully updated to reflect recent case law and treaty developments, this edition contains an expanded treatment of the relationship between international and domestic law, the principles of international humanitarian law, and international criminal law alongside additional material on international economic law.

Malcolm N. Shaw, QC, is a practising barrister at Essex Court Chambers and Senior Fellow at the Lauterpacht Centre for International Law at the University of Cambridge. One of the world's leading international lawyers, he is an Associé of the Institut de Droit International, Trustee of the British Institute of International and Comparative Law and a founding member of Curatorium, Xiamen Academy of International Law, China. He has been awarded the decoration of 'Officier de l'Ordre de la Valeur' by the Republic of Cameroon.

From the 6th edition

“When I was teaching, Shaw’s International Law was my textbook of choice for the students. I continue today to find this book very useful and well organized. It is good news that a sixth edition guarantees that it remains thoroughly contemporary, with new chapters added and everything updated.”

Dame Rosalyn Higgins, President of the International Court of Justice

“Malcolm Shaw’s International Law has been an indispensable resource for students of international law since its first publication in 1977. It gives an accurate and well-balanced account of the development and current state of the law. In light of recent developments, the new chapters on international criminal law and the International Court of Justice are welcome. I warmly recommend Shaw to anyone studying international law at undergraduate level.”

James Crawford, The Lauterpacht Centre for International Law, University of Cambridge

“An outstanding treatise which I use regularly in the course of my work at the Court. It excels in precision, comprehensiveness and topicality. On many issues, like questions of territory, it has no equal in any language.”

Bruno Simma, Judge, International Court of Justice.

From the 7th edition

“With its well organized structure and clarity of exposition, Shaw’s International Law has long been established as the pre-eminent textbook on international law for students. It is, however, much more than that; researchers and practitioners will find this comprehensive and up-to-date survey of the whole field of international law invaluable.”

Sir Christopher Greenwood, Judge of the International Court of Justice

“By now, generations of international lawyers have learnt their international law from the present textbook. Over the years, Shaw has become the new Oppenheim. Today, Shaw is probably the best textbook on international law. It is, without doubt, the most comprehensive and most up-to-date exposition of the subject. The author displays a masterful treatment of the material. There is no incident of State practice, treaty, Security Council resolution, or court decision of note that is not dealt with in Shaw. If for no other reason than that, this book is an indispensable companion for any student, academic or practitioner of international law.”

Stefan Talmon, University of Bonn

“Malcolm Shaw’s International Law is the established teaching tool for students in the field. It is of no less use to practitioners, judges and arbitrators. It is lucid, balanced and comprehensive. Professor Shaw’s seventh edition maintains the currency of this important treatise.”

Stephen M. Schwebel, former President of the International Court of Justice

“This latest edition of Professor Shaw’s now classic textbook continues to strike that difficult balance between detail and accessibility. Comprehensive in its coverage, broad in its scope and situating the development of the law in its political and historic context, it is an essential textbook for all students of international law.”

Urfan Khaliq, Cardiff University

“The seventh edition of Malcolm Shaw’s International Law has firmly confirmed its place among the leading textbooks of international law in the world. It is an indispensable source of knowledge for anyone studying international law.”

Malgosia Fitzmaurice, Queen Mary University of London

“Shaw’s International Law has been my companion in teaching undergraduate and graduate courses in international law since the early 1990s. The book provides a rich source that allows them not only insights into the details of the many areas of international law, but also to engage in current debates on how international law from a practical and academic point of view is challenged by the many developments in international society. I have not yet come across a textbook that combines these qualities in such a superb manner.”

Marcel Brus, University of Groningen

International Law

EIGHTH EDITION

Malcolm N. Shaw QC

Barrister at Essex Court Chambers and Senior Fellow at the Lauterpacht Centre for International Law, University of Cambridge

 CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA

477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia

4843/24, 2nd Floor, Ansari Road, Daryaganj, Delhi – 110002, India

79 Anson Road, #06–04/06, Singapore 079906

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning, and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781107188471

DOI: 10.1017/9781316979815

© Malcolm N. Shaw 2017

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2017

Printed in the United Kingdom by TJ International Ltd. Padstow, Cornwall

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Names: Shaw, Malcolm N. (Malcolm Nathan), 1947– author.

Title: International law / Malcolm N. Shaw QC, Essex Court Chambers.

Description: Eighth edition. | Cambridge, United Kingdom ; New York, NY, USA : Cambridge University Press, 2017.

Identifiers: LCCN 2017023185 | ISBN 9781107188471 (hardback)

Subjects: LCSH: International law. | BISAC: LAW / International.

Classification: LCC KZ3275.S53 A35 2017 | DDC 341–dc23

LC record available at <https://lccn.loc.gov/2017023185>

ISBN 978-1-107-18847-1 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-316-63853-8 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Web sites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Web sites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

For my wife Judith

Contents

| | |
|---|--------|
| Preface to the Eighth Edition | xxi |
| Table of Cases | xxii |
| Table of Treaties and Selected Other International Instruments | xlvi |
| List of Abbreviations | lxxxvi |

1 The Nature and Development of International Law 1

| | |
|---|----|
| Law and Politics in the World Community | 2 |
| The Role of Force | 3 |
| The International System | 4 |
| The Function of Politics | 8 |
| Historical Development | 10 |
| Early Origins | 10 |
| The Middle Ages and the Renaissance | 14 |
| The Founders of Modern International Law | 16 |
| Positivism and Naturalism | 18 |
| The Nineteenth Century | 20 |
| The Twentieth Century | 22 |
| Communist Approaches to International Law | 23 |
| The 'Developing Countries' | 28 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 31 |

2 International Law Today 32

| | |
|--|----|
| The Expanding Legal Scope of International Concern | 32 |
| Modern Theories and Interpretations | 36 |
| Positive Law and Natural Law | 36 |
| New Approaches | 40 |
| The Fragmentation of International Law? | 48 |
| Conclusion | 49 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 50 |

3 Sources 51

| | |
|-------------------|----|
| Custom | 53 |
| Introduction | 53 |
| The Material Fact | 56 |

| | |
|--|------------|
| What is State Practice? | 60 |
| Opinio Juris | 62 |
| Protest, Acquiescence and Change in Customary Law | 66 |
| Regional and Local Custom | 68 |
| Treaties | 69 |
| General Principles of Law | 72 |
| Equity and International Law | 78 |
| Judicial Decisions | 81 |
| Writers | 83 |
| Other Possible Sources of International Law | 84 |
| The International Law Commission | 89 |
| Other Bodies | 90 |
| Unilateral Acts | 90 |
| Hierarchy of Sources and Jus Cogens | 91 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 95 |
| 4 International Law and Municipal Law | 96 |
| The Theories | 97 |
| The Role of Municipal Rules in International Law | 100 |
| International Law before Municipal Courts | 103 |
| The United Kingdom | 105 |
| Customary International Law | 106 |
| Treaties | 112 |
| The United States | 119 |
| Other Countries | 126 |
| (i) Other Common Law and Related Legal Systems | 126 |
| (ii) Civil Law Systems | 130 |
| (iii) Conclusion | 135 |
| Non-Justiciability, Act of State and Related Doctrines | 138 |
| Executive Certificates | 152 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 154 |
| 5 The Subjects of International Law | 155 |
| Legal Personality – Introduction | 155 |
| States | 156 |
| Creation of Statehood | 157 |
| Self-Determination and the Criteria of Statehood | 162 |
| Recognition | 164 |
| Extinction of Statehood | 164 |
| The Fundamental Rights of States | 166 |
| Independence | 166 |
| Equality | 168 |
| Peaceful Co-Existence | 169 |
| Protectorates and Protected States | 170 |
| Federal States | 171 |
| Sui Generis Territorial Entities | 176 |
| Mandated and Trust Territories | 176 |
| Germany 1945 | 178 |
| Condominium | 179 |
| International Administration of Territories | 180 |
| Taiwan | 183 |
| The ‘Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus’ (TRNC) | 184 |

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Saharan Arab Democratic Republic | 185 |
| Kosovo | 185 |
| Palestine | 186 |
| Various Secessionist Claimants | 188 |
| Associations of States | 190 |
| Conclusions | 193 |
| Special Cases | 193 |
| The Sovereign Order of Malta | 193 |
| The Holy See and the Vatican City | 194 |
| Insurgents and Belligerents | 195 |
| National Liberation Movements (NLMs) | 195 |
| International Public Companies | 196 |
| Transnational Corporations | 197 |
| The Right of All Peoples to Self-Determination | 198 |
| The Establishment of the Legal Right | 198 |
| The Definition of Self-Determination | 202 |
| Individuals | 204 |
| International Organisations | 205 |
| The Acquisition, Nature and Consequences of Legal Personality – Some Conclusions | 206 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 209 |

6 The International Protection of Human Rights 210

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Nature of Human Rights | 210 |
| Ideological Approaches to Human Rights in International Law | 212 |
| The Development of International Human Rights Law | 213 |
| Some Basic Principles | 215 |
| Domestic Jurisdiction | 215 |
| The Exhaustion of Domestic or Local Remedies Rule | 215 |
| Priorities of Rights | 216 |
| Customary International Law and Human Rights | 217 |
| The United Nations System – General | 217 |
| The Protection of the Collective Rights of Groups and Individuals | 221 |
| Prohibition of Discrimination | 221 |
| The Principle of Self-Determination as a Human Right | 223 |
| The Protection of Minorities | 226 |
| The United Nations System – Implementation | 231 |
| Political Bodies | 231 |
| Expert Bodies Established by UN Organs | 234 |
| The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights | 234 |
| Expert Bodies Established under Particular Treaties | 236 |
| The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination | 236 |
| The Human Rights Committee | 238 |
| The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women | 244 |
| The Committee against Torture | 246 |
| The Committee on the Rights of the Child | 249 |
| The Committee on the Protection of Migrant Workers | 251 |
| The Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities | 251 |
| The Committee on Enforced Disappearances | 252 |
| Conclusions | 252 |
| The Regional Protection of Human Rights | 255 |
| Europe | 255 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| The European Convention on Human Rights | 255 |
| The Convention System | 259 |
| The European Social Charter | 266 |
| The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment | 267 |
| The Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities | 269 |
| The European Union | 271 |
| The OSCE (Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe) | 273 |
| The CIS Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms | 276 |
| The Inter-American Convention on Human Rights | 277 |
| The Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights | 283 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 287 |

7 Individual Criminal Responsibility in International Law 288

| | |
|---|-----|
| International Criminal Courts and Tribunals | 289 |
| The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY) | 292 |
| The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) | 295 |
| The Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunals | 297 |
| The International Criminal Court (ICC) | 298 |
| Hybrid Courts and Other Internationalised Domestic Courts and Tribunals | 305 |
| The Special Court for Sierra Leone | 305 |
| Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia | 308 |
| Kosovo Regulation 64 Panels | 309 |
| East Timor Special Panels for Serious Crimes | 311 |
| The Bosnia War Crimes Chamber | 312 |
| The Special Tribunal for Lebanon | 313 |
| The Iraqi High Tribunal | 314 |
| The Serbian War Crimes Chamber | 315 |
| International Crimes | 315 |
| Genocide | 316 |
| Prohibition of Genocide | 316 |
| War Crimes | 322 |
| Crimes against Humanity | 324 |
| Aggression | 326 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 328 |

8 Recognition 329

| | |
|--|-----|
| Recognition of States | 330 |
| Recognition of Governments | 336 |
| De Facto and de Jure Recognition | 341 |
| Premature Recognition | 341 |
| Implied Recognition | 343 |
| Conditional Recognition | 345 |
| Collective Recognition | 345 |
| Withdrawal of Recognition | 345 |
| Non-Recognition | 347 |
| The Legal Effects of Recognition | 349 |
| Internationally | 349 |
| Internally | 349 |
| The UK | 350 |

| | |
|---------------------------------|-----|
| The USA | 357 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 360 |

9 Territory 361

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Concept of Territory in International Law | 361 |
| Territorial Sovereignty | 363 |
| New States and Title to Territory | 365 |
| The Acquisition of Additional Territory | 367 |
| Boundary Treaties and Boundary Awards | 367 |
| Accretion | 369 |
| Cession | 369 |
| Conquest and the Use of Force | 371 |
| The Exercise of Effective Control | 372 |
| Intertemporal Law | 377 |
| Critical Date | 378 |
| Sovereign Activities (Effectivités) | 379 |
| The Role of Subsequent Conduct: Recognition, Acquiescence and Estoppel | 382 |
| Conclusions | 386 |
| Territorial Integrity, Self-Determination and Sundry Claims | 387 |
| The Doctrine of Uti Possidetis | 391 |
| Beyond Uti Possidetis | 394 |
| International Boundary Rivers | 396 |
| 'The Common Heritage of Mankind' | 396 |
| The Polar Regions | 397 |
| Leases and Servitudes | 401 |
| The Law of Outer Space | 403 |
| The Definition and Delimitation of Outer Space | 404 |
| The Regime of Outer Space | 405 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 409 |

10 The Law of the Sea 410

| | |
|---|-----|
| The Territorial Sea | 412 |
| Internal Waters | 412 |
| Baselines | 414 |
| Bays | 417 |
| Islands | 419 |
| Archipelagic States | 420 |
| The Width of the Territorial Sea | 422 |
| The Juridical Nature of the Territorial Sea | 422 |
| The Right of Innocent Passage | 423 |
| Jurisdiction over Foreign Ships | 426 |
| International Straits | 427 |
| The Contiguous Zone | 429 |
| The Exclusive Economic Zone | 431 |
| The Continental Shelf | 434 |
| Definition | 436 |
| The Rights and Duties of the Coastal State | 438 |
| Maritime Delimitation | 439 |
| Conclusion | 451 |
| Landlocked States | 452 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| The High Seas | 453 |
| Jurisdiction on the High Seas | 455 |
| Exceptions to the Exclusivity of Flag-State Jurisdiction | 457 |
| Right of Visit | 457 |
| Piracy | 458 |
| The Slave Trade | 459 |
| Unauthorised Broadcasting | 460 |
| Hot Pursuit | 460 |
| Collisions | 461 |
| Treaty Rights and Agreements | 461 |
| Pollution | 463 |
| Straddling Stocks | 466 |
| The International Seabed | 469 |
| Introduction | 469 |
| The 1982 Law of the Sea Convention (Part XI) | 470 |
| The Reciprocating States Regime | 471 |
| The 1994 Agreement on Implementation of the Seabed Provisions of the Convention on the Law of the Sea | 472 |
| The International Seabed Authority | 473 |
| Settlement of Disputes | 474 |
| The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea | 476 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 482 |

11 Jurisdiction 483

| | |
|---|-----|
| The Principle of Domestic Jurisdiction | 485 |
| Legislative, Executive and Judicial Jurisdiction | 486 |
| Civil Jurisdiction | 487 |
| Criminal Jurisdiction | 488 |
| The Territorial Principle | 488 |
| The Nationality Principle | 493 |
| The Passive Personality Principle | 497 |
| The Protective Principle | 499 |
| The Universality Principle | 500 |
| War Crimes, Crimes against Peace and Crimes against Humanity | 500 |
| Treaties Providing for Jurisdiction | 504 |
| Illegal Apprehension of Suspects and the Exercise of Jurisdiction | 509 |
| The US Alien Tort Statute | 511 |
| Extradition | 514 |
| Extraterritorial Jurisdiction | 515 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 522 |

12 Immunities from Jurisdiction 523

| | |
|---|-----|
| Sovereign Immunity | 523 |
| The Absolute Immunity Approach | 526 |
| The Restrictive Approach | 529 |
| Sovereign and Non-Sovereign Acts | 532 |
| State Immunity and Violations of Human Rights | 537 |
| Commercial Acts | 540 |
| Contracts of Employment | 546 |
| Other Non-Immunity Areas | 548 |

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Personality Issue – Instrumentalities and Parts of the State | 549 |
| The Personality Issue – Immunity for Senior Government Figures | 554 |
| Waiver of Immunity | 559 |
| Pre-Judgment Attachment | 561 |
| Immunity from Execution | 562 |
| The Burden and Standard of Proof | 566 |
| Diplomatic Law | 567 |
| The Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations, 1961 | 568 |
| The Inviolability of the Premises of the Mission | 569 |
| The Diplomatic Bag | 573 |
| Diplomatic Immunities – Property | 576 |
| Diplomatic Immunities – Personal | 577 |
| Waiver of Immunity | 582 |
| Consular Privileges and Immunities: The Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 | 583 |
| The Convention on Special Missions, 1969 | 585 |
| The Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organisations of a Universal Character, 1975 | 587 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 588 |

13 State Responsibility 589

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Nature of State Responsibility | 591 |
| The Question of Fault | 593 |
| Attribution | 594 |
| Ultra vires acts | 597 |
| State Control and Responsibility | 598 |
| Mob Violence, Insurrections and Civil Wars | 599 |
| Circumstances Precluding Wrongfulness | 601 |
| Invocation of State Responsibility | 605 |
| The Consequences of Internationally Wrongful Acts | 606 |
| Cessation | 606 |
| Reparation | 606 |
| Serious Breaches of Peremptory Norms (Jus Cogens) | 611 |
| Diplomatic Protection and Nationality of Claims | 612 |
| The Exhaustion of Local Remedies | 620 |
| The Treatment of Aliens | 622 |
| The Relevant Standard of Treatment | 623 |
| The Protection of Foreign Property and Investments | 626 |
| The Property Question | 628 |
| The Nature of Expropriation | 629 |
| Public Purposes | 631 |
| Non-Discrimination | 632 |
| Compensation | 632 |
| Bilateral Investment Treaties | 635 |
| Lump-Sum Agreements | 638 |
| The Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency | 639 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 639 |

14 International Environmental Law 640

| | |
|--|-----|
| State Responsibility and the Environment | 645 |
|--|-----|

| | |
|--|-----|
| The Basic Duty of States | 645 |
| The Appropriate Standard | 647 |
| Damage Caused | 648 |
| Liability for Damage Caused by Private Persons | 650 |
| Prevention of Transboundary Harm from Hazardous Activities | 651 |
| The Problems of the State Responsibility Approach | 652 |
| International Co-operation – Relevant Principles | 653 |
| Use of Territory | 653 |
| Environmental Impact Assessments | 655 |
| The Precautionary Principle | 657 |
| Sustainable Development | 658 |
| The Polluter Pays | 659 |
| Atmospheric Pollution | 660 |
| Ozone Depletion and Climate Change | 663 |
| Outer Space | 668 |
| International Watercourses | 670 |
| Ultra-Hazardous Activities | 673 |
| Nuclear Activities | 674 |
| The Provision of Information | 675 |
| The Provision of Assistance | 676 |
| Nuclear Safety | 677 |
| Civil Liability | 677 |
| Hazardous Wastes | 679 |
| Marine Pollution | 680 |
| Pollution from Ships | 681 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 683 |

15 The Law of Treaties 684

| | |
|---|-----|
| The Making of Treaties | 688 |
| Formalities | 688 |
| Consent | 689 |
| Consent by Signature | 690 |
| Consent by Exchange of Instruments | 691 |
| Consent by Ratification | 691 |
| Consent by Accession | 692 |
| Reservations to Treaties | 693 |
| Entry into Force of Treaties | 701 |
| The Application of Treaties | 702 |
| Third States | 703 |
| The Amendment and Modification of Treaties | 705 |
| Treaty Interpretation | 706 |
| Invalidity, Termination and Suspension of the Operation of Treaties | 711 |
| General Provisions | 711 |
| Invalidity of Treaties | 712 |
| Municipal Law | 712 |
| Error | 713 |
| Fraud and Corruption | 713 |
| Coercion | 714 |
| Jus Cogens | 715 |
| Consequences of Invalidity | 716 |
| The Termination of Treaties | 716 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| Termination by Treaty Provision or Consent | 716 |
| Material Breach | 717 |
| Supervening Impossibility of Performance | 719 |
| Fundamental Change of Circumstances | 720 |
| Dispute Settlement | 722 |
| Treaties between States and International Organisations | 722 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 724 |

16 State Succession 725

| | |
|---|-----|
| Continuity and Succession | 727 |
| Succession to Treaties | 732 |
| Categories of Treaties: Territorial, Political and Other Treaties | 733 |
| Succession to Treaties Generally | 735 |
| Absorption and Merger | 736 |
| Cession of Territory from One State to Another | 737 |
| Separation from an Existing State to Form a New State or States | 738 |
| 'Newly Independent States' | 740 |
| Dissolution of States | 742 |
| International Human Rights Treaties | 743 |
| Succession with Respect to Matters Other Than Treaties | 745 |
| Membership of International Organisations | 745 |
| Succession to Assets and Debts | 746 |
| State Property | 747 |
| State Archives | 751 |
| Public Debt | 753 |
| Private Rights | 757 |
| State Succession and Nationality | 759 |
| State Succession and Responsibility | 762 |
| Coda: Hong Kong | 763 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 763 |

17 The Settlement of Disputes by Peaceful Means 764

| | |
|--|-----|
| Diplomatic Methods of Dispute Settlement | 767 |
| Negotiation | 767 |
| Good Offices and Mediation | 770 |
| Inquiry | 771 |
| Conciliation | 773 |
| International Institutions and Dispute Settlement | 775 |
| Regional Organisations | 775 |
| The African Union (Formerly the Organisation of African Unity) | 776 |
| The Organization of American States | 779 |
| The Arab League | 780 |
| Europe | 780 |
| Specialised Agencies | 782 |
| The Settlement of International Economic Disputes | 782 |
| Binding Methods of Inter-State Dispute Settlement | 794 |
| Arbitration | 795 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 802 |

18 The International Court of Justice 803

| | |
|-------------------------------|-----|
| The Organisation of the Court | 804 |
|-------------------------------|-----|

| | |
|---|-----|
| The Jurisdiction of the Court | 808 |
| General | 808 |
| The Nature of a Legal Dispute | 810 |
| Contentious Jurisdiction | 812 |
| Article 36(1) | 816 |
| Article 36(2) | 821 |
| Sources of Law, Propriety and Legal Interest | 825 |
| Evidence | 827 |
| Provisional Measures | 830 |
| Joinder of Cases | 833 |
| Counter-Claims | 834 |
| Third-Party Intervention | 835 |
| Remedies | 838 |
| Enforcement | 840 |
| Application for Interpretation of a Judgment | 841 |
| Application for Revision of a Judgment | 841 |
| Examination of a Situation after the Judgment | 842 |
| The Advisory Jurisdiction of the Court | 843 |
| The Role of the Court | 847 |
| Proliferation of Courts and Tribunals | 848 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 850 |

19 International Law and the Use of Force by States 851

| | |
|--|-----|
| Law and Force from the 'Just War' to the United Nations | 851 |
| The UN Charter | 854 |
| 'Force' | 855 |
| 'Against the Territorial Integrity or Political Independence of Any State' | 857 |
| Categories of Force | 859 |
| Retorsion | 859 |
| Reprisals | 859 |
| The Right of Self-Defence | 861 |
| The Protection of Nationals Abroad | 870 |
| Conclusions | 872 |
| Collective Self-Defence | 872 |
| Intervention | 874 |
| Civil Wars | 874 |
| Aid to the Authorities of a State | 876 |
| Aid to Rebels | 878 |
| Humanitarian Intervention | 880 |
| Terrorism and International Law | 884 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 890 |

20 International Humanitarian Law 891

| | |
|---|-----|
| Development | 892 |
| The Scope of Protection under International Humanitarian Law | 894 |
| The Wounded and Sick | 894 |
| Prisoners of War | 895 |
| Protection of Civilians and Occupation | 898 |
| International Humanitarian Law and International Human Rights Law | 903 |
| The Conduct of Hostilities | 906 |

| | |
|---|-----|
| Armed Conflicts: International and Internal | 911 |
| Non-International Armed Conflict | 915 |
| Enforcement of Humanitarian Law | 919 |
| Conclusion | 922 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 923 |

21 The United Nations 924

| | |
|---|-----|
| The UN System | 924 |
| The Security Council | 925 |
| The General Assembly | 928 |
| Other Principal Organs | 930 |
| The Peaceful Settlement of Disputes | 933 |
| The League of Nations | 933 |
| The United Nations System | 933 |
| The Security Council | 934 |
| The General Assembly | 937 |
| The Secretary-General | 937 |
| Peacekeeping and Observer Missions | 938 |
| Conclusion | 945 |
| The Collective Security System | 946 |
| The Security Council | 947 |
| Determination of the Situation | 947 |
| Chapter VII Measures | 951 |
| Measures Not Involving the Use of Force | 951 |
| Measures Involving the Use of Force | 958 |
| The Use of Force in Non-Enforcement Situations | 963 |
| The Range of UN Actions from Humanitarian Assistance to Enforcement – Conclusions | 970 |
| The Security Council, International Law and the International Court of Justice | 971 |
| The Role of the General Assembly | 973 |
| The UN and Regional Arrangements and Agencies | 975 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 981 |

22 International Organisations 982

| | |
|---|------|
| Introduction | 982 |
| Some Legal Aspects of International Organisations | 989 |
| Personality | 991 |
| The Constituent Instruments | 995 |
| The Powers of International Organisations | 998 |
| The Applicable Law | 1000 |
| The Responsibility of International Organisations | 1001 |
| Liability of Member States | 1004 |
| The Accountability of International Organisations | 1006 |
| Privileges and Immunities | 1007 |
| Dissolution | 1016 |
| Succession | 1017 |
| Suggestions for Further Reading | 1018 |

Preface to the Eighth Edition

The chapters in this book have been re-examined, updated and, where necessary, rewritten in order to try and cope with the ever-increasing volume of new materials on international law. It was, in addition, decided to merge the two chapters on human rights in order to produce a better balance to the work and in the light of pressing space constraints. It has also, therefore, been possible to expand the treatment of some other chapters.

I would especially like to thank Marta Walkowiak, Caitlin Lisle, Caroline Mowatt and Rosemary Crawley of Cambridge University Press for their help and encouragement in the production of this edition. I am also grateful to Heather Palomino for her careful copy-editing and to Michael Heary for so carefully preparing the index and tables. Particular appreciation is owed to Rowan Nicholson for his meticulous research assistance. A lasting debt remains, however, to Sir Elihu Lauterpacht QC, a towering figure in international law, who sadly passed away as this edition was being prepared. His encouragement and assistance in the initial development of this book were indispensable. His continuing interest and friendship were deeply appreciated. I also remain grateful to my many colleagues from around the world for their advice and support, while reassuring them that all responsibility for the end product rests squarely with me.

As ever, the deepest thanks are due to my wife Judith and my children, Talia, Ilan and Daniella and now my grandchildren, Mika, Eden and Zevi. I am particularly grateful to Ilan for once again producing an imaginative and quite remarkable cover painting.

The date of this work is January 2017, but I have been able to insert some additional material during the production process.

Malcolm N. Shaw QC
Essex Court Chambers, London
Spring 2017

Table of Cases

- A and Others v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71 106
- A (FC) and Others (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71 114, 116
- A & B v. State of Israel, Israeli Supreme Court, 11 June 2008 127, 897
- A Company v. Republic of X [1990] 2 LL. R 520; 87 ILR 412 559, 562, 566, 583
- A Ltd v. B Bank 111 ILR 590 141
- AA v. Azerbaijan, A/61/44 248
- Aaland Islands case, LNOJ Sp. Supp. No. 4 (1920) 159, 199, 363, 401, 734
- Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598 97, 140, 146, 147, 614
- Abbott v. Republic of South Africa 86 ILR 512; 113 ILR 411 531, 564, 565
- Abu Dhabi Arbitration (Petroleum Development Limited/Sheikh of Abu Dhabi) [18 ILR 144] 78
- Abu Omar case, No. 46340/2012, ILDC 1960 (IT 2012) 584, 585
- Abyei arbitration, 22 July 2009 800
- Accession of the European Community to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, Re 108 ILR 225 272
- Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence in Respect of Kosovo, ICJ Reports (2010) 162, 186
- Acquisition of Polish Nationality case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 7; 2 AD 292 759
- Adams (David J.) claim, 6 RIAA 85 (1921); 1 AD 331 . . . 706
- Adams v. Adams [1970] 3 All ER 572; [1971] P 188; 52 ILR 15 354
- Adan, ex parte [2000] UKHL 67 143
- ADM Milling Co. v. Republic of Bolivia 63 ILR 56 543
- Administration des Chemins de Fer du Gouvernement Iranien case, 52 ILR 315 531
- Administrative Tribunal cases, ICJ Reports (1973) 166; 54 ILR 381; ICJ Reports (1982) 325; 69 ILR 330; ICJ Reports (1987) 18; 83 ILR 296 847
- Admissions case (Conditions of Membership of the United Nations), ICJ Reports, 1948; 15 AD 333 344, 847, 929, 971, 990
- AE v. Switzerland, CAT/C/14/D/24/1995 216
- Aegean Sea Continental Shelf, ICJ Reports (1978); 60 ILR 562 377, 686, 688, 809, 831
- Aerial Incident case, ICJ Reports (1955) 127 595, 818, 821
- Aerotrade Inc. v. Republic of Haiti 63 ILR 41 544
- Afouneh v. Attorney-General 10 AD 327 510
- AFRC case (2007) 307
- Agassi v. Robinson (Inspector of Taxes) [2006] UKHL 23; [2006] 1 WLR 1380 489
- Agbor v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner [1969] 2 All ER 707 578
- Agip SpA v. Government of the Popular Republic of the Congo 67 ILR 319 630, 631, 634, 788
- Ahlstrom (A.) Oy v. Commission (Wood Pulp case) [1988] 4 CMLR 901 521
- Ahmed and Patel, Ex Parte [1998] INLR 570 114
- AIC Ltd v. Nigeria [2003] EWHC 1357; 129 ILR 571 542, 564
- AIG Capital Partners Inc. v. Republic of Kazakhstan [2005] EWHC 2239 (Comm); 129 ILR 589 564
- AIG v. Iran, 4 Iran-US CTR 96; 493 F.Supp. 522 (1980) . . . 152, 629, 635
- Air India v. Wiggins [1980] 1 WLR 815; 77 ILR 276 515
- AK Investment v. Kyrgyz Mobil [2011] 4 All ER 1027 145
- Akademik Fyodorov, The 131 ILR 460 560, 564
- Akayesu case, ICTR-96-4-T (1998) 319, 320, 321, 324, 325
- Akdeniz v. Turkey, Judgment of 31 May 2005 265
- Akdivar v. Turkey 23 EHRR, 1997 143 216, 263
- Aksoy v. Turkey, Judgment of 18 December 1996 265

- Al Dulimi v. Switzerland, ECtHR Judgment of 26 November 2013 957
- Al Sabah v. Grupo Torras SA [2005] UKPC 1; [2005] 2 AC 333 489
- Al Saud v. Apex Global Management [2013] EWCA Civ 642 557
- Alabama Claims arbitration (1898) 82, 101, 713, 795
- Al-Adsani v. Government of Kuwait and Others (1996) 1 LL. R 104; 107 ILR 536; 100 ILR 465 484, 538
- Al-Adsani v. United Kingdom (Application No 35763/97) (Merits) 123 ILR 24 94, 95, 246, 257, 538
- Alamieyeseigha v. CPS [2005] EWHC 2704 553
- Al-Bassiouni v. Prime Minister, HCJ 9132/07 (2008) 907
- Alcom Ltd v. Republic of Colombia [1984] 2 All ER 6; 74 ILR 179 530, 540, 565, 576
- Alejandro v. Republic of Cuba and the Cuban Air Force 996 F.Supp. 1239 (1997); 121 ILR 603 94, 537
- Alemán Lacayo v. Nicaragua case, Series E, Order of 2 February 1996 281
- Al-Fin Corporation's Patent, Re [1970] Ch. 160; 52 ILR 68 337, 355
- Alien Children Education Litigation, In re 501 F.Supp. 544 (1980) 121
- Alisic v. Bosnia and Herzegovina and Others, ECtHR 17 October 2011 758
- Al-Jedda case [2007] UKHL 58 95, 104, 259
- Al-Jedda v. UK, 7 July 2011 896, 903, 958
- Al-Kateb (Ahmed Ali) v. Goodwin [2004] HCA 37 128, 129
- Aloboetoe v. Suriname, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1993, Series C, No. 15; 116 ILR 260 607
- Al-Rawi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2006] EWCA Civ 1279 140, 147
- Al-Saadoon and Mufdhi v. United Kingdom, Judgment of 3 July 2009 258
- Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 26; 133 ILR 693 104, 116, 489, 496
- Al-Skeini v. UK, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 7 July 2011 489, 903
- Álvarez et al. v. Colombia case, Series E, Order of 22 July 1997 281
- Alvarez-Machain v. United States 107 F.3d 696, 699 (9th Cir. 1996); 41 ILM (2002) 130 510, 513
- Amalgamated Metal Trading v. Department of Trade and Industry, The Times, 21 March 1989 139
- Ambatielos case, 12 RIAA 83 (1956); 23 ILR 306 215, 620, 710, 717, 798, 821
- AMCO v. Indonesia, 24 ILM (1985) 1022; 89 ILR 405; 1 ICSID Reports 377 74, 75, 76, 79, 624, 627, 633, 788
- Amerada Hess Shipping Corp. v. Argentine Republic 830 F.2d 421 (1987); 79 ILR 1 121, 512
- American Insurance Association v. Garamendi, US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 23 June 2003 150
- Aminoil case, 66 ILR 529 608, 609, 632, 633
- Amoco International Finance Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 15 Iran-US CTR 189; 83 ILR 500 634
- Amoco Overseas Oil Co. v. Compagnie Nationale Algérienne 605 F.2d 648 (1979); 63 ILR 252 543
- AN International Bank Plc v. Zambia 118 ILR 602 567
- Anderson v. NV Transandine Handelmaatschappij 289 NY 9 (1942); 10 AD 10 154
- Anglo-French Continental Shelf case 54 ILR 6 80, 412, 441, 443, 447, 449, 451, 476, 694, 711, 800
- Anglo-Iranian Oil Company case 19 ILR 507 102, 686, 831
- Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case 18 ILR 86 57, 58, 62, 67, 82, 101, 376, 381, 384, 385, 386, 415, 417, 440, 453, 454, 476, 485, 491
- Anna, The 5 C.Rob. 373 (1805) 369
- Annette, The [1919] P. 105; 1 AD 43 350
- Antarctic cases, ICJ Reports (1958) 158; (1959) 276 818
- Antelope, The 10 Wheat 123 (1825) 487
- Applicability of Article VI, Section 22, of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations, ICJ Reports (1989) 177; 85 ILR 300 1013
- Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate under Section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947, ICJ Reports (1988) 12; 82 ILR 225 101, 126, 713, 811, 847, 1002, 1008
- Application for Revision of the Judgment of 11 July 1996 (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), ICJ Reports (2003) 166
- Aquarone, RGDIP, 1997-4, pp. 1053-4 133
- Ara Libertad (Argentina v. Ghana) case, International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, Order of 15 December 2012 427
- Arab Monetary Fund v. Hashim (No. 3) [1991] 2 WLR 729; 85 ILR 1 355, 994
- Arab Republic of Syria v. Arab Republic of Egypt 91 ILR 288 143
- Arantzazu Mendi, The [1939] AC 256; 9 AD 60 351, 356
- Arbitral Award of the King of Spain case, ICJ Reports, 1960; 30 ILR 457 385, 712, 799
- Arctic Sunrise (Netherlands v. Russia) case, Order of 22 November 2013 478
- Argentina v. Weltover Inc 119 L Ed 2d 394 (1992); 100 ILR 509 544, 545
- Argentina/Chile Award (La Laguna del Desierto) 113 ILR 1 75, 368, 396, 708, 710, 795
- Argentina/Chile Frontier Award (La Palena) 38 ILR 10 367, 378, 382, 396, 708, 712, 797, 801
- Argentine Airlines v. Ross 63 ILR 195 543

- Argentine Republic v. Amerada Hess Shipping Corp.
109 S. Ct. 683 (1989); 81 ILR 658 512
- Argoud, Re 45 ILR 90 510
- Arkansas v. Tennessee 246 US 158 (1918) 369
- Armament Dieppe SA v. US 399 F.2d 794
(1968) 413
- Artico v. Italy, Series A, vol. 37 (1980) 257, 711
- AS & DD (Libya) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2008] EWCA Civ 289 687
- Ashby case, A/49/40 242
- Asian Agricultural Products v. Sri Lanka 30 ILM (1991)
577 787
- Asociacion de Reclamantes v. The United Mexican States 22 ILM (1983) 625 525
- Assange v. The Swedish Prosecution Authority [2012]
UKSC 22 116
- Assanidze v. Georgia, Judgment of 8 April 2004 257
- Associated Provincial Picture Houses Ltd v.
Wednesbury Corp. [1947] 2 All ER 680 518
- Association of Lawyers for Peace and Four Other Organizations v. State of the Netherlands, Nr C02/
217HR; LJN: AN8071; NJ 2004/329 125
- Association SOS Attentats v. France UKMIL, 77 BYIL
(2006) 555
- Asylum case (Colombia v. Peru) (Haya de la Torre case)
ICJ Reports, 1950; 17 ILR 280 56, 57, 62, 63, 67, 68, 362, 573, 808, 810, 835, 841
- Athens Maritime Enterprises Corporation v. Hellenic
Mutual War Risks Association [1983] 1 All ER 590;
78 ILR 563 458
- Attorney General's Reference (No. 1 of 1982) [1983] 3
WLR 72 520
- Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario [1937] AC 326; 8 AD 41 115, 127, 173
- Attorney-General for Fiji v. Robt Jones House Ltd
[1989] 2 NZLR 69; 80 ILR 1 340
- Attorney-General of New Zealand v. Ortiz [1982] 3 All ER 432; 78 ILR 608; [1983] 3 All ER 93 (House of Lords); 78 ILR 631 487
- Attorney-General v. Associated Newspapers Ltd [1993]
3 WLR 74 117
- Attorney-General v. Zaoui [2005] NZSC 38; [2006] 1
NZLR 289; (2005) 7 HRNZ 860 127
- Auditing of Accounts between the Netherlands and France, 12 March 2004 645, 670, 707
- Australia and New Zealand Banking Group v.
Commonwealth of Australia (1989) 526, 541, 543
- Australia and New Zealand v. Japan (Southern Bluefin Tuna), Award of 4 August 2000, 119 ILR 508 474, 481, 768
- Austria v. Altmann 541 US 677 (2004) 531
- Austria v. Italy (1960) 710, 743
- Austro-German Customs Union case (1931) PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41 160, 167
- Autocephalous Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg 917 F.2d
278 (1990); 108 ILR 488 184, 359
- Avena (Mexico v. USA) ICJ Reports (2004) 12; 134 ILR
120 97, 101, 121, 125, 174, 584, 585, 606, 607,
829, 831, 832, 838, 839, 841
- AY Bank Ltd v. Bosnia and Herzegovina and Others
[2005] EWCA Civ 1116; [2006] EWHC 830 (Ch)
142, 143, 748
- Ayyash case 314
- Azazh Kebedda v. Italian Government 9 AD 93 346
- Azinian v. United Mexican States 121 ILR 1 597
- Aziz v. Republic of Yemen [2005] EWCA Civ 745 546, 559
- Aziz (Mariam) v. Aziz and the Sultan of Brunei [2007]
EWCA Civ 712 557, 578
- Baboeram-Adhin v. Suriname, A/40/40 187; 94 ILR
377 216
- Baccus SRL v. Servicio Nacional del Trigo [1957] 1 QB
438; 23 ILR 160 527, 549, 551
- Bagilishima, ICTR-95-1A-T (2001) 321
- Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [1999] 2 SCR 817 129
- Baker v. Carr 369 US 181 (1962) 150
- Ballantyne case, 14 HRLJ 1993 171 227
- Banamar v. Embassy of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria 84 AJIL (1990) 573; 87 ILR
56 565
- Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Chase Manhattan Bank 658
F.2d 875 (1981); 66 ILR 421 632
- Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino 376 US 398
(1964); 35 ILR 2 151, 357
- Bancoult v. McNamara 445 F.3d 427 (DC Cir.
2006) 150
- Bancoult v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2013] EWHC 1502
(Admin) 577
- Bandes v. Harlow & Jones 82 AJIL, 1988 152
- Bank Mellat v. HM Treasury (No. 2) [2013] UKSC
39 957
- Bank Melli Iran v. Council, C548-09, judgment of 16
November 2011 957
- Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI) v.
Price Waterhouse [1997] 4 All ER 108; 111 ILR
604 553
- Bank of Hawaii v. Balos 701 F.Supp. 744 (1988) 177
- Banković v. Belgium, Judgment of 12 December 2001;
123 ILR 94 257, 489
- Baoanan v. Baja 627 F.Supp.2d 155 (2009) 548
- Barbados v. Trinidad and Tobago, Award of 11 April 2006 441, 447, 450, 451, 474, 502, 768, 800
- Barbie case, Cass. Crim., 6 October 1983; 100 ILR 330
133, 502
- Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company Ltd case
(1962) (Belgium v. Spain) [46 ILR 178] 78, 79, 92, 102, 605, 614, 617, 619, 639, 743, 821, 873
- Baroda (Maharaneef of) v. Wildenstein [1972] 2 All ER
689 488
- Barrandon v. USA 113 ILR 464 547

- Bay of Bengal (Bangladesh v. Myanmar) case, International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, judgment of 14 March 2012 450, 481
- Beagle Channel Arbitration (Argentina/Chile) [52 ILR 93] 92, 367, 370, 378, 388, 392, 423, 685, 708, 733, 797, 800
- BECTU [2001] ECR I-4881 273
- Beer and Regan v. Germany, ECtHR judgment of 18 February 1999 1010
- Behrami v. France Judgment of 2 May 2007 258, 596, 1003, 1006, 1010
- Behring International Inc. v. Imperial Iranian Air Force 475 F.Supp. 383 (1979); 63 ILR 261 561
- Behring Sea case 795
- Beilin (Yossi) v. The Prime Minister of Israel HCJ 6204/06, 2006 854
- Beit Sourik v. Government of Israel, Israeli Supreme Court, 30 June 2004; 129 ILR 189 902
- Belgian Linguistics case, Series A, vol. 6, 1968; 45 ILR 136 256, 263
- Belgium v. Nicod and Another 82 ILR 124 571
- Belgium v. Postlethwaite [1987] 2 All ER 985 515
- Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ Reports (2012) 422 93, 94, 246, 248, 811, 813
- Belgium/Netherlands Frontier Land case, ICJ Reports (1959) 209; 27 ILR 62 817
- Belhaj v. Straw [2013] EWHC 4111 (QB) 552
- Belilos case, ECtHR Series A, No. 132 695, 699
- Belmont 301 US 324; 57 S.Ct. 758 (1937) 120
- Benaïm v. Procureur de la République de Bordeaux, AFDI 1993 971 170
- Benin v. Niger ICJ Reports (2005) 103, 378, 393, 396, 404, 807
- Benkharbouche v. Sudan and Janah v. Libya [2013] UAEAT 0401_12_0410 (4 October 2013) 547
- Benvenuti and Bonfant v. Government of the Popular Republic of the Congo 67 ILR 345 630, 633, 788
- Berezovsky v. Abramovich [2011] EWCA Civ 153 145
- Bergman v. de Sieyès 170 F.2d 360 (1948) 581
- Beric v. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Decision of 16 October 2007 1003
- Berizzi Bros. C. v. SS Pesaro 271 US 562 (1926); 3 AD 186 527
- Berry, Hamilton, Grant, Currie and Champagnie cases, A/49/40, vol. II 243
- Beth El Mission v. Minister of Social Welfare 47 ILR 205 219
- Bijelic v. Montenegro and Serbia, 28 April 2009 745
- Biloune v. Ghana Investment Centre 95 ILR 183 630, 634
- Birch Shipping Corporation v. Embassy of the United Republic of Tanzania 507 F.Supp. 311 (1980); 63 ILR 524 565
- Biwater Gauff v. Tanzania ICSID, ARB/05/22, 24 July 2008 630
- Blaškić case, IT-95-14-T (2000); 122 ILR 1 325
- Blathwayt v. Baron Cawley [1976] AC 397 117, 145
- Bo Xilai, Re 76 BYIL (2005) 601 586
- Board of Trade v. Owen [1957] AC 602 490
- Boffolo case 10 RIAA 528 (1903) 625
- Boos v. Barry 99 L.Ed.2d 333 (1988); 121 ILR 551 570, 578
- Bosphorus Airways v. Ireland, ECtHR judgment of 30 June 2005 259, 596, 1006
- Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports 1999 368, 374, 381, 396, 707, 708
- Bottali, Re 78 ILR 105 741
- Boucherf v. Algeria 242
- Boudellaa et al. v. Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Judgment of 11 October 2002 888
- Boumediene v. Bush, US Supreme Court, 12 June 2008 493
- Bouzari v. Iran 124 ILR 427 538
- Boyle and Rice v. UK, Series A, vol. 131, 1988 263
- BP case, 53 ILR 297 608, 631, 798
- Braka v. Nacional Financiera, No. 83-4161 (SDNY 9 July 1984) 544
- Brannigan and McBride v. UK Series A, No. 258-B, 1994 264, 265
- Branno v. Ministry of War 22 ILR 756 993, 1007
- Brazilian Embassy Employee case, May 1984, 116 ILR 625 132, 547
- Brazilian Federal Loans case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 20 (1929); 5 AD 466 102, 103, 603
- Brcko Inter-Entity Boundary case, 36 ILM 396 (1997) 78, 81, 348
- Brdjanin case, IT-99-36-T (2004) 321
- Breard v. Greene 140 L.Ed. 2d 529 (1998); 118 ILR 22 97, 125, 126
- Breger case 625
- British Airways Board v. Laker Airways Ltd [1983] 3 All ER 375; 74 ILR 36; [1985] AC 58 143, 518
- British Arab Commercial Bank v. The National Transitional Council of the State of Libya [2011] EWHC 2274 (Comm) 340, 356
- British Guiana and Venezuela Boundary case, 89 BFSP (1896) 57; 92 BFSP 970 376, 795, 798, 799
- Brogan case, Series A, vol. 145, 1988 264
- Brown (Robert E.) case, 6 RIAA 120; 2 AD 66 216, 758
- Brown v. United States 12 US (8 Cranch) 110 (1814) 120
- Brown v. Whimster [1976] QB 297 116
- Brunswick (Duke of) v. King of Hanover (1848) 1 HLC 1 140, 527
- Buchanan v. Babco [1978] AC 141 118
- Buck v. Attorney-General [1965] 1 Ch. 745; 42 ILR 11 145, 525
- Burkina Faso/Mali Frontier Dispute, ICJ Reports 1986; 80 ILR 459 66, 79, 81, 91, 224, 363, 378, 382, 385, 388, 390, 392, 393, 394, 686, 733, 753, 807, 832

- Burkina Faso/Niger, ICJ Reports (2013) 79 378, 385, 393, 811, 826
- Buron v. Denman (1848) 145 ER 450 139
- Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3) [1982] AC 888; 64 ILR 331 140, 141, 144, 145, 149, 525
- Buvot v. Barbuitt (1737) Cases t. Talbot 281 106
- Cafés Jacques Vabre case, 16 Common Market Law Review, 1975, p. 336 133
- Caglar v. Billingham [1996] STC (SCD) 150; 108 ILR 510 184, 354, 355
- Caire case, 5 RIAA 516 (1929); 5 AD 146 593, 598
- Callejo v. Bancomer 764 F.2d 1101 (1985) 543
- Calley v. Calloway 382 F.Supp. 650 (1974); 519 F.2d 184 (1975); 425 US 911 (1976) 500
- Camacho v. Rogers 199 F.Supp. 155 (1961) 125
- Cameroon v. Nigeria (Case concerning the Land and Maritime Boundary Between Cameroon and Nigeria), ICJ Reports (2002) 76, 77, 80, 82, 91, 100, 176, 367, 368, 377, 382, 383, 385, 386, 390, 447, 449, 452, 688, 690, 708, 713, 768, 809, 810, 812, 813, 816, 817, 818, 821, 831, 832, 837, 839, 840, 841
- Camouco Case No. 5, judgment of 7 February 2000, 125 ILR 164 480
- Campbell and Cosans v. UK, Series A, vol. 48, 1982 262
- Campbell v. Zimbabwe, 48 ILM, 2009, p. 530 286
- Can and Others v. United States 14 F.3d 160 (1994); 107 ILR 255 150
- Canada v. Cargnello 114 ILR 559 132, 547
- Canada v. Edelson, 131 ILR 279 570
- Canepa v. Canada, A/52/40 242
- Canevaro case, 11 RIAA 397 (1912) 617
- Carbonar v. Magurno 114 ILR 534 547
- Carey v. National Oil Co. 453 F.Supp. 1097 (1978); 63 ILR 164 551
- Caroline case, 29 BFSP 1137; 30 BFSP 195 861, 867, 868, 872
- Caso Atala Riffo y Ninas v. Chile, Judgment of 24 February 2012 283
- Cassell v. Broome [1972] AC 1027 117
- Castillo Páez v. Peru, Series C, No. 34, 1997; 116 ILR 451 282
- Castro v. Saudi Arabia 63 ILR 419 544
- Catan v. Moldova and Russia, Judgment of 19 October 2012 258
- Celiberti de Casariego (Lilian) v. Uruguay, case no. 56/79; 68 ILR 41 244
- Centre for Industrial Development v. Naidu 115 ILR 424 564
- Cerruti arbitrations, 6 AJIL (1912) 965 799
- Certain Expenses of the United Nations (Article 17, paragraph 2, of the Charter), ICJ Reports (1962) 151; 34 ILR 281 6, 809, 847, 974, 990, 996, 999
- Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, 1926; 3 AD 5 et al. 74, 76, 103, 610, 623, 631, 691, 757
- CGM Industrial v. KPMG 1998 (3) SA 738; 121 ILR 472 531
- Chagos Islanders v. Attorney General and others [2003] EWHC 2222 112
- Chahal v. UK, Judgment of 15 November 1996 265
- Chamizal arbitration, 5 AJIL (1911) 782; 11 RIAA 309 369, 375, 396, 799
- Chandler v. DPP [1964] AC 763 139
- Charkieh (1873) LR 4A and E59 527
- Chase Manhattan Bank v. Traffic Stream (BVI) Infrastructure Ltd, UKMIL, 72 BYIL (2001) 603 619
- Chateau-Gai Wines Ltd and Attorney-General for Canada, Re [1970] Ex CR 366; 55 ILR 38 340
- Chattin case, 4 RIAA 282 (1927); 4 AD 248 623
- Cheney v. Conn [1968] 1 WLR 242; 41 ILR 421 115
- Chierici and Rosa v. Ministry of the Merchant Navy and Harbour Office of Rimini 71 ILR 283 158
- Children and Adolescents Deprived of Liberty in the 'Complexo do Tatuapé' of FEBEM v. Brazil 281
- China v. Merchants' Fire Assurance Corporation of New York 30 F.2d 278 (1929); 5 AD 42 344
- Chisholm v. Bank of Jamaica 643 F.Supp. 1393 (1986); 121 ILR 487 543
- Chorzów Factory case (Germany v. Poland) [4 AD 258] 74, 592, 606, 632, 633, 747, 757, 838
- Chow Hung Ching v. R (1948) 77 CLR 449 127
- Christian v. The Queen [2006] UKPC 47 140, 370
- Chrysostomos v. Turkey 68 DR 216 262
- Chuan Pu Andrew Wang and Others v. Office of the Federal Prosecutor, Swiss Supreme Court, First Public Law Chamber, 3 May 2004, No. 1A.3/2004; BGE 130 II 217 332
- Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru, Judgment of 14 March 2001, 41 ILM, 2002, 93 282
- Chung Chi Cheung v. R [1939] AC 160 106, 108, 109, 112
- Chung Kheng Lin v. Minister for Immigration (1992) 176 CLR 1 128
- City of Berne v. Bank of England (1804) 9 Ves. Jun. 347 350
- Civil Aeronautics Administration v. Singapore Airlines Ltd [2004] 1 SLR 570; [2004] SGCA 3; 133 ILR 371 344
- Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [1953] AC 70; 19 ILR 85 343, 353, 360
- Clark (Inspector of Taxes) v. Oceanic Contractors Inc. [1983] 2 AC 130 489
- Clerget v. Banque Commerciale pour l'Europe du Nord 52 ILR 310 344
- Clipperton Island case, 26 AJIL (1932) 390; 6 AD 105 379, 380
- CME Czech Republic BV v. The Czech Republic 9 ICSID Reports 121 607, 609, 630
- CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin) 139, 143
- Coard v. United States, Report No. 109/99, 29 September 1999; 123 ILR 156 903

- Coe v. Commonwealth of Australia (1993) 118 ALR 193; 118 ILR 322 128
- Colombia-Venezuela arbitral award, 1 RIAA 223 (1922); 1 AD 84 392, 733
- Comercial F SA v. Council of Ministers 88 ILR 691 613
- Commercial and Estates Co. of Egypt v. Board of Trade [1925] 1 KB 271 108
- Commission v. Council [1971] ECR 263 192
- Commission v. Ireland 45 ILM (2006) 1074 465
- Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan 859 F.2d 929 (1988) 120
- Commonwealth of Australia v. State of Tasmania, High Court of Australia, 46 ALR 625 (1 July 1983); 68 ILR 266 129, 174
- Compañía de Aguas del Aconquija v. Argentina 41 ILM (2002) 1135 102
- Compañía Naviera Vascongado v. Cristina SS [1938] AC 485; 9 AD 250 109, 489, 527, 529
- Company General of the Orinoco case, 10 RIAA 280 604
- Competence of the Conciliation Commission 22 ILR 867 799
- Competence of the General Assembly for the Admission of a State to the United Nations, ICJ Reports (1950) 4; 17 ILR 326 707, 710, 929, 998
- Condor and Filvem v. Minister of Justice 101 ILR 394 562, 565
- Congo v. Belgium (Arrest Warrant case), ICJ Reports (2002); 128 ILR 60 60, 83, 288, 458, 489, 498, 500, 504, 606, 812, 813, 826, 839
- Congo v. FG Hemisphere Associates 147 ILR 376 531, 540
- Congo v. France, Provisional Measures, 17 June 2003, ICJ Reports (2003) 107 832
- Congo v. Rwanda, ICJ Reports (2006) 95, 318, 698, 701, 769, 810, 813, 817, 824, 831
- Congo v. Uganda, ICJ Reports (2005) 168 568, 571, 578, 595, 607, 809, 810, 814, 819, 828, 829, 833, 834, 835, 840, 849, 857, 864, 865, 866, 869, 870, 877, 878, 899, 901, 973
- Consortium X v. Swiss Federal Government, Swiss Federal Supreme Court, 1st Civil Law Chamber, 2 July 2004 1010
- Constitutional Court case, Series E, Order of 14 August 2000 281
- Construction of a Wall case 129 ILR 37 61, 66, 82, 202, 244, 489, 605, 607, 609, 709, 805, 844, 845, 864, 898, 899, 900, 901, 920, 937
- Controller and Auditor General v. Sir Ronald Davidson [1996] 2 NZLR 278 537
- Cook v. United States 288 US 102 (1933) 120, 125
- Coreck Maritime GmbH v. Sevrybokholodflot, UKMIL, 64 BYIL (1993) 636 728
- Corfu Channel case (United Kingdom v. Albania) [16 AD 155] 74, 79, 81, 168, 219, 427, 454, 592, 594, 595, 610, 646, 647, 653, 710, 815, 817, 818, 827, 829, 838, 840, 858, 874, 909, 936
- Cornejo v. County of San Diego 504 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 2007) 121
- Corporacion Venezolana de Fomenta v. Vintero Sales 629 F.2d 786 (1980); 63 ILR 477 543
- Corrie v. Caterpillar 503 F.3d 974 CA 9 (Wash.), 2007 150
- Costa (Flaminio) v. ENEL, Case 6/64 [1964] ECR 585; 93 ILR 23 137, 192, 991
- Costa Rica v. Nicaragua ICJ Reports 2009 384, 396, 592, 608, 707, 814, 831, 838, 840
- Costa Rica v. Nicaragua, ICJ Reports 2013 834
- Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1984] 3 All ER 935; [1985] AC 374 113, 139, 146
- Croatia et al v. Girocredit Bank AG der Sparkassen 36 ILM (1997) 1520 750
- Croatia v. Republic of Serbia [2009] EWHC 1559 (Ch); [2010] Ch 200 142, 143, 692, 730, 748, 814
- Crotty v. An Taoiseach 93 ILR 480 130
- Cudak v. Lithuania, judgment of 23 March 2010 547
- Cutting case (1886) 497
- Cyprus v. Turkey 2 DR 125 216
- Cyprus v. Turkey, Application No. 25781/94, ECtHR Judgment of 10 May 2001; 120 ILR 10 184, 257, 262, 263, 264, 265, 348, 354, 592, 599
- Cyprus v. Turkey (Third Application) 13 DR 85 (1978) 262
- Cysne case, 2 RIAA 1056; 5 AD 150 601
- Czarnikow Ltd v. Rolimpex [1979] AC 351 551
- Dadar v. Canada, A/61/44 248
- Dallal v. Iran, 3 Iran-US CTR 1983 23 617
- Dalmia Cement v. National Bank of Pakistan 67 ILR 611 789
- Dames & Moore v. Regan 101 SC 2972 (1981); 72 ILR 270 123, 531
- Danzig Railway Officials PCIJ, Series B, No. 15 (1928); 4 AD 287 205
- Daventree Ltd v. Republic of Azerbaijan 349 F.Supp.2d 736, 754 (SDNY 2004) 152
- Davy case, 9 RIAA 468 (1903) 596
- De Andrade v. De Andrade 118 ILR 299 579
- De Becker v. Belgium, 2 Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1958 214 263
- De Haber v. Queen of Portugal (1851) 17 QB 171 527
- De Sanchez v. Banco Central de Nicaragua 770 F.2d 1385 (1985); 88 ILR 75 122, 534, 627
- Definition of Other Treaties Subject to the Interpretation of the Inter-American Court 22 ILM 1983 51; 67 ILR 594 281
- Delagoa Bay case 375

- Delalić case, IT-96–21, Judgment of 16 November 1998 246
- Delgamuukw v. British Columbia (1998) 153 DLR (4th) 193; 115 ILR 446 229
- Dellums v. Bush 752 F.Supp. 1141 (1990) 150
- Demjanjuk v. Petrovsky 776 F.2d 571 (1985); 79 ILR 534 502
- Denmark v. Nielsen [1984] 2 All ER 81; 74 ILR 458 514
- Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd [1993] AC 534 HL 117
- Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State (1929) 5 AD 11 158, 332
- Diallo (Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo) 64, 83, 103, 613, 618, 619, 620, 622, 625, 814, 834
- Dickinson v. Del Solar [1930] 1 KB 376; 5 AD 299 579
- Diergaardt et al. v. Namibia, A/55/40, vol. II, annex IX 225
- Dietrich v. The Queen (1992) 177 CLR 292 128
- Difference Relating to Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur, ICJ Reports (1999) 62; 121 ILR 405 525, 595, 845, 847
- Diggs v. Dent 14 ILM 1975 125
- Diggs v. Schultz 470 F.2d 461 (1972); 60 ILR 393 125
- Dior and Others Case C-300/98 [2000] ECR I-11307 137
- Distomo Massacre case, 129 ILR 556 548
- Ditfort, Re (1988) 19 FCR 347; 87 ILR 170 149
- Diversion of Water from the River Meuse (Netherlands v. Belgium) [8 AD 444] 79, 827
- Djibouti v. France, ICJ Reports (2008) 556, 558, 805, 814, 817
- Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp. 654 F. 3d 11 (CAD 2011) 122
- Doe v. United States of America 860 F.2d 40 (1988); 121 ILR 567 555
- Dole Food Co. v. Patrickson, /d US Supreme Court decision 22 April 2003 543
- Donegal v. Zambia [2007] EWHC 197 (Comm) 560, 566
- Donnelly case, 16 Yearbook of the ECHR 212 216
- Dos Santos (Armando) case 311
- Dow Chemical Ibérica v. Commission [1989] ECR 3165 272
- DPP v. Doot [1973] AC 807; 57 ILR 117 490
- DPP v. Stonehouse [1977] 2 All ER 909; 73 ILR 252 490
- Dralle v. Republic of Czechoslovakia 17 ILR 155 529
- Droz and Janousek v. France and Spain 64 DR 97 (1989); Series A, vol. 240, 1992 216, 257
- Dubai Bank v. Galadari, The Times, 14 July 1990 146
- Dubai/Sharjah award 91 ILR 543 364, 368, 378, 388, 414, 440, 795, 798
- Duchy of Sealand, Re 80 ILR 683 158
- Dudgeon case, Series A, vol. 45 1982; 67 ILR 395 262
- Duff Development Company Ltd v. Kelantan [1924] AC 797; 2 AD 124 152, 528
- Duff v. R [1979] 28 ALR 663; 73 ILR 678 578
- Dumont v. État d'Amazonas 15 AD 140 552
- Dunhill (Alfred) of London Inc. v. Republic of Cuba 15 ILM (1976) 735; 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976); 66 ILR 212 151, 529, 544
- Durmic v. Serbia and Montenegro, CERD/C/68/D/29/2003, 2006 237
- Dyilo (Thomas Lubanga) case, ICC-01/04–01/06 302, 849
- Eain case, 74 AJIL (1980) 435 514
- East Timor case (Portugal v. Australia) 105 ILR 226 66, 85, 93, 201, 204, 810, 811, 819, 826, 847
- East Timor v. Netherlands 87 ILR 73 333
- East Treaties Constitutionality case, 73 ILR 691 131
- Eastern Carelia case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 5, 1923; 2 AD 394 798, 844, 845
- Eastern Greenland (Legal Status of) (Denmark v. Norway) [6 AD 95, 6 AD 428, 6 AD 430] 76, 364, 378, 379, 380, 383, 384, 387, 391, 398, 686, 711, 712
- Eckhardt v. Eurocontrol (No.2) 94 ILR 331 1009
- Eckle v. Federal Republic of Germany, Series A, vol. 51, 1982 262
- Ecuador v. Occidental Exploration and Production Co [2005] EWCA Civ 1116 143
- Edge v. Robertson 112 US 580 (1884) 124
- EEOC v. Arabian American Oil Company and Aramco Services 113 L Ed 2d 274 (1991); 90 ILR 617 515
- Effect of Awards case, ICJ Reports (1954) 47; 21 ILR 310 813, 998
- Effect of Reservations on the Entry into Force of the American Convention on Human Rights, 22 ILM (1983) 37; 67 ILR 559 281, 700, 710, 743
- Egypt v. Gamal Eldin [1996] 2 All ER 237 546
- Egyptian Workers' Claims, 117 ILR 195 794
- Eichmann case, 36 ILR 5 126, 168, 321, 497, 500, 502, 509
- El Salvador/Honduras (Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute: Nicaragua Intervening), ICJ Reports 1992; 97 ILR 154 66, 68, 81, 180, 364, 368, 369, 378, 382, 383, 384, 390, 392, 393, 394, 395, 411, 417, 727, 757, 807, 811, 818, 827, 829, 836, 837, 842
- Electricity Company of Sofia and Bulgaria, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 79 833
- Elettronica Sicula SpA (ELSI) case (United States v. Italy) [84 ILR 311] 76, 102, 385, 618, 621, 807, 827
- Ellerman Lines v. Murray [1931] AC 126 117
- El-Masri v. Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Judgment of 13 December 2012 265
- Emin v. Yeldag [2002] 1 FLR 956 354
- Empire of Iran 45 ILR 57 529, 531, 533
- Empresa Exportadora de Azucar v. Industria Azucarera Nacional SA [1983] 2 LL. R 171; 64 ILR 368 141, 525, 554
- Empson v. Smith [1965] 2 All ER 881; 41 ILR 407 582

- Enforceability of the Right to Reply case, 79 ILR 335 708
- Entico Corporation v. UNESCO [2008] EWHC 531 (Comm) 1010
- EP v. Colombia, A/45/40, vol. II 184 225
- Erdemović (Case IT-96-22-A) (Sentencing Appeal) (Appeals Chamber) 111 ILR 298 102
- Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission Decision on Delimitation 130 ILR 1 91, 367, 368, 377, 382, 383, 386, 492, 708, 796, 800
- Eritrea-Yemen arbitration 14 ILR 1; 114 ILR 48; 119 ILR 417 68, 73, 364, 367, 373, 377, 378, 379, 382, 383, 386, 391, 402, 414, 419, 447, 448, 450, 734, 796, 800
- ERT [1991] ECR I-2925 272
- Espahanian v. Bank Tejarat, 2 Iran-US CTR 157; 72 ILR 478 617
- Espionage Prosecution, Case No. 2 BGz 38/91, 94 ILR 68 727
- Estamirov and Others v. Russia, Judgment of 12 October 2006 265
- État de Céara v. D'Archer de Montgascon 6 AD 162 552
- État de Céara v. Dorr et autres 4 AD 39 552
- État de Hesse v. Jean Neger, 74 Revue Générale de Droit International Public (1970) 1108 552
- Ette case, ECtHR Series A, No. 117 694
- Eurodif Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran 23 ILM (1984) 1062 565
- European Arrest Warrant case, C-303/05, Advocaten voor de Wereld, Judgment of 3 May 2007 272
- European Molecular Biology Laboratory Arbitration, 105 ILR 1 1009
- European Parliament v. Council [2006] ECR I-5769 273
- Eurotunnel case, 30 January 2007, 132 ILR 1 492, 605
- Everett, ex parte [1989] 1 QB 811; 84 ILR 713 146, 147
- Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations (Series B, No. 10) 3 AD 362 et al. 102, 104
- Exemption of US Forces from Canadian Criminal Law, Re [1943] 4 DLR 11 127
- Extradition of Greek National case, 22 ILR 520 219
- Factortame Ltd v. Secretary of State for Transport [1990] 2 AC 85; 93 ILR 652 137
- Fagernes, The [1927] P 311 140, 152
- Fama, The 5 C.Rob. 106 (1804) 370
- FAO v. INPDAI 87 ILR 1 1009
- Faurisson v. France 115 ILR 355 216
- Fayed v. Al-Tajir [1987] 2 All ER 396; 86 ILR 131 577, 583
- Fédéchar case, Case 8/55, European Court Reports (1954-6) 299 999
- Feivel Pikelný's Estate, Re, 32 BYIL, 1955-6, p.288 346
- Feldman v. État de Bahia, Pasicrisie Belge, 208, II, 55 552
- Ferhut Butt, ex parte 116 ILR 607 146, 583, 620
- Fernandez v. Wilkinson 505 F.Supp. 787 (1980) 121
- Ferrini v. Federal Republic of Germany (2004) Cass sez un 5044/04 539
- Filartiga v. Pena-Irala 630 F.2d 876 (1980); 77 ILR 169 121, 217, 219, 511
- Finnish Vessels in Great Britain during the War (Finland v. Great Britain) [7 AD 231] 104, 215, 621
- First American Corporation v. Al-Nahyan 948 F.Supp. 1107 (1996); 121 ILR 577 152, 555
- First Fidelity Bank NA v. Government of Antigua and Barbuda Permanent Mission 877 F.2d 189 (1989); 99 ILR 125 567, 714
- First National City Bank v. Banco Nacional de Cuba 406 US 759 (1972); 66 ILR 102 151
- First National City Bank v. Banco Para el Comercio Exterior de Cuba (Bancec) 462 US 611 (1983); 80 ILR 566 552, 564
- Fisheries Jurisdiction case (Spain v. Canada), ICJ Reports (1998) 432 694, 709, 710, 813, 829
- Fisheries Jurisdiction case (United Kingdom v. Iceland), ICJ Reports (1973) 3; 55 ILR 149 62, 77, 79, 412, 431, 454, 466, 685, 686, 714, 715, 720, 767, 768, 769, 808, 831, 840
- Flatow v. Islamic Republic of Iran 999 F.Supp. 1 (1998); 121 ILR 618 508, 537, 555, 564
- Flegenheimer case, 14 RIAA 327 (1958); 25 ILR 91 615, 616
- Flesche, Re 16 AD 266 219
- Foday Saybana Sankoh 119 ILR 389 146
- Foremost-McKesson Inc. v. Islamic Republic of Iran 905 F.2d 438 (1990) 552
- Former Syrian Ambassador to the German Democratic Republic 115 ILR 597 568, 582
- Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia v. Greece, ICJ Reports (2011) 644 596
- Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253 (1829) 123, 124
- Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines (1980) 44 ICLQ 1995; [1981] AC 251; 74 ILR 648 117, 118
- Foxworth v. Permanent Mission of the Republic of Uganda to the United Nations 796 F.Supp. 761 (1992); 99 ILR 138 564
- Fraisse (Pauline), 2 June 2000, Bulletin de l'Assemblée Plénière, No. 4, p. 7 133
- François v. State of Canada 115 ILR 418 547
- Franco-Suisse Le Ski (Hof van Cassatie/Cour de Cassation), 21 May 1971, Pas. 1971, I, 886 132
- Frankel v. Banco Nacional de Mexico, No. 82-6457 (SDNY 31 May 1983); 80 AJIL (1986) 172 544
- Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex case (France/Switzerland) [6 AD 362 et al.] 74, 101, 704, 720, 734, 767
- French Consulate Disabled Employee case, 114 ILR 508 547

- French Republic v. Commission of the European Communities, Case C-327/91 [1994] ECR I-3641 520
- Frisbie v. Collins 342 US 519 (1952) 510
- Frontier Land case, ICJ Reports, 1959, 209; 27 ILR 62 375
- Fruehauf case, 5 ILM (1966) 476 518
- Furundžija (IT-95-17/1) 121 ILR 213 92, 93, 94, 104, 246, 913
- Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros Project case (Hungary/Slovakia) (Judgment) [116 ILR 1] 66, 78, 83, 89, 92, 396, 590, 592, 602, 604, 607, 609, 646, 670, 672, 685, 718, 719, 720, 721, 735, 743, 827, 839
- Galić case, IT-98-29-T (2003) 323
- Gallardo case, 20 ILM, 1981, 1424; 67 ILR 578 282
- Gandara v. Bennett 528 F.3d 823 (11th Cir. 2008) 121, 585
- Garcia case, 4 RIAA 119 (1926) 623
- Garcia v. Texas 564 US (2011) 585
- Garland v. British Rail Engineering Ltd [1983] 2 AC 751; 93 ILR 622 116
- Gdynia Ameryka Linie v. Boguslawski [1953] AC 11; 19 ILR 72 352
- Gemini Shipping v. Foreign Trade Organisation for Chemicals and Foodstuffs 63 ILR 569 543
- Generation Ukraine v. Ukraine 44 ILM (2005) 404 630
- Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro), CR 96/5, 29 April 1996; ICJ Reports (1996) 595; 95 ILR 1 75, 83, 93, 95, 321, 333, 590, 591, 592, 593, 595, 599, 607, 609, 610, 612, 689, 707, 710, 730, 741, 743, 745, 805, 806, 811, 813, 814, 818, 819, 828, 829, 831, 834, 838, 842, 849, 914, 947, 972
- Georgia v. Russian Federation, ICJ Reports (2011) 70 767, 769, 811, 819
- Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309; 91 ILR 439 369
- Gerbaud v. Meden 18 ILR 288 728
- German Consular Notification case (Individual Constitutional Complaint Procedure), BVerfG, 2 BvR 2115/01, 19 September 2006 131
- German External Debts arbitration, 19 ILM (1980) 1357 707, 769
- German Settlers in Poland case (Series B, No. 6) [2 AD 71 et al.] 74, 747, 757
- German-Poland Border Treaty Constitutionality case, 108 ILR 656 757
- Germany v. Elicofon, 14 ILM, 1976, p. 806 359
- Germany v. Italy, ICJ Reports (2012) 99 64, 78, 95, 526, 531, 540
- Germany v. Italy, ICJ Reports (2010) 310 834
- Gill, Re 5 RIAA 157 (1931); 6 AD 203 598, 603
- Gittler v. German Information Centre 408 NYS 2d 600 (1978); 63 ILR 170 551
- Godínez Cruz H/Inf (90) 1, 80; 95 ILR 320 282
- Goering, Re 13 AD 203 (1946) 371
- Golder v. UK Series A, vol. 18, 1975; 57 ILR 200 264, 685
- Goldman v. Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 3 All ER 693 118
- Goldwater v. Carter 444 US 996 (1979) 346, 525, 688
- Gonzalez (Thos. P.) Corp v. Consejo Nacional de Produccion de Costa Rica 614 F.2d 1247 (1980) 545
- Gonzalez ('Cotton Field') v. Mexico 49 ILM 2010 637 283
- Gonzalez-Vera v. Kissinger 449 F.3d 1260 (2006) 150
- Good (Kenneth) v. Attorney-General, Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. 028 of 2005 128
- Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint), BVerfG, 2 BvR 1481/04 of 14 October 2004, 111 Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), 307-32, [2004] Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 3407-3412 131
- Gosalia v. Agarwal 118 ILR 429 757
- Governor of Pitcairn and Associated Islands v. Sutton [1995] 1 NZLR 426; 104 ILR 508 127
- Grand Jury Proceedings, Doe No. 770, Re 817 F.2d 1108 (1987); 81 ILR 599 555
- Grand Prince case, (2001) 125 ILR 272 456, 481, 619
- Great Belt case (Finland v. Denmark), ICJ Reports (1991) 12; 94 ILR 446 769, 806, 831, 838
- Greco-Bulgarian Communities, PCIJ Series B, No. 17; 5 AD 4 101, 202, 713
- Greece v. UK (Second Cyprus case), 2 Yearbook of the ECHR 186 216
- Greek case, 12 European Yearbook of Human Rights 196 216
- Greenham Women against Cruise Missiles v. Reagan 591 F.Supp. 1332 (1984); 99 ILR 44 150
- Grisbadarna case, 11 RIAA 147 (1909) 370, 374, 423
- Gruyex and Rolland v. Municipality of Sint-Genesius-Rode, Court of Appeal of Brussels, 28 January 2003, AR nr 2002/KR/412 132
- Guatemalan Genocide, Supreme Court of Spain Judgment No. 327/2003 503
- Guevera v. Peru, DC Docket No. 04-23223-CV-MGC, 1 November 2006 544
- Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo, ICJ Reports (2012) 324 838
- Guinea-Bissau v. Senegal (Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989), ICJ Reports (1990) 64; 83 ILR 1 727, 824, 831
- Guinea/Guinea-Bissau Maritime Delimitation 25 ILM (1986) 251; 77 ILR 636 444, 448
- Gulf of Maine Maritime Boundary case 71 ILR 74 66, 71, 73, 80, 383, 385, 437, 440, 443, 446, 447, 807
- Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 WLR 583; [1986] 3 All ER 449; 75 ILR 675; [1987] 1 QB 599; 75 ILR 675 114, 330, 340, 354, 355, 356

- Gutierrez, Re 24 ILR 265 496
- Guyana v. Suriname, Award of 17 September 2007; UKMIL 77 BYIL (2006) 764 440, 447, 451, 474, 800, 856, 858
- H (Minors), Re [1998] AC 72 118
- Habeas Corpus case, 9 HRLJ, 1988 94; 96 ILR 392 282
- Habib v. Australia, Decision on justiciability, (2010) FCAFC 12; ILDC 1518 (AU 2010) 141, 149
- Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2) [1939] 1 Ch. 182; 9 AD 94 341, 351, 748
- Hamdan v. Rumsfeld 548 US 557 493
- Handel v. Artukovic 601 F.Supp. 1421 (1985); 79 ILR 397 511
- Handelskwekerij GJ Bier BV v. Mines de Potasse d'Alsace SA 11 Netherlands YIL, 1980, p. 326 132
- Handyside v. UK, Series A, vol. 24, 1981; 58 ILR 150 264
- Harb v. King Fahd Abdul Aziz [2005] EWCA Civ 632 525, 557, 578
- Hartford Fire Insurance Co. v. California 113 S. Ct. 2891 (1993) 517
- Harza Engineering Co. v. The Islamic Republic of Iran, 1 Iran-US CTR 499; 70 ILR 117 629
- Havana Club Holding, Inc. v. Galleon SA 974 F.Supp. 302 (SDNY 1997); 203 F.3d (2d Cir. 2000) 125
- Hawaiian Claims case, 6 RIAA 157 (1925); 3 AD 80 758
- Hazeltine Research Inc. v. Zenith Radio Corporation 239 F.Supp. 51 (1965); 395 US 100 (1969) 516
- Heathrow Airport User Charges Arbitration, 102 ILR 215; UKMIL 63 BYIL (1992) 712; 88 AJIL (1994) 738 621, 687, 796
- Heirs of the Duc de Guise case, 13 RIAA 161 (1951); 18 ILR 423 596
- Herd case, 4 RIAA 653 (1930) 599
- Hesperides Hotels v. Aegean Turkish Holidays [1979] QB 205; [1978] 1 All ER 277; 73 ILR 9 152, 354
- Hess BVerfGE 55, 349; 90 ILR 386 149
- Hicks v. US 120 ILR 606 535
- High Commissioner for India v. Ghosh [1960] 1 QB 134; 28 ILR 150 582
- Hilaire and Others v. Trinidad and Tobago, Judgment of 21 June 2002 281
- Hildebrand v. Champagne 82 ILR 121 579
- Hilton v. Guyot 159 US 113 120
- Hirota v. MacArthur 335 US 876; TIAS, 1946, No. 1589, p. 3; 15 AD 485 290
- Hirsch v. State of Israel 962 F.Supp. 377 (1997); 113 ILR 543 561
- Hispano Americana Mercantil SA v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1979] 2 LL. R 277; 64 ILR 221 530
- HM Treasury v. Ahmed [2010] UKSC 2 117, 119, 957
- HMHK v. Netherlands 94 ILR 342 613
- Holiday Inns v. Morocco 788
- Holland v. Ireland 115 ILR 277 216
- Holland v. Lampen-Wolfe [2000] 1 WLR 1573, 1588; 119 ILR 367 525, 535, 538, 551
- Holmes v. Bangladesh Binani Corporation [1989] 1 AC 1112; 87 ILR 365 489, 515
- Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. 102 ILR 163 136, 194, 531
- Home Missionary Society case, 6 RIAA (1920); 1 AD 173 593, 599
- Honecker, Re 80 ILR 365 555
- Horgan v. An Taoiseach 132 ILR 407 127, 130, 141
- Hoshinmaru (Japan v. Russia) 480
- Hosking & Hosking v. Runting and Pacific Magazines NZ Ltd [2004] NZCA 34 129
- HSA et al. v. SA et al No. P. 02.1139. F/1 503, 557
- Huber case (1990) 610
- Huntington v. Attrill [1893] AC 150 487
- I Congreso del Partido [1977] 3 WLR 778; [1978] 1 QB 500; 64 ILR 154 109, 525, 530, 533, 534, 554
- ICI v. Commission [1972] ECR 619; 48 ILR 106 520
- III Finance Ltd v. Aegis Consumer Finance Inc. 619
- Ilaşcu v. Moldova and Russia, ECtHR judgment of 8 July 2004 189, 257, 598
- Ilhan v. Turkey, Judgment of 27 June 2000 265
- Iloilo case, 4 RIAA 158 (1925); 3 AD 336 370
- I'm Alone case, 3 RIAA 1609 (1935); 7 AD 203 460, 461, 610, 838
- IMCO case ICJ Reports (1960) 150; 30 ILR 426 456, 990, 998
- Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur ICJ Reports (1999); 121 ILR 367 175, 1014
- Import Prohibition of Certain Shrimp and Shrimp Products case, 1998, WT/DS58/AB/R 784
- Imports of Agricultural, Textile and Industrial Products, 1999, WT/DS90/AB/R 784
- INA Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran 8 Iran-US CTR 373; 75 ILR 603 633, 634
- India v. Taylor [1955] AC 491; 22 ILR 286 487
- Indigenous Community Yakye Axa v. Paraguay, Judgment of 17 June 2005, Series C, No. 125 231
- Indonesia/Malaysia case, ICJ Reports (2002) 625 378, 379, 380, 384, 707, 829, 837, 848
- Indus Waters Kishenganga Arbitration (Pakistan v. India), Partial Award 18 February 2013, Final Award 20 December 2013 801
- Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbour 3 Peters 99 (1830) 495
- Interhandel case (Switzerland v. United States) 27 ILR 475 61, 215, 614, 620, 621, 822, 823
- International Association of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. OPEC 649 F.2d 1354, 1359; 66 ILR 413 525, 526
- International Fruit Company and Others Joined Cases 21/72 to 24/72 [1972] ECR 1219 137

- International Fund for Agricultural Development (Advisory Opinion), ICJ Reports (2012) 10 845
- International Responsibility for Issuing and Applying Laws in Violation of the Convention, Advisory Opinion OC-14/94 of 9 December 1994, Series A, No. 14 278
- International Responsibility for the Promulgation and Enforcement of Laws in Violation of the Convention (American Convention on Human Rights) (Advisory Opinion OC-14/94) [116 ILR 320] 101
- International Shoe Co. v. Washington 326 US 310 (1945) 545
- International Tin Council, Re [1987] Ch. 419; [1988] 3 All ER 257, 361; 80 ILR 181 1000, 1005
- International Tin Council v. Amalgamated Inc. 524 NYS 2d 971 (1988); 80 ILR 30 993
- Internationale Handelsgesellschaft v. Einfuhr- und Vorratsstelle für Getreide und Futtermittel [1970] ECR 1125 137, 271
- Interpretation of Article 3, paragraph 2, of the Treaty of Lausanne PCIJ, Series B, No. 12 795
- Interpretation of Peace Treaties, ICJ Reports (1950) 221; 17 ILR 318 709, 797, 811, 817, 844
- Interpretation of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the WHO and Egypt case, ICJ Reports (1980); 62 ILR 450 205
- Interpretation of the American Declaration case, 28 ILM, 1989, 378; 96 ILR 416 282
- Interpretation of the Statute of Memel, PCIJ Series A/B, No. 49 294 103
- Intpro Properties (UK) Ltd v. Sauvel [1983] 2 All ER 495; 64 ILR 384 576, 579
- Iowa v. Illinois 147 US 1 (1893) 83
- Iran v. United States, Case No. A/18, 5 Iran-US CTR 251; 75 ILR 176 617, 708
- Iran-US Claims Tribunal v. AS 94 ILR 321 1009
- IRC v. Collco Dealings Ltd [1962] AC 1; 33 ILR 1 117
- Ireland v. UK, Series A, vol. 25, 1978; 58 ILR 188 256, 262, 264, 710, 743
- Ireland v. UK (Mox) 126 ILR 257 474, 480, 768, 849
- Iron Rhine (Belgium v. Netherlands) case (2005) 644, 654, 687, 707
- Island of Palmas Arbitration, 2 RIAA 826 (1928); 4 AD 3 et al. 83, 170, 361, 363, 370, 374, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 386, 487, 592, 645, 688
- Israel v. Bulgaria, ICJ Reports (1959) 531–2 621
- Issa v. Turkey, Judgment of 30 May 2000 257
- Italian South Tyrol Terrorism case, 71 ILR 242 499
- Italy v. Hambro's Bank [1950] 1 All ER 430 115
- Jabari v. Turkey, Judgment of 11 July 2000 265
- Jackson v. People's Republic of China 596 F.Supp. 386 (1984) 543
- James case, ECHR, Series A, No. 98; 75 ILR 397 628, 708
- Jan Mayen (Maritime Delimitation in the Area between Greenland and Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway)) [99 ILR 395] 78, 79, 91, 419, 440, 446, 447, 448, 476
- Janes case, 4 RIAA 86 (1925); 3 AD 218 596, 624
- Japan Whaling Association v. American Cetacean Society 478 US 221 (1986) 150
- Jégo-Quéré v. Commission [2002] ECR II-2365 273
- Jelisić case IT-95–10 319
- Jessie, The 6 RIAA 57 (1921); 1 AD 175 593
- Jimenez v. Aristeguieta 33 ILR 353 556
- Johnson v. Eisenträger 339 US 763 (1950) 493
- Johnston v. Ireland, ECtHR Series A, No. 112 (1986); 89 ILR 154 216, 257, 262
- Jones v. Saudi Arabia [2006] UKHL 26; [2007] 1 AC 270; 129 ILR 713 104, 524, 525, 530, 539, 542, 552
- Jones v. United Kingdom, ECtHR Judgment of 14 January 2014 526, 539
- Joyce v. DPP [1946] AC 347; 15 AD 91 494, 499
- Jupiter [1924] P. 236; 3 AD 136 527
- Juridical Condition and Rights of Undocumented Migrants OC-18/03, Series A, No. 18 (2003) 94
- Jurisdiction of the European Commission of the Danube, PCIJ, Series B, No. 14; 4 AD 126 56, 998
- Kadahfi, RGDIP, 2001–2, pp. 474–6 133
- Kadi (Yassin Abdullah) and Al Barakaat International Foundation v. Council of the European Union and Commission of the European Communities (Kadi I) Case C-402/05 P (2008); [2008] ECR I-6351 137, 957
- Kadi II case, ECtHR, Judgment of 18 July 2013 957
- Kadić v. Karadžić 70 F.3d 232 (2d Cir. 1995); 104 ILR 149 120, 122, 150, 512
- Kahan v. Pakistan Federation [1951] 2 KB 1003; 18 ILR 210 560, 583
- Kalamazoo Spice Extraction Co. v. Provisional Military Government of Socialist Ethiopia 729 F.2d 422 (1984); 86 ILR 45; 90 ILR 596 152, 630
- Kalogeropoulou v. Greece and Germany, ECtHR judgment of 12 December 2002; 129 ILR 537 539
- Kambanda case, ICTR-97–23-S (1998) 321
- Kanyabashi case, ICTR-96–15-T (1997) 323
- Kartinyeri v. The Commonwealth (1998) 195 CLR 337 128
- Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire Case No. 75/92, 13 NQHR, 1995, 478 284
- Kaunda v. President of the Republic of South Africa CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5 134, 149, 489, 613
- Kavanagh v. Governor of Mountjoy Prison [2002] 3 IR 97; 132 ILR 394 130
- Kaya v. Turkey, Judgment of 19 February 1998 265
- Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95–1-T (1999) 319, 321
- Ker v. Illinois 119 US 436 (1886) 510
- Khan v. Canada, CAT/C/13/D/15/1994 248
- Khordodovskiy, Re 133 ILR 365 (2006) 135

- Khurts Bat v. Investigating Judge of the German Federal Court [2011] EWHC 2029 (Admin) 586
- Khurts Bat v. Republic of Mongolia [2011] EWHC 2029 (Admin) 153
- Kibris Turk Hava Yollarai and CTA Holidays v. Secretary of State for Transport [2009] EWHC 1918 (Admin) 355
- Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. 569 US (2013) 4 121, 489, 513, 515
- Kirk [1984] ECR 2689 272
- Kirkpatrick v. Environmental Tectonics 110 S. Ct. 701 (1990); 88 ILR 93 152
- Kitok case, Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/43/40 221; 96 ILR 637 225
- KJ International v. MV Oscar Jupiter 131 ILR 529 542
- Kjeldsen v. Denmark, 15 Yearbook of the ECHR 428; 58 ILR 117 216
- Klass case, Series A, vol. 28, 1979; 58 ILR 423 262
- Klinghoffer v. SNC Achille Lauro 739 F.Supp. 854 (1990); 937 F.2d 44 (1991) 120, 150
- Knüller (Publishing, Printing and Promotions) Ltd v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1973] AC 435 111
- Koepfel and Koepfel v. Federal Republic of Nigeria 704 F.Supp. 521 (1989); 99 ILR 121 585
- Koo Golden East v. Bank of Nova Scotia [2008] QB 717 564
- Koohi v. United States 976 F.2d 1328 (1992); 99 ILR 80 150
- Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen, High Court of Australia, 39 ALR 417 (11 May 1982); 68 ILR 181 129, 174
- Korea National Insurance Corporation v. Allianz Global Corporate & Speciality AG [2008] EWCA Civ 1355 140
- Kosovo UDI, ICJ Reports (2010) 403 845
- Krajina v. Tass Agency [1949] 2 All ER 274; 16 AD 129 527, 550
- Kramer [1976] ECR 1279 192
- Kremzow v. Austria [1997] ECR I-2629; 113 ILR 264 272
- Krstić case, IT-98-33-T (2001) 320
- Kruger v. Commonwealth of Australia (1997) 146 ALR 126; 118 ILR 371 128
- Kudla v. Poland, Judgment of 26 October 2000 265
- Kunarac case, IT-96-23&23/1 (2002) 325, 914
- Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon 358 F.Supp. 747 (1972); 61 ILR 143; 94 ILR 135 178, 359, 748
- Kurt v. Turkey, Judgment of 25 May 1998 265
- Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company [1995] 1 WLR 1147; 116 ILR 534 (High Court); [2000] 2 All ER (Comm.) 360; [2001] 2 WLR 1117 (Court of Appeal); [2002] UKHL 19 (House of Lords) 112, 144, 145, 535, 536, 551, 566
- Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company (Nos. 4 and 5) [2002] 2 AC 883 143
- La Bretagne case, 82 ILR 590 685, 707
- Lac Lannoux Arbitration (France/Spain) 24 ILR 101 77, 654, 670, 769
- Lafontant v. Aristide 103 ILR 581 556
- LaGrand Case (Germany v. United States) (Request for the Indication of Provisional Measures) 118 ILR 37 97, 101, 121, 173, 175, 584, 585, 595, 606, 607, 622, 707, 711, 813, 832, 838, 839
- Laker Airways v. Sabena 731 F.2d 909 (1984) 517
- Lam Mow v. Nagle 24 F.2d 316 (1928); 4 AD 295 495
- Lamy case (1989) 610
- Land Reclamation (Malaysia v. Singapore) case, 126 ILR 487 481, 768
- Landano v. USA 116 ILR 636 547
- Länsmann cases 511/92 and 671/95, 115 ILR 300; Report of the Human Rights Committee 2005, volume II, A/60/40 228
- Largueche v. Tancredi Feni 101 ILR 377 579
- Larsen v. Hawaiian Kingdom arbitration 119 ILR 566 796, 811, 819
- Launder, Ex Parte [1997] 1 WLR 839 117
- Lawson v. Serco Limited [2006] UKHL 3; [2006] ICR 250 489
- LCB v. UK, Judgment of 9 June 1998 265
- Leasing West GmbH v. Algeria 116 ILR 526 565
- Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in Namibia, ICJ Reports (1971); 49 ILR 3 177
- Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Request for an Advisory Opinion by the United Nations General Assembly, ICJ Reports (1966) 226; 110 ILR 163 55, 66, 73, 77, 81, 87, 92, 167, 601, 646, 647, 685, 769, 808, 809, 825, 844, 845, 856, 860, 868, 869, 892, 894, 901, 906, 908, 995
- Legality of the Use by a State of Nuclear Weapons in Armed Conflict, ICJ Reports (1996) 66; 110 ILR 1 809, 846, 996, 997, 998, 999
- Legality of the Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. USA), ICJ Reports (1999) 916 694
- Legality of the Use of Force (Yugoslavia v. Belgium) case, ICJ Reports (1999) 124 831
- Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. Russia 21 F.2d 396 (1927); 4 AD 58 360
- LETCO v. Government of Liberia, 89 ILR 313 788
- Letelier v. Republic of Chile 488 F.Supp. 665 (1980); 63 ILR 378 526, 548, 564, 772
- Levacher, RFDA, 2000, p. 79 133
- Liamco case, 20 ILM (1981) 1; 62 ILR 141 609, 628, 632
- Libman v. The Queen [1985] 2 SCR 178; (1985) 21 CCC (3d) 206 490, 538
- Libra Bank Ltd v. Banco Nacional de Costa Rica 676 F.2d 47 (1982); 72 ILR 119 561
- Libya v. Ros beton SRL, 87 ILR 63 565

- Libya/Chad Territorial Dispute [100 ILR 1] 77, 158, 367, 378, 383, 388, 392, 394, 707, 709, 734, 817, 840
- Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, 81 ILR 238; 81 ILR 726 55, 71, 80, 434, 436, 437, 444, 447, 810, 818, 827, 835, 836
- Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company v. Republic of Burundi 96 ILR 279 603
- Libyan-American Oil Co. v. Libya 482 F.Supp. 1175 (1980) 545
- Licensing of Journalists case, 7 HRLJ 1986 74; 75 ILR 31 281, 711
- Lichtensztein case, 5 HRLJ, 1984 243
- Liechtenstein v. Germany ICJ Reports (2005) 82, 806, 810, 811
- Lighthouses case, 23 ILR 352 594, 633, 758, 762
- Ligue Internationale Contre le Racisme et l'Antisémitisme, AFDI, 1993, p. 963 and AFDI, 1994, pp. 963 ff 133
- Linder v. Portocarrero 963 F.2d 332 (1992); 747 F.Supp. 1452; 99 ILR 55 122, 123, 150
- Lithgow case, ECtHR Series A, No. 102; 75 ILR 438 628, 685, 707, 709
- Litster v. Forth Dry Dock Engineering [1989] 1 All ER 1194 119
- Littlejohn & Co. v. United States 270 US 215 (1926); 3 AD 483 121
- Littrell v. United States (No. 2) [1995] 1 WLR 82; 100 ILR 438 114, 142, 535
- Liu (Helen) v. Republic of China 29 ILM (1990) 192 526
- Loayza Tamayo v. Peru (Reparations), Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1998, Series C, No. 42; 116 ILR 388 282, 607
- Lockerbie case (Libya v. UK; Libya v. US), ICJ Reports (1992) 3; 94 ILR 478 85, 101, 490, 703, 808, 810, 826, 830, 832, 847, 947, 971, 972
- Loewen Group v. USA, 7 ICISID Reports (2003) 442 785
- Loizidou v. Turkey Series A, No. 310, 1995; 103 ILR 622 184, 256, 257, 262, 332, 592, 628, 699, 708, 710, 711
- Lonrho Exports Ltd v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673; 108 ILR 596 113, 114, 613
- López Burgos v. Uruguay, case no. 52/79; 68 ILR 29 244
- Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000 122 ILR 619 106, 110
- Lotus case (France/Turkey) [4 AD 5 et al.] 57, 60, 62, 67, 82, 83, 167, 457, 461, 487, 490, 491, 497, 709
- Louisiana v. Mississippi 282 US 458 (1940) 369
- Lovelace case, 68 ILR 17 227, 243
- Lozano v. Montoya Alvarez 572 US (2014) 126
- Ltd Partnership Z v. High Court (Obergericht) of the Canton of Thurgau, Federal Supreme Court, Insolvency Chamber, 15 June 2005 737
- Lubanga case, ICC-01/04-01/06 (2012) 912
- Lubicon Lake Band case, A/45/40, vol. II; 96 ILR 667 225
- Lutcher SA v. Inter-American Development Bank 382 F.2d 454 (1967) 1015
- Lutgarda Jimenez v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue [2004] UK SPC 00419 (23 June 2004) 581
- Luther v. Sagor [1921] 1 KB 456; 1 AD 47 350, 358
- Luxembourg v. Compagnie Luxembourgeoise de Télédiffusion and Compagnie Luxembourgeoise Assurance 'Le Foyer' [91 ILR 281] 66
- M v. Arab Republic of Egypt 116 ILR 656 547
- M v. Federal Department of Justice and Police, 75 ILR 107 741
- Mabo v. Queensland (No. 1) (1988) 83 ALR 14; 112 ILR 412 229
- Mabo v. Queensland (No. 2) (1992) 107 ALR 1; 112 ILR 457; (1992) 175 CLR 1 127, 229
- McCann v. UK Series A, vol. 324, 1995 264, 265
- McGee v. International Life Insurance Co. 355 US 220 (1957) 545
- McGimpsey v. Ireland [1988] IR 567 130
- McKeel v. Islamic Republic of Iran 722 F.2d 582 (1983); 81 ILR 543 568
- McKerr, Re [2004] UKHL 12 142
- Maclaine Watson v. Department of Trade and Industry [1988] 3 WLR 1033; 80 ILR 49 109, 113, 114, 116, 141, 542, 562, 566
- Maclaine Watson v. International Tin Council [1988] 3 WLR 1169; 80 ILR 191 141, 526, 1005
- Macleod v. United States 229 US 416 (1913) 121
- McMullen case, 74 AJIL (1980) 434 514
- Mahuika et al. v. New Zealand A/56/40, vol. II, annex X 225
- Malachou v. Armefti and Armefti 88 ILR 199 130
- Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports (1969) 91, 829
- Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports (2008) 362, 364, 378, 382, 383, 384, 385, 387, 492
- Malek v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 19 Iran-US CTR 48 617
- Malone v. MPC [1979] Ch. 344; 74 ILR 304 117
- Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, Judgment of 6 February 2003 260, 265
- Manauta v. Embassy of Russian Federation 113 ILR 429 531
- Mannington Mills v. Congoleum Corporation 595 F.2d 1287 (1979); 66 ILR 487 516
- Mara'abe v. Prime Minister of Israel, 129 ILR 241 847, 899, 902
- Marchiori v. The Environment Agency [2002] EWCA Civ 3 139
- Marcinkus, Mennini and De Strobel, Re 87 ILR 48 194
- Marckx case, Series A, vol. 31; 58 ILR 561 257, 262, 264, 710

- Marcos, In Re Estate of Ferdinand E., Human Rights Litigation 978 F.2d 493, 502 (9th Cir. 1992); 103 ILR 521 120
- Maret, The 145 F.2d 431 (1944); 12 AD 29 358, 360
- Mareva Compania Naviera v. International Bulcarriers [1975] 2 LL. R 509 561
- Margellos v. Federal Republic of Germany 129 ILR 526 548
- Marine Steel Ltd v. Government of the Marshall Islands [1981] 2 NZLR 1; 64 ILR 539 127
- Martić case, IT-95-11-T (2007) 325
- Martini case, 2 RIAA 977 (1930); 5 AD 153 608
- Masri v. Consolidated Contractors [2008] EWCA Civ 303 489
- Massey case, 4 RIAA 155 (1927); 4 AD 250 595
- Matthew v. Trinidad and Tobago State [2004] UKPC 33; 134 ILR 687 114
- Matthews v. UK 28 EHRR 361; 123 ILR 13 175, 1006
- Mauritian Women case 243
- Mauritius v. UK, 30 November 2011 797
- Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions case, (Jurisdiction), PCIJ, Series A, No. 2 (1924); 2 AD 27 204, 613, 702, 711, 757, 765, 767, 810, 813
- Mayagna (Sumo) Awas Tingni Community v. Nicaragua Series C, No. 79 230, 592
- Medellin v. Dretke 118 S.Ct. 1352 (2005) 173
- Medellin v. Texas 522 US (2008); 128 S.Ct. 1346 97, 125, 174, 585
- Medvedyev v. France, Judgment of 29 March. 2010 258
- Mellacher, ECHR, Series A, No. 169 628
- Mellenger v. New Brunswick Development Corporation [1971] 2 All ER 593; 52 ILR 322 553
- Mendaro v. World Bank 717 F.2d 610 (1983); 99 ILR 92 1009, 1015
- Merck Genéricos-Produtos Farmacêuticos Case C-431/05 [2007] ECR I-0000 137
- Mergé case, 14 RIAA 236 (1955); 22 ILR 443 617
- Merhi case, STL-13-04/1/TCF0037/20131220/R099167-R099204/EN/af 314
- Metalclad Corporation v. United Mexican States 119 ILR 615 597, 630, 634, 788
- Methanex v. USA 44 ILM (2005) 1345 631, 785
- Mexico v. Hoffman 324 US 30 (1945); 12 AD 143 154, 528
- Middle East Cement Shipping v. Egypt 7 ICSID Reports 178 630
- Midland Bank plc v. Laker Airways Ltd [1986] 2 WLR 707; 118 ILR 540 518
- Military Affairs Office of the Embassy of Kuwait v. Caramba-Coker, Appeal No. EAT/1054/02/RN, Employment Appeal Tribunal (2003) 546, 566
- Mills v. USA 120 ILR 612 560
- Mininni v. Bari Institute 87 ILR 28 1009
- Minister for Arts Heritage and Environment v. Peko-Wallsend Ltd (1987) 75 ALR 218; 90 ILR 32 143
- Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade v. Magno (1992) 37 FCR 298; 112 ALR 529 (1992-3); 101 ILR 202 129, 570
- Minister for Immigration and Multicultural Affairs, ex parte Lam [2003] HCA 6 129
- Minister of Defence, Namibia v. Mwandighi 91 ILR 341 758, 762
- Minister of State for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs v. Teoh 132 ILR 407 114, 128, 129
- Ministry of Defense of the Islamic Republic of Iran v. Gould, 1988 Iranian Assets Litig. Rep. 15, 313; 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 591 359
- Minority Schools in Albania PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 64 (1935); 8 AD 386 223
- Minors Oposa v. Secretary of the Department of Environment and Natural Resources, Supreme Court of the Philippines, 33 ILM (1994) 173 644
- Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953; 52; 20 ILR 94 364, 376, 379, 381, 817
- Missouri v. Holland 252 US 416 (1920); 1 AD 4 123, 173
- Mobutu and Republic of Zaire v. Société Logrine 113 ILR 481 556
- Mohamad v. Palestinian Authority 566 US (2012) 122
- Moiwana Community v. Suriname, Judgment of 15 June 2005, Series C, No. 124 231
- Molván (Naim) v. Attorney-General for Palestine [1948] AC 351; 13 AD 51 457
- Molyneaux, ex parte [1986] 1 WLR 331; 87 ILR 329 143
- Mondev International Ltd v. USA 6 ICSID Reports (2002) 192 785
- Monetary Gold case, ICJ Reports (1954) 32; 21 ILR 399 810, 815, 818, 819
- Mora v. New York, 524 F.3d 183 (2d Cir. 2008) 585
- Morrison v. National Australia Bank Ltd 561 US (2010) 513
- Mortensen v. Peters (1906) 8 F.(J.) 93 108
- Mossé case, 13 RIAA 494 (1953); 20 ILR 217 597
- Mosul Boundary case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 12 158
- Mugesera v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [2005] 2 SCR 100; 132 ILR 295 129
- Muhonen v. Finland, A/40/40 164; 94 ILR 389 216
- Mukuro v. European Bank for Reconstruction and Development [1994] ICR 897 1009
- Muller v. USA 114 ILR 513 547
- Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy 6 US (2 Cranch) 64 125
- Musema, ICTR-96-13-T (2000) 319
- Myers (S.D.) v. Canada 121 ILR 72 607
- NAC v. Federal Republic of Nigeria 63 ILR 137 543
- Nada v. Switzerland, ECtHR 12 September 2012 709, 958
- Nallaratnam Singarasa v. Attorney General, S.C. Spl (LA) No. 182/99 (2006) 128

- Namibia case ICJ Reports, 1971; 49 ILR 2 85, 176, 196, 201, 208, 218, 347, 348, 354, 367, 598, 685, 708, 710, 718, 805, 806, 935, 971, 998, 999, 1018
- Nanni v. Pace and the Sovereign Order of Malta 8 AD 2 193
- National City Bank of New York v. Republic of China 22 ILR 210 529
- National Iranian Oil Co. case, 22 ILM (1983) 1279 565
- National Oil Corporation v. Libyan Sun Oil Co. 733 F. Supp. 800 (1990); 94 ILR 209 357
- National Petrochemical v. The M/T Stolt Sheaf 60 F.2d 551 (1988); 87 ILR 583 359
- National Smokeless Fuels Ltd v. IRC, The Times, 23 April 1986 116
- Natoniewski v. Germany (2010) 548
- Naulilaa case, 2 RIAA 1025 (1928); 4 AD 466 601, 859
- Nauru v. Australia, ICJ Reports (1992) 240; 97 ILR 1 176, 605, 819, 824, 991
- Navemar, The 303 US 68 (1938); 9 AD 176 154, 527
- Neer case 4 RIAA, p. 60 (1926); 3 AD 213 593, 623
- Netherlands v. Nuhanović 12/03324, 6 September 2013 596, 1003
- Netherlands v. Parliament and Council [2001] ECR I-7079 273
- Neumeister case, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 17 (1974); 41 ILR 316 610
- New England Merchants National Bank v. Iran Power Generation and Transmission Company 19 ILM (1980) 1298; 63 ILR 408 561
- New Jersey v. Delaware 291 US 361 (1934) 396
- Newfoundland Continental Shelf, Re [1984] 1 SCR 86; 86 ILR 593 127, 130
- Newfoundland/Nova Scotia case (2001) 686
- Ng case, A/49/40, vol. II 243
- Nguyen Tuong Van v. Public Prosecutor [2004] SGCA 47; 134 ILR 660 127
- Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports (2012) 67 378, 382, 383, 384, 385, 393, 414, 419, 451, 812, 816, 820, 828, 836
- Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports (1988) 16; 84 ILR 218 77, 378, 380, 381, 391, 395, 410, 414, 423, 440, 769, 779, 809, 812, 820, 826, 828, 834, 849
- Nicaragua v. United States (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua) [76 ILR 349] 57, 64, 65, 66, 71, 73, 83, 85, 87, 91, 92, 93, 413, 423, 454, 509, 595, 598, 599, 685, 716, 766, 767, 775, 809, 811, 817, 818, 820, 822, 824, 826, 827, 828, 830, 831, 835, 836, 855, 858, 863, 864, 866, 867, 868, 873, 874, 876, 878, 882, 909, 914, 915
- Nicolo, in re 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 765; 93 ILR 286 133
- Nicoud v. USA 116 ILR 650 547
- Nielsen case, 2 Yearbook of the ECHR 413; 28 ILR 210 216
- Nissan v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 179; 44 ILR 359 139
- Nixon v. United States 122 L.Ed.2d 1 (1993) 150
- NML Capital v. Republic of Argentina [2011] 2 AC 495 542, 559
- NNB v. Ocean Trade Company 87 ILR 96 413
- Noble Ventures v. Romania, ICSID award of 12 October 2005 592
- Nold v. EC Commission [1974] ECR 491 119, 272
- Non-resident Petitioner v. Central Bank of Nigeria 16 ILM, 1977 501 533
- Nordstern Allgemeine Versicherungs AG v. Vereinigte Stinees Rheinreedereien 74 ILR 2 131
- Norris v. Ireland, Series A, No. 142, 1988; 89 ILR 243 263
- Norris v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2006] UWHC 280 (Admin) 515
- Norris v. USA [2008] UKHL 16 515
- North American Dredging Co. claim, 4 RIAA 26 (1926); 3 AD 4 621
- North Atlantic Coast Fisheries case (1910), Scott, Hague Court Reports 141 167, 402, 417, 436
- North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London [2005] EWHC 1698 (Admin) 154, 355
- North Sea Continental Shelf cases (Federal Republic of Germany/Denmark; Federal Republic of Germany/The Netherlands) 41 ILR 29 2, 56, 57, 59, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 71, 73, 77, 79, 80, 89, 91, 94, 158, 385, 410, 412, 436, 441, 442, 447, 449, 451, 476, 654, 768, 769, 815
- North-Eastern Boundary case (Canada v. US) 799
- Northern Cameroons case, ICJ Reports (1963) 15; 35 ILR 353 808, 812, 813, 826
- Norwegian Embassy v. Quattri 114 ILR 525 547
- Norwegian Loans case, ICJ Reports (1957) 9; 24 ILR 782 712, 822, 823
- Norwegian Shipowners' Claims case, 1 RIAA 307 (1922) 630, 632, 633, 798
- Nottebohm case (Liechtenstein v. Guatemala), ICJ Reports (1955) 23; 22 ILR 349 61, 82, 101, 171, 205, 485, 491, 494, 615, 616, 617, 759, 798, 799, 813, 824
- Nova Scotia/Newfoundland case (First Phase) 128 ILR 425 91
- Nuclear Tests cases (Australia v. France; New Zealand v. France), ICJ Reports (1974) 253; 57 ILR 398, 57 ILR 605 77, 91, 454, 610, 647, 674, 685, 686, 808, 810, 812, 813, 824, 826, 830, 836, 840, 842, 999
- Nulyarimma v. Thompson (1999) 165 ALR 621; 120 ILR 353 111, 128
- O'Bryan v. Holy See, 556 F.3d 361 (6th Cir. 2009) 194
- Öcalan v. Turkey, Judgment of 14 December 2000 257
- O'Connell Machinery v. MV Americana 734 F.2d 115 (1984); 81 ILR 539 561

- Office of Fair Trading v. Lloyds TSB Bank plc [2007] UKHL 48 489
- Oil Platforms case (Iran v. USA), ICJ Reports (1996) 803; 130 ILR 174; ICJ Reports (2003) 161; 130 ILR 323 688, 708, 810, 814, 825, 829, 834, 862, 869, 873
- O’Laighléis, Re 24 ILR 420 130
- Oleynikov v. Russia, ECtHR judgment of 14 March 2013 539
- Opel Austria GmbH v. Council of the European Union (Case T-115/94) 113 ILR 295 77
- Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland, ECtHR Series A, No. 246 (1992) 216
- OPIC Karimum Corporation v. Venezuela, ICSID Case No. ARB/10/14, 5 May 2011 797
- Oppenheimer v. Cattermole (Inspector of Taxes); Nothman v. Cooper (Inspector of Taxes) [1976] AC 249; 72 ILR 446 105, 112, 145
- OR, MM and MS v. Argentina, communications nos. 1–3/1988. Decisions of 23 November 1989 248
- Orinoco Steamship Co. case, 11 RIAA (1910) 227 799
- OSPAR (Ireland v. UK), 126 ILR 364 92, 595, 799
- Othman (Abu Qatada) v. UK, ECtHR, 17 January 2012 687
- Othman (Jordan) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2008] EWCA Civ 290 687
- Ottoman Public Debt case, 1 RIAA 529 (1925) 754, 755
- Ovcara case (2004) 315
- Ownership of Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia, re [1967] SCR 792; 43 ILR 93 127
- P (No.2), Re [1998] 1 FLR 1027; 114 ILR 485 552, 582
- Pad v. Turkey, Judgment of 28 June 2007 258
- Pahang (Sultan of) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2011] EWCA Civ 616 528
- Palmagero Gold Fields case, 5 RIAA 298 (1931) 608
- Pan Am Airways v. The Queen (1981) 2 SCR 565; 90 ILR 213 404
- Pan American World Airways Inc. v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co. 13 ILM (1974) 1376 343
- Panama v. Citizens & Southern International Bank 682 F.Supp. 1144 (1988); 86 ILR 10 359
- Panama v. Republic National Bank of New York 681 F. Supp. 1066 (1988); 86 ILR 1 359
- Panama-Costa Rica Boundary case, 11 RIAA (1900) 519 799
- Panevezys-Saldutiskis case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 76; 9 AD 308 204, 613, 620
- Papamichalopoulos v. Greece, ECtHR Series A, No. 260 (1993) 630
- Paquete Habana case 175 US 677 (1900) 57, 61, 83, 120
- Paraguay v. USA ICJ Reports (1998); 118 ILR 1 126
- Parent and Others v. Singapore Airlines Ltd and Civil Aeronautics Administration 133 ILR 264 355
- Parking Privileges for Diplomats case, 70 ILR 396 130
- Parlement Belge (1879) 4 PD 129; (1880) 5 PD 197 113, 527, 529
- Parot v. Spain, CAT/C/14/D/6/1990 248
- PAU v. American Security and Trust Company, US District Court for the District of Columbia 18 ILR 441 1018
- Pauling v. McElroy 164 F.Supp. 390 (1958) 120
- Pauwels case (1989) 610
- Pazmany (Peter) University case, PCIJ Series A/B, No. 61, p. 236 747, 748
- Pellat case, 5 AD 145 596
- Pelletier case 799
- People of Saipan ex rel. Guerrero v. United States Department of Interior 502 F.2d 90 (1974); 61 ILR 113 125
- Perez et al. v. The Bahamas 482 F.Supp. 1208 (1980); 63 ILR 350 545
- Permanent Mission of India to the US v. City of New York 127 S. Ct. 2352 (2007) 544
- Perry v. SOCA [2012] UKSC 35 489, 515
- Persinger v. Islamic Republic of Iran 729 F.2d 835 (1984) 573
- Peru v. Chile, ICJ Reports (2014) 179–80 450, 452, 707, 779, 820
- Peruvian Genocide, Supreme Court of Spain Judgment No. 712/2003 503
- Pretotimor Companhia de Petroleos SARL v. Commonwealth of Australia [2003] FCAFC 3 149
- Pfizer Inc. v. Canada [1999] 4 CF 441 127
- Phelps Dodge Corporation v. Iran, 10 Iran-US CTR (1986) 121 634
- Philippine Admiral [1976] 2 WLR 214; 64 ILR 90 529
- Philippine Embassy case, 65 ILR 146 564, 576
- Philippines v. Marcos (No. 1) 806 F.2d 344 (1986); 81 ILR 581 555, 556
- Philippines v. Pimentel 553 US (2008), Supreme Court, 12 June 2008 524, 525
- Physicians for Human Rights v. Almog, HCJ 8990–02, ILDC 365 (IL 2002), 2003 908
- Physicians for Human Rights v. IDF Commander in Gaza, HCJ 4764/04, [2004] IsrL 200 907
- Physicians for Human Rights v. Prime Minister, HCJ 201/09 [2009] IsrLR 1 907
- Piandiong et al. v. The Philippines, A/54/40 242
- Pickstone v. Freemans [1988] 3 WLR 265 119
- Pine Valley v. Ireland, Series A, vol. 222, 1991 262
- Pinson (Georges) case [4 AD 9 et al.] 101
- Piperno case, 74 AJIL (1980) 683 514
- Piracy Jure Gentium, Re [1934] AC 586; 7 AD 213 109, 288, 289
- Pisaro, The 255 US 216 (1921) 154
- Planmount Ltd v. Republic of Zaire [1981] 1 All ER 1110; 64 ILR 268 530, 533, 541
- Polish Nationals in Danzig case [6 AD 47 et al.] 101
- Polites v. Commonwealth (1945) 70 CLR 60 127, 128
- Polyukhovich v. Commonwealth (1991) 172 CLR 501 129

- Poncet, Re 15 AD 346 993
- Porter v. Freudenberg [1915] 1 KB 857 115
- Porto Alexandre [1920] P. 30; 1 AD 146 527, 529
- Portugal v. Goncalves 82 ILR 115 579
- Post Office v. Estuary Radio Ltd [1968] 2 QB 740 106, 116, 152
- Postlethwaite, Ex Parte [1988] AC 924 118
- Potter v. BHP Co. Ltd (1906) 3 CLR 479 127
- Poulsen and Diva Navigation Case C-286/90 [1992] ECR I-6019 137
- Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences, Re [1943] SCR 208 127
- Prefecture of Voiotia v. Germany (Distomo Massacre), Court of Cassation, Greece, 4 May 2000, 129 ILR 514 899
- Prinz v. Federal Republic of Germany 26 F.3d 1166 (DC Cir. 1994); 103 ILR 594 95, 537
- Prins Frederik (1820) 2 Dod. 451 527
- Propend Finance v. Sing 111 ILR 611 552, 582
- Proposed Amendments to the Naturalisation Provision of the Political Constitution of Costa Rica, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1984, Series A, No. 4; 79 ILR 282 615
- Protection of Nuclear Materials [1978] ECR 2151 192
- Public Committee against Torture in Israel et al. v. Government of Israel et al., HCJ 769/02; 101 AJIL (2007) 459 126, 897
- Public Prosecutor v. Antoni 32 ILR 140 496
- Public Prosecutor v. JBC 94 ILR 339 581
- Public Prosecutor v. JO 74 ILR 130 131
- Public Prosecutor v. Orhan Olmez 87 ILR 212 582
- Pulp Mills (Argentina v. Uruguay), ICJ Reports (2010) 14 607, 646, 653, 654, 659, 671, 707, 709, 769, 828, 831, 832
- Qatar v. Bahrain (Maritime Delimitation and Territorial Questions) 102 ILR 1 82, 364, 368, 379, 410, 414, 416, 420, 433, 438, 440, 447, 449, 451, 686, 687, 691, 707, 709, 712, 795, 810, 814, 818, 829
- Queensland Mercantile and Agency Ltd, Re [1892] 1 Ch 219 106
- Queiroz v. State of Portugal 115 ILR 430 547
- Quintanilla claim, 4 RIAA 101 (1926); 3 AD 224 624
- R v. A [2001] 2 WLR 1546 119
- R v. Abu Hamza, The Times, 30 November 2006 490
- R (Adams) v. Secretary of State for Justice [2011] UKSC 18 116
- R (Al Fawwaz) v. Governor of Brixton Prison [2001] UKHL 69 118
- R (Alamieyeseigha) v. Crown Prosecution Service [2005] EWHC 2704 (Admin) 153
- R (Alconbury Ltd) v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [2001] 2 All ER 929 119
- R v. Al-Rawi [2006] EWCA Civ 1279 614
- R v. Anderson 1 Cox's Criminal Cases 198 413
- R v. Asfaw [2008] UKHL 31 114
- R (B) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2004] EWCA Civ 1344; 131 ILR 616 584
- R (Bancoult) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2013] EWHC 1502 (Admin) 141
- R v. Berry [1984] 3 All ER 1008 490
- R v. Bow Street Magistrates, ex parte Mackerson (1981) 75 Cr App R 24 510
- R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 1) 119 ILR 50; [2000] 1 AC 61 94, 109, 110, 145
- R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) 119 ILR 135; [2000] 1 AC 147 94, 110, 139, 246, 489, 504, 505, 524, 540, 556, 557
- R v. Brown [1993] 2 WLR 556 117
- R v. Burgess, ex parte Henry 55 CLR 608 (1936); 8 AD 54 174
- R v. Chief Immigration Officer, Heathrow Airport, ex parte Salamat Bibi [1976] 3 All ER 843; 61 ILR 267 117
- R v. Chief Metropolitan Magistrate, ex parte Secretary of State for the Home Department [1988] 1 WLR 1204 515
- R v. Civil Aviation Authority [2006] EWHC 2465 (Admin); 132 ILR 713 899
- R v. Cooke [1998] 2 SCR 597 489
- R (Corner House Research) v. Serious Fraud Office (HL(E)) [2009] 1 AC 756 144
- R v. Council of Canadians 2003 CanLII 28426 (2005); 2006 CanLII 400222, 217 OAC 316 127
- R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin) 140, 142, 143, 147, 605
- R (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [2004] UKHL 55; 131 ILR 652 110, 115, 118
- R v. Farnquist (1981) 54 CCC (2d) 417; 94 ILR 238 413
- R v. Forsyth and Mabey [2011] UKSC 9 957
- R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2006] EWCA Civ 1689; [2008] 1 AC 1356; [2008] UKHL 20 97, 111, 140, 141
- R v. Governor of Pentonville Prison, ex parte Teja [1971] 2 QB 274; 52 ILR 368 581, 586
- R v. HM Treasury and the Bank of England, ex parte Centro-Com, Times Law Report, 7 October 1993; [1994] 1 CMLR 109; [1997] ECR I-81, and [1997] 3 WLR 239; 117 ILR 444 116, 117

- R v. Horseferry Road Magistrates' Court, ex parte Bennett [1993] 3 WLR 90; 95 ILR 380 510
- R (Islamic Human Rights Commission) v. CAA [2006] EWHC 2465; 132 ILR 707 141
- R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR 668 97, 110, 111, 140, 141, 288, 290, 501
- R v. Kelly [1982] AC 665; 77 ILR 284 496
- R v. Keyn (1876) 2 Ex.D. 63 107, 108, 423
- R v. Lambeth Justices, ex parte Yusufu [1985] Crim. LR 510; 88 ILR 323 581
- R v. Latif [1996] 1 WLR 104 510
- R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44; 131 ILR 538; [2003] 1 AC 976 114, 139, 143
- R v. Madan [1961] QB 1 559
- R v. Ministry of Defence, ex parte Smith [1996] QB 517 139
- R v. Mohamed Gul [2012] EWCA Crim 280 97, 153
- R v. Mullen [1999] 2 Cr App R 143 510
- R v. Officer Commanding Depot Battalion RASC Colchester, ex parte Elliott [1949] 1 All ER 373 510
- R v. Plymouth Justices, ex parte Driver [1986] 1 QB 95; 77 ILR 351 510
- R v. Rahmatullah [2012] UKSC 48 687
- R v. Republic of Iraq 116 ILR 664 547
- R v. Secretary of State, On the Application of the Channel Tunnel Group 119 ILR 398 114
- R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Pirbhai 107 ILR 462 141, 146
- R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Rees-Mogg [1994] 2 WLR 115 113
- R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Samuel, The Times, 10 September 1988 572
- R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Trawnik, The Times, 18 April 1985 153
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Anderson [1984] 1 All ER 920 117
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Bagga [1991] 1 QB 485; 88 ILR 404 581
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Bhajan Singh [1975] 2 All ER 1081; 61 ILR, p. 260 117
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696; 85 ILR 29 114, 116, 117, 128
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Fernandes [1984] 2 All ER 390 117
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Phansopkar [1976] QB 606; 61 ILR 390 117
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [1974] 2 WLR 593; 59 ILR 450 109, 112
- R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Wynne [1993] 1 WLR 115 117
- R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame, ECJ case C-213/89, 93 ILR 669 137
- R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame (No. 2) [1991] 1 AC 603; 93 ILR 731 137
- R (ST) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2012] UKSC 12 118
- R (Sultan of Pahang) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2011] EWCA Civ 616 153
- R (Suresh and Manickavasagam) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2001] EWHC Admin 1028 146
- R v. West Yorkshire Coroner, ex parte Smith [1983] QB 335; 78 ILR 550 489
- Racke v. Hauptzollamt Mainz, case C-162/96 [1998] ECR I-3655 137, 721
- Radwan v. Radwan [1973] Fam. 24; 55 ILR 579 568
- Rafidain, Re [1992] BCLC 301; 101 ILR 332 548
- Rahimtoola v. Nizam of Hyderabad [1958] AC 379; 24 ILR 175 529
- Railway Traffic between Lithuania and Poland case, PCIJ Series A/B, No. 42; 6 AD 403 768
- Rainbow Warrior case, 82 ILR 499 589, 592, 595, 603, 604, 606, 608, 610, 717, 718, 838
- Rajan v. Minister of Immigration [1996] 3 NZLR 543 127
- Ramirez v. Weinberger 23 ILM (1984) 1274 525
- Ramos v. USA 116 ILR 634 547
- Rankin v. The Islamic Republic of Iran 17 Iran-US CTR 135; 82 ILR 204 600, 626
- Rann of Kutch (Indo-Pakistan Western Boundary) case (India/Pakistan) [50 ILR 2] 79, 364, 392, 799, 800
- Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd [1993] 3 WLR 953 CA 117
- Rasul v. Bush 542 US 466 (2004) 493, 513
- Rayner (JH) (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry [1987] BCLC 667; [1990] 2 AC 418; [1989] 3 WLR 969; 81 ILR 670 143, 566, 994, 1005
- Reading & Bates Corp. v. National Iranian Oil Company 478 F.Supp. 724 (1979); 63 ILR 305 561
- Red Crusader case, 35 ILR 485 461, 476, 772
- Reel v. Holder [1981] 1 WLR 1226 183, 355
- Reid v. Republic of Nauru [1993] 1 VR 251; 101 ILR 193 534
- Reinier van Arkel Foundation and Others v. Minister for Transport, Public Works and Water Management, Case Nr 200401178/1; LJN: AR2181; AB 2005/12 132
- Re-Introduction of the Death Penalty in the Peruvian Constitution case, 16 Human Rights Law Journal 16 HRLJ, 1995, p. 9 77, 289
- Renchard v. Humphreys & Harding Inc. 381 F.Supp. 382 (1974) 576
- Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Nations, ICJ Reports (1949) 174; 16 AD 318 35, 61, 82, 205, 206, 710, 847, 991, 995, 998, 1001, 1002

- Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Nuclear Tests Case, ICJ Reports (1995) 288; 106 ILR 1 644, 646, 658, 674
- Request for Constitutional Review, No. 2004–01–06 of 7 July 2004, Latvian Herald, 9 July 2004, No. 108, 3056 132
- Reservations to the Genocide Convention case, ICJ Reports (1951) 15; 18 ILR 364 61, 82, 696, 743, 845
- Responsibilities and Obligations of States Sponsoring Persons and Entities with Respect to Activities in the Area, 1 February 2011 707
- Republica v. De Longchamps 1 Dall. 111 120
- Revere Copper v. Opic 56 ILR 258 630
- Review of the Indictments Concerning Karadžić and Mladić Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, ICTY, IT-95–5–R61 and IT-95–18–R61, 11 July 1996; ILR 134–5 321
- Rich v. Naviera Vacuba 32 ILR 127 529
- Richtersveld Community case, 24 March 2003, Supreme Court of South Africa; 127 ILR 507 229
- Right of Passage over Indian Territory case (Portugal v. India), ICJ Reports (1957) 125; 31 ILR 23 63, 69, 75, 92, 377, 401, 709, 710, 767, 822
- Right to Information on Consular Assistance case Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 16, 1999 97
- Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco, ICJ Reports (1952); 19 ILR 255 62, 170, 708
- Rio Tinto Zinc v. Westinghouse Electric Corporation [1978] 2 WLR 81; 73 ILR 296 516
- RL v. Canada, A/47/40 358; 96 ILR 706 225
- RMD v. Switzerland 175
- Roberts case, 4 RIAA 77 (1926); 3 AD 227 623, 624
- Robinson case, A/44/40 (1989) 243
- Robinson v. Secretary-General of the UN 19 ILR 494 219
- Rocha v. US 288 F.2d 545 (1961); 32 ILR 112 499
- Rodriguez-Fernandez v. Wilkinson 654 F.2d 1382 (1981); 505 F.Supp. 787 (1980) 120
- Romania v. Ukraine, ICJ Reports (2009) 61 436, 450, 451, 829
- Rose v. R [1947] 3 DLR 618 576
- RT v. Switzerland, A/61/44 248
- Ruggiu case, ICTR-97–32–I (2000) 319
- Russian Indemnity case, 11 RIAA 431 (1912) 608
- Rustomjee v. R (1876) 2 QBD 69 113
- Rutaganda, ICTR-96–3–T (1999) 321
- Rutili v. Ministry of Interior of French Republic [1975] ECR 1219 119, 272
- Ruzmetov v. Uzbekistan, A/61/40 (2006) 242
- S & S Machinery Co. v. Masinexportimport 706 F.2d 411 (1981); 107 ILR 239 561
- SA Rothmans International France and SA Philip Morris France 93 ILR 308 133
- Saadi v. Italy, European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 28 February 2008 515
- Sabah Shipyard v. Pakistan [2002] EWCA Civ. 1643 559
- Sabih El Leil v. France, Judgment of 29 June 2011 547
- Saghi v. Islamic Republic of Iran 87 AJIL (1993) 447 617
- Saiga (No. 2) (Saint Vincent and the Grenadines v. Guinea) [120 ILR 143] 76, 83, 103, 433, 455, 456, 460, 481, 605, 607, 619, 622
- St Pierre and Miquelon 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1145; 95 ILR 645 445, 448
- Salem case, 2 RIAA 1161 (1932); 6 AD 188 216, 617
- Salimoff v. Standard Oil Co. of New York 262 NY 220 (1933); 7 AD 22 358, 360
- Salomon v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise [1967] 2 QB 116 116
- Saluka Investments v. Czech Republic, 17 March 2006 631, 796
- Salvador Commercial Company case, 15 RIAA 477 (1902) 595
- Salzgitter Mannesmann v. Commission, C-411/04 P, Judgment of 25 January 2007 273
- Samantar v. Yousuf 130 S.Ct 2278 (2010) 120, 555
- Sambaggio case, 10 RIAA 499 (1903) 599
- Sanchez-Espinoza v. Reagan 770 F.2d 202 (1985); 80 ILR 586 512
- Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 548 US 331 (2006); 126 S Ct 2669 (2006); 134 ILR 719 97, 121, 173, 585
- Sandline v. Papua New Guinea 117 ILR 552 110, 597
- Sandrock and Others, Re 13 ILR 297 290
- Santa Elena v. Costa Rica 39 ILM (2000) 1317 630, 631
- Sapphire case, 35 ILR 136 633
- Sara case, A/49/40, annex X, Section C, para. 8.3 216
- Sarei v. Rio Tinto 671 F. 3d 736, 747 (CA9 2011) 122
- Saudi Arabia v. Ahmed [1996] 2 All ER 248; 104 ILR 629 546
- Saudi Arabia v. Nelson 123 L Ed 2d 47 (1993); 100 ILR 544 532, 533, 537, 544, 545
- Sawhoyamaya Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Judgment of 29 March 2006, Series C, No. 146 231, 283
- Sayadi and Vinck v. Belgium, Human Rights Committee, communication no. 1472/2006, 22 October 2008 958
- Scarfò v. Sovereign Order of Malta 24 ILR 1 193
- Schavernoeh v. Foreign Claims Commission 1 SCR 1092 (1982); 90 ILR 220 617
- Schmidt, Re [1995] 1 AC 339; 111 ILR 548 511
- Schmidt v. Polish People's Republic 742 F.2d 67 (1984) 543

- Schneider v. Kissinger 412 F.3d 190 (DC Cir. 2005) 150
- Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon 7 Cranch 116 (1812) 413, 489, 524
- Schreck case 800
- Schroeder v. Bissell 5 F.2d 838 (1925) 120, 121
- Scotia case, 14 Wallace 170 (1871) 61, 83
- Scott (Susannah), Ex parte (1829) 9 B & C 446 510
- Seabed and Subsoil of the Continental Shelf Offshore Newfoundland, 5 DLR (46) 385; 86 ILR 593 435
- Secession of Quebec, Re (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385; 115 ILR 536 127, 202, 203, 226, 388, 389
- Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs v. Rahmatullah [2012] UKSC 48 146
- Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs v. Tomlin, The Times, 4 December 1990; [1990] 1 All ER 920 572
- Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office v. The Queen (on the application of Bancoult) [2007] EWCA Civ 498 146
- Security Pacific National Bank v. Government of Iran 513 F.Supp. 864 (1981) 561
- SEDCO v. National Iranian Oil Co., 10 Iran-US CTR 180; 80 AJIL (1986) 969; 84 ILR 483 629, 638
- Sei Fujii v. California 38 Cal (2d) 718 (1952) 124, 125
- Sellers v. Maritime Safety Inspector [1999] 2 NZLR 44; 120 ILR 585 457
- Selmouni v. France, Judgment of 28 July 1999 246
- Semco Salvage v. Lancer Navigation 118
- Sengupta v. Republic of India 65 ILR 325 536, 546, 582
- Serbia and Montenegro v. UK, ICJ Reports (2004) 1307 730, 809, 813, 814, 815, 824, 882
- Serbian Loans case (Payment of Various Serbian Loans Issued in France) [5 AD 466] 76, 102, 103, 603
- SerVaas v. Rafidain Bank [2012] UKSC 40 563, 576
- 767 Third Avenue Associates v. Permanent Mission of the Republic of Zaire to the United Nations 988 F.2d 295 (1993); 99 ILR 194 568, 569
- SGS Société de Surveillance SA v. Pakistan, 129 ILR 360 788
- Shanghai Power Co. v. US 4 Cl. Ct. 237 (1983) 629
- Shaw v. Shaw [1979] 3 All ER 1; 78 ILR 483 581
- Shearson Lehman v. Maclaine Watson (No. 2) [1988] 1 WLR 16; 77 ILR 145 577, 1015
- Shimoda v. Japan 32 ILR 626 909
- Short v. The Islamic Republic of Iran 16 Iran-US CTR 76; 82 ILR 148 600
- Shrimp/Turtle case, WTO Appellate Body, 38 ILM (1999) 121 659
- Shufeldt Claim (USA v. Guatemala) [5 AD 179] 76
- Siderman de Blake and Others v. Republic of Argentina and Others 965 F.2d 699 (1992); 103 ILR 454 94, 122, 511, 525, 561
- Sidhu v. British Airways [1997] 1 All ER 193 118
- Siemens v. Argentina, 6 February 2007 630
- Sierra Leone Telecommunications v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821; 114 ILR 466 114, 154, 357
- Simpson v. Libya 470 F.3d 356 (2006) 537
- Simsek v. Macphee (1982) 148 CLR 636 128
- Sinclair v. HM Advocate (1890) 17 R (J) 38 510
- Sindacato UIL v. Bari Institute 87 ILR 37 1009
- Skeen v. Federative Republic of Brazil 566 F.Supp. 1414 (1983); 121 ILR 481 579
- Skiriotes v. Florida 313 US 69, 73 (1941); 10 AD 258 496
- Smith v. Libya 101 F.3d 239 (1996); 113 ILR 534 513, 561
- Smith v. MOD [2013] UKSC 41 258
- Société Eram Shipping Co. Ltd v. Cie Internationale de Navigation [2004] 1AC 260 489
- Société Internationale v. Rogers 357 US 197 (1958); 26 ILR 123 516
- Soering v. UK, Series A, vol. 161, 1989; 98 ILR 270 257, 265, 515, 711
- Sokoloff v. National City Bank of New York 239 NY 158 (1924); 2 AD 44 358
- Sola Tiles Inc. v. Islamic Republic of Iran 83 ILR 460 617, 634
- Solórzano v. Venezuela, A/41/40 134; 94 ILR, 400 216
- Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA [1993] QB 54; 94 ILR 608 153, 356
- Somchai Liangsirprasert v. The United States [1991] 1 AC 225; 85 ILR 109 490
- Some Powers of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Advisory Opinion OC-13/93 of 16 July 1993, Series A, No. 13 278
- Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain (2004) 159 L Ed 2d 718; 127 ILR 769 111, 120, 122, 510, 513
- South-West Africa case, ICJ Reports (1950) 128; 17 ILR 47 177, 999, 1018
- South-West Africa case (Second Phase) (1966) 37 ILR 243 9, 73, 74, 79, 102, 222, 223, 365, 686, 810, 811, 826
- Sovereign Order of Malta v. Soc. An. Commerciale 22 ILR 1 193
- Spain v. Canada, ICJ Reports (1998) 432; 123 ILR 189 812, 824
- Spanish Zone of Morocco Claims, General Decisions (Principles of State Responsibility) 2 RIAA 615 (1923); 2 AD 157 84, 591, 592, 599, 608
- Spiliada Maritime Corporation v. Cansulex [1987] AC 460 488
- Sporrong and Lönnroth, ECHR, Series A, No. 52; 68 ILR 86 628, 630
- SPP (ME) Ltd v. Egypt 106 ILR 501 597
- Stakić, IT-97-24-T (2003) 321
- Standard Chartered Bank v. ITC [1986] 3 All ER 257; 77 ILR 8 1005

- Standards for Reformulated and Conventional Gasoline case, 1996, WT/DS2/AB/R 784
- Stanković (Radovan), ICTY, Case No. IT-96-23/2-AR11 312
- Starrett Housing Corporation, Starrett Systems Inc. and Starrett Housing International Inc. v. Iran, Bank Omran, Bank Mellat and Bank Markazi (Case No. 24) 85 ILR 349 76, 629
- State of Norway's Application, Re [1986] 3 WLR 452; [1989] 1 All ER 745 (House of Lords) 487
- State v. Ebrahim 95 ILR 417 510
- State (Duggan) v. Tapley 18 ILR 336 219
- Steiner and Gross v. Polish State 4 AD 291 205
- Stiftung Mothers of Srebrenica v. The Netherlands, ECtHR decision of 11 June 2013 539, 1003
- Strassheim v. Dailey 221 US 280 (1911) 490
- Suarez-Rosero v. Ecuador (Reparations), Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1999, Series C, No. 44; 118 ILR 92 607
- Sudan Human Rights Org. v. Sudan; Ctr. for Housing Rights and Evictions v. Sudan, 49 ILM, 2010, p. 1569 285
- Suez v. Argentina ICSID, Award, 30 July 2010 630
- Sullivan v. State of Sao Paulo 122 F.2d 355 (1941); 10 AD 178 553
- Sunday Times v. UK, Series A, vol. 30, 1979; 58 ILR 491 264, 282, 595
- Svenska Petroleum v. Lithuania [2006] EWCA Civ 1529 542, 560
- Swarna v. Al-Awadi 622 F.3d 123 (2010) 548
- Swedish Engine Drivers' Union case, Series A, vol. 20, 1976; 58 ILR 19 256
- Swiss Federal Prosecutor v. Kruszyk 102 ILR 176 573
- Swissborough Diamond Mines v. South Africa, Supreme Court, Transvaal Provincial Division, 1997, 132 ILR 454 149
- Swiss-Israel Trade Bank v. Salta 55 ILR 411 553
- Syrian National Immunity case, 127 ILR 88 586
- T v. Belgium, Belgian Conseil d'État 9 April 1998; 115 ILR 442 145
- Taba case, 80 ILR 224 383, 708, 800
- Tabag v. Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs, Federal Court of Australia, 45 ALR 705 (23 December 1982) 129
- Tabatabai case, 80 ILR 388 582, 586
- Tabion v. Mufti 73 F.3d 535 (1996) 548, 579
- Tachiona v. USA 386 F.3d 205 (2004) 557
- Tacna-Arica arbitration, 2 RIAA 921 (1925) 718, 769
- Tadić case, IT-94-1-AR72 (1995); 105 ILR 419 83, 293, 295, 323, 324, 326, 598, 599, 809, 813, 912, 913, 916, 972, 973, 997, 999
- Tag v. Rogers 267 F.2d 664 (1959); 28 ILR 467 120
- Tallinna Laevauhisus v. Tallinna Shipping Co. (The Vapper) (1946) 79 LL. R 245 729
- Tanli case, Judgment of 10 April 2001 264, 265
- Tel-Oren v. Libyan Arab Republic 517 F.Supp. 542 (1981); 726 F.2d 774 (1984); 53 USLW 3612 (1985); 77 ILR 192 122, 511, 512
- Temeltasch case, 5 European Human Rights Reports (1983) 417 694
- Temple of Preah Vihear case (Cambodia v. Thailand) 33 ILR 48 76, 367, 383, 384, 388, 392, 608, 708, 712, 713, 805, 831, 841
- Territorial Jurisdiction of the International Commission of the Oder case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 23; 5 AD 83 645, 670, 709
- Texaco Overseas Petroleum Company (TOPCO) and California Asiatic Oil Company v. Libya 17 ILM (1978) 1; 53 ILR 389 78, 207, 608, 627, 632, 633, 686
- Texas Trading & Milling Corp. v. Federal Republic of Nigeria 647 F.2d 300, 312; 63 ILR 552 545
- Texas v. White 74 US 700 (1868) 358
- Thai-Europe Tapioca Service Ltd v. Government of Pakistan [1975] 1 WLR 1485; [1975] 3 All ER 961; 64 ILR 81 109, 530
- Thakrar case, [1974] QB 684; 59 ILR 450 626
- Thenault, Re 47 F.Supp. 952 (1942) 495
- Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar, Bentzon v. Boyle 9 Cranch 191 (1815) 83
- Thomas v. Baptiste [2000] 2 AC 1 (PC) 114
- Thomas v. Mowbray [2007] HCA 33 149
- Thompson v. St Vincent and the Grenadines, A/56/40, vol. II 243
- Thorpe v. Commonwealth of Australia (No. 3) (1997) 144 ALR 677; 118 ILR 353 149
- Timberlane Lumber Co. v. Bank of America 549 F.2d 597 (1976); 66 ILR 270 516, 517
- Timor-Leste v. Australia, Provisional Measures, ICJ Reports 3 March 2014 831
- Tinoco arbitration, 1 RIAA 369 (1923); 2 AD 34 330, 337
- Too v. Greater Modesto Insurance Associates, 23 Iran-US CTR 378 631
- Toonen v. Australia, HRC Communication No. 488/1992; 112 ILR 328 175
- Torres Ramírez v. Uruguay, Selected Decisions under the Optional Protocol, CCPR/C/OP/1 (1985) 216
- Torres v. State of Oklahoma 43 ILM 1227 (2004) 121
- Touvier case 502
- Tradex Hellas SA v. Albania, 1999 ARB/94/2 788
- Trail Smelter case, 33 AJIL (1939) 182; 35 AJIL (1941) 684; 9 AD 315 645, 647, 648, 649, 661, 798, 799, 800
- Transamerican Steamship Corp. v. Somali Democratic Republic 590 F.Supp. 968 (1984); 767 F.2d 998 544, 545
- Transportes Aereos de Angola v. Ronair 544 F.Supp. 858 (1982); 94 ILR 202 357, 359
- Trawnik v. Gordon Lennox [1985] 2 All ER 368 528
- Trawnik v. Ministry of Defence [1984] 2 All ER 791 117

- Treatment in Hungary of Aircraft of the USA case, ICJ Reports (1964) 99 818
- Treaty on European Union, Re 93 ILR 337 133
- Treaty on the Basis of Relations Between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, Re 78 ILR 150 344
- Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356; 64 ILR 111 106, 107, 109, 530, 533, 549, 550, 551, 564
- Triquet v. Bath (1764) 3 Burr. 1478 107, 108
- Tsavliris v. Grain Board of Iraq (2008) ICLC 592 551
- Tunis and Morocco Nationality Decrees case, (1923) PCIJ, Series B, No. 4; 2 AD 349 170, 485, 494, 615, 759
- Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case 67 ILR 4 79, 80, 92, 417, 418, 434, 437, 442, 443, 444, 447, 451, 806, 817, 824, 827, 836, 841
- Turkish Cypriot Association, ex parte 112 ILR 735 145
- Tyrer v. UK, Series A, vol. 26, 1978; 58 ILR 339; (1978) 2 EHRR 1 175, 257, 710
- Underhill v. Hernandez 168 US 250 (1897) 139, 150
- Unification Treaty Constitutionality case, 94 ILR 2 131
- Union Bridge Company case, 6 RIAA 138 (1924); 2 AD 170 597
- United Arab Emirates v. Abdelghafar [1995] ICR 65; 104 ILR 647 566
- United Euram Co. v. USSR 63 ILR 228 543
- United Kingdom v. Albania, ICJ Reports (1949) 244 838
- United Nations Administrative Tribunal case 21 ILR 310 75
- United Nations v. B 19 ILR 490 993
- United Parcel Service of America v. Canada, 7 ICSID Reports (2002) 288 785
- United States and France v. Dollfus Mieg et Compagnie [1952] AC 582; 19 ILR 163 528
- United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran case (USA v. Iran) (Iranian Hostages case) ICJ Reports (1980) 3; 61 ILR 502 6, 568, 570, 576, 578, 579, 600, 607, 766, 809, 820, 827, 831, 838, 840, 871
- United States ex rel. Lujan v. Gengler 510 F. 2d 62 (1975) 61 ILR 206 510
- United States Foreign Relations case (1914) 799
- United States v. Alaska 422 US 184 (1975) 418
- United States v. Ali Mohamed Ali, US Court of Appeals for District of Columbia Circuit, 11 June 2013 458
- United States v. Aluminum Co. of America 148 F.2d 416 (1945) 516
- United States v. Belmont 301 US 324 (1937); 8 AD 34 123, 360
- United States v. Benitez 741 F.2d 1312 (1984); 471 US 1137; 105 S. Ct. 2679 (1985) 498
- United States v. Biermann 83 AJIL (1989) 99; 84 ILR 206 461
- United States v. Brig Malek Adhel, 43 US (2 How.) 210 (1844) 458
- United States v. California 381 US 139 (1965) 418
- United States v. Choctaw Nation 179 US 494 (1900) 126
- United States v. Claus 63 F.Supp. 433 (1944) 120
- United States v. Columba-Colella 604 F.2d 356 490
- United States v. Cortes 588 F.2d 106 (1979) 457
- United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation 299 US 304 (1936); 8 AD 48 123, 173
- United States v. Dominguez 604 F.2d 304 (1979) 457
- United States v. Dulles 222 F.2d 390 614
- United States v. First National City Bank 396 F.2d 897 (1968); 38 ILR 112 516
- United States v. Friedland (1998) 40 OR (3d) 747; 182 DLR (4th) 614; 120 ILR 417 531, 561
- United States v. General Electric Co. 82 F.Supp. 753 (1949); 115 F.Supp. 835 (1953) 516
- United States v. Gonzalez 776 F.2d 931 (1985) 499
- United States v. Guinand 688 F.Supp. 774 (1988); 99 ILR 117 582
- United States v. Guinto, Valencia and Others 102 ILR 132 531
- United States v. Kostadinov 734 F.2d 906 (1984); 99 ILR 103 568
- United States v. Layton 509 F.Supp. 212 (1981) 499
- United States v. Lira 515 F.2d 68 (1975) 510
- United States v. Louisiana (Louisiana Boundary Case) 394 US 11 (1969) 418
- United States v. Louisiana 470 US 93 (1985) 418
- United States v. McCaffery [1984] 2 All ER 570 514
- United States v. Mackin 668 F.2d 122 (1981); 79 ILR 459 514
- United States v. Maine (Rhode Island and New York Boundary Case) 471 US 375 (1985) 418
- United States v. Marino-Garcia 679 F.2d 1373 (1982) 457
- United States v. Matta-Ballesteros 107 ILR 429 93
- United States v. Melekh 190 F.Supp. 67 (1960) 120
- United States v. Monroy 614 F.2d 61 (1980) 457
- United States v. Noriega 746 F.Supp. 1506 (1990); 99 ILR 143 151, 205, 516, 555, 577, 897
- United States v. Palestine Liberation Organisation 695 F.Supp. 1456 (1988) 120, 126
- United States v. Percheman 32 US (7 Pet.) 51 (1833) 123, 757
- United States v. Perez-Herrera 610 F.2d 289 490
- United States v. Pink 315 US 203 (1942); 10 AD 48 123, 345, 360
- United States v. Pizzarusso 388 F. 2d 8 (1968) 499
- United States v. Postal 589 F.2d 862 (5th Cir. 1979); 444 US 832 123, 124
- United States v. Public Service Alliance of Canada and Others (Re Canada Labour Code) (1992) 91 DLR (4th) 449; 94 ILR 264 534, 536, 546
- United States v. Ray 51 ILR 225 158

- United States v. Rodriguez 162 Fed. Appx. 853, 857 (11th Cir. 2006) 121
- United States v. Rodriguez 182 F.Supp. 479 (1960) 499
- United States v. Ruiz and De Guzman 102 ILR 122 531
- United States v. Sissoko 999 F.Supp. 1469 (1997); 121 ILR 600 586
- United States v. Smith 18 US (5 Wheat.) 153 121
- United States v. Timken Roller Bearing Co. 83 F.Supp. 284 (1949); 341 US 593 (1951) 516
- United States v. Toscanino 500 F.2d 267 (1974); 61 ILR 190 510
- United States v. Watch-makers of Switzerland Information Center, Inc. cases, 133 F.Supp. 40 and 134 F.Supp. 710 (1963); 22 ILR 168 516
- United States v. Wong Kim Ark 169 US 649 (1898) 495
- United States v. Yunis (No. 2) 681 F.Supp. 896 (1988); 82 ILR 344 498, 507, 510
- United States v. Yunis (No. 3) 724 F.2d 1086 (1991); 88 ILR 176 120, 498, 507
- United States-France Air Services Agreement case, 54 ILR 306 601, 603, 719
- UNRAA v. Daan 16 AD 337 993
- Upright v. Mercury Business Machines 213 NYS (2d) 417 (1961); 32 ILR 65 359
- Uranium Antitrust Litigation, Re 480 F.Supp. 1138 (1979) 516
- Urios, Re 1 AD 107 499
- Vagrancy case, Series A, vol. 12, 1971; 56 ILR 351 263
- Valdez v. Oklahoma, US Court of Criminal Appeals of Oklahoma, Case No. PCD-2001-1011, 2002 121
- Valsabbia v. Commission [1980] ECR 907 272
- Van Duyn v. Home Office (Case 41/74) [1974] ECR 1337; 60 ILR 247 137, 626
- Van Gend en Loos v. Nederlandse Administratie des Belastingen [1963] ECR 1 192
- Van Zyl v. Government of RSA [2007] SCA 109 (RSA) 613
- Velásquez Rodríguez 9 HRLJ, 1988, 212; 95 ILR 232 282, 598
- Velásquez Rodríguez v. Honduras (Compensation) Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1989, Series C, No. 7; 95 ILR 306 609
- Vermont v. New Hampshire [7 AD 127, 7 AD 135]; 289 US 593 (1933) 83
- Vgt Verein gegen Tierfabriken case, Judgment of 28 June 2001 264
- Victoria Leasing Ltd v. United States (2005) 218 ALR 640 149
- Victory Transport Inc. v. Comisaria General de Abastecimientos y Transportes 336 F.2d 354 (1964); 35 ILR 110 529, 532, 554
- Vietnam Association for Victims of Agent Orange v. Dow Chemical Company, US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Docket No. 05-1953-cv, 22 February 2008 122
- Vietnam v. Pfizer 556 F.2d 892 (1977); 94 ILR 199 357
- Vijayanathan and Pusparajah v. France, Series A, vol. 241-B, 1992 262
- Vitkovice Horni v. Korner [1951] AC 869 566
- Vuolanne v. Finland, 265/87; 96 ILR 649 243, 246
- Waddington v. Miah [1974] 1 WLR 683; 57 ILR 175 117
- Wahda Bank v. Arab Bank plc, Times Law Reports, 16 December 1992 118
- Waite and Kennedy v. Germany, ECtHR judgment of 18 February 1999 1009
- Waksman case, 1 HRLJ 1980 243
- Walker v. Baird [1892] AC 491 115
- Walker v. UK, Judgment of 25 January 2000 263
- Ware v. Hylton 3 US (3 Dall.) 199 (1796) 123
- Wei Ye v. Jiang Zemin 383 F.3d 620 (2004) 557
- Weinberger case, Reports of the Human Rights Committee, A/36/40 114; A/44/40 142 216
- Weinberger v. Rossi 456 US 25 (1982) 125
- Wellington District Legal Services v. Tangiora [1998] 1 NZLR 129; 115 ILR 655 127
- Wemhoff case, ECHR, Series A, No. 7 (1968); 41 ILR 281 710
- West Rand Gold Mining Co [1905] 2 KB 391 108, 112, 756, 758
- Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports 1975; 59 ILR 30 66, 157, 158, 159, 201, 204, 364, 365, 372, 377, 381, 383, 391, 806, 844, 845
- Westfallen, Ex parte [1998] 1 WLR 652 511
- Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Re 563 F.2d 992 (1977) 516
- Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organization for Industrialization [1995] 2 WLR 126; 80 ILR 595 101, 142, 143, 789, 995, 1000, 1006
- Westminster City Council v. Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran [1986] 3 All ER 284; 108 ILR 557 566, 572
- Whitney v. Robertson 124 US 190 (1888) 120, 126
- WHO Regional Office case, ICJ Reports (1980) 73; 62 ILR 450 1002
- WHO-Egypt case, ICJ Reports (1980) 73; 62 ILR 451 847, 995
- Wildenhus case, 120 US 1 (1887) 413
- Williams & Humbert Ltd v. W & H Trade Marks (Jersey) Ltd [1985] 2 All ER 619; [1986] 1 All ER 129 (House of Lords); 75 ILR 269 151, 487
- Wilson v. Minister for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Affairs [1996] HCA 18; (1996) 189 CLR 1 149
- Wimbledon case, PCIJ, Series A, No.1, 1923; 2 AD 99 167, 402, 705, 835

- Wood Pulp case [1998] 4 CMLR 901; 96 ILR 148 488
 Woods, Re 53 ILR 552 130
 Wragg (Herbert) & Co. Ltd, In re Claim by [1956] Ch. 323 105
 Wright v. Cantrell (1943) 44 SR (NSW) 45 127
 Wulfsohn v. Russian Republic 138 NE 24; 2 AD 39 330
- X v. Argentina 114 ILR 502 547
 X v. Austria 7 DR 87 (1976) 262
 X v. Commission [1992] ECR II-2195; 16 HRLJ, 1995 272
 X v. FRG, 1 Yearbook of the ECHR, 1955–7 162; Application 1478/62 263
 X v. UK 8 DR 211 263
 Xuncax v. Gramajo 886 F.Supp. 162 (1995); 104 ILR 165 122
- Y v. Belgium, Yearbook of the ECHR 1963 590 263
 Yeager case, 17 Iran-US CTR (1987) 92 599, 600
 Yessenin-Volpin v. Novosti Press Agency 443 F.Supp. 849 (1978); 63 ILR 127 544, 551
 Youman case, 4 RIAA 110 (1926); 3 AD 223 597
 Young, James and Webster case, ECtHR Series A, vol. 44, 1981; 62 ILR 359 264, 595
 Young Loan case, 59 ILR 495 708, 709, 711
- Ysmael (Juan) v. Republic of Indonesia [1955] AC 72; 21 ILR 95 528
 Yugoslavia v. Belgium, ICJ Reports (1999) 124 882
 Yugoslavia v. Spain, ICJ Reports (1999) 761 698, 816
 Yugoslavia v. United States, ICJ Reports (1999) 916 698, 816
 Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855 139, 145
- Z v. Geneva Supervisory Authority for the Enforcement of Debts and Bankruptcy 102 ILR 205 565
 Z v. UK Judgment of 10 May 2001 264
 Zachevning v. Miller 389 US 429 (1968) 173
 Zafiro case, 6 RIAA, p. 160 (1925); 3 AD 221 598
 Zambian Embassy v. Sendanayake 114 ILR 532 547
 Zedan v. Kingdom of Saudi Arabia 849 F.2d 1511 (1988) 545
 Zeiss (Carl) Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler Ltd (No. 2) [1967] AC 853; 43 ILR 42 330, 353, 356, 358
 Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum v. Zimbabwe, African Commission, Twenty-First Activity Report, Annex III, pp. 54 ff 285
 Zizianoff (Princess) v. Kahn and Bigelow 4 AD 384 585
 ZM v. Permanent Delegation of the League of Arab States to the UN 116 ILR 643 1009

Table of Treaties and Selected Other International Instruments

- Aarhus Convention on Access to Information, Public Participation in Decision-Making and Access to Justice in Environmental Matters 1998 643
- Art 1 643
 - Art 9 643
 - Art 10 644
 - Art 15 643
 - Protocol 2003 643
- Abidjan Convention for Co-operation in the Protection and Development of the Marine and Coastal Environment of the West and Central Africa Region 1981 681
- Protocol 1981 681
- African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights 1981 (Banjul Charter) 217, 283–6, 901, 988
- Art 5 246, 286
 - Art 12(4) 625
 - Art 19 284
 - Art 20 224, 284
 - Art 21–Art 22 284
 - Art 24 642
 - Art 34(6) 286
 - Art 45 284
 - Art 47–Art 49 285
 - Art 50 216, 285
 - Art 51–Art 54 285
 - Art 55 285
 - Art 58(1)–(3) 285
 - Art 62 285
- Protocol on the Establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples' Rights 1998 286
- African Nuclear Weapon-Free Treaty 1996 454, 909
- African Union Constitutive Act 988
- Art 3 988
 - Art 4 988
- African Union Convention on the Prevention and Combating of Terrorism 1999
- Protocol 2005 888
- Agreement between France and New Zealand 1986 590, 604, 610, 717, 718
- Agreement between the UN and Cambodia Providing for Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia 308
- Art 2 308
 - Art 5 308
 - Art 6 308
 - Art 7 309

- Art 9 309
- Art 12 309
- Agreement Concerning Interim Arrangements Relating to Polymetallic Nodules of the Deep Seabed 1982 471
- Agreement Concerning the Suppression of Opium-Smoking 1931 290
- Agreement Establishing the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development 1990
 - Art 2(1)(vii) 659
- Agreement for Co-operation in Dealing with Pollution of the North Sea by Oil and Other Harmful Substances 1983 682
- Agreement for the Prosecution and Punishment of the Major War Criminals 1945 290
- Agreement for the Suppression of the Circulation of Obscene Publications 1910 290
- Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies 1979 (Moon Treaty) 408, 669
 - Art III 669
 - Art IV 408
 - Art VI(2) 409
 - Art VII 669
 - Art XI 397, 669
 - Art XI(4) 409
 - Art XI(5) 408
 - Art XI(7) 408
 - Art XIV 651
 - Art XV 768
- Agreement on Control Machinery in Germany 1944
 - Art 2 730
- Agreement on Implementation of the Seabed Provisions of the Convention on the Law of the Sea 1994 412, 472-3
 - Annex 472, 473
 - Art 1 472
 - Art 2 472
 - Art 7 472
- Agreement on Space Stations 1988 408
- Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Organization of American States 1949 1008
- Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space 1968 408
- Agreement on the Settlement of Certain Matters Relating to Berlin 1990 179
- Alma Ata Declaration 728, 734, 740
- American Convention on Commercial Aviation 1928 404
- American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man 1948 277, 282
- American Treaty on Pacific Settlement 1948 (Pact of Bogotá) 767, 774, 779, 987
 - Art 6 820
 - Art 31 820
 - Art 32 820
 - Protocol 1967 987
 - Protocol 1985 987
 - Protocol 1992 987
 - Protocol 1993 987
- Amsterdam Treaty 1997 137, 192, 272
- Antarctica Treaty 1958 71, 193, 399, 641
 - Art 4(2) 399
 - Art 8 768
 - Protocol on Environmental Protection 1991 400, 641, 656
 - Annex VI 649
 - Art 7 400
 - Art 8 655

- Arab Convention for the Suppression of Terrorism 1998 888
- Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Charter 2007
 - Art 7-Art 12 989
 - Art 20 989
 - Art 22 782
 - Protocol 1987 989
 - Protocol on Dispute Settlement Mechanisms 2010 782
- Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Convention on Counter Terrorism 2007 888
- Association of South East Asian Nations (ASEAN) Human Rights Declaration 2012 287
- Association of South East Asian Nations Treaty of Amity and Co-operation 989
 - Protocol 1987 989
- Australia-Papua New Guinea Maritime Boundaries Treaty 1978 444
- Austrian State Treaty 1955 909
 - Art 7 227

- Bacteriological Weapons Treaty 1972 909
- Bamako Convention on the Ban of the Import into Africa and the Control of Transboundary Movement and Management of Hazardous Wastes within Africa 1991 679
 - Art 4(3) 658
- Barcelona Convention for the Protection of the Mediterranean Sea Against Pollution 1976 681
 - Art 2 660
 - Protocol 1980 681
 - Protocol 1982 681
 - Protocol of Co-operation in Case of Emergency 1976
 - Art 9 654
- Basle Convention on the Control of Transboundary Movements of Hazardous Wastes 1989 641, 679
 - Art 4 679
 - Art 6 679
 - Art 13 653
- Bonn Agreement for Co-operation in Dealing with Pollution of the North Sea by Oil 1969 682
- Bonn Conclusions 1997 181
- Bonn Declaration 1978 508
- Brussels Convention on Nuclear Ships
 - Art III 678
 - Art V 678
 - Art X 678
- Budapest Memorandum 1994 390
- Buenos Aires International Instrument on the Protection of the Environment from Damage Caused by Space Debris 1994 407

- Cairo Declaration 1993 777
- Canada-United States Air Quality Agreement 1991 663
- Cartagena Convention for the Protection and Development of the Marine Environment of the Wider Caribbean Region 1983 681
 - Protocol 1983 681
 - Protocol 1990 681
- Central American Court of Justice Treaty 1907 205
- Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States 1974 631, 632, 646, 856
 - Art 2(2)(c) 631
- Charter of Paris 1990 274, 781
- Chatham House Principles on International Law on the Use of Force in Self-Defence 2006 867, 869
- Chemical Weapons Treaty 1993 909
- Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation 1944
 - Art 17 497
- Claims Settlement Declaration 1981 791
 - Art III Art IV 792

- Art V 791
- Code of Crimes against the Peace and Security of Mankind 1996 502
 - Art 8 502
 - Art 9 502
 - Art 16 Art 17 502
 - Art 18 Art 20 502
- Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) Charter 191, 987
 - Art 1 987
 - Art 21 191, 987
 - Art 22 987
 - Art 23 191, 987
 - Art 27 Art 28 987
 - Art 30 Art 33 987
- Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 1995 276
 - Art 14 276
 - Art 17 276
 - Art 21 276
 - Art 29 276
 - Art 34 276
- Commonwealth of Independent States Treaty on Co-operation in Combating Terrorism 1999 888
- Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement (Ahtisaari Plan) 161, 186
- Constantinople Convention of 1888
 - Art 1 402
- Convention Against the Taking of Hostages 1979 499, 500, 505, 885
 - Art 5 506
 - Art 9 498
- Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment 1984 212, 246, 504, 505, 538, 690
 - Art 1 247
 - Art 2 247
 - Art 3 247, 248
 - Art 4 247, 505
 - Art 5 247, 505
 - Art 5(1)(c) 498
 - Art 7 247, 505
 - Art 8 505
 - Art 14 247
 - Art 17(2) 247
 - Art 19 247
 - Art 20 247
 - Art 21 247
 - Art 22 247, 248
 - Art 28(1) 247
- Optional Protocol 249
- Part II 247
- Convention Establishing the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency 1985 639
 - Art 2 639
 - Art 11 639
- Convention for the Conservation of Atlantic Tuna 1966 469
- Convention for the Conservation of Southern Bluefin Tuna 1993 469, 475
 - Art 16 476
- Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution from Land-Based Sources 1974 464, 641
 - Art 1 660
- Protocol 1986 662
- Convention for the Prevention of Pollution from Ships 1973 464, 681
 - Annex I 681

- Annex II 681
- Annex III 681
- Annex IV 681
- Annex V 681
- Art 8 654
- Art 14 681
- Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Sea by Oil 1954 681
- Convention for the Prevention of Pollution of the Seas by Oil 1954 464
- Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance 2006 252, 508
 - Art 2 252
 - Art 4 252
 - Art 5 252
 - Art 29 252
 - Art 30 252
 - Art 31 252
 - Art 32 252
 - Art 33 252
 - Art 34 252
- Convention for the Protection of Submarine Cables 1884 461
- Convention for the Protection of Submarine Telegraph Cables 1884 290
- Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic 1992
 - Art 9 676
- Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic 1992 (OSPAR Convention) 681, 799
- Convention for the Regulation of Antarctic Minerals Resource Activities 1988 400, 649
 - Art 1(15) 650
 - Art 7 Art 8 647
- Convention for the Regulation of Whaling 1946 466
- Convention for the Suppression of Acts of Nuclear Terrorism 2005 885, 886
- Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency 1929 290
- Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings 1997 885, 886
- Convention for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications 1924 290
- Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism 1999 885, 886
- Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs 1936 290
- Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others 1949 231
- Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms on the Continental Shelf Protocol 1988 885
- Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Against the Safety of Maritime Navigation 1988 458, 505, 885
 - Protocol 1989 458
 - Protocol 2005 462
 - Art 9 461
- Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts of Violence at Airports Protocol 1988 885
- Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts Relating to International Civil Aviation 2010 885
- Convention of Establishment 1959
 - Art IV(3) 637
- Convention of the International Telecommunications Union
 - Article 50 782
 - Article 82 782
- Convention of the Organization of the Islamic Conference on Combating International Terrorism 1999 888
- Convention on Biodiversity 1992 640, 641
- Convention on Civil Liability for Damage Resulting from Activities Dangerous to the Environment 1993
 - Chapter III 676

- Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage 1969 464, 678, 682
Art II-Art III 682
Art V 682
Protocol on Liability 1992 682
Art 2(3) 682
- Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage 1992 682
- Convention on Civil Liability for Oil Pollution Damage Resulting from Exploration and Exploitation of Seabed Mineral Resources 1977 682
- Convention on Climate Change 1992 649
Art 1 659
Art 1(1) 649
Art 4 658
Art 8 659
Art 11 659
Art 12 658, 659
Art 16-Art 18 659
Preamble 659
- Convention on Damage Caused by Foreign Aircraft to Third Parties on the Surface 1952
Art 37 701
- Convention on Environmental Impact Assessment in a Transboundary Context 1991 642, 656
Appendix I 656
Appendix III 656
Appendix V 656
Art 2 650
Art 3 654, 655
Art 3(4) 656
Art 3(8) 656
Art 5 656
Art 6(1) 656
Art 7 656
- Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects 1972 407, 647, 673
Art I 651
Art II 407, 647
Art III 407, 647
Art XI 621
Art XII 407
- Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species 1973 640
- Convention on Jurisdictional Immunities of States and Their Property 2004 524
Art 2(1)(b) 532, 551, 553
Art 2(1)(c) 542, 545
Art 2(2) 533
Art 3 532
Art 5 531, 532
Art 9 560
Art 10 545
Art 11 546
Art 12 548
Art 13 579
Art 17 560
Art 18 561
Art 19 562
Art 20 559, 562
Art 21 563
- Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution 1979 648, 660, 661
Art 1 649
Art 1(b) 661
Art 2 647, 661

- Art 3-Art 4 661
- Art 5 654, 661, 662
- Art 6 661
- Art 7 662
- Art 8 661
- Art 8(b) 661
- Protocol 1984 661
- Protocol 1985 661
- Protocol 1988 662
- Protocol 1991 662
- Protocol 1994 657, 662
- Protocol 1999 662
- Convention on Nuclear Safety 1994 677
 - Art 4-Art 5 677
 - Art 7 677
 - Art 7(2)(ii) 677
 - Art 8-Art 9 677
 - Art 10-Art 19 677
 - Art 20-Art 25 677
- Convention on Oil Pollution Preparedness, Response and Co-operation 1990 682
- Convention on Salvage 1989 682
- Convention on Special Missions 1969 89, 575, 585-7
 - Art 8 585
 - Art 17 585
 - Art 27 586
 - Art 31 586
 - Art 45 585
- Convention on Supplementary Compensation for Nuclear Damage 1997 678
- Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources 1980 399
- Convention on the Continental Shelf 1958 63, 71, 411, 435, 437, 441, 442, 444
 - Annex II
 - Art 4 437
 - Art 1 436
 - Art 2 438
 - Art 2(4) 438
 - Art 3 438
 - Art 4 439
 - Art 5 439
 - Art 6 63, 441, 448, 694, 697
 - Art 12(1) 701
 - Art 12(3) 438
- Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women 1979 212, 223, 244, 700
 - Art 1 222
 - Art 4(1) 223
 - Art 9 496
 - Art 17-Art 21 244
 - Art 22 244
 - Optional Protocol 245
 - Art 8 245
- Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination 1965 174, 205, 220, 221, 223, 343, 819
 - Art 1(4) 223
 - Art 8 237
 - Art 9 237, 238
 - Art 11 237
 - Art 11(3) 216

- Art 12 237
- Art 14 237
- Art 20(2) 698
- Part II 236
- Convention on the Establishment of an International Fund for Compensation for Oil Pollution
 - Damage 1971 464, 682
 - Protocol 1976 682
 - Protocol 1984 682
 - Protocol 1992 682
 - Protocol 2003 683
- Convention on the Fishing and Conservation of the Living Resources of the High Seas 1958 411
 - Art 1 463, 466
 - Art 6 466
- Convention on the High Seas 1958 89, 411, 675, 701
 - Art 1 454
 - Art 2 453, 454, 466
 - Art 2(1) 453
 - Art 3 452
 - Art 4 453
 - Art 5 455, 497
 - Art 6 457
 - Art 8-Art 9 457
 - Art 11(1) 491
 - Art 13 459
 - Art 15 289, 458
 - Art 19 288, 458
 - Art 22 457, 459
 - Art 23 460
 - Art 24 463
- Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses 1997 80, 655, 671
 - Art 2 670
 - Art 5 80, 671
 - Art 6 652, 671
 - Art 7 671
 - Art 8 671
 - Art 9 672
 - Art 11 671, 672
 - Art 12-Art 17 671
 - Art 18-Art 19 672
 - Art 20 672
 - Art 21(1) 672
 - Art 22 672
 - Art 23 672
- Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982 82, 89, 193, 362, 397, 411, 412, 414, 420, 427, 430, 464, 471, 472, 474, 475, 619, 648, 768, 774, 782, 996
 - Annex III
 - Art 3-Art 4 470
 - Art 8-Art 9 470
 - Annex IV 473
 - Annex V 473, 475
 - Annex VI 474, 475, 476
 - Annex VII 474, 475, 801
 - Annex VIII 474
 - Art 1 470
 - Art 1(2) 477
 - Art 1(4) 648, 649
 - Art 2 423

| | |
|---------------|---------------|
| Art 2(1) | 413 |
| Art 3 | 422 |
| Art 5 | 476 |
| Art 7 | 416 |
| Art 7(4) | 414, 416 |
| Art 8(1) | 413 |
| Art 8(2) | 413, 416 |
| Art 10 | 417 |
| Art 13 | 476 |
| Art 13(1) | 414 |
| Art 13(2) | 414 |
| Art 15 | 440 |
| Art 15(1)–(3) | 478 |
| Art 17 | 423, 453, 477 |
| Art 18 | 424 |
| Art 18(1) | 424 |
| Art 19(2) | 424, 426 |
| Art 21 | 425 |
| Art 21(1) | 424 |
| Art 21(4) | 424 |
| Art 22 | 425 |
| Art 23 | 425 |
| Art 24 | 424 |
| Art 25 | 425 |
| Art 25(2) | 478 |
| Art 26 | 424 |
| Art 27(1) | 426 |
| Art 28 | 426, 478 |
| Art 29–Art 30 | 427, 478 |
| Art 31–Art 32 | 427, 529 |
| Art 34 | 427 |
| Art 35 | 427, 477 |
| Art 35(c) | 429 |
| Art 36 | 428 |
| Art 37 | 427 |
| Art 38 | 428 |
| Art 38(1) | 428, 453 |
| Art 39 | 428 |
| Art 40–Art 42 | 428 |
| Art 44 | 428 |
| Art 45 | 428 |
| Art 45(2) | 428 |
| Art 47 | 420 |
| Art 52(1) | 453 |
| Art 53(2) | 453 |
| Art 55 | 430, 432 |
| Art 56 | 432, 436 |
| Art 56(1) | 466 |
| Art 57 | 433 |
| Art 58 | 433 |
| Art 58(1) | 453 |
| Art 59 | 80, 414, 433 |
| Art 60 | 432 |
| Art 60(2) | 433 |
| Art 61 | 432, 466 |

| | |
|-----------------|--------------------|
| Art 62 | 432 |
| Art 63 | 432 |
| Art 63(1) | 466 |
| Art 63(2) | 467 |
| Art 64-Art 68 | 432, 466 |
| Art 69 | 432, 453 |
| Art 69(1) | 453 |
| Art 69(2) | 453 |
| Art 69(4) | 453 |
| Art 70 | 453 |
| Art 70(1) | 453 |
| Art 70(2) | 453 |
| Art 70(5) | 453 |
| Art 71 | 453 |
| Art 72 | 443 |
| Art 74 | 80, 447 |
| Art 74(1) | 450 |
| Art 76(1) | 436 |
| Art 76(3) | 437 |
| Art 76(4)-(9) | 437 |
| Art 77 | 438 |
| Art 77(4) | 438, 466 |
| Art 78 | 438, 439 |
| Art 79 | 439 |
| Art 80 | 439 |
| Art 82 | 439 |
| Art 82(3) | 439 |
| Art 83 | 80, 443, 447 |
| Art 83(1) | 450 |
| Art 86 | 454 |
| Art 87 | 453, 454 |
| Art 88 | 454 |
| Art 89 | 453 |
| Art 90 | 453 |
| Art 91 | 455, 481, 497 |
| Art 92 | 457 |
| Art 94 | 455, 457 |
| Art 95-Art 96 | 457, 529 |
| Art 97 | 457, 461 |
| Art 98 | 457 |
| Art 99 | 288, 457, 459 |
| Art 101 | 289, 458 |
| Art 105 | 288, 458 |
| Art 106 | 458 |
| Art 109 | 457, 460 |
| Art 110 | 457, 459, 460, 461 |
| Art 111 | 460 |
| Art 113 | 457 |
| Art 115 | 457 |
| Art 116 | 466 |
| Art 116(b) | 466 |
| Art 117-Art 120 | 466 |
| Art 121(1) | 419 |
| Art 121(2) | 419 |
| Art 121(3) | 419, 433 |
| Art 125 | 452 |
| Art 127-Art 130 | 452 |

| | |
|-----------------|--------------------|
| Art 136-Art 137 | 397, 470 |
| Art 139 | 647 |
| Art 140 | 80, 470 |
| Art 148 | 453 |
| Art 149 | 752 |
| Art 150 | 470 |
| Art 152 | 453 |
| Art 153 | 470, 477 |
| Art 155(1) | 472 |
| Art 159(10) | 478 |
| Art 160 | 453, 473 |
| Art 161 | 453, 473 |
| Art 161(1) | 473 |
| Art 162-Art 165 | 473 |
| Art 170 | 473 |
| Art 187 | 475, 477 |
| Art 188 | 475, 477 |
| Art 192 | 464, 646 |
| Art 194 | 464, 646, 647, 681 |
| Art 198 | 653 |
| Art 204 | 655 |
| Art 206 | 655 |
| Art 207 | 681 |
| Art 211 | 464 |
| Art 211(2) | 681 |
| Art 212 | 663 |
| Art 217 | 681 |
| Art 218 | 682 |
| Art 220(1) | 682 |
| Art 220(2) | 681 |
| Art 235 | 464, 647 |
| Art 246(5)-(6) | 475 |
| Art 279 | 474 |
| Art 280 | 474 |
| Art 281(1) | 476 |
| Art 283 | 474, 768 |
| Art 283(1) | 768 |
| Art 284 | 474 |
| Art 286 | 474 |
| Art 287 | 474, 801 |
| Art 289 | 477 |
| Art 290 | 479 |
| Art 290(5) | 480, 481 |
| Art 290(6) | 478 |
| Art 292 | 480, 619 |
| Art 292(1) | 477 |
| Art 293 | 477 |
| Art 294 | 478 |
| Art 295 | 620 |
| Art 297(1) | 474 |
| Art 297(2) | 475 |
| Art 297(3) | 475 |
| Art 297(3)(b) | 475 |
| Art 303 | 752 |
| Art 311(1) | 412 |

- Part VI 454
- Part XI 412, 470–471, 477
- Part XII 432
- Part XIII 432
- Part XV 474, 475, 476
- Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purpose of Identification, 1991 885
- Convention on the Nationality of Married Women 1957 495
- Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity 1968 501
- Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material 1980 885
- Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes against Internationally Protected Persons 1973 505, 578, 885
 - Art 1 505
 - Art 2 505, 578
 - Art 3 505, 578
 - Art 3(1)(c) 498
 - Art 6–Art 7 578
 - Art 8 515, 578
- Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide 1948 34, 71, 82, 93, 212, 220, 309, 319, 696, 819
 - Art 4 319
 - Art 5 252
 - Art 6 298
- Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade 1998 679
- Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the Specialised Agencies 1947 1008
 - Art II(5) 1015
 - Art III(4) 1014
 - Art III(7) 1016
 - Art III(9) 1016
 - Art IV(11)–(12) 1016
 - Art V 588
 - Art XIX(32) 997
- Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations 1946 588, 1008
 - Art II(2) 1014, 1015
 - Art II(3) 1015
 - Art II(4) 1015
 - Art II(5) 1016
 - Art II(7) 1016
 - Art III(9)–(10) 1016
 - Art IV 588
 - Art V(15)(1)–(4) 1012
 - Art V(18) 1013
 - Art V(19) 1013
 - Art V(20) 1013
 - Art VI(22) 1013, 1014
 - Art VI(23) 1013
 - Art VII(25) 1012
 - Art VIII(30) 997
- Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques 1977 911
- Convention on the Protection and Use of Transboundary Watercourses and International Lakes 1992 650, 670
 - Annex I 671
 - Annex III 671
 - Art 1(1) 670
 - Art 1(2) 650, 671
 - Art 2 647

- Art 2(1) 671
- Art 2(5)(b) 660
- Art 3-Art 6 671
- Art 7 671
- Art 9-Art 15 671
- Convention on the Protection of the Black Sea Against Pollution 1992 681
- Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea Area 1992 681
- Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families 1990 251
 - Art 2 251
 - Art 3 251
 - Art 18 251
 - Art 22 251
 - Art 25 251
 - Art 26 251
 - Art 28 251
 - Art 30-Art 31 251
 - Art 73 251
 - Art 76 251
 - Art 77 251, 253
 - Part IV 251
 - Part VII 251
- Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness 1961 231, 759
- Convention on the Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space 1975 407, 408
- Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities 2006 251
 - Art 5-Art 9 251
 - Art 34-Art 36 251
 - Optional Protocol 252
- Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989 240, 249, 493, 901
 - Additional Protocol 898
 - Art 2(1) 222
 - Art 6 249
 - Art 7 249, 496
 - Art 13 249
 - Art 14 249
 - Art 19 249
 - Art 24 249
 - Art 29 642
 - Art 32 249
 - Art 33 249
 - Art 38 249
 - Art 43 249
 - Art 44 249
 - Art 45 250
 - Optional Protocol on Communications Procedure 250, 253
 - Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict 2000 250
 - Optional Protocol on the Question of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography 2000 250
- Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel 1994 499, 506, 943
 - Art 2(2) 944
 - Art 4 943
 - Art 6 943
 - Art 9 505, 943
 - Art 10 507, 943
 - Art 13 961
 - Art 14 507, 961
 - Art 15 961

- Art 17 961
- Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes 1965 205, 619, 819
- Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes Between States and the Nationals of Other States 1965 787–8
- Art 25(1) 787
- Art 25(2) 788
- Art 25(2)(b) 788
- Art 53-Art 55 788
- Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid 1973 505
- Art 4 252
- Art 7 253
- Convention on the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone 1958 82, 411, 414, 419, 420, 422, 425, 430, 431
- Art 1-Art 2 423
- Art 3 414
- Art 4 416, 420
- Art 4(3) 416
- Art 5(1) 413
- Art 5(2) 413, 416
- Art 7 417
- Art 10(1) 419
- Art 10(2) 419
- Art 11(1) 414
- Art 14 423
- Art 14(1) 453
- Art 14(3) 603
- Art 14(4) 424
- Art 16(4) 427
- Art 17 424
- Art 19(1) 426
- Art 20 426
- Art 21-Art 23 427
- Art 24 430, 431
- Art 33 430
- Art 46(a) 420
- Art 49-Art 53 421
- Convention on the Transboundary Effects of Industrial Accidents 1992 680
- Annex II 680
- Annex III 680
- Annex IV 680
- Annex V 680
- Annex IX 680
- Art 1(g) 680
- Art 2(2) 680
- Art 4 680
- Art 6 680
- Art 6(2) 680
- Art 7 680
- Art 8 680
- Art 10 680
- Convention Relating to Civil Liability in the Field of Maritime Carriage of Nuclear Material 1971 678
- Convention Relating to Intervention on the High Seas in Cases of Oil Pollution Casualties 1969 463, 682
- Protocol 1973 682
- Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees 1951 115, 143, 231, 272, 626
- Art 35-Art 36 253
- Protocol 1967 231, 626
- Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons 1954 231
- Art 33 253

- Conventional Weapons Treaty 1980
 - Protocol I 910
 - Protocol II 910
 - Protocol III 910
 - Protocol IV 910
 - Protocol V 910
- Costa Rica-Nicaragua Treaty of Limits 396
- Council of Europe Agreement on Illicit Traffic by Sea 1995 461
- Council of Europe Convention on Civil Liability for Environmental Damage 1993 650
 - Art 2(7)(c) 650
 - Art 2(10) 650
- Council of Europe Convention on the Avoidance of Statelessness in Relation to State Succession 2006 760
- Council of Europe Convention on the Prevention of Terrorism 2005 888
- Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities 1994 269–271
 - Art 4 270
 - Art 5 270
 - Art 7–Art 9 270
 - Art 10(2) 270
 - Art 11(3) 270
 - Art 14(2) 270
 - Art 24 270
 - Art 25 270
 - Art 26 270
- Council of Europe Statute
 - Art 1 255
 - Art 13 265
 - Art 14 265
 - Art 15 986
 - Art 16 986

- Dayton Peace Agreement 1995 342, 781, 954
 - Annex 1-B 782
 - Annex 2
 - Art V 81
 - Annex 3 781
 - Annex 4 190
 - Annex 6 782
 - Annex 10 161, 181
 - Art 5 313
 - Art 12 181
- Declaration of Legal Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space 1963 86, 405
- Declaration of Minimum Humanitarian Standards 1990 918
- Declaration of Principles Governing the Seabed and Ocean Floor 1970 397, 469
- Declaration on International Co-operation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space 1996 405
- Declaration on Measures to Eliminate International Terrorism 1994 885
- Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States 1970 86, 169, 200, 202, 203, 224, 348, 362, 367, 372, 377, 388, 766, 855, 856, 858, 875, 878, 895
- Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief 1981 222
- Declaration on the Enhancement of the Effectiveness of the Principle of Refraining from the Threat or Use of Force in International Relations 1987 855
- Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 1960 29, 86, 200, 388
- Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals who are not Nationals of the Country in which they Live 624
- Declaration on the Inadmissibility of Intervention in the Domestic Affairs of States 1965 857

- Declaration on the Prevention and Removal of Disputes and Situations which may Threaten International Peace and Security 766
- Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from being subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment 1975 246
- Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples in 2007 229
- Art 1 230
- Art 3 230
- Art 4 230
- Art 5 230
- Art 6 230
- Art 7(2) 230
- Art 8 230
- Art 9-Art 37 230
- Art 42 230
- Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities 1992 228
- Art 1 228
- Declaration on the Rights of the Child 1959 249
- Djibouti Code on the Repression of Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in the Western Indian Ocean and the Gulf of Aden 2009 459
- Dublin Declaration on the Environmental Imperative 1990 643
- Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) Treaty (Revised) 1993 785
- Art 2 977
- Art 58 778
- Protocol on Community Court of Justice 1999 785
- Protocol on Democracy and Good Governance 2001 778
- Art 6-Art 10 778
- Protocol on Non-Aggression 1978 977
- Protocol Relating to Mutual Assistance on Defence 1981 977
- Esquipulas II Agreement 1987 780
- European Agreement for the Prevention of Broadcasting transmitted from Stations outside National Territories 460
- European Atomic Energy Treaty
- Art 192-Art 193 465
- European Bank for Reconstruction and Development Constitution
- Art 46-Art 55 1008
- European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages 1992 269
- Art 20 269
- European Charter of Local Self-Government 1985 271
- European Charter on Environment and Health 1989 643
- European Coal and Steel Community Treaty 192
- Art 6 192, 991
- European Convention for the Peaceful Settlement of Disputes 1957 767, 774, 780
- Art 26 799
- Art 28 799
- European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment 1987 246, 255-66, 267-9
- Art 1 268
- Art 2 268
- Art 7 268
- Art 8 268
- Art 9(1) 268
- Art 10(2) 268
- Art 11 268
- Art 11(1) 268
- Art 12 268

| | |
|--|--|
| European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 1950 | 34, 106, 117, 118, 119, 205, 216, 219, 269, 272, 515, 699, 710, 957, 986 |
| Art 1 | 252, 256, 258, 624 |
| Art 2 | 216, 256, 264, 265 |
| Art 3 | 216, 246, 256, 260, 264, 265 |
| Art 4 | 256 |
| Art 4(1) | 216 |
| Art 5 | 95, 256, 265 |
| Art 6 | 256, 265, 538, 958, 1009 |
| Art 6(1) | 264, 539, 1009 |
| Art 7 | 216, 256 |
| Art 8-Art 9 | 217, 256 |
| Art 10 | 217, 256 |
| Art 11 | 217, 256 |
| Art 12 | 256 |
| Art 13 | 256, 265 |
| Art 14 | 222, 256, 269 |
| Art 15 | 216, 264, 265, 917 |
| Art 22-Art 23 | 259 |
| Art 25 | 260, 699 |
| Art 26 | 216, 260, 263 |
| Art 27 | 260 |
| Art 27(2) | 806 |
| Art 28 | 260 |
| Art 29 | 260 |
| Art 30 | 260 |
| Art 33 | 262 |
| Art 34 | 260, 262 |
| Art 35 | 263, 620 |
| Art 35(3)(b) | 263 |
| Art 36 | 261 |
| Art 38-Art 39 | 261 |
| Art 41 | 261, 266 |
| Art 43 | 261 |
| Art 44 | 261 |
| Art 46(1) | 261, 699 |
| Art 46(2) | 261, 265 |
| Art 46(3)-(5) | 262 |
| Art 47 | 261 |
| Art 63 | 702 |
| Art 64 | 695, 701 |
| Protocol 1 | 256 |
| Art 1 | 707 |
| Protocol 4 | 256 |
| Art 4 | 625 |
| Protocol 6 | 256 |
| Protocol 7 | 256 |
| Art 1 | 626 |
| Protocol 11 | 259, 278, 284 |
| Protocol 12 | 256 |
| Protocol 14 | 259 |
| Protocol 15 | 256, 264 |
| Protocol 16 | 256, 261 |
| European Convention for the Suppression of Terrorism 1977 | 515 |
| European Convention on Establishment 1956 | |
| Art 3 | 625 |
| European Convention on Nationality 1997 | 493, 760 |

- Art 3(2) 615
- Art 18 760
- Art 19 760
- Art 20 760
- European Convention on State Immunity 1972 524, 531
 - Additional Protocol 531, 562
 - Art 1 560
 - Art 6 551
 - Art 7 533, 551
 - Art 11 548
 - Art 12 560
 - Art 15 532
 - Art 20 562
 - Art 23 561, 562
 - Art 28 553
- European Convention on the Exercise of Children's Rights 1995 271
- European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers 1977 271
- European Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level 1992 271
- European Economic Community Treaty (Treaty of Rome) 1957 271, 554
 - Art 177(2) 272
 - Art 210 991
- European Energy Charter Treaty 1994 644
 - Art 1(6) 636
 - Art 13 633, 635, 639
 - Art 19 644
 - Art 26(4) 788
- European Outline Convention on Transfrontier Co-operation between Territorial Communities or Authorities 1980 271
- European Social Charter 1961 256, 266–7, 986
 - Art 1 266, 267
 - Art 2 266, 267
 - Art 3–Art 6 266
 - Art 7–Art 8 266
 - Art 9–Art 10 266
 - Art 11–Art 14 266
 - Art 15 266
 - Art 16–Art 17 266
 - Art 18–Art 19 266
 - Art 20 266
 - Protocol 266, 267
- European Union Charter of Rights 273
 - Art 47 548
- European Union Framework Decision on Terrorism 2002 888
- European Union Treaty 1992 (Maastricht Treaty) 137, 272
 - Art A
 - Title 1 192
 - Art F(2) 272
 - Art K.1 272
 - Art K.2 272
- European Union Treaty 2010 (Consolidated Version) 474
 - Art 6 272
 - Art 6(2) 272
 - Art 7 272
 - Art 10 465
 - Art 17 614
 - Art 20 614
 - Art 46A 192

- Art 47 193
- Art 49 273
- Art 85 521
- Art 173 521
- Art 174 660
- Art 281 991
- Art 282 993
- Art 292 465

- Fez, Treaty of, 1912 170
- Food and Agriculture Organization Constitution
 - Art 16 993
 - Art 17 782
- Framework Agreement on the Peaceful Settlement of the Territorial Dispute (Libya-Chad) 1989 765
- Franco-Libyan Treaty 1955 765
- Franco-Vietnamese Agreement 1950 752

- General Act of the Congress of Berlin 1885
 - Art 35 387
- General Act on the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes 1928 774
 - Art 15(1) 774
 - Art 28 798, 799
- General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) 1947 30, 72, 184, 659, 689, 783, 985, 1018
 - Art IV 983
 - Art IV(3)-(4) 985
 - Art XII-Art XIII 783
- General Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Council of Europe 1949 1008
- General Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the UN 1946
 - Art IV(11) 1011
 - Art IV(14) 1012
 - Art IV(16) 1012
 - Art VIII(30) 847
- General Treaty for the Renunciation of War (Pact of Paris; Kellogg-Briand Pact) 1928 326, 347, 371, 377, 714, 854
- Geneva Convention for the Amelioration of the Condition of the Wounded in Armies in the Field 1864 892
- Geneva Conventions 1949 21, 70, 207, 246, 291, 292, 309, 323, 501, 505, 892, 893, 915, 919, 944
 - Additional Protocols 246, 291, 296, 307, 323, 501, 505, 773, 892, 893, 944
 - Art 1(4) 875
 - Protocol I 919
 - Art 1(2) 893
 - Art 1(4) 875, 895, 896
 - Art 4 900
 - Art 11 897
 - Art 20 919
 - Art 35(2) 908
 - Art 35(3) 911
 - Art 43 896, 898
 - Art 44 893, 896
 - Art 44(3) 896
 - Art 45 896
 - Art 45(3) 896
 - Art 48 906, 908
 - Art 50(1) 898
 - Art 51 906
 - Art 51(3) 907

| | |
|-------------------|------------------------------|
| Art 51(4) | 907 |
| Art 51(6) | 919 |
| Art 52 | 907 |
| Art 52(2) | 906 |
| Art 53 | 908 |
| Art 54 | 908 |
| Art 55 | 911 |
| Art 56 | 908 |
| Art 57 | 907 |
| Art 75 | 896, 897, 898 |
| Art 83 | 919 |
| Art 85 | 919 |
| Art 90 | 920 |
| Art 96(3) | 916 |
| Protocol II | 916, 918 |
| Art 1(2) | 916 |
| Art 4-Art 6 | 917 |
| Art 10 | 917 |
| Art 15 | 917 |
| Art 17 | 917 |
| Art 19 | 919 |
| Protocol III | 893, 895 |
| First Convention | 894 |
| Art 1 | 919 |
| Art 2 | 894 |
| Art 3 | 296, 307, 323, 898, 915, 918 |
| Art 7 | 894 |
| Art 8 | 919 |
| Art 12 | 894 |
| Art 13 | 894 |
| Art 14-Art 15 | 894 |
| Art 16 | 895 |
| Art 19 | 895 |
| Art 22 | 895 |
| Art 49 | 291, 501 |
| Art 50 | 291, 919 |
| Art 52 | 920 |
| Fourth Convention | 292, 893, 898, 900, 902 |
| Art 1 | 919 |
| Art 2 | 894 |
| Art 2(2) | 898 |
| Art 3 | 296, 307, 323, 898, 915, 918 |
| Art 4 | 898 |
| Art 6 | 898 |
| Art 8 | 894 |
| Art 9 | 919 |
| Art 16 | 898 |
| Art 27-Art 46 | 898 |
| Art 33 | 901 |
| Art 47 | 900 |
| Art 49 | 900 |
| Art 51 | 901 |
| Art 53-Art 56 | 901 |
| Art 59-Art 60 | 901 |
| Art 64 | 489, 901 |
| Art 65-Art 69 | 489 |
| Art 70 | 489, 901 |

- Art 71-Art 76 489, 898
- Art 77-Art 78 489
- Art 142 920
- Art 144 919
- Art 146 501
- Art 147 919
- Art 149 920
- Second Convention 895
 - Art 1 919
 - Art 2 894
 - Art 3 296, 307, 323, 898, 915, 918
 - Art 7 894
 - Art 8 919
 - Art 12-Art 13 895
 - Art 50 291, 501
 - Art 51 291, 919
 - Art 53 920
- Third Convention 895
 - Art 1 919
 - Art 2 894
 - Art 3 296, 307, 323, 898, 915, 918
 - Art 4 895, 898
 - Art 5 896
 - Art 7 894
 - Art 8 919
 - Art 13 897, 907
 - Art 14 897
 - Art 17 897
 - Art 19 897
 - Art 23 897
 - Art 47 896
 - Art 82 897
 - Art 85 897
 - Art 118 897
 - Art 122 895
 - Art 126 920
 - Art 127 919
 - Art 129 291, 501
 - Art 130 291, 919
 - Art 132 920
- Hague Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land 1907 (Hague IV Convention) 893
 - Regulations annexed to 895, 898, 900, 902
 - Art 22 908
 - Art 23(a) 909
 - Art 23(e) 908
 - Art 42 898
 - Art 43 899, 901
 - Art 47 901
- Hague Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes 1899 771, 795, 799
 - Art 2-Art 3 771
 - Art 9 771
 - Art 15 795
 - Art 48 798
- Hague Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes 1907 771, 772, 773, 799

- Art 2-Art 3 771
- Art 18 796
- Art 37 795
- Art 44 796
- Art 73 798
- Art 81 799
- Art 84 799
- Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict 1954 908, 944
 - Art 4 908
 - Protocol I 1954 908
 - Protocol II 1999 908
 - Art 3 908
 - Art 22 908
- Hague Convention for the Suppression of the Unlawful Seizure of Aircraft 1970 506, 507, 819, 885
 - Art 8 515
- Hague Convention on the Conflict of Nationality Laws 1930
 - Art 1 494, 615, 759
 - Art 3 617
 - Art 12 495
- Hague Convention on the Recognition of Divorces and Legal Separations 1970 488, 505
- Hague Convention respecting the Limitation of the Employment of Force for Recovery of Contract Debts 1907 (Hague II Convention) 853
- Hague Declaration 1899 910
- Headquarters Agreement between the UK and the International Maritime Satellite Organization 1980
 - Art 6 1015
- Helsinki Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea 1974
 - Annex 6 654
- Helsinki Declaration on the Protection of the Ozone Layer 1989 664
- Helsinki Final Act 1975 88, 169, 224, 273, 388, 390, 686, 687, 767, 781

- Indian Ocean Tuna Commission Agreement 1993 469
- Indian-Pakistan Treaty 1950 227
- Inter-American Commission of Human Rights Statute 279
 - Art 19(c) 279
- Inter-American Convention on Human Rights 1969 205, 216, 277-86
 - Art 1-Art 2 252
 - Art 3 216
 - Art 4 216, 277
 - Art 5 216, 246, 277
 - Art 6 216
 - Art 9 216
 - Art 12 216, 217
 - Art 13-Art 16 217
 - Art 17 216
 - Art 18-Art 19 216, 277
 - Art 20 216
 - Art 21 217, 231
 - Art 22 217
 - Art 23 216, 277
 - Art 26 277
 - Art 27 216, 282, 917
 - Art 34-Art 38 280
 - Art 44 277
 - Art 45 278
 - Art 46 278, 620
 - Art 46(1)(a) 216

| | |
|--|---------------|
| Art 47 | 278 |
| Art 48 | 278 |
| Art 49 | 278 |
| Art 50 | 216, 278, 280 |
| Art 51 | 278, 280 |
| Art 52-Art 54 | 281 |
| Art 63(2) | 279, 281 |
| Art 64 | 281 |
| Protocol on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights 1988 | 279 |
| Art 8(a) | 279 |
| Art 11 | 642 |
| Art 13 | 279 |
| Art 19 | 279 |
| Protocol on the Abolition of the Death Penalty 1990 | 279 |
| Art 13 | 279 |
| Art 14 | 279 |
| Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities 1999 | 280 |
| Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women 1994 | 279 |
| Art 7 | 280 |
| Art 10 | 279 |
| Art 11 | 279 |
| Art 12 | 279 |
| Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women in June 1994 | 246 |
| Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture 1985 | 246 |
| Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance 1947 | 865, 987 |
| Art 3(1) | 865 |
| International Atomic Agency Statute | |
| Art XVII | 782 |
| International Bank for Reconstruction and Development Articles of Agreement | |
| Art VI(5) | 1016 |
| Art VII | 1008, 1015 |
| International Court of Justice Statute | 84, 125 |
| Art 2 | 804 |
| Art 3 | 805 |
| Art 4 | 804, 927 |
| Art 5 | 804 |
| Art 9 | 29, 804 |
| Art 10 | 805 |
| Art 12 | 187 |
| Art 13 | 805 |
| Art 16-Art 19 | 805 |
| Art 21 | 805 |
| Art 22 | 805 |
| Art 25 | 818 |
| Art 26 | 806 |
| Art 29 | 806 |
| Art 31 | 805, 806 |
| Art 34 | 814, 997 |
| Art 34(2) | 815 |
| Art 35 | 815 |
| Art 35(1) | 815 |
| Art 35(2) | 815 |

- Art 36(1) 816–21, 827
- Art 36(2) 686, 780, 810, 820, 821–5, 841
- Art 36(3) 823
- Art 36(5) 822
- Art 36(6) 821, 825
- Art 36(8)(a)(iii) 48
- Art 37 821
- Art 38 55, 69, 79, 81, 83, 447, 798, 825
- Art 38(1) 52, 91, 92
- Art 38(2) 79, 825
- Art 40 819
- Art 40(1) 812
- Art 41 830, 831, 832
- Art 43(5) 827
- Art 44(2) 827
- Art 48–Art 50 827
- Art 53 840
- Art 59 81, 838, 840
- Art 60 840, 841, 843
- Art 61 814, 841, 843
- Art 62 835
- Art 63 835, 836
- Art 65 843, 997
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) 1966 34, 200, 202, 222, 227, 238, 388, 493, 538, 690, 699, 763, 856, 901
- Art 1 224, 225, 238, 759
- Art 2 238, 252, 624
- Art 2(1) 222
- Art 6 216, 217, 238, 240
- Art 6(5) 241
- Art 7 217, 238, 243, 246
- Art 8 238
- Art 8(1)–(2) 217
- Art 9 239
- Art 11 217
- Art 12 217
- Art 13 625
- Art 14 239, 309
- Art 15 217, 309
- Art 16 217
- Art 18 217, 239
- Art 19 217, 225
- Art 21 217, 225, 283
- Art 22 217, 225, 239
- Art 24(3) 496
- Art 25 225
- Art 26 222
- Art 27 223, 227, 228, 239, 241, 243
- Art 28–Art 32 239
- Art 40 239, 917
- Art 40(4) 240
- Art 41 241
- Art 41(c) 216
- Art 42 241
- Art 207 225
- First Optional Protocol 205, 216, 225, 241, 242
- Art 2 216

- Art 5 242, 620
- Part IV 239
- Second Optional Protocol 244
- International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) 1966 34, 200, 202, 222, 234–6, 388, 690, 763, 856, 901
 - Art 1 224, 234, 759
 - Art 2 234
 - Art 2(2) 222
 - Art 3 222
 - Art 6–Art 7 234
 - Art 9 234
 - Art 11 234
 - Art 13 234
 - Art 15 234
 - Art 16–Art 22 234
 - Optional Protocol 236
- International Criminal Court Statute 1998 298, 299, 309, 502, 505, 691, 701
 - Art 5 299, 326, 502
 - Art 5(2) 326
 - Art 6 299, 319
 - Art 7 299
 - Art 8 299, 323
 - Art 8 bis 299, 327, 950
 - Art 8(2)(d)–(e) 916
 - Art 9 299
 - Art 11 299
 - Art 12(2) 299
 - Art 12(3) 299
 - Art 13(a) 300
 - Art 13(b) 300, 304
 - Art 13(c) 300
 - Art 14 300, 304
 - Art 15 300
 - Art 15 bis 299
 - Art 17 302
 - Art 17(2)(a)–(c) 303
 - Art 20(3) 303
 - Art 25 299, 502
 - Art 27 554
 - Art 34 303
 - Art 36 303
 - Art 38 304
 - Art 39(2)(b)(i) 304
 - Art 39(2)(b)(ii)–(iii) 304
 - Art 40 303
 - Art 42–Art 43 304
 - Art 53–Art 54 304
 - Art 55 304
 - Art 56(3) 305
 - Art 64 304
 - Art 68 304
 - Art 75(2) 304
 - Art 77 304
 - Art 82 305

| | |
|--|--------------------|
| Art 83 | 305 |
| Art 98(2) | 302 |
| Art 124 | 299 |
| International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda Statute | |
| Art 2 | 296, 319 |
| Art 3 | 296, 502 |
| Art 4 | 296, 323, 917 |
| Art 6 | 554 |
| Art 7-Art 9 | 296 |
| International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia Statute 1993 | 324 |
| Art 1 | 293 |
| Art 2 | 293, 322 |
| Art 3 | 293, 322, 323, 913 |
| Art 4 | 293, 313, 320 |
| Art 5 | 293, 324, 501 |
| Art 7 | 293, 324, 554 |
| Art 8 | 293 |
| Art 8(2)(c) | 323 |
| Art 8(2)(e) | 323 |
| Art 9 | 294 |
| Art 10 | 294 |
| Art 11 | 293 |
| Art 12-Art 13 | 293 |
| Art 14 | 293 |
| Art 17 | 293 |
| Art 18-Art 19 | 294 |
| Art 20 | 294 |
| Art 24-Art 25 | 294 |
| Art 29 | 117, 294 |
| International Labour Organization Administrative Tribunal Statute | |
| Annex | |
| Art XII | 782 |
| International Labour Organization Constitution | |
| Art 26 | 773 |
| Art 37 | 782 |
| International Labour Organization Convention against Discrimination in Education | |
| Special Protocol 1962 | 782 |
| International Labour Organization Convention No. 107 1957 | 229 |
| International Labour Organization Convention No. 169 1989 | 229, 231 |
| Art 1(2) | 229 |
| Art 1(3) | 229 |
| Art 3 | 231 |
| International Law Commission Articles on State Responsibility 2001 | 89, 591 |
| Art 1 | 592 |
| Art 2 | 592, 595 |
| Art 3 | 100, 592 |
| Art 4 | 595 |
| Art 4(1) | 175 |
| Art 5 | 596 |
| Art 6 | 597 |
| Art 7 | 597 |
| Art 8 | 598, 599 |
| Art 9 | 599 |
| Art 10 | 599 |
| Art 11 | 600 |
| Art 12 | 592 |
| Art 13 | 592 |

| | |
|---|----------|
| Art 14 | 592 |
| Art 15 | 592 |
| Art 16 | 593 |
| Art 17-Art 18 | 592 |
| Art 20 | 877 |
| Art 23 | 603 |
| Art 24 | 603 |
| Art 25 | 604 |
| Art 26 | 93 |
| Art 30 | 606, 608 |
| Art 31 | 607 |
| Art 31(2) | 610 |
| Art 32 | 607 |
| Art 34 | 607 |
| Art 35 | 608 |
| Art 36(1) | 609 |
| Art 36(2) | 609 |
| Art 37 | 610 |
| Art 40 | 605 |
| Art 40(2) | 94, 612 |
| Art 41 | 612 |
| Art 41(2) | 94 |
| Art 41(3) | 612 |
| Art 42 | 605 |
| Art 44 | 612, 620 |
| Art 45 | 605 |
| Art 46-Art 47 | 605 |
| Art 48 | 605 |
| Art 49 | 602 |
| Art 50 | 602 |
| Art 50(d) | 94 |
| Art 51 | 602 |
| Art 52 | 603 |
| Art 58 | 593 |
| International Law Commission Articles on the Law of Treaties | |
| Art 5(2) | 172 |
| International Law Commission Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States 1949 | 166 |
| International Law Commission Statute 1947 | |
| Art 2-Art 3 | 89 |
| Art 8 | 89 |
| International Maritime Organization Code of Practice for the Investigation of the Crimes of Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships 2009 | 458 |
| International Maritime Organization Constitution | |
| Art 65 | 782 |
| International Maritime Organization Treaty 1948 | 768 |
| International Monetary Fund Articles of Association | |
| Art VII(2) | 993 |
| Art IX | 1008 |
| Art IX(2) | 993 |
| International Sugar Agreement 1992 | 1017 |
| International Tin Agreement 1981 | 1017 |
| International Tin Agreement 1982 | 1005 |
| Iran-Iraq Agreements 1937 and 1975 | 396 |
| Iraqi High Tribunal Statute | |
| Art 1 | 314 |

- Art 6(b) 314
- Art 11-Art 13 314
- Art 14 314, 322
- Art 15 314
- Israel–Egypt Treaty of Peace 1979 941, 988
 - Art 5 402
 - Art 5(2) 429
- Israel–Jordan Treaty of Peace 1994
 - Annex I(a)
 - Art 2A(1) 396
 - Annex I(b) 492
 - Annex I(c) 492
 - Annex II 640
 - Annex IV 640
 - Art 14(3) 429
 - Art 18 640
- Israel–PLO Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements 1993 186

- Japan Peace Treaty 1951 183
- Jay Treaty 1794 623, 795
- Joint Convention on the Safety of Spent Fuel and Radioactive Waste Management 1997 677, 680

- Kadesh, Treaty of 11
- Kampala Convention for the Protection and Assistance of Internally Displaced Persons in Africa 2009 626
- Kuwait Regional Convention for Co-operation on the Protection of the Marine Environment from Pollution 1978 681
 - Art XI 655
 - Protocol 1978 681
 - Protocol 1989 681
 - Protocol 1990 681

- Lateran Treaty 1929 194
- Lausanne Treaty 1923 756
 - Art 3 795
- League of Nations Covenant 198, 714, 853
 - Art 12 933
 - Art 15 933
 - Art 16 933
 - Art 22 176, 213
 - Art 23 214
- Lima Convention for the Protection of the Marine Environment and Coastal Areas of the South-East Pacific 1981 681
- Lisbon Treaty 2007 137, 192, 272, 273, 787
 - Art 55 192
 - Art 206-Art 207 787
- Litvinov Agreement 1933 123
- London Convention on the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping of Wastes at Sea 1972 464, 679
 - Art 1 647

- Manila Declaration
 - Art I(3) 767
 - Art I(6) 776
 - Art I(10) 767, 768
- Marrakesh Agreement Establishing the World Trade Organization 1994
 - Annex 2 783
- Mercosur Treaty 1991 785
 - Protocol of Brasilia 1991 785

- Merger Treaty 1965 554
- Minorities Treaty 1919 757
- Minsk Agreement 1991 728, 987
 - Art 5 734, 987
 - Art 6–Art 7 987
- Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States 1933
 - Art 1 157
 - Art 3 332
 - Art 7 343
 - Art 11 348
- Montreal Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Civil Aviation 1971 505, 506, 507, 885
 - Art 1(4) 507
 - Art 3(2) 507
 - Art 8 515
 - Protocol 507
- Montreux Convention 1936 429
- Multilateral Agreement on Investment 1995 637

- Nanking Treaty 1842 763
- Natural Rubber Agreement 1987 1017
- Nice Treaty 2001 137, 192
- Nordic Convention on the Protection of the Environment 1974 654, 677
 - Art 6 655
- Nordic Mutual Assistance Agreement 1963 676
- North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) 785–6
 - Art 1101–Art 1104 785
 - Art 1105 785
 - Art 1106–Art 1109 785
 - Art 1110 630, 633, 785
 - Art 1111–Art 1114 785
 - Art 1120 788
 - Art 1131 785
 - Art 1132 785
 - Art 1134 785
 - Art 1136 785
 - Art 1903–Art 1905 786
 - Art 2001–Art 2002 785
 - Art 2003–Art 2008 786
 - Art 2011 786
 - Art 2014–Art 2017 786
 - Art 2018–Art 2019 786
- North Atlantic Treaty 987
 - Art 4 987
 - Art 5 865, 873, 987
- Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty 1968 674, 909
- Nuremberg Tribunal Charter 290
 - Art 5 290
 - Art 6 326, 501, 920
 - Art 6(b) 323
 - Art 7 554

- Organization of African Unity Charter 170
 - Art XIX 776
 - Protocol on the Commission of Mediation, Conciliation and Arbitration 1964 774, 776
 - Protocol Relating to the Establishment of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union 2002 777
 - Art 2 777

- Art 4-Art 7 777
- Art 9 778
- Art 10 777
- Art 11 777
- Art 12 777
- Art 13-Art 15 777
- Art 16 778
- Art 22(1)-(2) 777
- Organization of American States Charter 1948 277, 332
 - Art 1 975
 - Art 9 332
 - Art 12 332
 - Art 17 348
 - Art 20 779
 - Art 23 779
 - Art 82-Art 90 780
 - Art 98 519
- Cartagena Protocol 1985 779
- Organization on Security and Co-operation in Europe Ministerial Declaration and Plan of Action on Combating Terrorism 2001 888
- OSCE Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration 1992 276, 781
 - Art 1-Art 4 781
 - Art 25 781
 - Art 26 781
 - Art 26(1) 781
 - Art 31 781
- OSCE Treaty on Open Skies 1992 276
- Oslo Convention for the Prevention of Marine Pollution by Dumping from Ships and Aircraft 1972 464, 679
 - Annex I 679
 - Annex II 679
- Ottawa Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on their Destruction 1997 910

- Panama Canal Treaty 1903 492
- Panama Canal Treaty 1977 401, 492
- Paris Convention for the Regulation of Aerial Navigation 1919 403
- Paris Convention on Third Party Liability in the Field of Nuclear Energy 1960 678
 - Art 4(d) 678
 - Art 7-Art 8 678
 - Art 10 678
 - Art 13 678
- Paris Peace Agreements 1991 180
 - Annex 1 181
 - Art 6 181
- Paris Treaty 1898 370
- Partition Treaty on the Status and Conditions of the Black Sea Fleet 1997 390
- Peace Treaties of 10 February 1947 909
- Permanent Statute for the Free Territory of Trieste 1947 181
- Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space 1993 407
- Proclamation of Tehran 1968 219
- Protocol concerning Frontier Controls and Policing, Co-operation in Criminal Justice, Public Safety and Mutual Assistance relating to the Channel Fixed Link 1991 491
 - Art 38(1) 492
 - Art 38(2) 492
- Protocol Concerning the Privileges and Immunities of the European Communities 1965 1008
- Provisional Understanding Regarding Deep Seabed Mining 1984 471

- Regional Cooperation Agreement on Combating Piracy and Armed Robbery against Ships in Asia 2005 459
- Revised General Act for the Settlement of Disputes 1949 768
- Rio Declaration on Environment and Development 1992 642, 644, 647, 653, 654, 655, 675, 679
- St Germain Treaty 1919 726, 753
- Art 203 755
- St Petersburg Declaration 1868 892, 908, 910
- Slavery Convention 1926 231
- Art 3 252
- Protocol 1953 231
- South Asian Association for Regional Co-operation Regional Convention on Suppression of Terrorism 1987 888
- Additional Protocol 2005 888
- South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty 1985 674
- Southern African Development Community (SADC) Protocol on Politics, Defence and Security Co-operation 2001 778
- Art 2(f) 779
- Art 3-Art 6 779
- Art 7 779
- Art 11(2)(a) 779
- Art 11(2)(b) 779
- Art 11(3) 779
- Special Court for Sierra Leone Statute
- Art 1 306
- Art 1(2) 306
- Art 2 306
- Art 3 306, 322
- Art 4-Art 5 306
- Art 6 306
- Art 6(2) 554
- Art 8 307
- Art 9 307
- Art 12(1) 306
- Art 15-Art 16 306
- Art 20-Art 21 306
- Special Tribunal for Lebanon Statute 313
- Art 1 313
- Art 2 314
- Art 4 314
- Art 7-Art 8 313
- Art 11-Art 13 313
- State Treaty on German Economic, Monetary and Social Union 1990 178
- State Treaty on German Unification 178
- Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants 2001 662, 675, 679
- Stockholm Declaration 1972 642, 644, 646, 653, 659
- Straddling Fish Stocks and Highly Migratory Fish Stocks Agreement 1995 467
- Art 1(3) 468
- Art 5-Art 6 467, 658
- Art 10 467
- Art 17(3) 468
- Art 18 467
- Art 19 467
- Art 21 468
- Art 22 468
- Art 22(1) 461
- Art 23 468

- Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery 1956 231
- Taft/Knox Treaties 1911 772
- Tokyo Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft 1963 506, 885
Art 4 507
- Treaty Banning Nuclear Weapon Tests in the Atmosphere, Outer Space and Under Water 1963 454, 661, 674, 909
- Treaty between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic 1990 731
Art 1 731
Art 3 732
Art 7 732
Art 8 732
Art 11-Art 12 732
- Treaty Establishing the Common Market for Eastern and Southern Africa 1993 785
- Treaty Establishing the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States 1981 774
Art 14(3) 773
- Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America 1967 674
- Treaty of Berlin 1878 345
- Treaty of Peace with Italy 1947 752
Annex IV 227
- Treaty of Rarotonga establishing a South Pacific Nuclear-Free Zone 1985 454, 909
- Treaty of Tlatelolco for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America 1967 454, 909
- Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies 1967 362, 405, 408, 668, 909
Art 1 668
Art 4 406, 668
Art 6 406, 650, 1002
Art 8 406
Art 9 668
Art 13 1002
- Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany 1990 179, 909
- Treaty on the General Delimitation of the Common State Frontiers 1992 734
- Treaty on the Prohibition of the Emplacement of Nuclear Weapons and other Weapons of Mass Destruction on the Sea-Bed 1971 674, 909
- Treaty on the Southeast Asia Nuclear Weapon-Free Zone 1995 454
- Trianon Treaty 1919
Art 186 755
- Truman Proclamation 1945 435
- Unification Treaty 1990
Annex I 736, 737
Art 11 736, 737
Art 12 737
Art 21 750
Art 22 750
Art 23 754
- United Kingdom–Burma Agreement 1947 726
- United Kingdom–China Agreement on the Settlement of Property Claims 1987 638
- United Kingdom–France Agreement 1903 796
- United Kingdom–Hungary Investment Agreement 1987 636
- United Kingdom–Irish Free State Treaty 1921 756
- United Kingdom–Philippines Investment Agreement 1981 636
- United Kingdom–US Agreement on Vessels Trafficking in Drugs 1981 461
- United Kingdom–USSR Agreement on the Settlement of Mutual Financial and Property Claims 1986 638
- United Kingdom–USSR Bilateral Investment Treaty 1989
Art 1(a) 635
Art 2-Art 3 636

| | |
|------------------------|--|
| Art 5 | 636 |
| United Nations Charter | 29, 70, 72, 86, 124, 125, 177, 199, 201, 219, 230, 367, 390, 455, 601, 602, 611, 688, 860, 862, 870, 883, 895, 925, 927, 933 |
| Art 1 | 217, 924, 934 |
| Art 1(1) | 971, 973 |
| Art 1(2) | 199 |
| Art 2 | 704, 925, 929 |
| Art 2(2) | 77 |
| Art 2(3) | 474, 766 |
| Art 2(4) | 347, 362, 372, 388, 714, 854, 855, 856, 860, 861, 874, 875, 878, 881 |
| Art 2(6) | 72, 704, 855 |
| Art 2(7) | 167, 215, 218, 362, 388, 485, 925, 947, 948, 970 |
| Art 4 | 159, 344, 927, 928 |
| Art 5 | 927, 929 |
| Art 6 | 929 |
| Art 10 | 937, 939, 1018 |
| Art 11 | 937, 939 |
| Art 11(2) | 939, 974 |
| Art 12 | 937 |
| Art 13 | 231 |
| Art 13(1) | 217 |
| Art 14 | 937, 939 |
| Art 17 | 85, 929 |
| Art 18 | 690, 929, 1017 |
| Art 20 | 601, 930, 974 |
| Art 21 | 601 |
| Art 22 | 601, 939 |
| Art 23 | 926 |
| Art 24 | 85, 775, 926, 935, 937, 947, 974 |
| Art 24(2) | 971 |
| Art 25 | 85, 926, 927, 935, 947, 958, 960, 963, 972 |
| Art 27 | 926, 948 |
| Art 28 | 926 |
| Art 29 | 927, 939 |
| Art 33 | 722, 769, 934, 935 |
| Art 33(1) | 766 |
| Art 34 | 775, 935, 939 |
| Art 35 | 775 |
| Art 35(1) | 936 |
| Art 35(2) | 936 |
| Art 36 | 775, 927, 936, 939 |
| Art 36(1) | 935 |
| Art 37 | 775, 936, 939 |
| Art 37(1) | 767 |
| Art 37(2) | 776, 936 |
| Art 38 | 935, 939 |
| Art 39 | 947, 948, 949, 950, 971 |
| Art 40 | 951 |
| Art 41 | 927, 951, 955, 958, 976 |
| Art 42 | 927, 939, 951, 958, 959, 976 |
| Art 43 | 938, 958, 960, 970, 1000 |
| Art 44 | 927 |
| Art 45 | 958 |
| Art 46 | 958 |
| Art 47 | 958 |

- Art 50 953
Art 51 71, 72, 455, 601, 861, 863, 865, 867, 870, 872, 875, 975, 976
Art 52 873, 975
Art 52(1) 775
Art 52(2) 775, 776, 976
Art 52(3) 776, 976
Art 52(4) 775
Art 53 975
Art 53(1) 775
Art 54 975
Art 55 199, 217, 222
Art 56 217, 222
Art 61 931
Art 62 217, 232, 927, 931
Art 69 931
Art 73 218
Art 75 1000
Art 76 218
Art 77 931, 1000
Art 79 937, 1000
Art 80 1018
Art 82 927
Art 83 927, 1000
Art 85 1000
Art 92 804, 972
Art 93 52, 814
Art 94 815, 840
Art 96 723, 997
Art 96(1) 997
Art 96(2) 782, 846, 997, 999, 1013
Art 97 932
Art 98 932, 939
Art 99 932, 937
Art 100 932
Art 101 931
Art 102 686, 701
Art 103 95, 259, 703, 775, 847, 947, 958, 972, 975
Art 104 992, 993
Art 105 992, 1008, 1014
Art 108 705, 926, 927
Art 109 926, 927
Chapter V 971
Chapter VI 935, 936, 939, 947, 971
Chapter VII 3, 292, 302, 313, 925, 935, 936, 939, 945, 947, 951–63, 964, 970, 971, 973, 977, 978
Chapter VIII 274, 975, 977, 978
Chapter XI 199
Chapter XII 176, 199
Chapter XIII 176
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) Constitution
Art 12 993
Art 14 997
Art 14(2) 782
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) Convention against Discrimination in Education
Special Protocol 1962 782
United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage 1972 174

- United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) Constitution
 Art 22(1) 782
- United Nations–United States Headquarters Agreement 1947
 Art V(15) 1012
 Art VII(21)(b) 997
- United States–Iran Treaty of Amity, Economic Relations and Consular Rights 1955 708
 Art XX(1)(d) 825
 Art XXI(2) 825
- United States–Mexico General Claims Convention of 1923
 Art V 621
- United States–Nicaragua Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Navigation
 Art XXIV(2) 820
- United States–UK Air Services Agreement 1977 (Bermuda II) 687
- Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1948 34, 219, 221, 230, 493
 Art 2 222
 Art 3 219
 Art 5 219, 246
 Art 7 219, 222
 Art 8–Art 9 219
 Art 10 219
 Art 12 219
 Art 13–Art 14 219
 Art 18–Art 20 219
 Art 23 219
 Art 25–Art 26 219
 Preamble 210
- Upper Silesia Convention 1922 205
- USSR–DDR Treaty 1955
 Art 2 731
- US–USSR Maritime Boundary Agreement 1990 434
- Versailles Treaty 1919 22, 289, 332
 Art 227 289, 554
 Art 228 289, 501
 Art 304(b) 205
 Art 380 402
 Part XIII 214
- Vienna Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances 1988 461, 505
- Vienna Convention for the Protection of the Ozone Layer 1985 641, 665, 666, 773, 774
 Annex I 666
 Annex II 666
 Art 1(1) 663
 Art 1(2) 649, 663
 Art 1(5)–(6) 664
 Art 1(8) 665
 Art 2 647, 664, 665
 Art 2(1) 663
 Art 3 664
 Art 4(1) 665
 Art 4(2)(a)–(b) 665
 Art 4(8) 665
 Art 5 664
 Art 7 664
 Art 11 664
- Kyoto Protocol 1997 667
- Montreal Protocol 1987 641, 664, 665
- Vienna Convention on Assistance in the Case of a Nuclear Accident or Radiological Emergency 1986 676, 677

- Art 2(1)–(2) 676
- Art 2(5) 676
- Art 3(a) 677
- Art 5 676
- Art 7 677
- Art 8 677
- Art 10(2) 677
- Vienna Convention on Civil Liability for Nuclear Damage 1963 678
 - Art V–Art VI 678
 - Art VII 678
 - Art XI 678
 - Protocol 1997 678
- Vienna Convention on Consular Relations 1963 89, 97, 101, 121, 126, 570, 571, 575, 583–5, 606, 839
 - Art 1(1)(k) 576
 - Art 10–Art 12 584
 - Art 31 584
 - Art 32 584
 - Art 35 584
 - Art 35(3) 575
 - Art 36 121, 173
 - Art 36(1) 584
 - Art 36(1)(a) 584
 - Art 36(1)(b) 584
 - Art 41 585
 - Art 43 585
 - Optional Protocol
 - Art 1 820
 - Optional Protocol on Compulsory Settlement of Disputes 102, 125, 584
- Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations 1961 70, 71, 89, 557, 568–583, 587, 697, 1012
 - Art 1(e) 577
 - Art 2 569
 - Art 3 569
 - Art 9 569, 579
 - Art 10 581
 - Art 13 569
 - Art 14 569
 - Art 22 569, 571, 572, 576, 583
 - Art 23 576
 - Art 24 576, 577
 - Art 25 571, 576
 - Art 26 571, 577
 - Art 27 571, 573, 574, 575
 - Art 27(2) 573, 577
 - Art 27(3) 574, 575
 - Art 27(4) 574
 - Art 29 577, 578
 - Art 30 1012
 - Art 30(1) 576, 578
 - Art 30(2) 578
 - Art 31 588
 - Art 31(1) 579, 580
 - Art 31(1)(a)–(c) 579, 580
 - Art 31(2) 580
 - Art 31(3) 578, 580
 - Art 31(4) 579
 - Art 32 582
 - Art 33–Art 35 580

| | |
|---|---------------|
| Art 36(1) | 580 |
| Art 36(2) | 580 |
| Art 37 | 580 |
| Art 39 | 581 |
| Art 39(2) | 548, 557, 581 |
| Art 40 | 581 |
| Art 41(1) | 569 |
| Art 41(3) | 570 |
| Art 45 | 572 |
| Art 45(a) | 571 |
| Optional Protocol | |
| Art 1 | 820 |
| Preamble | 568 |
| Vienna Convention on Early Notification of a Nuclear Accident 1986 | 675 |
| Art 2 | 675 |
| Art 5–Art 6 | 675 |
| Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of State Property, Archives and Debts 1983 | 727, 746, 749 |
| Art 2(1)(e) | 740 |
| Art 6 | 754 |
| Art 8 | 747 |
| Art 10 | 748 |
| Art 11 | 727, 748 |
| Art 12 | 748 |
| Art 14 | 747, 749 |
| Art 14(2)(b) | 749 |
| Art 15 | 749 |
| Art 15(1)(a) | 749 |
| Art 15(1)(b) | 749 |
| Art 15(1)(d) | 749 |
| Art 16 | 749 |
| Art 17 | 747, 749 |
| Art 17(1)(c) | 750 |
| Art 18 | 747 |
| Art 18(1)(b) | 749 |
| Art 18(1)(c) | 749 |
| Art 20 | 752 |
| Art 21 | 748, 752 |
| Art 22–Art 23 | 747, 752 |
| Art 24 | 752 |
| Art 27 | 747 |
| Art 28 | 747, 753 |
| Art 28(1)(b)–(c) | 752 |
| Art 28(2) | 753 |
| Art 28(3) | 753 |
| Art 29 | 753 |
| Art 30–Art 31 | 747, 753 |
| Art 33 | 754 |
| Art 35 | 748 |
| Art 36 | 754 |
| Art 37 | 747 |
| Art 38 | 747, 756 |
| Art 39 | 754 |
| Art 40 | 747, 756 |
| Art 41 | 747, 756 |
| Art 42 | 768 |

Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties 1978 727, 732, 739, 740, 774, 990

- Art 2(1)(e) 727
- Art 2(1)(f) 740
- Art 7 732
- Art 8 732, 741
- Art 9 733, 742
- Art 11 394, 734
- Art 12 734, 743
- Art 12(3) 734
- Art 15 737
- Art 17 741
- Art 17(3) 736, 741
- Art 24 741
- Art 27(2) 741
- Art 30 741
- Art 31 737
- Art 31(1) 736
- Art 31(2) 736
- Art 31(3) 736
- Art 34 739, 742, 743
- Art 35 739
- Art 41 768

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969 89, 118, 308, 685, 686, 688, 696, 699, 700, 701, 723, 774

- Annex 773
- Art 2 685, 693
- Art 2(1)(a) 69
- Art 2(1)(b) 691
- Art 2(1)(d) 693
- Art 3 686
- Art 5 688, 710, 997
- Art 6 1000
- Art 7 689, 712
- Art 7(2) 101
- Art 8 689
- Art 9(1) 690
- Art 11 690, 692
- Art 12 690
- Art 13 691
- Art 14 692
- Art 14(2) 692
- Art 15 692
- Art 16 692
- Art 18 691
- Art 19 696
- Art 20(2) 697
- Art 20(4) 697
- Art 20(5) 700
- Art 21 697
- Art 21(3) 697
- Art 22(3)(a) 701
- Art 24 701
- Art 26 77, 685, 692, 707
- Art 27 100, 713
- Art 28 692, 702
- Art 29 702
- Art 30 688, 706
- Art 30(4)(b) 706

- Art 31 367, 685, 707, 997
- Art 31(1) 707
- Art 31(2) 708
- Art 31(3)(a) 708
- Art 31(3)(b) 382, 708
- Art 31(3)(c) 708
- Art 31(4) 711
- Art 32 367, 707, 709, 997
- Art 33 707
- Art 33(4) 832
- Art 34 703, 1004
- Art 35 704, 1004
- Art 36 704
- Art 38 704
- Art 39 705
- Art 40 706
- Art 41 703, 706, 717
- Art 42 711
- Art 44 711
- Art 45 712
- Art 46 685, 702
- Art 46(1) 100, 712
- Art 47 712
- Art 50 714
- Art 51 714
- Art 52 348, 370, 372, 714, 715
- Art 53 93, 94, 611, 715, 716, 722
- Art 54 716
- Art 57 716
- Art 59 703, 717
- Art 60 601, 703, 718, 719
- Art 60(1) 718
- Art 60(3) 718
- Art 60(5) 719
- Art 61 719
- Art 62 394, 720, 721
- Art 62(2) 734
- Art 64 93, 94, 715, 716, 722
- Art 65 722
- Art 66 722
- Art 69 685, 716
- Art 70 602, 721
- Art 70(1)(b) 717
- Art 71 94, 716
- Art 72 721
- Art 75 704
- Art 80 701
- Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties between States and International Organizations or between International Organizations 1986 685, 700, 722, 723, 990
 - Art 34–Art 35 1004
 - Art 66(2) 723
 - Art 73 722
 - Art 74(3) 723
- Vienna Convention on the Representation of States in their Relations with International Organisations of a Universal Character 1975 575, 587–8, 774, 990, 1012

- Art 30 587–588
- Art 36 588
- Art 84 768
- Art 85(7) 773
- Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action 1993 220, 245, 250, 253

- Westphalia, Peace of (1648) 19, 853, 922
- World Health Organization Constitution
 - Art 6(h) 993
 - Art 75 782

- Yamoussoukro IV Accord 1991 977
- Yugoslav Agreement on Succession Issues 2001 748, 749, 751, 753, 756
 - Annex A
 - Art 2(1) 749
 - Art 3 748
 - Art 3(1) 749
 - Art 3(2) 749, 753
 - Art 4(1) 749
 - Art 5 750
 - Art 6 748
 - Art 7 748
 - Annex B 749
 - Art 4(3) 748
 - Annex C
 - Art 2(1)(b) 756
 - Art 4 751
 - Annex D 753
 - Art 6 753
 - Annex F 751

Abbreviations

| | | | |
|-----------------|---|----------------|---|
| AC | Law Reports, Appeal Cases | Co.Litt. | Coke on Littleton (First Institute) |
| AD | Annual Digest and Reports of Public International Law Cases (now International Law Reports) | COMECON | Council for Mutual Economic Assistance |
| AFDI | Annuaire Français de Droit International | Cr App R | Criminal Appeal Reports |
| AJIL | American Journal of International Law | Cranch | Cranch Reports, United States Supreme Court |
| All ER | All England Law Reports | Crim. L. Forum | Criminal Law Forum |
| ALR | Argus Law Reports (1895–1959); Australian Argus Law Reports (1960–73); Australian Law Reports (1973–) | Crim. LR | Criminal Law Review |
| Annuaire | Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International | C.Rob. | C. Robinson's Admiralty Reports |
| AU | African Union | Dall. | Dallas, Pennsylvania and United States Reports |
| Australian YIL | Australian Yearbook of International Law | Dir. Mar. | Diritto Marittimo, Italy |
| B&C | Barnewall Cresswell (English Reports) | DLR | Dominion Law Reports |
| BCLC | Butterworths Company Law Cases | Dod. | Dodson's Admiralty Reports |
| BFSP | British and Foreign State Papers | DUSPIL | Digest of US Practice in International Law |
| BPIL | British Practice in International Law | EC | European Communities |
| Bull. | Bulletin | ECHR | European Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms |
| Burr. | Burrow's Reports | ECOSOC | Economic and Social Council |
| BYIL | British Year Book of International Law | ECR | European Court Reports |
| Cal | California Reports | ECSC | European Coal and Steel Community |
| Canadian YIL | Canadian Yearbook of International Law | EEC | European Economic Community |
| Cass. Crim. | Cour de Cassation, France, Criminal | EJIL | European Journal of International Law |
| CCC | Canadian Criminal Cases | Encyclopedia | Encyclopedia of Public International Law |
| Cd, Cmd or Cmnd | UK Command Papers | ER | English Reports |
| Ch. | Law Reports, Chancery Division | Euratom | European Atomic Energy Community |
| Cl. Ct. | US Court of Claims Reports | EWCA Civ. | England and Wales, Court of Appeal, Civil |
| CLJ | Cambridge Law Journal | EWHC Admin. | England and Wales, High Court Law Reports, Exchequer Division |
| CLR | Commonwealth Law Reports | Ex.D. | Federal Reporter (Second Series) |
| CMLR | Common Market Law Reports | F.2d | Federal Reporter (Second Series) |
| | | Fam. | Law Reports, Family Division |
| | | FAO | Food and Agriculture Organization |

| | | | |
|-------------|--|-----------------|---|
| FCO | Foreign and Commonwealth Office | NATO | North Atlantic Treaty Organization |
| FCR | Federal Court Reports (Australia) | NE | Northeastern Reporter |
| Finnish YIL | Finnish Yearbook of International Law | Netherlands YIL | Netherlands Yearbook of International Law |
| F.(J.) | Faculty of Advocates | NGO | Non-governmental organisation |
| FLR | Family Law Reports | NILR | Netherlands International Law Review |
| F.Supp. | Federal Supplement | NLM | National Liberation Movement |
| GAOR | General Assembly Official Records | NQHR | Netherlands Quarterly of Human Rights |
| GDR | German Democratic Republic | NY | New York Reports |
| German YIL | German Yearbook of International Law | NYS | New York Supplement |
| HC Deb. | House of Commons Debates | NZLR | New Zealand Law Reports |
| HLC | House of Lords Reports (Clark) | OAS | Organization of American States |
| HL Deb. | House of Lords Debates | OAU | Organisation of African Unity |
| HMSO | Her Majesty's Stationery Office | OECD | Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development |
| HR | Hague Academy of International Law, Recueil des Cours | OECS | Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States |
| HRJ | Human Rights Journal | OR | Ontario Reports |
| HRLJ | Human Rights Law Journal | P. | Law Reports, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, 1891– |
| HRQ | Human Rights Quarterly | PAIGC | Partido Africano da Independencia da Guine e Cabo Verde |
| ICAO | International Civil Aviation Organization | PASIL | Proceedings of the American Society of International Law |
| ICJ | International Court of Justice | PCA | Permanent Court of Arbitration |
| ICLQ | International and Comparative Law Quarterly | PCIJ | Permanent Court of International Justice |
| ICR | Industrial Cases Reports | PD | Law Reports, Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, 1875–90 |
| ICRC | International Committee of the Red Cross | Pet. | Peter's United States Supreme Court Reports |
| ICSID | International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes | PLO | Palestine Liberation Organisation |
| ICTY | International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia | QB | Law Reports, Queen's Bench Division |
| IJIL | Indian Journal of International Law | RecChI | Recommendation of the Committee of Ministers on the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages |
| ILA | International Law Association | RFDA | Revue Française de Droit Administratif |
| ILC | International Law Commission | RGDIP | Revue Française de Droit International Public |
| ILM | International Legal Materials | RIAA | United Nations Reports of International Arbitral Awards |
| ILO | International Labour Organization | R (J) | Justiciary cases in vols. of Session Cases, 1873–98 |
| ILR | International Law Reports (see also Annual Digest and Reports of Public International Law Cases) | SA | South African Reports |
| Iran–US CTR | Iran–United States Claims Tribunal Reports | SC | Supreme Court |
| ITU | International Telecommunications Union | SCOR | Security Council Official Records |
| KB | Law Reports, King's Bench Division | SCR | Supreme Court Reports (Canada) |
| L.Ed. | US Supreme Court, Reports, Lawyers' Edition | S. Ct. | Supreme Court Reporter |
| LL. R | Lloyd's Law Reports | SR (NSW) | New South Wales, State Reports |
| LNOJ | League of Nations Official Journal | Stat. | United States Statutes at Large |
| LNTS | League of Nations Treaty Series | | |
| LQR | Law Quarterly Review | | |
| LR A&E | Law Reports: Admiralty and Ecclesiastical | | |
| MLR | Modern Law Review | | |

| | | | |
|---------|--|--------------------------|--|
| TFSC | Turkish Federated State of Cyprus | US | United States Reports (Supreme Court) |
| TRNC | Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus | US Av R US and C Av R | United States Aviation Reports United States and Canadian Aviation Reports |
| UKHL | United Kingdom, House of Lords | USC | United States Code |
| UKMIL | United Kingdom Materials in International Law | USLW | United States Law Weekly |
| UNCESCR | United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights | Va. JIL | Virginia Journal of International Law |
| UNCIO | United Nations Conference on International Organization | Ves. Jun. | Vesey Junior's Chancery Reports |
| UNCLOS | United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea | VR | Victoria Reports |
| UNESCO | United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization | Wheat | Wheaton, United States Supreme Court Reports |
| UNHRC | United Nations Human Rights Committee | WHO | World Health Organization |
| UNJYB | United Nations Juridical Yearbook | WLR | Weekly Law Reports |
| UNTS | United Nations Treaty Series | Yale JIL | Yale Journal of International Law |
| | | YBWA | Yearbook of World Affairs |
| | | ZACC | South African Constitutional Court |
| | | ZaöRV | Zeitschrift für ausländisches öffentliches Recht und Völkerrecht |

1

The Nature and Development of International Law

In the long march of mankind from the cave to the computer a central role has always been played by the idea of law – the idea that order is necessary and chaos inimical to a just and stable existence. Every society, whether it be large or small, powerful or weak, has created for itself a framework of principles within which to develop. What can be done, what cannot be done, permissible acts, forbidden acts, have all been spelt out within the consciousness of that community. Progress, with its inexplicable leaps and bounds, has always been based upon the group as men and women combine to pursue commonly accepted goals, whether these be hunting animals, growing food or simply making money.

Law is that element which binds the members of the community together in their adherence to recognised values and standards. It is both permissive in allowing individuals to establish their own legal relations with rights and duties, as in the creation of contracts, and coercive, as it punishes those who infringe its regulations. Law consists of a series of rules regulating behaviour, and reflecting, to some extent, the ideas and preoccupations of the society within which it functions.

And so it is with what is termed international law, with the important difference that the principal subjects of international law are nation-states, not individual citizens. There are many contrasts between the law within a country (municipal law) and the law that operates outside and between states, international organisations and, in certain cases, individuals.

International law itself is divided into conflict of laws (or private international law as it is sometimes called) and public international law (usually just termed international law).¹ The former deals with those cases, within particular legal systems, in which foreign elements obtrude, raising questions as to the application of foreign law or the role of foreign courts.² For example, if two Englishmen make a contract in France to sell goods situated in Paris, an English court would apply French law as regards the validity of that contract. By contrast, public international law is not simply an adjunct of a legal order, but a separate system altogether,³ and it is this field that will be considered in this book.

¹ This term was first used by J. Bentham: see Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation, London, 1780.

² See e.g. Cheshire, North and Fawcett, Private International Law (ed. J. Fawcett and J. M. Carruthers), 14th edn, Oxford, 2008.

³ See the Serbian Loans case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 14, pp. 41–2.

Public international law covers relations between states in all their myriad forms, from war to satellites and from trade to human rights, and regulates the operations of the many international and regional institutions. It may be universal or general, in which case the stipulated rules bind all the states (or practically all depending upon the nature of the rule), or regional, whereby a group of states linked geographically or ideologically may recognise special rules applying only to them, for example, the practice of diplomatic asylum that has developed to its greatest extent in Latin America.⁴ The rules of international law must be distinguished from what is called international comity, or practices such as saluting the flags of foreign warships at sea, which are implemented solely through courtesy and are not regarded as legally binding.⁵ Similarly, the mistake of confusing international law with international morality must be avoided. While they may meet at certain points, the former discipline is a legal one both as regards its content and its form, while the concept of international morality is a branch of ethics. This does not mean, however, that international law can be divorced from its values.

In this chapter and the next, the characteristics of the international legal system and the historical and theoretical background necessary to a proper appreciation of the part to be played by the law in international law will be examined.

LAW AND POLITICS IN THE WORLD COMMUNITY

It is the legal quality of international law that is the first question to be posed. Each side to an international dispute will doubtless claim legal justification for its actions and within the international system there is no independent institution able to determine the issue and give a final decision.

Virtually everybody who starts reading about international law does so having learned or absorbed something about the principal characteristics of ordinary or domestic law. Such identifying marks would include the existence of a recognised body to legislate or create laws, a hierarchy of courts with compulsory jurisdiction to settle disputes over such laws and an accepted system of enforcing those laws. Without a legislature, judiciary and executive, it would seem that one cannot talk about a legal order.⁶ And international law does not fit this model. International law has no legislature. The General Assembly of the United Nations comprising delegates from all the member states exists, but its resolutions are not legally binding save for certain of the organs of the United Nations for certain purposes.⁷ There is no system of courts. The International Court of Justice does exist at The Hague but it can only decide cases when both sides agree⁸ and it cannot ensure that its decisions are complied with. Above all there is no executive or governing entity. The Security Council of the United Nations, which was intended to have such a role in a sense, has at times been effectively constrained by the veto power of the five permanent members (USA; USSR, now the Russian Federation; China; France; and the United

⁴ See further below, p. 68.

⁵ North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 44; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also M. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 1.

⁶ See generally, R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, and H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961.

⁷ See article 17(1) of the United Nations Charter. See also D. Johnson, 'The Effect of Resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 97 and below, chapter 21.

⁸ See article 36 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice and below, chapter 18.

Kingdom).⁹ Thus, if there is no identifiable institution either to establish rules, or to clarify them or see that those who break them are punished, how can what is called international law be law?

It will, of course, be realised that the basis for this line of argument is the comparison of domestic law with international law, and the assumption of an analogy between the national system and the international order. And this is at the heart of all discussions about the nature of international law.

At the turn of the nineteenth century, the English philosopher John Austin elaborated a theory of law based upon the notion of a sovereign issuing a command backed by a sanction or punishment. Since international law did not fit within that definition it was relegated to the category of 'positive morality'.¹⁰ This concept has been criticised for oversimplifying and even confusing the true nature of law within a society and for over emphasising the role of the sanction within the system by linking it to every rule.¹¹ This is not the place for a comprehensive summary of Austin's theory but the idea of coercion as an integral part of any legal order is a vital one that needs looking at in the context of international law.

THE ROLE OF FORCE

There is no unified system of sanctions¹² in international law in the sense that there is in municipal law, but there are circumstances in which the use of force is regarded as justified and legal. Within the United Nations system, sanctions may be imposed by the Security Council upon the determination of a threat to the peace, breach of the peace or act of aggression.¹³ Such sanctions may be economic, for example those proclaimed in 1966 against Rhodesia,¹⁴ or military as in the Korean war in 1950,¹⁵ or indeed both, as in 1990 against Iraq.¹⁶

Coercive action within the framework of the UN is rare because it requires co-ordination amongst the five permanent members of the Security Council and this obviously needs an issue not regarded by any of the great powers as a threat to their vital interests.

Korea was an exception and joint action could only be undertaken because of the fortuitous absence of the USSR from the Council as a protest at the seating of the Nationalist Chinese representatives.¹⁷

⁹ See e.g. The Charter of the United Nations (ed. B. Simma et al.), 3rd edn, Oxford, 2012, chapter V and below, chapter 22.

¹⁰ See J. Austin, The Province of Jurisprudence Determined (ed. H. L. A. Hart), London, 1954, pp. 134–42.

¹¹ See e.g. Hart, Concept of Law, chapter 10.

¹² See e.g. W. M. Reisman, 'Sanctions and Enforcement', in The Future of the International Legal Order (ed. C. Black and R. A. Falk), New York, 1971, p. 273; J. Brierly, 'Sanctions', 17 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1932, p. 68; Hart, Concept of Law, pp. 211–21; A. D'Amato, 'The Neo-Positivist Concept of International Law', 59 AJIL, 1965, p. 321; G. Fitzmaurice, 'The Foundations of the Authority of International Law and the Problem of Enforcement', 19 MLR, 1956, p. 1, and The Effectiveness of International Decisions (ed. S. Schwebel), Leiden, 1971.

¹³ Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter. See below, chapter 21.

¹⁴ Security Council resolution 221 (1966). Note also Security Council resolution 418 (1977) imposing a mandatory arms embargo on South Africa.

¹⁵ Security Council resolutions of 25 June, 27 June and 7 July 1950. See D. W. Bowett, United Nations Forces, London, 1964.

¹⁶ Security Council resolutions 661 and 678 (1990). See The Kuwait Crisis: Basic Documents (ed. E. Lauterpacht, C. Greenwood, M. Weller and D. Bethlehem), Cambridge, 1991, pp. 88 and 98. See also below, chapter 21.

¹⁷ See E. Luard, A History of the United Nations, vol. I, The Years of Western Domination 1945–55, London, 1982, pp. 229–74, and below, chapter 21.

Apart from such institutional sanctions, one may note the bundle of rights to take violent action known as self-help.¹⁸ This procedure to resort to force to defend certain rights is characteristic of primitive systems of law with blood-feuds, but in the domestic legal order such procedures and methods are now within the exclusive control of the established authority. States may use force in self-defence, if the object of aggression, and may take action in response to the illegal acts of other states. In such cases the states themselves decide whether to take action and, if so, the extent of their measures, and there is no supreme body to rule on their legality or otherwise, in the absence of an examination by the International Court of Justice, acceptable to both parties, although international law does lay down relevant rules.¹⁹

Accordingly those writers who put the element of force to the forefront of their theories face many difficulties in describing the nature, or rather the legal nature, of international law, with its lack of a coherent, recognised and comprehensive framework of sanctions. To see the sanctions of international law in the states' rights of self-defence and reprisals²⁰ is to misunderstand the role of sanctions within a system because they are at the disposal of the states, not the system itself. Neither must it be forgotten that the current trend in international law is to restrict the use of force as far as possible, thus leading to the absurd result that the more force is controlled in international society, the less legal international law becomes.

Since one cannot discover the nature of international law by reference to a definition of law predicated upon sanctions, the character of the international legal order has to be examined in order to seek to discover whether in fact states feel obliged to obey the rules of international law and, if so, why. If, indeed, the answer to the first question is negative, that states do not feel the necessity to act in accordance with such rules, then there does not exist any system of international law worthy of the name.

THE INTERNATIONAL SYSTEM²¹

The key to the search lies within the unique attributes of the international system in the sense of the network of relationships existing primarily, if not exclusively, between states recognising certain common principles and ways of doing things.²² While the legal structure within all but the most primitive societies is hierarchical and authority is vertical, the international system is horizontal, consisting of over 190 independent states, all equal in legal theory (in that they all ¹⁸ See D. W. Bowett, Self-Defence in International Law, Manchester, 1958, and I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963.

¹⁹ See below, chapter 18. See also M. Barkin, Law Without Sanctions, New Haven, 1967.

²⁰ See e.g. H. Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, London, 1946, pp. 328 ff.

²¹ See L. Henkin, How Nations Behave, 2nd edn, New York, 1979, and Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995; M. A. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961; C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958; W. Friedmann, The Changing Structure of International Law, New York, 1964; A. Sheikh, International Law and National Behaviour, New York, 1974; O. Schachter, International Law in Theory and Practice, Dordrecht, 1991; T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994; E. Tourme-Jouannet, What is a Fair Society? International Law Between Development and Recognition, Oxford, 2013 and Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, vol. I, chapter 1.

²² As to the concept of 'international community', see e.g. G. Abi-Saab, 'Whither the International Community?', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 248, B. Simma and A. L. Paulus, 'The "International Community": Facing the Challenge of Globalisation', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 266 and G. Gaja, 'The Protection of General Interests in the International Community', 364 HR, 2014, p. 13. See also P. Weil, 'Le Droit International en Quête de son Identité', 237 HR, 1992 VI, p. 25.

possess the characteristics of sovereignty) and recognising no one in authority over them. The law is above individuals in domestic systems, but international law only exists as between the states. Individuals only have the choice as to whether to obey the law or not. They do not create the law. That is done by specific institutions. In international law, on the other hand, it is the states themselves that create the law and obey or disobey it.²³ This, of course, has profound repercussions as regards the sources of law as well as the means for enforcing accepted legal rules.

International law, as will be shown in succeeding chapters, is primarily formulated by international agreements, which create rules binding upon the signatories, and customary rules, which are basically state practices recognised by the community at large as laying down patterns of conduct that have to be complied with.

However, it may be argued that since states themselves sign treaties and engage in action that they may or may not regard as legally obligatory, international law would appear to consist of a series of rules from which states may pick and choose. Contrary to popular belief, states do observe international law, and violations are comparatively rare. However, such violations (like armed attacks and racial oppression) are well publicised and strike at the heart of the system, the creation and preservation of international peace and justice. But just as incidents of murder, robbery and rape do occur within national legal orders without destroying the system as such, so analogously assaults upon international legal rules point up the weaknesses of the system without denigrating their validity or their necessity. Thus, despite the occasional gross violation, the vast majority of the provisions of international law are followed.²⁴

In the daily routine of international life, large numbers of agreements and customs are complied with. However, the need is felt in the hectic interplay of world affairs for some kind of regulatory framework or rules network within which the game can be played, and international law fulfils that requirement. States feel this necessity because it imports an element of stability and predictability into the situation.

Where countries are involved in a disagreement or a dispute, it is handy to have recourse to the rules of international law even if there are conflicting interpretations since at least there is a common frame of reference and one state will be aware of how the other state will develop its argument. They will both be talking a common language and this factor of communication is vital since misunderstandings occur so easily and often with tragic consequences. Where the antagonists dispute the understanding of a particular rule and adopt opposing stands as regards its implementation, they are at least on the same wavelength and communicate by means of the same phrases. That is something. It is not everything, for it is a mistake as well as inaccurate to claim for international law more than it can possibly deliver. It can constitute a mutually understandable vocabulary book and suggest possible solutions which follow from a study of its principles. What it cannot do is solve every problem no matter how dangerous or complex merely by being there. International law has not yet been developed, if it ever will, to that particular stage and one should not exaggerate its capabilities while pointing to its positive features. It is, however, a way for states to conduct their business together in a relatively congenial context.

²³ This leads Rosenne to refer to international law as a law of co-ordination, rather than, as in internal law, a law of subordination, Practice and Methods of International Law, Dordrecht, 1984, p. 2.

²⁴ See H. Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations, 5th edn, New York, 1973, pp. 290–1; Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 46–9; J. Brierly, The Outlook for International Law, Oxford, 1944, p. 5; and P. Jessup, A Modern Law of Nations, New York, 1948, pp. 6–8.

But what is to stop a state from simply ignoring international law when proceeding upon its chosen policy? Can a legal rule against aggression, for example, of itself prevail over political temptations? There is no international police force to prevent such an action, but there are a series of other considerations closely bound up with the character of international law which might well cause a potential aggressor to forbear.

There is the element of reciprocity at work and a powerful weapon it can be. States quite often do not pursue one particular course of action which might bring them short-term gains, because it could disrupt the mesh of reciprocal tolerance which could very well bring long-term disadvantages. For example, states everywhere protect the immunity of foreign diplomats for not to do so would place their own officials abroad at risk.²⁵ This constitutes an inducement to states to act reasonably and moderate demands in the expectation that this will similarly encourage other states to act reasonably and so avoid confrontations. Because the rules can ultimately be changed by states altering their patterns of behaviour and causing one custom to supersede another, or by mutual agreement, a certain definite reference to political life is retained. But the point must be made that a state, after weighing up all possible alternatives, might very well feel that the only method to protect its vital interests would involve a violation of international law and that responsibility would just have to be taken. Where survival is involved international law may take second place.

Another significant factor is the advantages, or 'rewards', that may occur in certain situations from an observance of international law. It may encourage friendly or neutral states to side with one country involved in a conflict rather than its opponent, and even take a more active role than might otherwise have been the case. In many ways, it is an appeal to public opinion for support and all states employ this tactic.

In many ways, it reflects the esteem in which law is held. The Soviet Union made considerable use of legal arguments in its effort to establish its non-liability to contribute towards the peace-keeping operations of the United Nations,²⁶ and the Americans, too, justified their activities with regard to Cuba²⁷ and Vietnam²⁸ by reference to international law. In some cases it may work and bring considerable support in its wake, in many cases it will not; but in any event the very fact that all states do it is a constructive sign.

A further element worth mentioning in this context is the constant formulation of international business in characteristically legal terms. Points of view and disputes, in particular, are framed legally with references to precedent, international agreements and even the opinions of juristic authors. Claims are pursued with regard to the rules of international law and not in terms of, for example, morality or ethics.²⁹ This has brought into being a class of officials throughout ²⁵ See Case Concerning United States Diplomatic and Consular Staff in Tehran, ICJ Reports, 1980, p. 3; 61 ILR, p. 502. See also the US Supreme Court decision in Boos v. Barry 99 L. Ed. 2d 333, 345-6 (1988); 121 ILR, p. 499.

²⁶ See Certain Expenses of the United Nations, ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 151; 34 ILR, p. 281; and R. Higgins, United Nations Peace-Keeping; Documents and Commentary, Oxford, 4 vols., 1969-81.

²⁷ See e.g. A. Chayes, The Cuban Missile Crisis, Oxford, 1974, and Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 279-302.

²⁸ See e.g. The Vietnam War and International Law (ed. R. A. Falk), Princeton, 4 vols., 1968-76; J. N. Moore, Law and the Indo-China War, Charlottesville, 1972; and Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 303-12.

²⁹ See Hart, Concept of Law, p. 223.

governmental departments, in addition to those working in international institutions, versed in international law and carrying on the everyday functions of government in a law-oriented way. Many writers have, in fact, emphasised the role of officials in the actual functioning of law and the influence they have upon the legal process.³⁰

Having come to the conclusion that states do observe international law and will usually only violate it on an issue regarded as vital to their interests, the question arises as to the basis of this sense of obligation.³¹ The nineteenth century, with its business-oriented philosophy, stressed the importance of the contract, as the legal basis of an agreement freely entered into by both (or all) sides, and this influenced the theory of consent in international law.³² States were independent, and free agents, and accordingly they could only be bound with their own consent. There was no authority in existence able theoretically or practically to impose rules upon the various nation-states. This approach found its extreme expression in the theory of auto-limitation, or self-limitation, which declared that states could only be obliged to comply with international legal rules if they had first agreed to be so obliged.³³

Nevertheless, this theory is most unsatisfactory as an account of why international law is regarded as binding or even as an explanation of the international legal system.³⁴ To give one example, there are about 100 states that have come into existence since the end of the Second World War and by no stretch of the imagination can it be said that such states have consented to all the rules of international law formed prior to their establishment. It could be argued that by 'accepting independence', states consent to all existing rules, but to take this view relegates consent to the role of a mere fiction.³⁵

This theory also fails as an adequate explanation of the international legal system, because it does not take into account the tremendous growth in international institutions and the network of rules and regulations that have emerged from them within the last generation.

To accept consent as the basis for obligation in international law³⁶ begs the question as to what happens when consent is withdrawn. The state's reversal of its agreement to a rule does not render that rule optional or remove from it its aura of legality. It merely places that state in breach of its obligations under international law if that state proceeds to act upon its decision. Indeed, the principle that agreements are binding (pacta sunt servanda) upon which all treaty law must be based cannot itself be based upon consent.³⁷

³⁰ See e.g. M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and W. M. Reisman, 'The World Constitutive Process of Authoritative Decision', in International Law Essays (ed. M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman), New York, 1981, p. 191.

³¹ See e.g. J. Brierly, The Basis of Obligation in International Law, Oxford, 1958.

³² See W. Friedmann, Legal Theory, 5th edn, London, 1967, pp. 573–6. See also the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, p. 18.

³³ E.g. G. Jellinek, Allgemeine Rechtslehre, Berlin, 1905.

³⁴ See also Hart, Concept of Law, pp. 219–20. But see P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 413 and responses thereto, e.g. R. A. Falk, 'To What Extent are International Law and International Lawyers Ideologically Neutral?', in Change and Stability in International Law-Making (ed. A. Cassese and J. Weiler), 1989, p. 137, and A. Pellet, 'The Normative Dilemma: Will and Consent in International Law-Making', 12 Australian YIL, 1992, p. 22.

³⁵ See further below, p. 62.

³⁶ See e.g. J. S. Watson, 'State Consent and the Sources of International Obligation', PASIL, 1992, p. 108.

³⁷ See below, chapter 3.

One current approach to this problem is to refer to the doctrine of consensus.³⁸ This reflects the influence of the majority in creating new norms of international law and the acceptance by other states of such new rules. It attempts to put into focus the change of emphasis that is beginning to take place from exclusive concentration upon the nation-state to a consideration of the developing forms of international co-operation where such concepts as consent and sanction are inadequate to explain what is happening.

Of course, one cannot ignore the role of consent in international law. To recognise its limitations is not to neglect its significance. Much of international law is constituted by states expressly agreeing to specific normative standards, most obviously by entering into treaties. This cannot be minimised. Nevertheless, it is preferable to consider consent as important not only with regard to specific rules specifically accepted (which is not the sum total of international law, of course) but in the light of the approach of states generally to the totality of rules, understandings, patterns of behaviour and structures underpinning and constituting the international system.³⁹ In a broad sense, states accept or consent to the general system of international law, for in reality without that no such system could possibly operate. It is this approach which may be characterised as consensus or the essential framework within which the demand for individual state consent is transmuted into community acceptance.

It is important to note that while states from time to time object to particular rules of international law and seek to change them, no state has sought to maintain that it is free to object to the system as a whole. Each individual state, of course, has the right to seek to influence by word or deed the development of specific rules of international law, but the creation of new customary rules is not dependent upon the express consent of each particular state.

THE FUNCTION OF POLITICS

It is clear that there can never be a complete separation between law and policy. No matter what theory of law or political philosophy is professed, the inextricable bonds linking law and politics must be recognised.

Within developed societies a distinction is made between the formulation of policy and the method of its enforcement. In the United Kingdom, Parliament legislates while the courts adjudicate and a similar division is maintained in the United States between the Congress and the courts system. The purpose of such divisions, of course, is to prevent a concentration of too much power within one branch of government. Nevertheless, it is the political branch which makes laws and in the first place creates the legal system. Even within the hierarchy of courts, the judges have leeway in interpreting the law and in the last resort make decisions from amongst a number of alternatives.⁴⁰ This position, however, should not be exaggerated because a number of factors operate to conceal and lessen the impact of politics upon the legal process. Foremost amongst these is the psychological element of tradition and the development of the so-called ³⁸ See e.g. A. D'Amato, 'On Consensus', 8 Canadian YIL, 1970, p. 104. Note also the 'gentleman's agreement on consensus' in the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea: see L. Sohn, 'Voting Procedures in United Nations Conference for the Codification of International Law', 69 AJIL, 1975, p. 318, and UN Doc. A/Conf.62/WP.2.

³⁹ See e.g. J. Charney, 'Universal International Law', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 529.

⁴⁰ See e.g. R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977.

'law-habit'.⁴¹ A particular legal atmosphere has been created, which is buttressed by the political system and recognises the independent existence of law institutions and methods of operation characterised as 'just' or 'legal'. In most countries overt interference with the juridical process would be regarded as an attack upon basic principles and hotly contested. The use of legal language and accepted procedures together with the pride of the legal profession reinforce the system and emphasise the degree of distance maintained between the legislative-executive organs and the judicial structure.⁴²

However, when one looks at the international legal scene the situation changes. The arbiters of the world order are, in the last resort, the states and they both make the rules (ignoring for the moment the secondary, if growing, field of international organisations) and interpret and enforce them.

While it is possible to discern an 'international legal habit' amongst governmental and international officials, the machinery necessary to enshrine this does not exist.

Politics is much closer to the heart of the system than is perceived within national legal orders, and power much more in evidence.⁴³ The interplay of law and politics in world affairs is much more complex and difficult to unravel, and signals a return to the earlier discussion as to why states comply with international rules. Power politics stresses competition, conflict and supremacy and adopts as its core the struggle for survival and influence.⁴⁴ International law aims for harmony and the regulation of disputes. It attempts to create a framework, no matter how rudimentary, which can act as a kind of shock-absorber clarifying and moderating claims and endeavouring to balance interests. In addition, it sets out a series of principles declaring how states should behave. Just as any domestic community must have a background of ideas and hopes to aim at, even if few can be or are ever attained, so the international community, too, must bear in mind its ultimate values.

However, these ultimate values are in a formal sense kept at arm's length from the legal process. As the International Court noted in the South-West Africa case,⁴⁵ 'It is a court of law, and can take account of moral principles only in so far as these are given a sufficient expression in legal form. Law exists, it is said, to serve a social need; but precisely for that reason it can do so only through and within the limits of its own discipline. Otherwise, it is not a legal service that would be rendered.'⁴⁶

International law cannot be a source of instant solutions to problems of conflict and confrontation because of its own inherent weaknesses in structure and content. To fail to recognise this encourages a utopian approach which, when faced with reality, will fail.⁴⁷

⁴¹ See e.g. K. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition, Boston, 1960, and generally D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979.

⁴² See P. Stein and J. Shand, Legal Values in Western Society, Edinburgh, 1974.

⁴³ See generally Henkin, How Nations Behave, and Schachter, International Law, pp. 5-9.

⁴⁴ See G. Schwarzenberger, Power Politics, 3rd edn, London, 1964, and Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, and Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations.

⁴⁵ ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 34.

⁴⁶ But see Higgins' criticism that such a formulation may be question-begging with regard to the identity of such 'limits of its own discipline', Problems, p. 5.

⁴⁷ Note, of course, the important distinction between the existence of an obligation under international law and the question of the enforcement of that obligation. Problems with regard to enforcing a duty cannot affect the legal validity of that duty: see e.g. Judge Weeramantry's Separate Opinion in the Order of 13 September 1993, in the Bosnia case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 374; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 92.

On the other hand, the cynical attitude with its obsession with brute power is equally inaccurate, if more depressing.

It is the medium road, recognising the strength and weakness of international law and pointing out what it can achieve and what it cannot, which offers the best hope. Man seeks order, welfare and justice not only within the state in which he lives, but also within the international system in which he lives.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT⁴⁸

The foundations of international law (or the law of nations) as it is understood today lie firmly in the development of Western culture and political organisation.

The growth of European notions of sovereignty and the independent nation-state required an acceptable method whereby inter-state relations could be conducted in accordance with commonly accepted standards of behaviour, and international law filled the gap. But although the law of nations took root and flowered with the sophistication of Renaissance Europe, the seeds of this particular hybrid plant are of far older lineage. They reach far back into history.

Early Origins

While the modern international system can be traced back some 400 years, certain of the basic concepts of international law can be discerned in political relationships thousands of years ago.⁴⁹ Around 2100 BC, for instance, a solemn treaty was signed between the rulers of Lagash and Umma, the city-states situated in the area known to historians as Mesopotamia. It was inscribed on a stone block and concerned the establishment of a defined boundary to be respected by both sides under pain of alienating a number of Sumerian gods.⁵⁰ The next major instance known of ⁴⁸ See in particular A. Nussbaum, A Concise History of the Law of Nations, rev. edn, New York, 1954; The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law (ed. A. Orford and F. Hoffmann), Oxford, 2016, Part I; Encyclopedia of Public International Law (ed. R. Bernhardt), Amsterdam, 1984, vol. VII, pp. 127–273; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 10 vols., 1968–79, and M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations: The Rise and Fall of International Law, 1870–1960, Cambridge, 2001. See also Oxford Handbook of the History of International Law (ed. B. Fassbender, A. Peters, S. Peter and D. Högger), Oxford, 2012; Research Handbook on the Theory and History of International Law (ed. A. Orakhelashvili), London, 2011; E. Jouannet, The Liberal-Welfarist Law of Nations: A History of International Law, Cambridge, 2012; W. Grewe, The Epochs of International Law (trans. and rev. M. Byers), New York, 2000; A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, Oxford, 1986, and Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 2; H. Thierry, 'L'Evolution du Droit International', 222 HR, 1990 III, p. 9; P. Guggenheim, 'Contribution à l'Histoire des Sources du Droit des Gens', 94 HR, 1958 II, p. 5; D. Gaurier, Histoire du Droit International Public, Rennes, 2005; D. Korff, 'Introduction à l'Histoire de Droit International Public', 1 HR, 1923 I, p. 1; P. Le Fur, 'Le Développement Historique de Droit International', 41 HR, 1932 III, p. 501; O. Yasuaki, 'When Was the Law of International Society Born? An Inquiry of the History of International Law from an Intercivilisational Perspective', 2 Journal of the History of International Law, 2000, p. 1; A. Kemmerer, 'The Turning Aside: On International Law and its History', in Progress in International Organisation (ed. R. A. Miller and R. Bratspies), Leiden, 2008, p. 71; and E. Jouannet, Le droit international libéral-providence. Une histoire du droit international, Bruylant, 2011 (translated by C. Sutcliffe as The Liberal-Welfarist Law of Nations: A History of International Law, Cambridge, 2012). For a general bibliography, see P. Macalister-Smith and J. Schwietzke, 'Literature and Documentary Sources relating to the History of International Law', 1 Journal of the History of International Law, 1999, p. 136.

⁴⁹ See D. J. Bederman, International Law in Antiquity, Cambridge, 2001.

⁵⁰ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 1–2. Note the discovery in the excavated city of Ebla, the capital of a civilisation at least 4,500 years old, of a copy of a political treaty between Ebla and the city of Abarsal: see Times Higher Education Supplement, 19 May 1995, p. 20. See also R. Cohen, On Diplomacy in the Ancient Near East: The Amarna Letters, an important, binding, international treaty is that concluded over 1,000 years later between Rameses II of Egypt and the king of the Hittites for the establishment of eternal peace and brotherhood.⁵¹ Other points covered in that agreement signed, it would seem, at Kadesh, north of Damascus, included respect for each other's territorial integrity, the termination of a state of aggression and the setting up of a form of defensive alliance.

Since that date many agreements between the rival Middle Eastern powers were concluded, usually aimed at embodying in a ritual form a state of subservience between the parties or attempting to create a political alliance to contain the influence of an over-powerful empire.⁵²

The role of ancient Israel must also be noted. A universal ethical stance coupled with rules relating to warfare were handed down to other peoples and religions and the demand for justice and a fair system of law founded upon strict morality permeated the thought and conduct of subsequent generations.⁵³ For example, the Prophet Isaiah declared that sworn agreements, even where made with the enemy, must be performed.⁵⁴ Peace and social justice were the keys to man's existence, not power.

After much neglect, there is now more consideration of the cultures and standards that evolved, before the birth of Christ, in the Far East, in the Indian⁵⁵ and Chinese⁵⁶ civilisations. Many of the Hindu rules displayed a growing sense of morality and generosity and the Chinese Empire devoted much thought to harmonious relations between its constituent parts. Regulations controlling violence and the behaviour of varying factions with regard to innocent civilians were introduced and ethical values instilled in the education of the ruling classes. In times of Chinese Discussion Paper of the Centre for the Study of Diplomacy, University of Leicester, 1995; O. Butkevych, 'History of Ancient International Law: Challenges and Prospects', 5 Journal of the History of International Law, 2003, p. 189; A. Altman, 'Tracing the Earliest Recorded Concepts of International Law. The Early Dynastic Period in Southern Mesopotamia', 6 Journal of the History of International Law, 2004, p. 153, and 'Tracing the Earliest Recorded Concepts of International Law. (2) The Old Akkadian and Ur III Periods in Mesopotamia', 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 115.

⁵¹ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 1–2.

⁵² Preiser emphasises that the era between the seventeenth and fifteenth centuries BC witnessed something of a competing state system involving five independent (at various times) states: Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 133–4.

⁵³ See P. Weil, 'Le Judaïsme et le Développement du Droit International', 151 HR, 1976, p. 253; S. Rosenne, 'The Influence of Judaism on International Law', Nederlands Tijdschrift voor Internationaal Recht, 1958, p. 119; and C. Leben, 'Hebrew Sources in the Doctrine of the Law of Nature and Nations in Early Modern Europe', 27 EJIL, 2016, p. 79.

⁵⁴ See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, p. 3.

⁵⁵ Ibid. See also C. H. Alexandrowicz, An Introduction to the History of the Law of Nations in the East Indies, Leiden, 1967, and Alexandrowicz, 'The Afro-Asian World and the Law of Nations (Historical Aspects)', 123 HR, 1967, p. 117; L. Chatterjee, International Law and Inter-State Relations in Ancient India, 1958; Nagendra Singh, 'The Distinguishing Characteristics of the Concept of the Law of Nations as it Developed in Ancient India', Liber Amicorum for Lord Wilberforce (ed. A. Bos and I. Brownlie), Oxford, 1987, p. 91; R. P. Anand, International Law and the Developing Countries, The Hague, 1987; International Law and Practice in Ancient India (ed. H. S. Bhatia), New Delhi, 1977; Nagendra Singh, India and International Law, New Delhi, 1969; and P. Bandyopadhyay, International Law and Custom in Ancient India, New Delhi, 1982.

⁵⁶ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, p. 4; Liu Tchoan Pas, Le Droit des Gens et de la Chine Antique, Paris, 2 vols., 1926; P. Gong, 'The Standard of 'Civilisation' in International Society, 1984, pp. 130–63; pp. 164–200 with regard to Japan; pp. 201–37 with regard to Siam; I. C. Y. Hsu, China's Entrance into the Family of Nations, Harvard, 1960; K. Iriye, 'The Principles of International Law in the Light of Confucian Doctrine', 120 HR, 1967, p. 1; and Wang Tiejia, 'International Law in China', 221 HR, 1990 II, p. 195. See also C. F. Amerasinghe, 'South Asian Antecedents of International Law', in International Law: Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 3; and E. Y.-J. Lee, 'Early Development of Modern International Law in East Asia – With Special Reference to China, Japan and Korea', 4 Journal of the History of International Law, 2002, p. 42.

dominance, a regional tributary-states system operated which fragmented somewhat in times of weakness, but this remained culturally alive for many centuries.

However, the predominant approach of ancient civilisations was geographically and culturally restricted. There was no conception of an international community of states co-existing within a defined framework. The scope for any 'international law' of states was extremely limited and all that one can point to is the existence of certain ideals, such as the sanctity of treaties, which have continued to this day as important elements in society. But the notion of a universal community with its ideal of world order was not in evidence.

The era of classical Greece, from about the sixth century BC and onwards for a couple of hundred years, has, one must note, been of overwhelming significance for European thought. Its critical and rational turn of mind, its constant questioning and analysis of man and nature and its love of argument and debate were spread throughout Europe and the Mediterranean world by the Roman Empire which adopted Hellenic culture wholesale, and penetrated Western consciousness with the Renaissance. However, Greek awareness was limited to their own competitive city-states and colonies. Those of different origin were barbarians not deemed worthy of association.

The value of Greece in a study of international law lies partly in the philosophical, scientific and political analyses bequeathed to mankind and partly in the fascinating state of interrelationship built up within the Hellenistic world.⁵⁷ Numerous treaties linked the city-states together in a network of commercial and political associations. Rights were often granted to the citizens of the states in each other's territories and rules regarding the sanctity and protection of diplomatic envoys developed. Certain practices were essential before the declaration of war, and the horrors of war were somewhat ameliorated by the exercise, for example, of religious customs regarding sanctuaries. But no overall moral approach similar to those emerging from Jewish and Hindu thought, particularly, evolved. No sense of a world community can be traced to Greek ideology in spite of the growth of Greek colonies throughout the Mediterranean area. This was left to the able administrators of the Roman Empire.⁵⁸

The Romans had a profound respect for organisation and the law.⁵⁹ The law knitted together their empire and constituted a vital source of reference for every inhabitant of the far-flung domain. The early Roman law (the jus civile) applied only to Roman citizens. It was formalistic and hard and reflected the status of a small, unsophisticated society rooted in the soil.

It was totally unable to provide a relevant background for an expanding, developing nation. This need was served by the creation and progressive augmentation of the jus gentium. This provided simplified rules to govern the relations between foreigners, and between foreigners and citizens. The instrument through which this particular system evolved was the official known as ⁵⁷ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 5–9, and A. Lanni, 'The Laws of War in Ancient Greece', Harvard Law School Public Law Research Paper No. 07-24, 2007. See also G. Ténékidès, 'Droit International et Communautés Fédérales dans la Grèce des Cités', 90 HR, 1956, p. 469; S. L. Ager, Interstate Arbitrations in the Greek World, 337–90 BC, Berkeley, 1996; and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 154–6.

⁵⁸ Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 136–9, and Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 10–16.

⁵⁹ See e.g. A. Jolowicz, Historical Introduction to Roman Law, 3rd edn, London, 1972. See also A. Watson, International Law in Archaic Rome, Baltimore, 1993 and The Roman Foundations of the Law of Nations: Alberico Gentili and the Justice of Empire (ed. B. Kingsbury and B. Straumann), Oxford, 2010; and R. Lesaffer, 'Roman Law and the Intellectual History of International Law' in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 2.

the Praetor Peregrinus, whose function it was to oversee all legal relationships, including bureaucratic and commercial matters, within the empire.

The progressive rules of the jus gentium gradually overrode the narrow jus civile until the latter system ceased to exist. Thus, the jus gentium became the common law of the Roman Empire and was deemed to be of universal application.

It is this all-embracing factor which so strongly distinguishes the Roman from the Greek experience, although, of course, there was no question of the acceptance of other nations on a basis of equality and the jus gentium remained a 'national law' for the Roman Empire.

One of the most influential of Greek concepts taken up by the Romans was the idea of Natural Law.⁶⁰ This was formulated by the Stoic philosophers of the third century BC and their theory was that it constituted a body of rules of universal relevance. Such rules were rational and logical, and because the ideas and precepts of the 'law of nature' were rooted in human intelligence, it followed that such rules could not be restricted to any nation or any group but were of worldwide relevance. This element of universality is basic to modern doctrines of international law and the Stoic elevation of human powers of logical deduction to the supreme pinnacle of 'discovering' the law foreshadows the rational philosophies of the West. In addition to being a fundamental concept in legal theory, Natural Law is vital to an understanding of international law, as well as being an indispensable precursor to contemporary concern with human rights.

Certain Roman philosophers incorporated those Greek ideas of Natural Law into their own legal theories, often as a kind of ultimate justification of the jus gentium, which was deemed to enshrine rational principles common to all civilised nations.

However, the law of nature was held to have an existence over and above that of the jus gentium. This led to much confusion over the exact relationship between the two ideas and different Roman lawyers came to different conclusions as to their identity and characteristics. The important factors though that need to be noted are the theories of the universality of law and the rational origins of legal rules that were founded, theoretically at least, not on superior force but on superior reason.

The classical rules of Roman law were collated in the Corpus Juris Civilis, a compilation of legal material by a series of Byzantine philosophers completed in AD 534.⁶¹ Such a collection was to be invaluable when the darkness of the early Middle Ages, following the Roman collapse, began gradually to evaporate. For here was a body of developed laws ready made and awaiting transference to an awakening Europe.

At this stage reference must be made to the growth of Islam.⁶² Its approach to international relations and law was predicated upon a state of hostility towards the non-Moslem world and the ⁶⁰ See e.g. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 79–169.

⁶¹ See generally with regard to Byzantium, M. De Taube, 'L'Apport de Byzance au Développement du Droit International Occidental', 67 HR, 1939, p. 233; and S. Verosta, 'International Law in Europe and Western Asia between 100–650 AD', 113 HR, 1964, p. 489.

⁶² See e.g. M. Al Ghunaimi, The Muslim Conception of International Law and the Western Approach, The Hague, 1968; A. Draz, 'Le Droit International Public et l'Islam', 5 Revue Egyptienne de Droit International, p. 17; C. Stumpf, 'Christian and Islamic Traditions of Public International Law', 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 69; H. Khadduri, 'Islam and the Modern Law of Nations', 50 AJIL, 1956, p. 358, and Khadduri, War and Peace in the Law of Islam, 2nd edn, Baltimore, 1962; and S. Mahmassani, 'The Principles of International Law in the Light of concept of unity, Dar al-Islam, as between Moslem countries. Generally speaking, humane rules of warfare were developed and the ‘peoples of the book’ (Jews and Christians) were treated better than non-believers, although in an inferior position to Moslems. Once the period of conquest was over and power was consolidated, norms governing conduct with non-Moslem states began to develop. The law dealing with diplomats was founded upon notions of hospitality and safety (aman), while rules governing international agreements grew out of the concept of respecting promises made.⁶³

The Middle Ages and the Renaissance

The Middle Ages were characterised by the authority of the organised Church and the comprehensive structure of power that it commanded.⁶⁴ All Europe was of one religion, and the ecclesiastical law applied to all, notwithstanding tribal or regional affiliations. For much of the period, there were struggles between the religious authorities and the rulers of the Holy Roman Empire.

These conflicts were eventually resolved in favour of the Papacy, but the victory over secularism proved of relatively short duration. Religion and a common legacy derived from the Roman Empire were strongly unifying influences, while political and regional rivalries were not. But before a recognised system of international law could be created, social changes were essential.

Of particular importance during this era were the authority of the Holy Roman Empire and the supranational character of canon law.⁶⁵ Nevertheless, commercial and maritime law developed apace. English law established the Law Merchant, a code of rules covering foreign traders, and this was declared to be of universal application.⁶⁶

Throughout Europe, mercantile courts were set up to settle disputes between tradesmen at the various fairs, and while it is not possible to state that a Continental Law Merchant came into being, a network of common regulations and practices weaved its way across the commercial fabric of Europe and constituted an embryonic international trade law.⁶⁷

Similarly, maritime customs began to be accepted throughout the Continent. Founded upon the Rhodian Sea Law, a Byzantine work, many of whose rules were enshrined in the Rolls of Oleron in the twelfth century, and other maritime textbooks, a series of commonly applied customs relating to the sea permeated the naval powers of the Atlantic and Mediterranean coasts.⁶⁸

Such commercial and maritime codes, while at this stage merely expressions of national legal systems, were amongst the forerunners of international law because they were created and Islamic Doctrine’, 117 HR, 1966, p. 205. See also ‘L’Asile et les Refugies dans la Tradition Musulmane’, Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 305; and Y. Ben Achour Yadh, ‘La Civilisation Islamique et le Droit International’, RGDI, 2006, p. 19.

⁶³ See Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 141–2, and Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 51–4.

⁶⁴ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 17–23, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 143–9.

⁶⁵ Note in particular the influence of the Church on the rules governing warfare and the binding nature of agreements: see Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 17–18, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 146–7. See also M. Keen, The Laws of War in the Late Middle Ages, London, 1965.

⁶⁶ See G. Holdsworth, A History of English Law, London, 1924, vol. 5, pp. 60–3. ⁶⁷ Ibid., pp. 63–129.

⁶⁸ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 29–31. Note also the influence of the Consolato del Mare, composed in Barcelona in the mid-fourteenth century, and the Maritime Code of Wisby (c. 1407) followed by the Hanseatic League.

nurtured against a backcloth of cross-national contacts and reflected the need for rules that would cover international situations.

Such rules, growing out of the early Middle Ages, constituted the seeds of international law, but, before they could flourish, European thought had first to be developed by that intellectual explosion known as the Renaissance.

This complex of ideas changed the face of European society and ushered in the modern era of scientific, humanistic and individualistic thought.⁶⁹

The collapse of the Byzantine Empire centred on Constantinople before the Turkish armies in 1453 drove many Greek scholars to seek sanctuary in Italy and enliven Western Europe's cultural life. The introduction of printing during the fifteenth century provided the means to disseminate knowledge, and the undermining of feudalism in the wake of economic growth and the rise of the merchant classes provided the background to the new inquiring attitudes taking shape.

Europe's developing self-confidence manifested itself in a sustained drive overseas for wealth and luxury items. By the end of the fifteenth century, the Arabs had been ousted from the Iberian peninsula and the Americas reached.

The rise of the nation-states of England, France and Spain in particular characterised the process of the creation of territorially consolidated independent units, in theory and doctrine, as well as in fact. This led to a higher degree of interaction between sovereign entities and thus the need to regulate such activities in a generally acceptable fashion. The pursuit of political power and supremacy became overt and recognised, as Machiavelli's The Prince (1513) demonstrated.

The city-states of Italy struggled for supremacy and the Papacy too became a secular power. From these hectic struggles emerged many of the staples of modern international life: diplomacy, statesmanship, the theory of the balance of power and the idea of a community of states.⁷⁰

Notions such as these are immediately appreciable and one can identify with the various manoeuvres for political supremacy. Alliances, betrayals, manipulations of state institutions and the drive for power are not unknown to us. We recognise the roots of our society.

It was the evolution of the concept of an international community of separate, sovereign, if competing, states, that marks the beginning of what is understood by international law. The Renaissance bequeathed the prerequisites of independent, critical thought and a humanistic, secular approach to life as well as the political framework for the future. But it is the latter factor which is vital to the subsequent growth of international law. The Reformation and the European religious wars that followed emphasised this, as did the growing power of the nations. In many ways these wars marked the decline of a continental system founded on religion and the birth of a continental system founded on the supremacy of the state.

Throughout these countries the necessity was felt for a new conception of human as well as state relationships. This search was precipitated, as has been intimated, by the decline of the Church and the rise of what might be termed 'free-thinking'. The theory of international law was ⁶⁹ See e.g. Friedmann, Changing Structure, pp. 114–16.

⁷⁰ See e.g. G. Mattingley, Renaissance Diplomacy, London, 1955.

naturally deeply involved in this reappraisal of political life and it was tremendously influenced by the rediscovery of Greco-Roman ideas. The Renaissance stimulated a rebirth of Hellenic studies and ideas of Natural Law, in particular, became popular.

Thus, a distinct value-system to underpin international relations was brought into being and the law of nations was heralded as part of the universal law of nature.

With the rise of the modern state and the emancipation of international relations, the doctrine of sovereignty emerged. This concept, first analysed systematically in 1576 in the Six Livres de la République by Jean Bodin, was intended to deal with the structure of authority within the modern state. Bodin, who based his study upon his perception of the politics of Europe rather than on a theoretical discussion of absolute principles, emphasised the necessity for a sovereign power within the state that would make the laws. While such a sovereign could not be bound by the laws he himself instituted, he was subject to the laws of God and of nature.⁷¹

The idea of the sovereign as supreme legislator was in the course of time transmuted into the principle which gave the state supreme power vis-à-vis other states. The state was regarded as being above the law. Such notions as these formed the intellectual basis of the line of thought known as positivism which will be discussed later.⁷²

The early theorists of international law were deeply involved with the ideas of Natural Law and used them as the basis of their philosophies. Included within that complex of Natural Law principles from which they constructed their theories was the significant merging of Christian and Natural Law ideas that occurred in the philosophy of St Thomas Aquinas.⁷³ He maintained that Natural Law formed part of the law of God, and was the participation by rational creatures in the Eternal Law. It complemented that part of the Eternal Law which had been divinely revealed. Reason, declared Aquinas, was the essence of man and thus must be involved in the ordering of life according to the divine will. Natural Law was the fount of moral behaviour as well as of social and political institutions, and it led to a theory of conditional acceptance of authority with unjust laws being unacceptable. Aquinas' views of the late thirteenth century can be regarded as basic to an understanding of present Catholic attitudes, but should not be confused with the later interpretation of Natural Law which stressed the concepts of natural rights.

It is with such an intellectual background that Renaissance scholars approached the question of the basis and justification of a system of international law. Maine, a British historical lawyer, wrote that the birth of modern international law was the grandest function of the law of nature and, while that is arguable, the point must be taken.⁷⁴ International law began to emerge as a separate topic to be studied within itself, although derived from the principles of Natural Law.

The Founders of Modern International Law

The essence of the new approach to international law can be traced back to the Spanish philosophers of that country's Golden Age.⁷⁵ The leading figure of this school was Francisco

⁷¹ See A. Gardot, 'Jean Bodin – Sa Place Parmi les Fondateurs du Droit International', 50 HR, 1934, p. 549. See also, for a discussion of sovereignty and the treaty-making power in the late Middle Ages, T. Meron, 'The Authority to Make Treaties in the Late Middle Ages', 89 AJIL, 1995, p. 1.

⁷² Below, p. 36. ⁷³ Summa Theologia, English edn, 1927. ⁷⁴ H. Maine, Ancient Law, London, 1861, pp. 56 and 64–6.

⁷⁵ Note Preiser's view that '[t]here was hardly a single important problem of international law until the middle of the 17th century which was not principally a problem of Spain and the allied Habsburg countries': Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, p. 150. See also Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 79–93.

Vitoria, Professor of Theology at the University of Salamanca (1480–1546). His lectures were preserved by his students and published posthumously. He demonstrated a remarkably progressive attitude for his time towards the Spanish conquest of the South American Indians and, contrary to the views prevalent until then, maintained that the Indian peoples should be regarded as nations with their own legitimate interests. War against them could only be justified on the grounds of a just cause. International law was founded on the universal law of nature and this meant that non-Europeans must be included within its ambit. However, Vitoria by no means advocated the recognition of the Indian nations as equal to the Christian states of Europe. For him, opposing the work of the missionaries in the territories was a just reason for war, and he adopted a rather extensive view as to the rights of the Spaniards in South America. Vitoria was no liberal and indeed acted on behalf of the Spanish Inquisition, but his lectures did mark a step forward in the right direction.⁷⁶

Suárez (1548–1617) was a Jesuit and Professor of Theology who was deeply immersed in medieval culture. He noted that the obligatory character of international law was based upon Natural Law, while its substance derived from the Natural Law rule of carrying out agreements entered into.⁷⁷

From a totally different background but equally, if not more, influential was Alberico Gentili (1552–1608). He was born in Northern Italy and fled to England to avoid persecution, having converted to Protestantism. In 1598 his De Jure Belli was published.⁷⁸ It is a comprehensive discussion of the law of war and contains a valuable section on the law of treaties. Gentili, who became a professor at Oxford, has been called the originator of the secular school of thought in international law and he minimised the hitherto significant theological theses.

It is, however, Hugo Grotius, a Dutch scholar, who towers over this period and has been celebrated, if a little exaggeratedly, as the father of international law. He was born in 1583 and was the supreme Renaissance man. A scholar of tremendous learning, he mastered history, theology, mathematics and the law.⁷⁹ His primary work was the De Jure Belli ac Pacis, written during 1623 and 1624. It is an extensive work and includes rather more devotion to the exposition of private law notions than would seem appropriate today. He refers both to Vitoria and Gentili, the latter being of special influence with regard to many matters, particularly organisation of material.

Grotius finally excised theology from international law and emphasised the irrelevance in such a study of any conception of a divine law. He remarked that the law of nature would be valid even if there were no God: a statement which, although suitably clothed in religious protestation, was extremely daring. The law of nature now reverted to being founded exclusively on reason. Justice

⁷⁶ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 79–84, and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 151–2. See also F. Vitoria, De Indis et de Jure Belli Relectiones, Classics of International Law, Washington, DC, 1917, and J. B. Scott, The Spanish Origin of International Law, Francisco de Vitoria and his Law of Nations, Washington, DC, 1934. See also I. de la Rasilla del Moral, 'Francisco de Vitoria's Unexpected Transformations and Reinterpretations for International Law', 15 International Community Law Review, 2013, p. 287.

⁷⁷ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 84–91. See also ibid., pp. 92–3 regarding the work of Ayala (1548–84).

⁷⁸ Ibid., pp. 94–101. See also A. Van der Molen, Alberico Gentili and the Development of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1968.

⁷⁹ Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 102–14. See also W. S. M. Knight, The Life and Works of Hugo Grotius, London, 1925, and 'Commemoration of the Fourth Century of the Birth of Grotius' (various articles), 182 HR, 1984, pp. 371–470; and M. J. van Ittersum, 'Hugo Grotius: The Making of a Founding Father of International Law', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 4. was part of man's social make-up and thus not only useful but essential. Grotius conceived of a comprehensive system of international law and his work rapidly became a university textbook. However, in many spheres he followed well-trodden paths. He retained the theological distinction between a just and an unjust war, a notion that was soon to disappear from treatises on international law, but which in some way underpins modern approaches to aggression, self-defence and liberation.

One of his most enduring opinions consists in his proclamation of the freedom of the seas. The Dutch scholar opposed the 'closed seas' concept of the Portuguese that was later elucidated by the English writer John Selden⁸⁰ and emphasised instead the principle that the nations could not appropriate to themselves the high seas. They belonged to all. It must, of course, be mentioned, parenthetically, that this theory happened to accord rather nicely with prevailing Dutch ideas as to free trade and the needs of an expanding commercial empire.

However, this merely points up what must not be disregarded, namely that concepts of law as of politics and other disciplines are firmly rooted in the world of reality, and reflect contemporary preoccupations. No theory develops in a vacuum, but is conceived and brought to fruition in a definite cultural and social environment. To ignore this is to distort the theory itself.

Positivism and Naturalism

Following Grotius, but by no means divorced from the thought of previous scholars, a split can be detected and two different schools identified. On the one hand there was the 'naturalist' school, exemplified by Samuel Pufendorf (1632–94),⁸¹ who attempted to identify international law completely with the law of nature; and on the other hand there were the exponents of 'positivism', who distinguished between international law and Natural Law and emphasised practical problems and current state practices. Pufendorf regarded Natural Law as a moralistic system, and misunderstood the direction of modern international law by denying the validity of the rules about custom. He also refused to acknowledge treaties as in any way relevant to a discussion of the basis of international law. Other 'naturalists' echoed those sentiments in minimising or ignoring the actual practices of states in favour of a theoretical construction of absolute values that seemed slowly to drift away from the complexities of political reality.

One of the principal initiators of the positivist school was Richard Zouche (1590–1660), who lived at the same time as Pufendorf, but in England.⁸² While completely dismissing Natural Law, he paid scant regard to the traditional doctrines. His concern was with specific situations and his book contains many examples from the recent past. He elevated the law of peace above a systematic consideration of the law of war and eschewed theoretical expositions.

In similar style Bynkershoek (1673–1743) stressed the importance of modern practice and virtually ignored Natural Law. He made great contributions to the developing theories of the ⁸⁰ In Mare Clausum Sive de Dominio Maris, 1635.

⁸¹ On the Law of Nature and of Nations, 1672. See also Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 147–50, and M. Koskenniemi, 'Transformations of Natural Law: Germany 1648–1815', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 3.

⁸² Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 165–7.

rights and duties of neutrals in war, and after careful studies of the relevant facts decided in favour of the freedom of the seas.⁸³

The positivist approach, like much of modern thought, was derived from the empirical method adopted by the Renaissance. It was concerned not with an edifice of theory structured upon deductions from absolute principles, but rather with viewing events as they occurred and discussing actual problems that had arisen. Empiricism as formulated by Locke and Hume⁸⁴ denied the existence of innate principles and postulated that ideas were derived from experience. The scientific method of experiment and verification of hypotheses emphasised this approach.

From this philosophical attitude, it was a short step to reinterpreting international law not in terms of concepts derived from reason but rather in terms of what actually happened between the competing states. What states actually do was the key, not what states ought to do given basic rules of the law of nature. Agreements and customs recognised by the states were the essence of the law of nations.

Positivism developed as the modern nation-state system emerged, after the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, from the religious wars.⁸⁵ It coincided, too, with theories of sovereignty such as those propounded by Bodin and Hobbes,⁸⁶ which underlined the supreme power of the sovereign and led to notions of the sovereignty of states.

Elements of both positivism and naturalism appear in the works of Vattel (1714–67), a Swiss lawyer. His Droit des Gens was based on Natural Law principles yet was practically oriented. He introduced the doctrine of the equality of states into international law, declaring that a small republic was no less a sovereign than the most powerful kingdom, just as a dwarf was as much a man as a giant. By distinguishing between laws of conscience and laws of action and stating that only the latter were of practical concern, he minimised the importance of Natural Law.⁸⁷

Ironically, at the same time that positivist thought appeared to demolish the philosophical basis of the law of nature and relegate that theory to history, it re-emerged in a modern guise replete with significance for the future. Natural Law gave way to the concept of natural rights.⁸⁸

It was an individualistic assertion of political supremacy. The idea of the social contract, that an agreement between individuals pre-dated and justified civil society, emphasised the central role of the individual, and whether such a theory was interpreted pessimistically to demand an absolute sovereign as Hobbes declared, or optimistically to mean a conditional acceptance of authority as Locke maintained, it could not fail to be a revolutionary doctrine. The rights of man constitute the heart of the American⁸⁹ and French Revolutions and the essence of modern democratic society.

⁸³ Ibid., pp. 167–72. ⁸⁴ See Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 253–5.

⁸⁵ See L. Gross, 'The Peace of Westphalia 1648–1948', 42 AJIL, 1948, p. 20; Renegotiating Westphalia (ed. C. Harding and C. L. Lim), The Hague, 1999, especially chapter 1; and S. Beaulac, 'The Westphalian Legal Orthodoxy – Myth or Reality?', 2 Journal of the History of International Law, 2000, p. 148.

⁸⁶ Leviathan, 1651.

⁸⁷ See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 156–64. See also N. Onuf, 'Civitas Maxima: Wolff, Vattel and the Fate of Republicanism', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 280.

⁸⁸ See e.g. J. Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights, Oxford, 1980, and R. Tuck, Natural Rights Theories, Cambridge, 1979. See also G. Gordon, 'Natural Law in International Legal Theory: Linear and Dialectical Presentations', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 14.

⁸⁹ See e.g. N. Onuf and O. Onuf, Federal Unions, Modern World, Madison, 1994.

Yet, on the other hand, the doctrine of Natural Law has been employed to preserve the absoluteness of sovereignty and the sanctity of private possessions. The theory has a reactionary aspect because it could be argued that what was, ought to be, since it evolved from the social contract or was divinely ordained, depending upon how secular one construed the law of nature to be.

The Nineteenth Century

The eighteenth century was a ferment of intellectual ideas and rationalist philosophies that contributed to the evolution of the doctrine of international law. The nineteenth century by contrast was a practical, expansionist and positivist era. The Congress of Vienna, which marked the conclusion of the Napoleonic wars, enshrined the new international order which was to be based upon the European balance of power. International law became Eurocentric, the preserve of the civilised, Christian states, into which overseas and foreign nations could enter only with the consent of and on the conditions laid down by the Western powers. Paradoxically, whilst international law became geographically internationalised through the expansion of the European empires, it became less universalist in conception and more, theoretically as well as practically, a reflection of European values.⁹⁰ This theme, the relationship between universalism and particularism, appears time and again in international law. This century also saw the coming to independence of Latin America and the forging of a distinctive approach to certain elements of international law by the states of that region, especially with regard to, for example, diplomatic asylum and the treatment of foreign enterprises and nationals.⁹¹

There are many other features that mark the nineteenth century. Democracy and nationalism, both spurred on by the wars of the French revolution and empire, spread throughout the Continent and changed the essence of international relations.⁹² No longer the exclusive concern of aristocratic élites, foreign policy characterised both the positive and the negative faces of nationalism. Self-determination emerged to threaten the multinational empires of Central and Eastern Europe, while nationalism reached its peak in the unifications of Germany and Italy and began to exhibit features such as expansionism and doctrines of racial superiority. Democracy brought to the individual political influence and a say in government. It also brought home the realities of responsibility, for wars became the concern of all. Conscription was introduced throughout the Continent and large national armies replaced the small professional forces.⁹³ The Industrial Revolution mechanised Europe, created the economic dichotomy of capital and labour and propelled Western influence throughout the world. All these factors created an enormous increase in the number and variety of both public and private international ⁹⁰ See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 186–250, and, e.g., C. H. Alexandrowicz, The European–African Confrontation, Leiden, 1973. See also B. Bowden, ‘The Colonial Origins of International Law. European Expansion and the Classical Standard of Civilisation’, 7 Journal of the History of International Law, 2005, p. 1, and C. Sylvest, ‘International Law in Nineteenth-Century Britain’, 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 9.

⁹¹ See below, chapters 3 and 13 respectively. See also H. Gros Espiell, ‘La Doctrine du Droit International en Amérique Latine avant la Première Conférence Panaméricaine’, 3 Journal of the History of International Law, 2001, p. 1, and A. A. Cançado Trindade, ‘The Contribution of Latin American Legal Doctrine to the Progressive Development of International Law’, 376 HR, 2016, p. 9.

⁹² See especially A. Cobban, The Nation State and National Self-Determination, London, 1969.

⁹³ G. Best, Humanity in Warfare, London, 1980; Best, War and Law Since 1945, Oxford, 1994; and S. Bailey, Prohibitions and Restraints in War, Oxford, 1972.

institutions, and international law grew rapidly to accommodate them.⁹⁴ The development of trade and communications necessitated greater international co-operation as a matter of practical need. In 1815, the Final Act of the Congress of Vienna established the principle of freedom of navigation with regard to international waterways and set up a Central Commission of the Rhine to regulate its use. In 1856 a commission for the Danube was created and a number of other European rivers also became the subject of international agreements and arrangements. In 1865 the International Telegraphic Union was established and in 1874 the Universal Postal Union.⁹⁵

European conferences proliferated and contributed greatly to the development of rules governing the waging of war. The International Committee of the Red Cross, founded in 1863, helped promote the series of Geneva Conventions beginning in 1864 dealing with the 'humanisation' of conflict, and the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907 established the Permanent Court of Arbitration and dealt with the treatment of prisoners and the control of warfare.⁹⁶ Numerous other conferences, conventions and congresses emphasised the expansion of the rules of international law and the close network of international relations. In addition, the academic study of international law within higher education developed with the appointment of professors of the subject and the appearance of specialist textbooks emphasising the practice of states.

Positivist theories dominate this century. The proliferation of the powers of states and the increasing sophistication of municipal legislation gave force to the idea that laws were basically commands issuing from a sovereign person or body. Any question of ethics or morality was irrelevant to a discussion of the validity of man-made laws. The approach was transferred onto the international scene and immediately came face to face with the reality of a lack of supreme authority.

Since law was ultimately dependent upon the will of the sovereign in national systems, it seemed to follow that international law depended upon the will of the sovereign states.

This implied a confusion of the supreme legislator within a state with the state itself and thus positivism had to accept the metaphysical identity of the state. The state had a life and will of its own and so was able to dominate international law. This stress on the abstract nature of the state did not appear in all positivist theories and was a late development.⁹⁷

It was the German thinker Hegel who first analysed and proposed the doctrine of the will of the state. The individual was subordinate to the state, because the latter enshrined the 'wills' of all citizens and had evolved into a higher will, and on the external scene the state was sovereign and supreme.⁹⁸ Such philosophies led to disturbing results in the twentieth century and provoked a re-awakening of the law of nature, dormant throughout the nineteenth century.

The growth of international agreements, customs and regulations induced positivist theorists to tackle this problem of international law and the state; and as a result two schools of thought emerged.

The monists claimed that there was one fundamental principle which underlay both national and international law. This was variously posited as 'right' or social solidarity or the rule that agreements must be carried out (pacta sunt servanda). The dualists, more numerous and in a more truly positivist frame of mind, emphasised the element of consent.

⁹⁴ See e.g. Bowett's Law of International Institutions, and The Evolution of International Organisations (ed. E. Luard), Oxford, 1966.

⁹⁵ See further below, chapter 22. ⁹⁶ See further below, chapter 20. ⁹⁷ See below, chapter 2.

⁹⁸ See e.g. S. Avineri, Hegel's Theory of the Modern State, London, 1972, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 164–76.

For Triepel, another German theorist, international law and domestic (or municipal) law existed on separate planes, the former governing international relations, the latter relations between individuals and between the individual and the state. International law was based upon agreements between states (and such agreements included, according to Triepel, both treaties and customs) and because it was dictated by the ‘common will’ of the states it could not be unilaterally altered.⁹⁹

This led to a paradox. Could this common will bind individual states and, if so, why? It would appear to lead to the conclusion that the will of the sovereign state could give birth to a rule over which it had no control. The state will was not, therefore, supreme but inferior to a collection of states’ wills. Triepel did not discuss these points, but left them open as depending upon legal matters. Thus did positivist theories weaken their own positivist outlook by regarding the essence of law as beyond juridical description. The nineteenth century also saw the publication of numerous works on international law, which emphasised state practice and the importance of the behaviour of countries to the development of rules of international law.¹⁰⁰

The Twentieth Century

The First World War marked the close of a dynamic and optimistic century. European empires ruled the world and European ideologies reigned supreme, but the 1914–18 Great War undermined the foundations of European civilisation. Self-confidence faded, if slowly, the edifice weakened and the universally accepted assumptions of progress were increasingly doubted. Self-questioning was the order of the day and law as well as art reflected this.

The most important legacy of the 1919 Peace Treaty from the point of view of international relations was the creation of the League of Nations.¹⁰¹ The old anarchic system had failed and it was felt that new institutions to preserve and secure peace were necessary. The League consisted of an Assembly and an executive Council, but was crippled from the start by the absence of the United States and the Soviet Union for most of its life and remained a basically European organisation.

While it did have certain minor successes with regard to the maintenance of international order, it failed when confronted with determined aggressors. Japan invaded China in 1931 and two years later withdrew from the League. Italy attacked Ethiopia, and Germany embarked unhindered upon a series of internal and external aggressions. The Soviet Union, in a final gesture, was expelled from the organisation in 1939 following its invasion of Finland.

Nevertheless much useful groundwork was achieved by the League in its short existence and this helped to consolidate the United Nations later on.¹⁰²

⁹⁹ Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 576–7. See also below, chapter 4.

¹⁰⁰ See e.g. H. Wheaton, Elements of International Law, New York, 1836; W. E. Hall, A Treatise on International Law, Oxford, 1880; Von Martens, Völkerrecht, Berlin, 2 vols., 1883–6; Pradier-Fodéré, Traité de Droit International Public, Paris, 8 vols., 1855–1906; and Fiore, Il Diritto Internazionale Codificato e la Sua Sanzione Giuridica, 1890.

¹⁰¹ See Nussbaum, Law of Nations, pp. 251–90, and below, chapter 21. See also M. García-Salmones, ‘Early Twentieth Century Positivism Revisited’, in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 9.

¹⁰² See also G. Scott, The Rise and Fall of the League of Nations, London, 1973.

The Permanent Court of International Justice was set up in 1921 at The Hague and was succeeded in 1946 by the International Court of Justice.¹⁰³ The International Labour Organization was established soon after the end of the First World War and still exists today, and many other international institutions were inaugurated or increased their work during this period.

Other ideas of international law that first appeared between the wars included the system of mandates, by which colonies of the defeated powers were administered by the Allies for the benefit of their inhabitants rather than being annexed outright, and the attempt was made to provide a form of minority protection guaranteed by the League. This latter creation was not a great success but it paved the way for later concern to secure human rights.¹⁰⁴

After the trauma of the Second World War the League was succeeded in 1946 by the United Nations Organization, which tried to remedy many of the defects of its predecessor. It established its site at New York, reflecting the realities of the shift of power away from Europe, and determined to become a truly universal institution. The advent of decolonisation fulfilled this expectation and the General Assembly of the United Nations currently has 193 member states.¹⁰⁵

Many of the trends which first came to prominence in the nineteenth century have continued to this day. The vast increase in the number of international agreements and customs, the strengthening of the system of arbitration and the development of international organisations have established the essence of international law as it exists today.

Communist Approaches to International Law

Classic Marxist theory described law and politics as the means whereby the ruling classes maintained their domination of society. The essence of economic life was the ownership of the means of production, and all power flowed from this control. Capital and labour were the opposing theses and their mutual antagonism would eventually lead to a revolution out of which a new, non-exploitive form of society would emerge.¹⁰⁶ National states were dominated by the capitalist class and would have to disappear in the re-organising process. Indeed, the theory was that law and the state would wither away once a new basis for society had been established¹⁰⁷ and, because classical international law was founded upon the state, it followed that it too would go.

However, the reality of power and the existence of the USSR surrounded by capitalist nations led to a modification in this approach. The international system of states could not be changed overnight into a socialist order, so a period of transition was inevitable. Nevertheless basic changes were seen as having been wrought.

Professor Tunkin, for example, emphasised that the Russian October revolution produced a new series of international legal ideas. These, it is noted, can be divided into three basic, interconnected groups: (a) principles of socialist internationalism in relations between socialist states, (b) principles of equality and self-determination of nations and peoples, primarily aimed ¹⁰³ See below, chapter 18. ¹⁰⁴ See below, chapter 6. ¹⁰⁵ Following the admission of South Sudan in 2011.

¹⁰⁶ See Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, chapter 10, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, chapter 29.

¹⁰⁷ Engels, Anti-Duhring, quoted in Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 773–4.

against colonialism, and (c) principles of peaceful co-existence aimed at relations between states with different social systems.¹⁰⁸

We shall briefly look at these concepts in this section, but first a historical overview is necessary.

During the immediate post-revolution period, it was postulated that a transitional phase had commenced. During this time, international law as a method of exploitation would be criticised by the socialist state, but it would still be recognised as a valid system. The two Soviet theorists Korovin and Pashukanis were the dominant influences in this phase. The transitional period demanded compromises in that, until the universal victory of the revolution, some forms of economic and technical co-operation would be required since they were fundamental for the existence of the international social order.¹⁰⁹ Pashukanis expressed the view that international law was an inter-class law within which two antagonistic class systems would seek accommodation until the victory of the socialist system. Socialism and the Soviet Union could still use the legal institutions developed by and reflective of the capitalist system.¹¹⁰ However, with the rise of Stalinism and the ‘socialism in one country’ call, the position hardened. Pashukanis altered his line and recanted. International law was not a form of temporary compromise between capitalist states and the USSR but rather a means of conducting the class war. The Soviet Union was bound only by those rules of international law which accorded with its purposes.¹¹¹

The new approach in the late 1930s was reflected politically in Russia’s successful attempt to join the League of Nations and its policy of wooing the Western powers, and legally by the ideas of Vyshinsky. He adopted a more legalistic view of international law and emphasised the Soviet acceptance of such principles as national self-determination, state sovereignty and the equality of states, but not others. The role of international law did not constitute a single international legal system binding all states. The Soviet Union would act in pursuance of Leninist–Stalinist foreign policy ideals and would not be bound by the rules to which it had not given express consent.¹¹²

The years that followed the Second World War saw a tightening up of Soviet doctrine as the Cold War gathered pace, but with the death of Stalin and the succession of Khrushchev a thaw set in. In theoretical terms the law of the transitional stage was replaced by the international law of peaceful co-existence. War was no longer regarded as inevitable between capitalist and socialist countries and a period of mutual tolerance and co-operation was inaugurated.¹¹³

Tunkin recognised that there was a single system of international law of universal scope rather than different branches covering socialist and capitalist countries, and that international law was ¹⁰⁸ Theory of International Law, London, 1974, p. 4, and International Law (ed. G. I. Tunkin), Moscow, 1986, chapter 3. See also B. S. Chimni, International Law and World Order, New Delhi, 1993, chapter 5; K. Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, Leiden, 1970, especially chapter 1; and generally H. Baade, The Soviet Impact on International Law, Leiden, 1964, and Friedmann, Legal Theory, pp. 327–40. See also R. St J. Macdonald, ‘Rummaging in the Ruins, Soviet International Law and Policy in the Early Years: Is Anything Left?’, in Wellens, International Law, p. 61; International Law on the Left: Re-examining Marxist Legacies (ed. S. Marks), Cambridge, 2008; and R. Knox, ‘Marxist Approaches to International Law’, in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 15.

¹⁰⁹ Tunkin, Theory of International Law, p. 5.

¹¹⁰ Ibid., pp. 5–6. See also H. Babb and J. Hazard, Soviet Legal Philosophy, Cambridge, MA, 1951.

¹¹¹ Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, pp. 6–9. ¹¹² Ibid., p. 9.

¹¹³ Ibid., pp. 16–22. See also R. Higgins, Conflict of Interests, London, 1964, part III.

founded upon agreements between states which are binding upon them. He defined contemporary general international law as:

the aggregate of norms which are created by agreement between states of different social systems, reflect the concordant wills of states and have a generally democratic character, regulate relations between them in the process of struggle and co-operation in the direction of ensuring peace and peaceful co-existence and freedom and independence of peoples, and are secured when necessary by coercion effectuated by states individually or collectively.¹¹⁴

It is interesting to note the basic elements here, such as the stress on state sovereignty, the recognition of different social systems and the aim of peaceful co-existence. The role of sanctions in law is emphasised and reflects much of the positivist influence upon Soviet thought. Such preoccupations were also reflected in the definition of international law contained in the leading Soviet textbook by Professor Kozhevnikov and others where it was stated that:

international law can be defined as the aggregate of rules governing relations between states in the process of their conflict and co-operation, designed to safeguard their peaceful co-existence, expressing the will of the ruling classes of these states and defended in case of need by coercion applied by states individually or collectively.¹¹⁵

Originally, treaties alone were regarded as proper sources of international law but custom became accepted as a kind of tacit or implied agreement with great stress laid upon opinio juris or the legally binding element of custom. While state practice need not be general to create a custom, its recognition as a legal form must be.¹¹⁶

Peaceful co-existence itself rested upon certain basic concepts, for example non-intervention in the internal affairs of other states and the sovereignty of states. Any idea of a world authority was condemned as a violation of the latter principle. The doctrine of peaceful co-existence was also held to include such ideas as good neighbourliness, international co-operation and the observance in good faith of international obligations.

The concept was regarded as based on specific trends of laws of societal development and as a specific form of class struggle between socialism and capitalism, one in which armed conflict is precluded.¹¹⁷ It was an attempt, in essence, to reiterate the basic concepts of international law in a way that was taken to reflect an ideological trend. But it must be emphasised that the principles themselves have long been accepted by the international community.

While Tunkin at first attacked the development of regional systems of international law, he later came round to accepting a socialist law which reflected the special relationship between ¹¹⁴ Theory of International Law, p. 251. See also G. I. Tunkin, 'Co-existence and International Law', 95 HR, 1958, pp. 1, 51 ff., and E. McWhinney, 'Contemporary Soviet General Theory of International Law: Reflections on the Tunkin Era', 25 Canadian YIL, 1989, p. 187.

¹¹⁵ International Law, Moscow, 1957, p. 7.

¹¹⁶ Theory of International Law, p. 118. See also G. I. Tunkin, 'The Contemporary Soviet Theory of International Law', Current Legal Problems, London, 1978, p. 177.

¹¹⁷ Tunkin, 'Soviet Theory', pp. 35-48. See also F. Vallat, 'International Law - A Forward Look', 18 YBWA, 1964, p. 251; J. Hazard, 'Codifying Peaceful Co-existence', 55 AJIL, 1961, pp. 111-12; E. McWhinney, Peaceful Co-existence and Soviet-Western International Law, Leiden, 1964; and K. Grzybowski, 'Soviet Theory of International Law for the Seventies', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 862.

communist countries. The Soviet interventions in eastern Europe, particularly in Czechoslovakia in 1968, played a large part in augmenting such views.¹¹⁸ In the Soviet view relations between socialist (communist) states represented a new, higher type of international relations and a socialist international law. Common socio-economic factors and a political community created an objective basis for lasting friendly relations whereas, by contrast, international capitalism involved the exploitation of the weak by the strong. The principles of socialist or proletarian internationalism constituted a unified system of international legal principles between countries of the socialist bloc arising by way of custom and treaty. Although the basic principles of respect for state sovereignty, non-interference in internal affairs and equality of states and peoples existed in general international law, the same principles in socialist international law were made more positive by the lack of economic rivalry and exploitation and by increased co-operation. Accordingly, these principles incorporated not only material obligations not to violate each other's rights, but also the duty to assist each other in enjoying and defending such rights against capitalist threats.¹¹⁹

The Soviet emphasis on territorial integrity and sovereignty, while designed in practice to protect the socialist states in a predominantly capitalist environment, proved of great attraction to the developing nations of the 'Third World', anxious too to establish their own national identities and counteract Western financial and cultural influences.

With the decline of the Cold War and the onset of perestroika (re-structuring) in the Soviet Union, a process of re-evaluation in the field of international legal theory took place.¹²⁰ The concept of peaceful co-existence was modified and the notion of class warfare eliminated from the Soviet political lexicon. Global interdependence and the necessity for international co-operation were emphasised, as it was accepted that the tension between capitalism and socialism no longer constituted the major conflict in the contemporary world and that beneath the former dogmas lay many common interests.¹²¹ The essence of new Soviet thinking was stated to lie in the priority of universal human values and the resolution of global problems, which is directly linked to the growing importance of international law in the world community. It was also pointed out that international law had to be universal and not artificially divided into capitalist, socialist and Developing Countries' 'international law' systems.¹²²

Soviet writers and political leaders accepted that activities such as the interventions in Czechoslovakia in 1968 and Afghanistan in 1979 were contrary to international law, while the attempt to create a state based on the rule of law was seen as requiring the strengthening of the international legal system and the rule of law in international relations. In particular, a renewed emphasis upon the role of the United Nations became evident in Soviet policy.¹²³

The dissolution of the Soviet Union in 1991 marked the end of the Cold War and the re-emergence of a system of international relations based upon multiple sources of power untrammelled by ideological determinacy. From that point,¹²⁴ Russia as the continuation of the former Soviet Union (albeit in different political and territorial terms) entered into the Western political system and defined its actions in terms of its own national interests free from principled hostility. The return to statehood of the Baltic states and the independence of the other former republics of the Soviet Union, coupled with the collapse of Yugoslavia, has constituted a political upheaval of major significance. The Cold War had imposed a dualistic superstructure upon international relations that had had implications for virtually all serious international political disputes and had fettered the operations of the United Nations in particular. Although the Soviet regime had been changing its approach quite significantly, the formal demise both of the communist system and of the state itself altered the nature of the international system and this has inevitably had consequences for international law.¹²⁵ The mitigation of inexorable superpower confrontation (but not its disappearance) has led to an increase in instability in Europe and emphasised paradoxically both the revitalisation and the limitations of the United Nations.

¹¹⁸ See Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, pp. 16–22. ¹¹⁹ Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 431–43.

¹²⁰ See, for example, Perestroika and International Law (ed. A. Carty and G. Danilenko), Edinburgh, 1990; R. Müllerson, 'Sources of International Law: New Tendencies in Soviet Thinking', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 494; V. Vereshchetin and R. Müllerson, 'International Law in an Interdependent World', 28 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1990, p. 291; and R. Quigley, 'Perestroika and International Law', 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 788. See also L. Mälksoo, Russian Approaches to International Law, Oxford, 2015, and R. Müllerson, 'Ideology, Geopolitics and International Law', 15 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2016, p. 47.

¹²¹ Vereshchetin and Müllerson, 'International Law', p. 292. ¹²² Ibid. ¹²³ See Quigley, 'Perestroika', p. 794.

While relatively little has previously been known of Chinese attitudes, a few points can be made. Western concepts are regarded primarily as aimed at preserving the dominance of the bourgeois class on the international scene. Soviet views were partially accepted but since the late 1950s and the growing estrangement between the two major communist powers, the Chinese concluded that the Russians were interested chiefly in maintaining the status quo and Soviet–American superpower supremacy. The Soviet concept of peaceful co-existence as the mainstay of contemporary international law was treated with some suspicion, although reworked.¹²⁶

The Chinese conception of law was, for historical and cultural reasons, very different from that developed in the West. ‘Law’ never attained the important place in Chinese society that it did in European civilisation.¹²⁷ A sophisticated bureaucracy laboured to attain harmony and equilibrium, and a system of legal rights to protect the individual in the Western sense did not really develop. It was believed that society would be best served by example and established morality, rather than by rules and sanctions. This Confucian philosophy was, however, swept aside after the successful communist revolution, to be replaced by strict Marxism–Leninism, with its emphasis on class warfare.¹²⁸

The Chinese seem to have recognised several systems of international law, for example, Western, socialist and revisionist (Soviet Union), and to have implied that only with the ultimate ¹²⁴ See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994. See also The End of the Cold War (ed. P. Allan and K. Goldmann), Dordrecht, 1992, and W. M. Reisman, ‘International Law after the Cold War’, 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 859.

¹²⁵ See e.g. R. Bilder, ‘International Law in the “New World Order”: Some Preliminary Reflections’, 1 Florida State University Journal of Transnational Law and Policy, 1992, p. 1.

¹²⁶ See H. Chiu, ‘Communist China’s Attitude towards International Law’, 60 AJIL, 1966, p. 245; J. K. Fairbank, The Chinese World Order, Cambridge, 1968; J. Cohen, China’s Practice of International Law, Princeton, 1972; Anglo-Chinese Educational Trust, China’s World View, London, 1979; J. Cohen and H. Chiu, People’s China and International Law, Princeton, 2 vols., 1974; and C. Kim, ‘The People’s Republic of China and the Charter-based International Legal Order’, 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 317. See also chapter 5, p. 169.

¹²⁷ See Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 760–3; S. Van der Sprenkel, Legal Institutions in Northern China, New York, 1962; and R. Unger, Law in Modern Society, New York, 1976, pp. 86–109.

¹²⁸ Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, and H. Li, ‘The Role of Law in Communist China’, China Quarterly, 1970, p. 66, cited in Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, pp. 801–8. See also T. Ruskola, ‘China in the Age of the World Picture’, in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 7.

spread of socialism would a universal system be possible.¹²⁹ International agreements are regarded as the primary source of international law and China has entered into many treaties and conventions and carried them out as well as other nations.¹³⁰ One exception, of course, is China's disavowal of the so-called 'unequal treaties' whereby Chinese territory was annexed by other powers, in particular the Tsarist Empire, in the nineteenth century.¹³¹

On the whole, international law has been treated as part of international politics and subject to considerations of power and expediency, as well as ideology. Where international rules conform with Chinese policies and interests, then they will be observed. Where they do not, they will be ignored.

Now that the isolationist phase of its history is over, relations with other nations established and its entry into the United Nations secured, China has adopted a more active role in international relations, an approach more in keeping with its rapidly growing economic power. China has now become fully engaged in world politics and this has led to a legalisation of its view of international law, as indeed occurred with the Soviet Union.

However, this does not mean that either Russia or China have adopted the predominantly Western approaches to international law. Both states have maintained their focus upon state sovereignty, sovereign equality and non-intervention in internal affairs as bulwarks of the international system. This was manifested most recently in the Declaration on the Promotion of International Law issued by these states on 25 June 2016 in Beijing, which also underlined the continuing relevance of the Five Principles of Co-existence of 1954,¹³² and consent-based settlement of disputes.¹³³ Such an approach, while not incorrect in law as such, minimises the contemporary emphasis upon globalisation, international human rights and democratic governance.

The 'Developing Countries'

In the evolution of international affairs since the Second World War, one of the most decisive events has been the disintegration of the colonial empires and the birth of scores of new states in the so-called 'Developing Countries' or 'Third World'. This has thrust onto the scene states which carry with them a legacy of bitterness over their past status as well as a host of problems relating to their social, economic and political development.¹³⁴ In such circumstances it was only natural that the structure and doctrines of international law would come under attack. The nineteenth-century development of the law of nations founded upon Eurocentrism and imbued with the ¹²⁹ See e.g. Cohen and Chiu, People's China, pp. 62–4. See also Xue Hanqin, 'Chinese Contemporary Perspectives on International Law: History, Culture and International Law', 355 HR, 2012, p. 41.

¹³⁰ Ibid., pp. 77–82, and part VIII generally.

¹³¹ See e.g. I. Detter, 'The Problem of Unequal Treaties', 15 ICLQ, 1966, p. 1069; F. Nozari, Unequal Treaties in International Law, Stockholm, 1971; Chiu, 'Communist China's Attitude', pp. 239–67; and L.-F. Chen, State Succession Relating to Unequal Treaties, Hamden, 1974.

¹³² See further on this, chapter 5, p. 169.

¹³³ http://www.mid.ru/en/foreign_policy/news/-/asset_publisher/ckNonkJE02Bw/content/id/2331698.

¹³⁴ See e.g. R. P. Anand, 'Attitude of the Afro-Asian States Towards Certain Problems of International Law', 15 ICLQ, 1966, p. 35; T. O. Elias, New Horizons in International Law, Leiden, 1980; and Higgins, Conflict of Interests, part II. See also Hague Academy of International Law, Colloque, The Future of International Law in a Multicultural World, especially pp. 117–42; Henkin, How Nations Behave, pp. 121–7; A. A. Yusuf, 'Pan-Africanism and International Law', 369 HR, 2014, p. 165; and A. B. Lorca, Mestizo International Law, Cambridge, 2015.

values of Christian, urbanised and expanding Europe¹³⁵ did not, understandably enough, reflect the needs and interests of the newly independent states of the mid- and late twentieth century. It was felt that such rules had encouraged and then reflected their subjugation, and that changes were required.¹³⁶

It is basically those ideas of international law that came to fruition in the nineteenth century that have been so clearly rejected, that is, those principles that enshrined the power and domination of the West.¹³⁷ The underlying concepts of international law have not been discarded. On the contrary. The new nations have eagerly embraced the ideas of the sovereignty and equality of states and the principles of non-aggression and non-intervention, in their search for security within the bounds of a commonly accepted legal framework.

While this new internationalisation of international law that has occurred in the last fifty years has destroyed its European-based homogeneity, it has emphasised its universalist scope.¹³⁸ The composition of, for example, both the International Court of Justice and the Security Council of the United Nations mirrors such developments. Article 9 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice points out that the main forms of civilisation and the principal legal systems of the world must be represented within the Court, and there is an arrangement that of the ten non-permanent seats in the Security Council five should go to Afro-Asian states and two to Latin American states (the others going to Europe and other states). The composition of the International Law Commission has also recently been increased and structured upon geographic lines.¹³⁹

The influence of the new states has been felt most of all within the General Assembly, where they constitute a majority of the 193 member states.¹⁴⁰ The content and scope of the various resolutions and declarations emanating from the Assembly are proof of their impact and contain a record of their fears, hopes and concerns.

The Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 1960, for example, enshrined the right of colonies to obtain their sovereignty with the least possible delay and called for the recognition of the principle of self-determination. This principle, which is discussed elsewhere in this book,¹⁴¹ is regarded by most authorities as a settled rule of international law although with undetermined borders. Nevertheless, it symbolises the rise of the post-colonial states and the effect they are having upon the development of international law.

Their concern for the recognition of the sovereignty of states is complemented by their support of the United Nations and its Charter and supplemented by their desire for 'economic self-determination' or the right of permanent sovereignty over natural resources.¹⁴² This expansion of international law into the field of economics was a major development of the twentieth ¹³⁵ See e.g. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, vol. I, pp. 435–6. See also B. Roling, International Law in an Expanded World, Leiden, 1960, p. 10.

¹³⁶ The converse of this has been the view of some writers that the universalisation of international law has led to a dilution of its content: see e.g. Friedmann, Changing Structure, p. 6; J. Stone, Quest for Survival: The Role of Law and Foreign Policy, Sydney, 1961, p. 88; and J. Brierly, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, p. 43.

¹³⁷ See e.g. Alexandrowicz, European–African Confrontation.

¹³⁸ See F. C. Okoye, International Law and the New African States, London, 1972; T. O. Elias, Africa and the Development of International Law, Leiden, 1972; and Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 205–51.

¹³⁹ By General Assembly resolution 36/39, twenty-one of the thirty-four members are to be nationals of Afro-Asian–Latin American states.

¹⁴⁰ See above, note 105. ¹⁴¹ See below, chapter 5, p. 198. ¹⁴² See below, chapter 13, p. 631.

century and is evidenced in myriad ways, for example, by the creation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and the establishment of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank.

The interests of the new states of the Developing Countries are often in conflict with those of the industrialised nations, witness disputes over nationalisations. But it has to be emphasised that, contrary to many fears expressed in the early years of the decolonisation saga, international law has not been discarded nor altered beyond recognition. Its framework has been retained as the new states, too, wish to obtain the benefits of rules such as those governing diplomatic relations and the controlled use of force, while campaigning against rules which run counter to their perceived interests.

While the new countries share a common history of foreign dominance and underdevelopment, compounded by an awakening of national identity, it has to be recognised that they are not a homogeneous group. Widely differing cultural, social and economic attitudes and stages of development characterise them, and the rubric of the 'Third World' masks diverse political affiliations. On many issues the interests of the new states conflict with each other and this is reflected in the different positions adopted. The states possessing oil and other valuable natural resources are separated from those with few or none and the states bordering on oceans are to be distinguished from landlocked states. The list of diversity is endless and variety governs the make-up of the southern hemisphere to a far greater degree than in the north.

It is possible that in legal terms tangible differences in approach may emerge in the future as the passions of decolonisation die down and the Western supremacy over international law is further eroded. This trend will also permit a greater understanding of, and greater recourse to, historical traditions and conceptions that pre-date colonisation and an increasing awareness of their validity for the future development of international law.¹⁴³

In the medium term, however, it has to be recognised that with the end of the Cold War and the rapid development of Soviet (then Russian)–American co-operation (which may prove to be temporary only), the axis of dispute began to turn from East–West to North–South. This is beginning to manifest itself in a variety of issues ranging from economic law to the law of the sea and human rights, while the impact of modern technology has hardly yet been appreciated.¹⁴⁴ Together with such factors, the development of globalisation has put additional stress upon the traditional tension between universalism and particularism.¹⁴⁵ Globalisation in the sense of interdependence of a high order of individuals, groups and corporations, both public and private, across national boundaries, might be seen as the universalisation of Western civilisation and thus the triumph of one special particularism.

¹⁴³ See e.g. H. Sarin, 'The Asian–African States and the Development of International Law', in Hague Academy Colloque, p. 117; Bernhardt, Encyclopedia, vol. VII, pp. 205–51; O. Yasuaki, 'A Transcivilization Perspective on International Law', 342 HR, 2010, p. 77; Y. Masaharu, 'Significance of the History of the Law of Nations in Europe and East Asia', 371 HR, 2014, p. 277; and R. Westbrook, 'Islamic International Law and Public International Law: Separate Expressions of World Order', 33 Va. JIL, 1993, p. 819. See also C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, Oxford, 1958, p. 169. Note also the references by the Tribunal in the Eritrea/Yemen cases to historic title and regional legal traditions: see the judgment in Phase One: Territorial Sovereignty, 1998, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 37 ff. and Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation, 1999, 119 ILR, pp. 417, 448.

¹⁴⁴ See e.g. M. Lachs, 'Thoughts on Science, Technology and World Law', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 673.

¹⁴⁵ See Koskenniemi, Gentle Civilizer of Nations. See also G. Simpson, Great Powers and Outlaw States: Unequal Sovereigns in the International Legal Order, Cambridge, 2004.

On the other hand, particularism (in the guise of cultural relativism) has sometimes been used as a justification for human rights abuses free from international supervision or criticism.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990

L. Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995

R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994

A. Nussbaum, A Concise History of the Law of Nations, revised edition, New York, 1954

Research Handbook on the Theory and History of International Law (ed. A. Orakhelashvili), London, 2011

2

International Law Today

THE EXPANDING LEGAL SCOPE OF INTERNATIONAL CONCERN

International law since the middle of the last century has been developing in many directions, as the complexities of life in the modern era have multiplied. For, as already emphasised, law reflects the conditions and cultural traditions of the society within which it operates. The community evolves a certain specific set of values – social, economic and political – and this stamps its mark on the legal framework which orders life in that environment. Similarly, international law is a product of its environment. It has developed in accordance with the prevailing notions of international relations and to survive it must be in harmony with the realities of the age.

Nevertheless, there is a continuing tension between those rules already established and the constantly evolving forces that seek changes within the system. One of the major problems of international law is to determine when and how to incorporate new standards of behaviour and new realities of life into the already existing framework, so that, on the one hand, the law remains relevant and, on the other, the system itself is not too vigorously disrupted.

Changes that occur within the international community can be momentous and reverberate throughout the system. For example, the advent of nuclear arms created a status quo in Europe and a balance of terror throughout the world. It currently constitutes a factor of unease as certain states seek to acquire nuclear technology. Another example is the technological capacity to mine the oceans and the consequent questions as to the nature and beneficiaries of exploitation.¹ The rise of international terrorism has posited new challenges to the system as states and international organisations struggle to deal with this phenomenon while retaining respect for the sovereignty of states and for human rights.² There are several instances of how modern developments demand a constant reappraisal of the structure of international law and its rules.

The scope of international law today is immense. From the regulation of space expeditions to the question of the division of the ocean floor, and from the protection of human rights to the management of the international financial system, its involvement has spread out from the primary concern with the preservation of peace, to embrace all the interests of contemporary international life.

¹ See below, chapter 10. ² See below, chapter 19.

But the raison d'être of international law and the determining factor in its composition remains the needs and characteristics of the international political system. Where more than one entity exists within a system, there has to be some conception as to how to deal with other such entities, whether it be on the basis of co-existence or hostility. International law as it has developed since the seventeenth century has adopted the same approach and has in general (though with notable exceptions) eschewed the idea of permanent hostility and enmity. Because the state, while internally supreme, wishes to maintain its sovereignty externally and needs to cultivate other states in an increasingly interdependent world, it must acknowledge the rights of others. This acceptance of rights possessed by all states, something unavoidable in a world where none can stand alone, leads inevitably to a system to regulate and define such rights and, of course, obligations.

And so one arrives at some form of international legal order, no matter how unsophisticated and how occasionally positively disorderly.³ The current system developed in the context of European civilisation as it progressed, but this has changed. The rise of the United States and the Soviet Union mirrored the decline of Europe, while the process of decolonisation also had a considerable impact. More recently, the collapse of the Soviet Empire and the Soviet Union, the rise of India and China as major powers and the phenomenon of globalisation are also impacting deeply upon the system. Faced with radical changes in the structure of power, international law needs to come to terms with new ideas and challenges.

The Eurocentric character of international law has been gravely weakened in the last sixty years or so and the opinions, hopes and needs of other cultures and civilisations are now playing an increasing role in the evolution of world juridical thought.⁴

International law reflects first and foremost the basic state-oriented character of world politics and this essentially is because the state became over time the primary repository of the organised hopes of peoples, whether for protection or for more expansive aims. Units of formal independence benefiting from equal sovereignty in law and equal possession of the basic attributes of statehood⁵ have succeeded in creating a system enshrining such values. Examples that could be noted here include non-intervention in internal affairs, territorial integrity, non-use of force and equality of voting in the United Nations General Assembly. However, in addition to this, many factors cut across state borders and create a tension in world politics, such as inadequate economic relationships, international concern for human rights and the rise in new technological forces.⁶ State policies and balances of power, both international and regional, are a necessary framework within which international law operates, as indeed are domestic political conditions and tensions. Law mirrors the concern of forces within states and between states.

³ For views as to the precise definition and characteristics of the international order or system or community, see G. Schwarzenberger and E. D. Brown, A Manual of International Law, 6th edn, London, 1976, pp. 9–12; H. Yalem, 'The Concept of World Order', 29 YBWA, 1975; and I. Pogany, 'The Legal Foundations of World Order', 37 YBWA, 1983, p. 277.

⁴ See e.g. L. C. Green, 'Is There a Universal International Law Today?', 23 Canadian YIL, 1985, p. 3.

⁵ See below, chapter 5, p. 166.

⁶ For examples of this in the context of the law relating to territory, see M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, pp. 1–11.

It is also important to realise that states need law in order to seek and attain certain goals, whether these be economic well-being, survival and security or ideological advancement. The system therefore has to be certain enough for such goals to be ascertainable, and flexible enough to permit change when this becomes necessary due to the confluence of forces demanding it.⁷

International law, however, has not just expanded horizontally to embrace the new states which have been established since the end of the Second World War; it has extended itself to include individuals, groups and international organisations, both private and public, within its scope. It has also moved into new fields covering such issues as international trade, problems of environmental protection, human rights and outer space exploration.

The growth of positivism in the nineteenth century had the effect of focusing the concerns of international law upon sovereign states. They alone were the 'subjects' of international law and were to be contrasted with the status of non-independent states and individuals as 'objects' of international law. They alone created the law and restrictions upon their independence could not be presumed.⁸ But the gradual sophistication of positivist doctrine, combined with the advent of new approaches to the whole system of international relations, has broken down this exclusive emphasis and extended the roles played by non-state entities, such as individuals, multinational firms and international institutions.⁹ It was, of course, long recognised that individuals were entitled to the benefits of international law, but it is only recently that they have been able to act directly rather than rely upon their national states.

The Nuremberg and Tokyo Tribunals set up by the victorious Allies after the close of the Second World War were a vital part of this process. Many of those accused were found guilty of crimes against humanity and against peace and were punished accordingly. It was a recognition of individual responsibility under international law without the usual interposition of the state and has been reinforced with the establishment of the Yugoslav and Rwanda War Crimes Tribunals in the mid-1990s and the International Criminal Court in 1998.¹⁰ Similarly the 1948 Genocide Convention provided for the punishment of offenders after conviction by national courts or by an international criminal tribunal.¹¹ The developing concern with human rights is another aspect of this move towards increasing the role of the individual in international law. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the United Nations in 1948 lists a series of political and social rights, although it is only a guideline and not legally binding as such. The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms signed in 1950 and the International Covenants on Human Rights of 1966 are of a different nature and binding upon the signatories. In an effort to function satisfactorily various bodies of a supervisory and implementational nature were established. Within the European Union, individuals and corporations have certain rights of direct appeal to the European Court of Justice against decisions of the various Union institutions. In addition, individuals may appear before certain international tribunals. Nevertheless, the whole subject has been highly controversial, with some writers (for example, Soviet theorists prior to perestroika) denying that individuals may have rights as distinct from duties under international law, but it is indicative of the trend away from the exclusivity of the state.¹²

⁷ See S. Hoffman, 'International Systems and International Law', 14 World Politics, 1961–2, p. 205.

⁸ See the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, p. 18. ⁹ See further below, chapter 5. ¹⁰ See below, chapter 7. ¹¹ Ibid.

¹² See further below, chapter 6.

Together with the evolution of individual human rights, the rise of international organisations marks perhaps the key distinguishing feature of modern international law. In fact, international law cannot in the contemporary era be understood without reference to the growth in number and influence of such intergovernmental institutions, and of these the most important by far is the United Nations.¹³ The UN comprises the vast majority of states (there are currently 193 member states) and that alone constitutes a political factor of high importance in the process of diplomatic relations and negotiations and indeed facilitates international co-operation and norm creation. Further, of course, the existence of the Security Council as an executive organ with powers to adopt resolutions in certain circumstances that are binding upon all member states is unique in the history of international relations.

International organisations have now been accepted as possessing rights and duties of their own and a distinctive legal personality. The International Court of Justice in 1949 delivered an Advisory Opinion¹⁴ in which it stated that the United Nations was a subject of international law and could enforce its rights by bringing international claims, in this case against Israel following the assassination of Count Bernadotte, a United Nations official. Such a ruling can be applied to embrace other international institutions, like the International Labour Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization, which each have a judicial character of their own. Thus, while states remain the primary subjects of international law, they are now joined by other non-state entities, whose importance is likely to grow even further in the future.

The growth of regional organisations should also be noted at this stage. Many of these were created for reasons of military security, for example NATO and the opposing Warsaw Pact organisations, others as an expression of regional and cultural identity such as the Organisation of African Unity (now the African Union) and the Organization of American States. In a class of its own is the European Union which has gone far down the road of economic co-ordination and standardisation and has a range of common institutions serviced by a growing bureaucracy stationed primarily at Brussels.

Such regional organisations have added to the developing sophistication of international law by the insertion of 'regional-international law sub-systems' within the universal framework and the consequent evolution of rules that bind only member states.¹⁵

The range of topics covered by international law has expanded hand in hand with the upsurge in difficulties faced and the proliferation in the number of participants within the system. It is no longer exclusively concerned with issues relating to the territory or jurisdiction of states narrowly understood, but is beginning to take into account the specialised problems of contemporary society. Many of these have already been referred to, such as the vital field of human rights, the growth of an international economic law covering financial and development matters, concern with environmental despoliation, the space exploration effort and the exploitation of the resources of the oceans and deep seabed. One can mention also provisions relating to the bureaucracy of international institutions (international administrative law), international labour standards, health regulations and communications controls. Many of these trends may be seen as falling within, or rather reflecting, the phenomenon of globalisation, a term which encompasses ¹³ See further below, chapter 21.

¹⁴ Reparation for Injuries Suffered in the Service of the United Nations, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318.

¹⁵ See generally below, chapter 22.

the inexorable movement to greater interdependence founded upon economic, communications and cultural bases and operating quite independently of national regulation.¹⁶ This in turn stimulates disputes of an almost ideological nature concerning, for example, the relationship between free trade and environmental protection.¹⁷ To this may be added the pressures of democracy and human rights, both operating to some extent as countervailing influences to the classical emphasis upon the territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction of states.

MODERN THEORIES AND INTERPRETATIONS

At this point some modern theories as to the nature and role of international law will be briefly noted.

Positive Law and Natural Law

Throughout the history of thought there has been a complex relationship between idealism and realism, between the way things ought to be and the way things are, and the debate as to whether legal philosophy should incorporate ethical standards or confine itself to an analysis of the law as it stands is a vital one that continues today.¹⁸

The positivist school, which developed so rapidly in the pragmatic, optimistic world of the nineteenth century, declared that law as it exists should be analysed empirically, shorn of all ethical elements. Moral aspirations were all well and good but had no part in legal science. Man-made law must be examined as such and the metaphysical speculations of Natural Law rejected because what counted were the practical realities, not general principles which were imprecise and vague, not to say ambiguous.¹⁹

¹⁶ See e.g. A. Giddens, The Consequences of Modernity, Stanford, 1990; S. Sur, 'The State Between Fragmentation and Globalisation', 8 EJIL, 1997, p. 421; B. Simma and A. Paulus, 'The "International Community": Facing the Challenge of Globalisation. General Conclusions', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 266; P. M. Dupuy, 'International Law: Torn Between Coexistence, Co-operation and Globalisation. General Conclusions', 9 EJIL, 1998, p. 278; C. Ku, International Law, International Relations and Global Governance, London, 2012; and R. Domingo, The New Global Law, Cambridge, 2011. See also the Declaration of Judge Bedjaoui in the Advisory Opinion on The Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 270–1. Note that Philip Bobbitt has described five developments challenging the nation-state system, and thus in essence characterising the globalisation challenge, as follows: the recognition of human rights as norms requiring adherence within all states regardless of internal laws; the widespread deployment of weapons of mass destruction rendering the defence of state borders ineffectual for the protection of the society within; the proliferation of global and transnational threats transcending state boundaries such as those that damage the environment or threaten states through migration, population expansion, disease or famine; the growth of a world economic regime that ignores borders in the movement of capital investment to a degree that effectively curtails states in the management of their economic affairs; and the creation of a global communications network that penetrates borders electronically and threatens national languages, customs and cultures, The Shield of Achilles, London, 2002, p. xxii.

¹⁷ See e.g. Myers v. Canada 121 ILR, pp. 72, 110.

¹⁸ See e.g. The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law (ed. A. Orford and F. Hoffmann), Oxford, 2016; D. Lyons, Ethics and the Rule of Law, London, 1984; R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977; H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961; and P. Stein and J. Shand, Legal Values in Western Society, Edinburgh, 1974. See also R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985; Research Handbook on the Theory and History of International Law (ed. A. Orakhelashvili), London, 2011; The Philosophy of International Law (ed. S. Besson and J. Tasioulas), Oxford, 2010; and International Legal Positivism in a Post-Modern World (ed. J. Kammerhofer and J. d'Aspremont), Cambridge, 2014.

¹⁹ See Hart, Concept of Law, and Hart, 'Positivism and the Separation of Law and Morals', 71 Harvard Law Review, 1958, p. 593. Cf. L. Fuller, 'Positivism and Fidelity to Law – A Reply to Professor Hart', 71 Harvard Law Review, 1958, p. 630.

This kind of approach to law in society reached its climax with Kelsen's 'Pure Theory of Law'. Kelsen defined law solely in terms of itself and eschewed any element of justice, which was rather to be considered within the discipline of political science. Politics, sociology and history were all excised from the pure theory which sought to construct a logical unified structure based on a formal appraisal.²⁰

Law was to be regarded as a normative science, that is, consisting of rules which lay down patterns of behaviour. Such rules, or norms, depend for their legal validity on a prior norm and this process continues until one reaches what is termed the basic norm of the whole system. This basic norm is the foundation of the legal edifice, because rules which can be related back to it therefore become legal rules. To give a simple example, a court order empowering an official to enforce a fine is valid if the court had that power which depends upon an Act of Parliament establishing the court. A rule becomes a legal rule if it is in accordance with a previous (and higher) legal rule and so on. Layer builds upon layer and the foundation of it all is the basic norm.²¹

The weakness of Kelsen's 'pure' system lies primarily in the concept of the basic norm for it relies for its existence upon non-legal issues. In fact, it is a political concept, and in the United Kingdom it would probably be the principle of the supremacy of Parliament.²²

This logical, structured system of validity founded upon an extra-legal concept encounters difficulties when related to international law. For Kelsen international law is a primitive legal order because of its lack of strong legislative, judicial and enforcement organs and its consequent resemblance to a pre-state society. It is accordingly characterised by the use of self-help.²³ The principles of international law are valid if they can be traced back to the basic norm of the system, which is hierarchical in the same sense as a national legal system. For Kelsen, the basic norm is the rule that identifies custom as the source of law, or stipulates that 'the states ought to behave as they customarily behaved'.²⁴ One of the prime rules of this category is pacta sunt servanda declaring that agreements must be carried out in good faith and upon that rule is founded the second stage within the international legal order. This second stage consists of the network of norms created by international treaties and conventions and leads on to the third stage which includes those rules established by organs which have been set up by international treaties, for instance, decisions of the International Court of Justice.²⁵

The problem with Kelsen's formulation of the basic norm of international law is that it appears to be tautological: it merely repeats that states which obey rules ought to obey those rules.²⁶

See also D. Anzilotti, Cours de Droit International, Paris, 1929; and B. Kingsbury, 'Legal Positivism as Normative Politics: International Society, Balance of Power and Lassa Oppenheim's Positive International Law', 13 EJIL, 2002, p. 401.

²⁰ 'The Pure Theory of Law', 50 LQR, 1934, pp. 474, 477–85 and 51 LQR, 1935, pp. 517–22. See also the articles collected in 'The European Tradition in International Law: Hans Kelsen', 9 EJIL, 1998, pp. 287 ff.; J. Kammerhofer, Uncertainty in International Law: A Kelsenian Perspective, London, 2010; and J. von Bernstorff, The Public International Theory of Hans Kelsen, Cambridge, 2010.

²¹ Kelsen, 'Pure Theory'.

²² See J. Stone, 'Mystery and Mystique in the Basic Norm', 26 MLR, 1963, p. 34; and J. Raz, Practical Reason and Norms, Oxford, 1975, pp. 129–31.

²³ General Theory of Law and State, Cambridge, 1946, pp. 328 ff. See also J. Lador-Lederer, 'Some Observations on the "Vienna School" in International Law', 17 NILR, 1970, p. 126.

²⁴ Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, pp. 369–70. ²⁵ Ibid.

²⁶ Hart terms this 'mere useless reduplication': Concept of Law, p. 230.

It seems to leave no room for the progressive development of international law by new practices accepted as law for that involves states behaving differently from the way they have been behaving. Above all, it fails to answer the question as to why custom is binding.

Nevertheless, it is a model of great logical consistency which helps explain, particularly with regard to national legal systems, the proliferation of rules and the importance of validity which gives, as it were, a mystical seal of approval to the whole structured process. It helps illustrate how rule leads to rule as stage succeeds stage in a progression of norms forming a legal order.

Another important element in Kelsen's interpretation of law is his extreme 'monist' stance. International law and municipal law are not two separate systems but one interlocking structure and the former is supreme. Municipal law finds its ultimate justification in the rules of international law by a process of delegation within one universal normative system.²⁷

Kelsen's pure theory seemed to mark the end of that particular road, and positivism was analysed in more sociological terms by Hart in his book The Concept of Law in 1961.

Hart comprehends law as a system of rules, based upon the interaction of primary and secondary rules. The former, basically, specify standards of behaviour while the latter provide the means for identifying and developing them and thus specify the constitutional procedures for change. Primitive societies would possess only the primary rules and so would be characterised by uncertainty, inefficiency and stagnation, but with increasing sophistication the secondary rules would develop and identify authority and enable the rules to be adapted to changing circumstances in a regular and accepted manner.²⁸

The international legal order is a prime example of a simple form of social structure which consists only of the primary rules, because of its lack of a centralised legislature, network of recognised courts with compulsory jurisdiction and organised means of enforcement. Accordingly, it has no need of, or rather has not yet evolved, a basic norm, or in Hart's terminology a rule of recognition, by reference to which the validity of all the rules may be tested. Following this train of thought, Hart concludes that the rules of international law do not as yet constitute a 'system' but are merely a 'set of rules'. Of course, future developments may see one particular principle, such as pacta sunt servanda, elevated to the state of a validating norm but in the present situation this has not yet occurred.²⁹

This approach can be criticised for its over-concentration upon rules to the exclusion of other important elements in a legal system such as principles and policies,³⁰ and, more especially as regards international law, for failing to recognise the sophistication or vitality of the system. In particular, the distinction between a system and a set of rules in the context of international law is a complex issue and one which is difficult to delineate.

The strength of the positivist movement waned in the last century as the old certainties disintegrated and social unrest grew. Law, as always, began to reflect the dominant pressures of the age, and new theories as to the role of law in society developed. Writers started ²⁷ General Theory of Law and State, pp. 366–8. See further below, chapter 4.

²⁸ Concept of Law, chapter 5. See also e.g. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously; Raz, Practical Reason; and N. MacCormick, Legal Reasoning and Legal Theory, Oxford, 1978.

²⁹ Concept of Law, pp. 228–31.

³⁰ See Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously. See also Dworkin, 'A New Philosophy of International Law', 41 Philosophy and Public Affairs, 2013, p. 2.

examining the effects of sociological phenomena upon the legal order and the nature of the legal process itself, with analyses of judicial behaviour and the means whereby rules were applied in actual practice. This was typified by Roscoe Pound's view of the law as a form of social engineering, balancing the various interests within the society in the most efficacious way.³¹ Law was regarded as a method of social control and conceptual approaches were rejected in favour of functional analyses. What actually happened within the legal system, what claims were being brought and how they were satisfied: these were the watchwords of the sociological school.³²

It was in one sense a move away from the ivory tower and into the courtroom. Empirical investigations proliferated, particularly in the United States, and the sciences of psychology and anthropology as well as sociology became allied to jurisprudence. Such concern with the wider social context led to the theories of Realism, which treated law as an institution functioning within a particular community with a series of jobs to do. A study of legal norms within a closed logical system in the Kelsenite vein was regarded as unable to reveal very much of the actual operation of law in society. For this an understanding of the behaviour of courts and the various legal officials was required. Historical and ethical factors were relegated to a minor role within the realist-sociological tradition, with its concentration upon field studies and 'technical' dissections. Legal rules were no longer to be accepted as the heart of the legal system.³³

Before one looks at contemporary developments of this approach and how they have affected interpretations of international law, the revival of Natural Law has first to be considered.

In the search for meaning in life and an ethical basis to law, Natural Law has adopted a variety of different approaches. One of them has been a refurbishment of the principles enumerated by Aquinas and adopted by the Catholic Church, emphasising the dignity of man and the supremacy of reason together with an affirmation of the immorality (though not necessarily the invalidity) of law contrary to right reason and the eternal law of God.³⁴ A more formalistic and logic-oriented trend has been exemplified by writers such as Stammler, who tried to erect a logical structure of law with an inbuilt concept of 'Natural Law with a changing content'. This involved contrasting the concept of law, which was intended to be an abstract, formal definition universally applicable, with the idea of law, which embodies the purposes and direction of the system. This latter precept varied, of necessity, in different social and cultural contexts.³⁵

As distinct from this formal idealist school, there has arisen a sociologically inspired approach to the theme of Natural Law represented by Gény and Duguit. This particular trend rejected the emphasis upon form, and concentrated instead upon the definition of Natural Law in terms of universal factors, physical, psychological, social and historical, which dominate the framework of society within which the law operated.³⁶

³¹ See e.g. Philosophy of Law, New Haven, 1954, pp. 42–7. See also M. D. A. Freeman, The Legal Structure, London, 1974, chapter 4.

³² Outlines of Jurisprudence, 5th edn, Cambridge, 1943, pp. 116–19.

³³ See e.g. K. Llewellyn, The Common Law Tradition, Boston, 1960, and Jurisprudence, Chicago, 1962. See also W. Twining, Karl Llewellyn and the Realist Movement, London, 1973; and L. Loevinger, 'Jurimetrics – The Next Step Forward', 33 Minnesota Law Review, 1949, p. 455.

³⁴ See e.g. J. Maritain, Man and the State, Paris, 1951; and J. Dabin, General Theory of Law, 2nd edn, 1950.

³⁵ See e.g. R. Stammler, Theory of Justice, New York, 1925; and G. Del Vecchio, Formal Bases of Law, Boston, 1921.

³⁶ See e.g. F. Gény, Méthode d'Interprétation et Sources en Droit Privé Positif, Paris, 1899; and L. Duguit, Law in the Modern State, New York, 1919, and 'Objective Law', 20 Columbia Law Review, 1920, p. 817.

The discussion of Natural Law increased and gained in importance following the Nazi experience. It stimulated a German philosopher, Radbruch, to formulate a theory whereby unjust laws had to be opposed by virtue of a higher, Natural Law.³⁷

As far as international law is concerned, the revival of Natural Law came at a time of increasing concern with international justice and the formation of international institutions. Many of the ideas and principles of international law today are rooted in the notion of Natural Law and the relevance of ethical standards to the legal order, such as the principles of non-aggression and human rights.³⁸

New Approaches³⁹

Traditionally, international law has been understood in a historical manner and studied chronologically. This approach was especially marked in the nineteenth century as international relations multiplied and international conferences and agreements came with increasing profusion. Between the world wars, the opening of government archives released a wealth of material and further stimulated a study of diplomatic history, while the creation of such international institutions as the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice encouraged an appreciation of institutional processes.

However, after the Second World War a growing trend appeared intent upon the analysis of power politics and the comprehension of international relations in terms of the capacity to influence and dominate. The approach was a little more sophisticated than might appear at first glance, for it involved a consideration of social and economic as well as political data that had a bearing upon a state's ability to withstand as well as direct pressures.⁴⁰ Nevertheless, it was a pessimistic interpretation because of its centring upon power and its uses as the motive force of inter-state activity.

The next 'wave of advance', as it has been called, witnessed the successes of the behaviouralist movement. This particular train of thought introduced elements of psychology, anthropology and sociology into the study of international relations and paralleled similar developments

³⁷ Introduction to Legal Philosophy, 1947. See also Hart, 'Positivism'; Fuller, 'Positivism', and Fuller, 'The Legal Philosophy of Gustav Radbruch', 6 Journal of Legal Education, 1954, p. 481.

³⁸ See H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950. Note more generally the approach of J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice, Oxford, 1971, and A. D'Amato, 'International Law and Rawls' Theory of Justice', 5 Denver Journal of International Law and Policy, 1975, p. 525. See also J. Boyle, 'Ideals and Things: International Legal Scholarship and the Prison-house of Language', 26 Harvard International Law Journal, 1985, p. 327; A. D'Amato, 'Is International Law Part of Natural Law?', 9 Vera Lex, 1989, p. 8; E. Midgley, The Natural Law Tradition and the Theory of International Relations, London, 1975; and C. Dominicé, 'Le Grand Retour du Droit Naturel en Droit des Gens', Mélanges Grossen, 1992, p. 399.

³⁹ See e.g. B. S. Chimni, International Law and World Order, New Delhi, 1993; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 1; and R. Müllerson, Ordering Anarchy: International Law in International Society, The Hague, 2000. See also D. J. Bederman, The Spirit of International Law, Athens, 2002; A. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; International Law and its Others (ed. A. Orford), Cambridge, 2006; S. Rosenne, The Perplexities of Modern International Law, Leiden, 2004; and P. M. Dupuy, L'Unité de l'Ordre Juridique International, Leiden, 2003.

⁴⁰ See e.g. H. Morgenthau, Politics Among Nations, 4th edn, New York, 1967, and K. Thompson, Political Realism and the Crisis of World Politics: An American Approach to Foreign Policy, Princeton, 1960. See also A. Slaughter Burley, 'International Law and International Relations Theory: A Dual Agenda', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 205, and A.-M. Slaughter, A New World Order, Princeton, 2004; R. Aron, Paix et Guerre Entre des Nations, Paris, 1984; M. Koskenniemi, The Gentle Civilizer of Nations, Cambridge, 2001, chapter 6.

within the realist school. It reflected the altering emphasis from analyses in terms of idealistic or cynical ('realistic') conceptions of the world political order, to a mechanistic discussion of the system as it operates today, by means of field studies and other tools of the social sciences. Indeed, it is more a method of approach to law and society than a theory in the traditional sense.⁴¹

One can trace the roots of this school of thought to the changing conceptions of the role of government in society. The nineteenth-century ethic of individualism and the restriction of state intervention to the very minimum has changed radically. The emphasis is now more upon the responsibility of the government towards its citizens, and the phenomenal growth in welfare legislation illustrates this. Rules and regulations controlling wide fields of human activity, something that would have been unheard of in the mid-nineteenth century, have proliferated throughout the nations of the developed world and theory has had to try and keep up with such re-orientations.

Since the law now plays a much deeper role in society with the increase in governmental intervention, impetus has been given to legal theories that reflect this growing involvement. Law, particularly in the United States, is seen as a tool to effect changes in society and realist doctrine underlines this. It emphasises that it is community values and policy decisions that determine the nature of the law and accordingly the role of the judge is that much more important. He is no longer an interpreter of a body of formal legal rules, but should be seen more as an active element in making decisions of public policy.

This means that to understand the operation of law, one has to consider the character of the particular society, its needs and values. Law thus becomes a dynamic process and has to be studied in the context of society and not merely as a collection of legal rules capable of being comprehended on their own. The social sciences have led the way in this reinterpretation of society and their influence has been very marked on the behavioural method of looking at the law, not only in terms of general outlook but also in providing the necessary tools to dissect society and discover the way it operates and the direction in which it is heading. The interdisciplinary nature of the studies in question was emphasised, utilising all the social sciences, including politics, economics and philosophy.⁴² In particular the use of the scientific method, such as obtaining data and quantitative analysis, has been very much in evidence.

Behaviouralism has divided the field of international relations into basically two studies, the first being a consideration of foreign policy techniques and the reasons whereby one particular course of action is preferred to another, and the second constituting the international systems analysis approach.⁴³ This emphasises the interaction of the various players on the international ⁴¹ See e.g. Contending Approaches to International Politics (ed. K. Knorr and J. Rosenau), Princeton 1969, and W. Gould and M. Barkun, International Law and the Social Sciences, Princeton, 1970.

⁴² Note Barkun's comment that 'the past theoretical approaches of the legal profession have involved logical manipulations of a legal corpus more often than the empirical study of patterns of human behaviour', Law Without Sanctions, New Haven, 1968, p. 3. See also R. A. Falk, 'New Approaches to the Study of International Law', in New Approaches to International Relations (ed. M. A. Kaplan), New York, 1968, pp. 357–80, and J. Frankel, Contemporary International Theory and the Behaviour of States, London, 1973, pp. 21–2. Note also M. Hirsch, Invitation to the Sociology of International Law, Oxford, 2015, referring to the influence of the social constructivist perspective.

⁴³ See e.g. C. A. McClelland, Theory and the International System, New York, 1966; M. A. Kaplan, System and Process in International Politics, New York, 1964; M. A. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961; and R. A. Falk and C. Black, The Future of International Legal Order, Princeton, 1969. See also stage and the effects of such mutual pressures upon both the system and the participants. More than that, it examines the various international orders that have existed throughout history in an attempt to show how the dynamics of each particular system have created their own rules and how they can be used as an explanation of both political activity and the nature of international law. In other words, the nature of the international system can be examined by the use of particular variables in order to explain and to predict the role of international law.

For example, the period between 1848 and 1914 can be treated as the era of the 'balance of power' system. This system depended upon a number of factors, such as a minimum number of participants (accepted as five), who would engage in a series of temporary alliances in an attempt to bolster the weak and restrict the strong, for example the coalitions Britain entered into to overawe France. It was basic to this system that no nation wished totally to destroy any other state, but merely to humble and weaken, and this contributed to the stability of the order.⁴⁴

This system nurtured its own concepts of international law, especially that of sovereignty which was basic to the idea of free-floating alliances and the ability of states to leave the side of the strong to strengthen the weak. The balance of power collapsed with the First World War and, after a period of confusion, a discernible, loose 'bipolar' system emerged in the years following the Second World War.

This was predicated upon the polarisation of capitalism and communism and the consequent rigid alliances that were created. It included the existence of a 'Third World' of basically non-aligned states, the objects of rivalry and of competition while not in themselves powerful enough to upset the bipolar system. This kind of order facilitated 'frontier' conflicts where the two powers collided, such as in Korea, Berlin and Vietnam, as well as modified the nature of sovereignty within the two alliances thus allowing such organisations as NATO and the European Community (subsequently European Union) on the one hand, and the Warsaw Pact and COMECON on the other, to develop. The other side of this coin has been the freedom felt by the superpowers to control wavering states within their respective spheres of influence, for example, the Soviet actions in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia and those of the USA, particularly within Latin America.⁴⁵

Behaviouralism has been enriched by the use of such techniques as games theory.⁴⁶ This is a mathematical method of studying decision-making in conflict situations where the parties react rationally in the struggle for benefits. It can be contrasted with the fight situation, where the essence is the actual defeat of the opponent (for example, the Israel–Arab conflict), and with the debate situation, which is an effort to convince the participants of the rightness of one's cause. Other factors which are taken into account include communications, integration, environment

A. Kiss and D. Shelton, 'Systems Analysis of International Law: A Methodological Inquiry', 17 Netherlands YIL, 1986, p. 45.

⁴⁴ See J. Frankel, International Relations in a Changing World, London, 1979, pp. 152–7, and Kaplan and Katzenbach, Political Foundations, pp. 62–70.

⁴⁵ Kaplan and Katzenbach, Political Foundations, pp. 50–5. As far as the systems approach is concerned, see also S. Hoffman, 'International Systems and International Law', in The International System (ed. K. Knorr and S. Verba), Westport, 1961, p. 205; G. Clark and L. Sohn, World Peace Through World Law, 3rd edn, Boston, 1966; and The Strategy of World Order (ed. R. A. Falk and S. Mendlovitz), New York, 4 vols., 1966. See now Bobbitt, Shield, book II.

⁴⁶ See e.g. R. Lieber, Theory and World Politics, London, 1972, chapter 2; Game Theory and Related Approaches to Social Behaviour (ed. H. Shubik), London, 1964; and W. J. M. Mackenzie, Politics and Social Sciences, London, 1967.

and capabilities. Thus the range and complexity of this approach far exceeds that of prior theories.

All this highlights the switch in emphasis that has taken place in the consideration of law in the world community. The traditional view was generally that international law constituted a series of rules restricting the actions of independent states and forming exceptions to state sovereignty. The new theories tend to look at the situation differently, more from the perspective of the international order expanding its horizons than the nation-state agreeing to accept certain defined limitations upon its behaviour.

The rise of quantitative research has facilitated the collation and ordering of vast quantities of data. It is primarily a methodological approach utilising political, economic and social data and statistics, and converting facts and information into a form suitable for scientific investigation. Such methods with their behavioural and quantitative aspects are beginning to impinge upon the field of international law. They enable a greater depth of knowledge and comprehension to be achieved and a wider appreciation of all the various processes at work.⁴⁷

The behavioural approach to international relations has been translated into international law theory by a number of writers, in particular Professor McDougal, with some important modifications. This 'policy-orientated' movement regards law as a comprehensive process of decision-making rather than as a defined set of rules and obligations. It is an active all-embracing approach, seeing international law as a dynamic system operating within a particular type of world order.⁴⁸ It therefore minimises the role played by rules, for such a traditional conception of international law 'quite obviously offers but the faintest glimpse of the structures, procedures and types of decision that take place in the contemporary world community'.⁴⁹ It has been emphasised that the law is a constantly evolving process of decision-making and the way that it evolves will depend on the knowledge and insight of the decision-maker.⁵⁰ In other words, it is the social process of constant human interaction that is seen as critical and, in this process, claims are continually being made in an attempt to maximise values at the disposal of the participants. Eight value-institution categories have been developed to analyse this process: power, wealth, enlightenment, skill, well-being, affection, respect and rectitude. This list may be further developed. It is ⁴⁷ Note also the functionalist approach to international law. This orientation emphasises the practical benefits to states of co-operation in matters of mutual interest: see e.g. W. Friedmann, An Introduction to World Politics, 5th edn, London, 1965, p. 57; F. Haas, Beyond the Nation State, Stanford, 1964; D. Mitrany, A Working Peace System, London, 1946; C. W. Jenks, Law, Freedom and Welfare, London, 1964; and J. Stone, Legal Controls of International Conflict, London, 1959. See also D. Johnston, 'Functionalism in the Theory of International Law', 25 Canadian YIL, 1988, p. 3.

⁴⁸ See e.g. M. S. McDougal, 'International Law, Power and Policy', 82 HR, 1952, p. 133; M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and W. M. Reisman, 'Theories about International Law: Prologue to a Configurative Jurisprudence', 8 Va. JIL, 1968, p. 188; M. S. McDougal, 'International Law and the Future', 50 Mississippi Law Journal, 1979, p. 259; H. Lasswell and M. S. McDougal, Jurisprudence for a Free Society, Yale, 1992; Lung-Chu Chen, An Introduction to Contemporary International Law: A Policy-Oriented Perspective, 3rd edn, 2015, Oxford and Critical International Law (ed. P. Singh and B. Mayer), Oxford, 2014. See also G. Scelle, Manuel de Droit International, Paris, 1948, and Chimni, International Law, chapter 3.

⁴⁹ M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman, International Law in Contemporary Perspective, New Haven, 1980, p. 5.

⁵⁰ M. S. McDougal, 'The Policy-Oriented Approach to Law', 40 Virginia Quarterly Review, 1964, p. 626. See also E. Suzuki, 'The New Haven School of International Law: An Invitation to a Policy-Oriented Jurisprudence', 1 Yale Studies in World Public Order, 1974, p. 1; Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honour of W. Michael Reisman (ed. H. D. Betz, M. H. Arsanjani and J. Cogan), The Hague, 2010; and H. Saberi, 'Yale's Policy Science and International Law: Between Legal Formalism and the Policy Conceptualism', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 21.

not exhaustive. Law is to be regarded as a product of such social processes.⁵¹ International law is the whole process of authoritative decision-making involving crucially the concepts of authority and control. The former is defined in terms of the structure of expectation concerning the identity and competence of the decision-maker, whilst the latter refers to the actual effectiveness of a decision, whether or not authorised.⁵²

McDougal's work and that of his followers emphasises the long list of values, interests and considerations that have to be taken into account within the international system by the persons actually faced with making the decisions. This stress upon the so-called 'authoritative decision-maker', whether he or she be in the United States Department of State, in the British Foreign Office or 'anyone whose choice about an event can have some international significance'⁵³ as the person who in effect has to choose between different options respecting international legal principles, emphasises the practical world of power and authority.

Such a decision-maker is subject to a whole series of pressures and influences, such as the values of the community in which that person operates, and the interests of the particular nation-state served. He or she will also have to consider the basic values of the world order, for instance human dignity. This approach involves a complex dissection of a wide-ranging series of factors and firmly fixes international law within the ambit of the social sciences, both with respect to the procedures adopted and the tools of analysis. International law is seen in the following terms, as a comprehensive process of authoritative decision in which rules are continuously made and remade; that the function of the rules of international law is to communicate the perspectives (demands, identifications and expectations) of the peoples of the world about this comprehensive process of decision; and that the national application of these rules in particular instances requires their interpretation, like that of any other communication, in terms of who is using them, with respect to whom, for what purposes (major and minor), and in what context.⁵⁴

Legal rules articulate and seek to achieve certain goals and this value factor must not be ignored. The values emphasised by this school are basically those of human dignity, familiar from the concepts of Western democratic society.⁵⁵ Indeed, Reisman has emphasised the Natural Law origins of this approach as well as the need to clarify a jurisprudence for those persons whose activities have led to innovations in such fields of international law as human rights and the protection of the environment.⁵⁶

The policy-oriented movement has been greatly criticised by traditional international lawyers for unduly minimising the legal content of the subject and for ignoring the fact that nations

⁵¹ Suzuki, 'Policy-Oriented Jurisprudence', pp. 22–3. See also M. S. McDougal, 'Some Basic Theoretical Concepts about International Law: A Policy-Oriented Framework of Inquiry', 4 Journal of Conflict Resolution, 1960, pp. 337–54.

⁵² M. S. McDougal and H. Lasswell, 'The Identification and Appraisal of Diverse Systems of Public Order', 53 AJIL, 1959, pp. 1, 9.

⁵³ McDougal and Reisman, International Law, p. 2. ⁵⁴ M. S. McDougal, 'A Footnote', 57 AJIL, 1963, p. 383.

⁵⁵ See M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and L. C. Chen, Human Rights and World Public Order, New Haven, 1980. For a discussion of the tasks required for a realistic inquiry in the light of defined goals, see McDougal, 'International Law and the Future', pp. 259, 267.

⁵⁶ 'The View from the New Haven School of International Law', PASIL, 1992, p. 118.

generally accept international law as it is and obey its dictates.⁵⁷ States rarely indulge in a vast behavioural analysis, studiously considering every relevant element in a particular case and having regard to fundamental objectives like human dignity and welfare. Indeed, so to do may weaken international law, it has been argued.⁵⁸ In addition, the insertion of such value-concepts as 'human dignity' raises difficulties of subjectivity that ill fit within a supposedly objective analytical structure. Koskenniemi, for example, has drawn attention to the predilection of the policy-oriented approach to support the dominant power.⁵⁹

Other writers, such as Professor Falk, accept the basic comprehensive approach of the McDougal school, but point to its inconsistencies and overfulsome cataloguing of innumerable interests. They tend to adopt a global outlook based upon a deep concern for human welfare and morality, but with an emphasis upon the importance of legal rules and structure.⁶⁰

Professor Franck, however, has sought to refocus the essential question of the existence and operation of the system of international law in terms of inquiring into why states obey international law despite the undeveloped condition of the international legal system's structures, processes and enforcement mechanisms.⁶¹ The answer is seen to lie in the concept of legitimacy. States will obey the rules because they see such rules and their institutional framework as possessing a high degree of legitimacy. Legitimacy itself is defined as 'a property of a rule or rule-making institution which itself exerts a pull towards compliance on those addressed normatively because those addressed believe that the rule or institution has come into being and operates in accordance with generally accepted principles of right process'.⁶² Legitimacy may be empirically demonstrated but compliance may be measured not only by observing states acting in accordance with the principle in question, but also by observing the degree to which a violator actually exhibits deference to that principle even while violating it.

Legitimacy will depend upon four specific properties, it is suggested: determinacy (or readily ascertainable normative content or 'transparency'); symbolic validation (or authority approval); coherence (or consistency or general application) and adherence (or falling within an organised hierarchy of rules). In other words, it is proposed that there exist objectively verifiable criteria which help us to ascertain why international rules are obeyed and thus why the system works. This approach is supplemented by the view that legitimacy and justice as morality are two aspects of the concept of fairness, which is seen by Franck as the most important question for international law.⁶³ Franck, however, has also drawn attention to the ⁵⁷ See in particular P. Allott, 'Language, Method and the Nature of International Law', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 79. Higgins has vividly drawn attention to the differences in approach to international law adopted by American and British writers: 'Policy Considerations and the International Judicial Process', 17 ICLQ, 1968, p. 58. See also T. Farer, 'Human Rights in Law's Empire: The Jurisprudence War', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 117.

⁵⁸ Allott, 'Language', pp. 128 ff. ⁵⁹ See Gentle Civilizer of Nations, pp. 474 ff.

⁶⁰ See e.g. R. A. Falk, Human Rights and State Sovereignty, New York, 1981, and Falk, On Human Governance, Cambridge, 1995. See also The United Nations and a Just World Order (ed. R. Falk, S. Kim and S. Mendlovitz), Boulder, 1991, and Chimni, International Law, chapter 4. But note the approach of, e.g., J. S. Watson, 'A Realistic Jurisprudence of International Law', 34 YBWA, 1980, p. 265, and M. Lane, 'Demanding Human Rights: A Change in the World Legal Order', 6 Hofstra Law Review, 1978, p. 269. See also Boyle, 'Ideals and Things'.

⁶¹ T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990. See also Franck, 'Fairness in the International Legal and Institutional System', 240 HR, 1993 III, p. 13, chapter 2; Franck, Fairness in International Law and Institutions, Oxford, 1995, chapter 2, and Franck, 'The Power of Legitimacy and the Legitimacy of Power: International Law in an Age of Power Disequilibrium', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 88. Note also E. Tourme-Jouannet, What is a Fair Society? International Law Between Development and Recognition, Oxford, 2013.

⁶² Franck, Legitimacy, p. 24. ⁶³ Franck, 'Fairness', p. 26.

'emerging right to individuality'⁶⁴ within the context of a 'global identity crisis'⁶⁵ in which the growth of supranational institutions and the collapse of a range of states combine to undermine traditional certainties of world order. He notes that persons are increasingly likely to identify themselves as autonomous individuals and that this is both reflected and manifested in the rise and expansion of international human rights law and in the construction of multi-layered and freely selected affinities.⁶⁶ While such personal rights are increasingly protected in both national and international law, the question as to the appropriate balancing of individual, group and state rights is posed in more urgent form.

However, legitimacy may also be understood in a broader way in referring to the relationship with the international political system as a whole and as forming the link between power and the legal system. It imbues the normative order with authority and acceptability, although not as such legality. Legitimacy links law and politics in its widest sense and will depend upon the context out of which it emerges. One writer has concluded that legitimacy 'is a matter of history and thus is subject to change as new events emerge from the future and new understandings reinterpret the past'.⁶⁷ Legitimacy is important in that it constitutes a standard for the testing in the wider political environment of the relevance and acceptability of legal norms and practices. A rule seen as legitimate will benefit from a double dose of approval. A rule, institution or practice seen as illegal and illegitimate will be doubly disapproved of. A rule, or entity, which is legal but not legitimate will, it is suggested, not be able to sustain its position over the long term. A practice seen as illegal but legitimate is likely to form the nucleus of a new rule.

The recurring themes of the relationship between sovereign states and international society and the search for a convincing explanation for the binding quality of international law in a state-dominated world appear also in very recent approaches to international law theory which fall within the general critical legal studies framework.⁶⁸ Such approaches have drawn attention to the many inconsistencies and incoherences that persist within the international legal system. The search for an all-embracing general theory of international law has been abandoned in mainstream thought as being founded upon unverifiable propositions, whether religiously or sociologically based, and attention has switched to the analysis of particular areas of international law and in particular procedures for the settlement of disputes. The critical legal studies movement notes that the traditional approach to international law has in essence involved the transposition of 'liberal' principles of domestic systems onto the international scene, but that this has led to further problems.⁶⁹ Specifically, liberalism tries ⁶⁴ T. M. Franck, The Empowered Self, Oxford, 1999, p. 1. ⁶⁵ Ibid., p. 3. ⁶⁶ Ibid., pp. 278–80.

⁶⁷ Bobbitt, Shield, p. 17. See also J. Brunnee and S. J. Troope, Legitimacy and Legality in International Law, Cambridge, 2010; Fault Lines of International Legitimacy (ed. H. Charlesworth and J.-M. Coicaud), Cambridge, 2012; and M. N. Shaw, 'International Law: A System of Relationships', 3 Collected Courses of the Xiamen Academy of International Law, China, 2010, pp. 239, 244 ff.

⁶⁸ See e.g. The Structure and Processes of International Law (ed. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983; Boyle, 'Ideals and Things'; A. Carty, The Decay of International Law? A Reappraisal of the Limits of Legal Imagination in International Affairs, Manchester, 1986; D. Kennedy, International Legal Structure, Boston, 1987; M. Koskenniemi, From Apology to Utopia, Helsinki, 1989; F. V. Kratochwil, Rules, Norms and Decisions: On the Conditions of Practical and Legal Reasoning in International Relations and Domestic Affairs, Cambridge, 1989; P. Allott, Eunomia, Oxford, 1990; Allott, The Health of Nations, Cambridge, 2002; Theory and International Law: An Introduction (ed. Allott), London, 1991; and International Law (ed. M. Koskenniemi), Aldershot, 1992. See also I. Scobbie, 'Towards the Elimination of International Law: Some Radical Scepticism about Sceptical Radicalism', 61 BYIL, 1990, p. 339; and S. Marks, The Riddle of All Constitutions: International Law, Democracy and the Critique of Ideology, Cambridge, 2000.

⁶⁹ See e.g. Koskenniemi, International Law, p. xvi.

constantly to balance individual freedom and social order and, it is argued, inevitably ends up siding with either one or other of those propositions.⁷⁰ Additionally, there are only two possibilities with regard to justice itself: it is either simply subjective or it is imposed. In either case, liberalism is compromised as a system.

The critical legal studies approach (sometimes termed the 'New Approaches to International Law' or NAIL) notes the close relationship that exists between law and society, but emphasises that conceptual analysis is also crucial since such concepts are not in themselves independent entities but reflect particular power relationships. The point is made that the nexus between state power and international legal concepts needs to be taken into consideration as well as the way in which such concepts in themselves reflect political factors. As Koskenniemi writes, 'a post-realist theory ... aims to answer questions regarding the relationship of law and society and the legitimacy of constraint in a world of sovereigns as aspects of one single problem: the problem of power in concepts'.⁷¹ The problem posed by the growth in the world community and the need to consider the range of different cultures and traditions within that community leads, it is suggested, to the decline of universality as such and the need to focus upon the specific contexts of particular problems.

In a more recent work, Koskenniemi has drawn attention not only to the continuing tension between the universalist and particularist impulses in international law,⁷² but also to the related distinction between formalism and dynamism, or the contrast between rule-oriented and policy-oriented approaches. It is his view in essence that the latter approach might too easily be utilised to support a dominant political position.⁷³ It is the typical lawyer's answer in any event to declare that all depends upon the particular circumstances of the case and this approach is generalised in order to deal with the question of which of several relevant international rules is to predominate. It is in fact a way of noting that superior operating principles are difficult to find or justify and thus concluding that the search for universal concepts or principles is of little value. In effect, it is proposed that no coherent international system as such actually exists and that one should rather concentrate upon ad hoc legal concepts as reflecting power considerations and within the confines of the specific contexts in which the particular questions or issues have arisen. Like the policy-oriented approach, the critical legal studies view is to accept that international law is more than a set of rules, but it then proceeds to emphasise the indeterminacy as such of law rather than seeing law as a collection of competing norms between which choices must be made.⁷⁴ One particular area of study in recent years has been that concerned with the position of women within international law, both in terms of the structure of the system and the, for example, relative absence of females from the institutions and processes of international law and in terms of substantive law, which has until recently paid little attention to the needs and concerns of women.⁷⁵

⁷⁰ Koskenniemi, From Apology to Utopia, p. 52. ⁷¹ Ibid., p. xxi.

⁷² See also M. Eyskens, 'Particularism versus Universalism', in International Law – Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 11.

⁷³ Gentle Civilizer of Nations. See also M. Koskenniemi, The Politics of International Law, Oxford, 2011.

⁷⁴ See Higgins, Problems and Process, p. 9. See also J. A. Beckett, 'Countering Uncertainty and Ending Up/Down Arguments: Prolegomena to a Response to NAIL', 16 EJIL, 2005, p. 213.

⁷⁵ See e.g. H. Charlesworth and C. M. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000; H. Charlesworth, C. M. Chinkin and S. Wright, 'Feminist Approaches to International Law', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 613; F. Tesón, 'Feminism and International Law: A Reply', 33 Va. JIL, 1993, p. 647; International Law: Modern

The Fragmentation of International Law?⁷⁶

The tremendous expansion of both the rules and the institutions of international law, with the rise of more and more specialist areas, such as trade law, environmental law and human rights law, has led to arguments that international law as a holistic system is in the process of fragmentation. This has led to the fear that the centre will not be able to hold and that international law might dissolve into a series of discrete localised or limited systems with little or no interrelationship. In many ways it is the explosion of what is termed 'globalisation', with the consequential spread of practices and mechanisms across the world,⁷⁷ that has precipitated this problem of fragmentation, being defined in one view as the 'emergence of specialised and relatively autonomous spheres of social action and structure'.⁷⁸ This has led to a debate as to the relationship between self-contained regimes in international law and the system as a whole,⁷⁹ with the fear being expressed that the rise of specialised rules and mechanisms that have no clear authority relationship might lead to conflicts between local systems and, at the least, inconsistency in the interpretation and development of international law.⁸⁰ While to some extent the former is a real danger,⁸¹ there is still a powerful centralising dynamic in international law and indeed a strong presumption against normative conflict:⁸² for example, the principle that special law (lex specialis) derogates from general law (lex generalis), so that the more detailed and specific rule will have priority.⁸³ It is also true that international law, as a decentralised system, has long had to face the problem of relating together a variety of rules derived from general treaties, specific treaties and customary law, while it is indeed the case that even with the increase in specialist areas of international law, there is an increasing tendency to relate hitherto discrete Feminist Approaches (ed. D. Buss and A. Manji), Oxford, 2005; and D. Otto, 'Feminist Approaches to International Law', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law, chapter 24. See also the 'Final Report on Women's Equality and Nationality in International Law', in Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 248. Note that article 25(2) of the Rules of the European Court of Human Rights requires that the Sections of the Court be 'gender balanced', while article 36(8)a(iii) of the Statute of the International Criminal Court 1998 declares that the selection process for judges of the Court should include the need for a 'fair representation of female and male judges'. See also ICC-ASP/1/Res.- 2 (2002) on the procedure for nomination of judges which required a minimum number of female and male candidates.

⁷⁶ See e.g. 'Fragmentation of International Law: Difficulties Arising from the Diversification and Expansion of International Law', Report of the Study Group of the International Law Commission (finalised by M. Koskeniemi), A/CN.4/L.682, 2006; M. Koskeniemi and P. Leino, 'Fragmentation of International Law? Postmodern Anxieties', 15 Leiden Journal of International Law, 2002, p. 553; M. Prost and P. K. Clark, 'Unity, Diversity and the Fragmentation of International Law', 5 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2006, p. 341; A Farewell to Fragmentation: Reassertion and Convergence in International Law (ed. M. Andenas and E. Bjorge), Cambridge, 2015; Regime Interaction in International Law: Facing Fragmentation (ed. M. A. Young), Cambridge, 2015; P. Webb, International Judicial Integration and Fragmentation, Oxford, 2013; B. Simma and D. Pulkowski, 'Of Planets and the Universe: Self-contained Regimes in International Law', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 483; and E. Benvenisti and G. W. Downs, 'The Empire's New Clothes: Political Economy and the Fragmentation of International Law', 60 Stanford Law Review, 2007, p. 595.

⁷⁷ See e.g. P. S. Berman, The Globalisation of International Law, Aldershot, 2005.

⁷⁸ International Law Commission Report on Fragmentation, p. 11.

⁷⁹ See, for an early example, B. Simma, 'Self-Contained Regimes', 16 Netherlands YIL, 1985, p. 111.

⁸⁰ See e.g. Unity and Diversity in International Law (ed. A. Zimmermann and R. Hofmann), Berlin, 2006; K. Wellens, 'Fragmentation of International Law and Establishment of an Accountability Regime for International Organizations', 25 Michigan Journal of International Law, 2004, p. 1159; and L'Influence des Sources sur l'Unité et la Fragmentation du Droit International (ed. K. C. Wellens and R. H. Viraxia), Brussels, 2006.

⁸¹ See e.g. A. Reinisch, 'Necessity in International Arbitration – An Unnecessary Split of Opinions in Recent ICSID Cases? Comments on CMS v. Argentina and LG&E v. Argentina', 8 Journal of World Investment and Trade, 2007, p. 191.

⁸² International Law Commission Report on Fragmentation, p. 25. ⁸³ See further below, chapter 3, 92.

spheres.⁸⁴ Further, while decisions of international courts and tribunals may not always be compatible, there is a hierarchy of authority with the International Court of Justice at the summit.⁸⁵ The International Law Commission's Report on Fragmentation reached two principal conclusions: first, that 'the emergence of special treaty-regimes (which should not be called "self-contained") has not seriously undermined legal security, predictability or the equality of legal subjects'; and, second, that 'increasing attention will have to be given to the collision of norms and regimes and the rules, methods and techniques for dealing with such collisions'.⁸⁶

Conclusion

The range of theories and approaches to international law and not least the emphasis upon the close relationship between international law and international relations⁸⁷ testifies both to the importance of the subject and the inherent difficulties it faces.⁸⁸ International law is clearly much more than a simple set of rules. It is a culture in the broadest sense in that it constitutes a method of communicating claims, counter-claims, expectations and anticipations as well as providing a framework for assessing and prioritising such demands.

International law functions in a particular, concrete world system, involving a range of actors from states to international organisations, companies and individuals, and as such needs to be responsive to the needs and aspirations of such participants. The international system is composed increasingly of co-operative and competing elements participating in cross-boundary activities, but the essential normative and structural nature of international law remains. Law is not the only way in which issues transcending borders are negotiated and settled or indeed fought over. It is one of a number of methods for dealing with an existing complex and shifting system, but it is a way of some prestige and influence for it is of its very nature in the form of mutually accepted obligations.⁸⁹ Law and politics cannot be divorced. They are not identical, but they do interact on several levels. They are engaged in a crucial symbiotic relationship. It does neither discipline a service to minimise the significance of the other.

⁸⁴ See e.g. with regard to human rights law and humanitarian law (or the laws of war), A. E. Cassimatis, 'International Humanitarian Law, International Human Rights Law, and Fragmentation of International Law', 56 ICLQ, 2007, p. 623. See further below, chapter 20, p. 903.

⁸⁵ See further below, chapter 18, p. 848. ⁸⁶ At pp. 248–9.

⁸⁷ See e.g. A.-M. Slaughter, A. S. Tulumello and S. Wood, 'International Law and International Relations Theory: A New Generation of Interdisciplinary Scholarship', 92 AJIL, 1998, p. 367; and Slaughter, A New World Order. See also Bobbitt, Shield, who posits the dying of the nation-state and its replacement by the market-state, with consequential changes with regard to both international law and its institutions, e.g. pp. 353 ff. and 667 ff.

⁸⁸ Note relatively recent arguments based on a revived power realism approach, particularly made in the US, that international law is simply a part of a complex of factors which are relevant, and implicitly subservient, to diplomacy and the pursuit of national interests: see e.g. J. L. Goldsmith and E. A. Posner, The Limits of International Law, Oxford, 2005, and M. J. Glennon, Limits of Law, Prerogatives of Power: Interventionism after Kosovo, New York, 2001; but cf. Franck, Power of Legitimacy; A. Van Aaken, 'To Do Away with International Law? Some Limits to the "Limits of International Law"', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 289; and G. Simpson, Great Powers and Outlaw States: Unequal Sovereigns in the International Legal Order, Cambridge, 2004.

⁸⁹ Higgins has noted that 'international law has to be identified by reference to what the actors (most often states), often without benefit of pronouncement by the International Court of Justice, believe normative in their relations with each other', Problems and Process, p. 18.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

P. Bobbitt, The Shield of Achilles, London, 2002

H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000

The Empowered Self, Oxford, 1999

T. M. Franck, Fairness in International Law and Institutions, Oxford, 1995

M. Koskeniemi, The Politics of International Law, Oxford, 2011

S. Marks, The Riddle of All Constitutions: International Law, Democracy and the Critique of Ideology, Cambridge, 2000

R. Müllerson, Ordering Anarchy: International Law in International Society, The Hague, 2000

The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law (ed. A. Orford and F. Hoffmann), Oxford, 2016

3

Sources

Ascertainment of the law on any given point in domestic legal orders is not usually too difficult a process.¹ In the English legal system, for example, one looks to see whether the matter is covered by an Act of Parliament (or possibly a statutory instrument) and, if it is, the law reports are consulted as to how it has been interpreted by the courts. If the particular point is not specifically referred to in a statute, court cases will be examined to elicit the required information. In other words, there is a definite method of discovering what the law is. In addition to verifying the contents of the rules, this method also demonstrates how the law is created, namely, by parliamentary legislation or judicial case-law. This gives a degree of certainty to the legal process because one is able to tell when a proposition has become law and the necessary mechanism to resolve any disputes about the law is evident. It reflects the hierarchical character of a national legal order with its gradations of authority imparting to the law a large measure of stability and predictability.

The contrast is very striking when one considers the situation in international law. The lack of a legislature, executive and structure of courts within international law has been noted and the effects of this will become clearer as one proceeds. There is no single body able to create laws internationally binding upon everyone, nor a proper system of courts with comprehensive and compulsory jurisdiction to interpret and extend the law. One is therefore faced with the problem of discovering where the law is to be found and how one can tell whether a particular proposition amounts to a legal rule. This perplexity is reinforced because of the anarchic nature of world affairs and the clash of competing sovereignties. Nevertheless, international law does exist and is ascertainable. There are 'sources' available from which the rules may be extracted and analysed.

¹ See generally H. Thirlway, The Sources of International Law, Oxford, 2014; J. d'Aspremont, Formalism and the Sources of International Law, Oxford, 2011, and 'Towards a New Theory of Sources in International Law', in The Oxford Handbook of the Theory of International Law (ed. A. Orford and F. Hoffmann), Oxford, 2016, chapter 27; C. Parry, The Sources and Evidences of International Law, Cambridge, 1965; M. Sørensen, Les Sources de Droit International, Paris, 1946; V. D. Degan, Sources of International Law, The Hague, 1997; Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, p. 22; Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (ed. J. Crawford), 8th edn, Oxford, 2012, chapter 2; P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, p. 124; A. Boyle and C. Chinkin, The Making of International Law, Oxford, 2007; G. M. Danilenko, Law-Making in the International Community, The Hague, 1993; G. I. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974, pp. 89–203; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1968, vol. I, p. 1; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1970, vol. I, p. 58; Change and Stability in International Law-Making (ed. A. Cassese and J. Weiler), Leiden, 1988; A. Bos, A Methodology of International Law, Amsterdam, 1984; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapters 8–10; A. Pellet, 'Article 38', in The Statute of the International Court of Justice: A Commentary (ed. A. Zimmermann, C. Tomuschat and K. Oellers-Frahm), 2nd edn, Oxford, 2012, p. 731; M. Virally, 'The Sources of International Law', in Manual of Public International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, p. 116; C. Tomuschat, 'Obligations Arising for States Without or Against Their Will', 241 HR, 1993, p. 195; B. Simma, 'From Bilateralism to Community Interest in International Law', 250 HR, 1994, p. 219; M. Mendelson, 'The International Court of Justice and the Sources of International Law', in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (ed. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 63; G. Abi-Saab, 'Les Sources du Droit International – Un Essai de Déconstruction', in Le Droit International dans un Monde en Mutation, Montevideo, 1994, p. 29; and O. Schachter, 'Recent Trends in International Law-Making', 12 Australian YIL, 1992.

By 'sources' one means those provisions operating within the legal system on a technical level, and such ultimate sources as reason or morality are excluded, as are more functional sources such as libraries and journals. What is intended is a survey of the process whereby rules of international law emerge.²

Article 38(1) of the Statute of the International Court of Justice is widely recognised as the most authoritative and complete statement as to the sources of international law.³ It provides that:

the Court, whose function is to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it, shall apply: (a) international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by the contesting states; (b) international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law; (c) the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations; (d) subject to the provisions of Article 59, judicial decisions and the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations, as subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law.

Although this formulation is technically limited to the sources of international law which the International Court must apply, in fact since the function of the Court is to decide disputes submitted to it 'in accordance with international law' and since all member states of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the Statute by virtue of article 93 of the United Nations Charter (states that are non-members of the UN can specifically become parties to the Statute of the Court: Switzerland was the most obvious example of this until it joined the UN in 2002), there is no serious contention that the provision expresses the universal perception as to the enumeration of sources of international law.

Some writers have sought to categorise the distinctions in this provision, so that international conventions, custom and the general principles of law are described as the three exclusive law-creating processes while judicial decisions and academic writings are regarded as law-determining agencies, dealing with the verification of alleged rules.⁴ But in reality it is not always possible to make hard and fast divisions. The different functions overlap to a great extent so that in many cases treaties (or conventions) merely reiterate accepted rules of customary law, and judgments of the International Court of Justice may actually create law in the same way that municipal judges formulate new law in the process of interpreting existing law.⁵

² See also, e.g., M. S. McDougal and W. M. Reisman, 'The Prescribing Function: How International Law is Made', 6 Yale Studies in World Public Order, 1980, p. 249. Note J. d'Aspremont, 'The Idea of "Rules" in the Sources of International Law', 84 BYIL, 2013, p. 103, arguing that the sources of international law are better understood as a set of communitarian constraints irreducible to rules.

³ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 24, and M. O. Hudson, The Permanent Court of International Justice, New York, 1934, pp. 601 ff.

⁴ See e.g. G. Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, pp. 26–7.

⁵ There are a number of examples of this: see below, chapter 4.

A distinction has sometimes been made between formal and material sources.⁶ The former, it is claimed, confer upon the rules an obligatory character, while the latter comprise the actual content of the rules. Thus the formal sources appear to embody the constitutional mechanism for identifying law while the material sources incorporate the essence or subject-matter of the regulations. This division has been criticised particularly in view of the peculiar constitutional set-up of international law, and it tends to distract attention from some of the more important problems by its attempt to establish a clear separation of substantive and procedural elements, something difficult to maintain in international law.

CUSTOM⁷

Introduction

In any primitive society certain rules of behaviour emerge and prescribe what is permitted and what is not. Such rules develop almost subconsciously within the group and are maintained by the members of the group by social pressures and with the aid of various other more tangible implements. They are not, at least in the early stages, written down or codified, and survive ultimately because of what can be called an aura of historical legitimacy.⁸ As the community develops it will modernise its code of behaviour by the creation of legal machinery, such as courts and legislature. Custom, for this is how the original process can be described, remains and may also continue to evolve.⁹ It is regarded as an authentic expression of the needs and values of the community at any given time.

⁶ See e.g. Daillier et al., Droit International Public, pp. 124–5, where it is noted that ‘les sources formelles du droit sont les procédés d’élaboration du droit, les diverses techniques qui autorisent à considérer qu’une règle appartient au droit positif. Les sources matérielles constituent les fondements sociologiques des normes internationales, leur base politique, morale ou économique plus ou moins explicitée par la doctrine ou les sujets du droit’; and Pellet, ‘Article 38’, p. 774. See also Thirlway, Sources, p. 3.

⁷ See generally, A. D’Amato, The Concept of Custom in International Law, Cornell, 1971; M. Akehurst, ‘Custom as a Source of International Law’, 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 1; C. A. Bradley, Custom’s Future: International Law in a Changing World, Cambridge, 2016; Thirlway, Sources, chapter III; M. Mendelson, ‘The Formation of Customary International Law’, 272 HR, 1999, p. 159; B. Cheng, ‘Custom: The Future of General State Practice in a Divided World’, in The Structure and Process of International Law (ed. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983, p. 513; A. E. Roberts, ‘Traditional and Modern Approaches to Customary International Law: A Reconciliation’, 95 AJIL, 2001, p. 757; H. Thirlway, International Customary Law and Codification, Leiden, 1972; Sources of State Practice in International Law (ed. R. Gaebler and M. Smolka-Day), Ardley, 2002; K. Wolfke, Custom in Present International Law, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1993, and Wolfke, ‘Some Persistent Controversies Regarding Customary International Law’, Netherlands YIL, 1993, p. 1; L. Kopelmanas, ‘Custom as a Means of the Creation of International Law’, 18 BYIL, 1937, p. 127; H. Lauterpacht, The Development of International Law by the International Court, Cambridge, 1958, pp. 368–93; J. Kunz, ‘The Nature of Customary International Law’, 47 AJIL, 1953, p. 662; R. J. Dupuy, ‘Coutume Sage et Coutume Sauvage’, Mélanges Rousseau, Paris, 1974, p. 75; B. Stern, ‘La Coutume au Coeur du Droit International’, Mélanges Reuter, Paris, 1981, p. 479; R. Y. Jennings, ‘Law-Making and Package Deal’, Mélanges Reuter, p. 347; M. Byers, ‘Custom, Power and the Power of Rules’, 17 Michigan Journal of International Law, 1995, p. 109; Pellet, ‘Article 38’, p. 812; J. Kammerhofer, ‘The Uncertainty in the Formal Sources of International Law: Customary International Law and Some of Its Problems’, 15 EJIL, 2004, p. 523; P. M. Dupuy, ‘Théorie des Sources et Coutume en Droit International Contemporain’, in Le Droit International dans un Monde en Mutation, p. 51; D. P. Fidler, ‘Challenging the Classic Conception of Custom’, German YIL, 1997, p. 198; R. Müllerson, ‘On the Nature and Scope of Customary International Law’, Austrian Review of International and European Law, 1998, p. 1; M. Byers, Custom, Power and the Power of Rules, Cambridge, 1999, and A. Carty, The Decay of International Law?, Manchester, 1986, chapter 3. See also the ‘Statement of Principles Applicable to the Formation of General Customary International Law’ in Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, International Law Association, London, 2000, p. 713; The Nature of Customary Law (ed. A. Perreault-Saussine and J. B. Murphy), 2007; J. d’Asprement, Formalism and the Sources of International Law, Oxford, 2011; M. P. Scharf, Customary International Law in Times of Fundamental Change, Cambridge, 2013; T. Treves, ‘Customary International Law’, Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law; and P. Tomka, ‘Custom and the International Court of Justice’, 12 The Law and Practice of International Courts and Tribunals, 2013, p. 195. See also the International Law Commission’s study of Formation and Evidence of Customary International Law/Identification of Customary International Law (title changed in 2013), Yearbook of the ILC, 2011, A/66/10, Annex A, p. 302, Yearbook of the ILC, 2012, A/67/10, chapter VIII, p. 108, Reports of the ILC 2012 (A/67/10), 2013 (A/68/10), 2014 (A/69/10) and 2015 (A/70/10), and the four reports to date of the Special Rapporteur, A/CN.4/663 (2013), A/CN.4/672 (2014), A/CN.4/682 (2015) and A/CN.4/695 (2016). A series of Draft Conclusions were provisionally accepted by the Drafting Committee in 2015, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015), and noted by the Commission, A/70/10, para. 60.

Custom within contemporary legal systems, particularly in the developed world, is relatively cumbersome and unimportant and often of only nostalgic value.¹⁰ In international law, on the other hand, it is a dynamic source of law in the light of the nature of the international system and its lack of centralised government organs.

The existence of customary rules can be deduced from the practice and behaviour of states and this is where the problems begin. How can one tell when a particular line of action adopted by a state reflects a legal rule or is merely prompted by, for example, courtesy? Indeed, how can one discover what precisely a state is doing or why, since there is no living 'state' but rather thousands of officials in scores of departments exercising governmental functions? Other issues concern the speed of creation of new rules and the effect of protests.

There are disagreements as to the value of a customary system in international law. Some writers deny that custom can be significant today as a source of law, noting that it is too clumsy and slow-moving to accommodate the evolution of international law any more,¹¹ while others declare that it is a dynamic process of law creation and more important than treaties since it is of universal application.¹² Another view recognises that custom is of value since it is activated by spontaneous behaviour and thus mirrors the contemporary concerns of society. However, since international law now has to contend with a massive increase in the pace and variety of state activities as well as having to come to terms with many different cultural and political traditions, the role of custom is perceived to be much diminished.¹³

There are elements of truth in each of these approaches. Amidst a wide variety of conflicting behaviour, it is not easy to isolate the emergence of a new rule of customary law and there are immense problems involved in collating all the necessary information. It is not always the best instrument available for the regulation of complex issues that arise in world affairs, but in particular situations it may meet the contingencies of modern life. As will be seen, it is possible to point to something called 'instant' customary law in certain circumstances that can prescribe valid rules without having to undergo a long period of gestation, and custom can and often does ⁸ See e.g. R. Unger, Law in Modern Society, London, 1976, who notes that customary law can be regarded as 'any recurring mode of interaction among individuals and groups, together with the more or less explicit acknowledgement by these groups and individuals that such patterns of interaction produce reciprocal expectations of conduct that ought to be satisfied', p. 49. See also R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, chapter 9, and H. L. A. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961.

⁹ See e.g. D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979, p. 649, and H. Maine, Ancient Law, London, 1861.

¹⁰ See e.g. Dias, Jurisprudence.

¹¹ See e.g. W. Friedmann, The Changing Structure of International Law, New York, 1964, pp. 121–3. See also I. De Lupis, The Concept of International Law, Aldershot, 1987, pp. 112–16.

¹² E.g. D'Amato, Concept of Custom, p. 12.

¹³ C. De Visscher, Theory and Reality in Public International Law, 3rd edn, Princeton, 1960, pp. 161–2.

dovetail neatly within the complicated mechanisms now operating for the identification and progressive development of the principles of international law.

More than that, custom does mirror the characteristics of the decentralised international system. It is democratic in that all states may share in the formulation of new rules, though the precept that some are more equal than others in this process is not without its grain of truth. If the international community is unhappy with a particular law it can be changed relatively quickly without the necessity of convening and successfully completing a world conference. It reflects the consensus approach to decision-making with the ability of the majority to create new law binding upon all, while the very participation of states encourages their compliance with customary rules. Its imprecision means flexibility as well as ambiguity. Indeed, the creation of the concept of the exclusive economic zone in the law of the sea may be cited as an example of this process. This is discussed further in chapter 10. The essence of custom according to article 38 is that it should constitute 'evidence of a general practice accepted as law'. Thus, it is possible to detect two basic elements in the make-up of a custom. These are the material facts, that is, the actual behaviour of states, and the psychological or subjective belief that such behaviour is 'law'. As the International Court noted in the Libya/Malta case, the substance of customary law must be 'looked for primarily in the actual practice and opinio juris of states'.¹⁴

It is understandable why the first requirement is mentioned, since customary law is founded upon the performance of state activities and the convergence of practices, in other words, what states actually do. It is the psychological factor (opinio juris) that needs some explanation. If one left the definition of custom as state practice then one would be faced with the problem of how to separate international law from principles of morality or social usage. This is because states do not restrict their behaviour to what is legally required. They may pursue a line of conduct purely through a feeling of goodwill and in the hope of reciprocal benefits. States do not have to allow tourists in or launch satellites. There is no law imposing upon them the strict duty to distribute economic aid to developing nations. The bare fact that such things are done does not mean that they have to be done.

The issue therefore is how to distinguish behaviour undertaken because of a law from behaviour undertaken because of a whole series of other reasons ranging from goodwill to pique, and from ideological support to political bribery. And if customary law is restricted to the overt acts of states, one cannot solve this problem.

Accordingly, the second element in the definition of custom has been elaborated. This is the psychological factor, the belief by a state that behaved in a certain way that it was under a legal obligation to act that way. It is known in legal terminology as opinio juris sive necessitatis and was first formulated by the French writer François Gény as an attempt to differentiate legal custom from mere social usage.¹⁵

However, the relative importance of the two factors, the overt action and the subjective conviction, is disputed by various writers.¹⁶ Positivists, with their emphasis upon state

¹⁴ ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 29; 81 ILR, p. 239. See also the Advisory Opinion on the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 253; 110 ILR, p. 163; and Draft Conclusion 2 provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015).

¹⁵ Méthode d'Interprétation et Sources en Droit Privé Positif, 1899, para. 110.

¹⁶ See e.g. R. Müllerson, 'The Interplay of Objective and Subjective Elements in Customary Law', in International Law – Theory and Practice (ed. K. Wellens), The Hague, 1998, p. 161.

sovereignty, stress the paramount importance of the psychological element. States are only bound by what they have consented to, so therefore the material element is minimised to the greater value of opinio juris. If states believe that a course of action is legal and perform it, even if only once, then it is to be inferred that they have tacitly consented to the rule involved. Following on from this line of analysis, various positivist thinkers have tended to minimise many of the requirements of the overt manifestation, for example, with regard to repetition and duration.¹⁷ Other writers have taken precisely the opposite line and maintain that opinio juris is impossible to prove and therefore of no tremendous consequence. Kelsen, for one, has written that it is the courts that have the discretion to decide whether any set of usages is such as to create a custom and that the subjective perception of the particular state or states is not called upon to give the final verdict as to its legality or not.¹⁸

The Material Fact

The actual practice engaged in by states constitutes the initial factor to be brought into account. There are a number of points to be considered concerning the nature of a particular practice by states, including its duration, consistency, repetition and generality. As far as the duration is concerned, most countries specify a recognised timescale for the acceptance of a practice as a customary rule within their municipal systems. This can vary from ‘time immemorial’ in the English common law dating back to 1189, to figures from thirty or forty years on the Continent.

In international law, however, there is no rigid time element and it will depend upon the circumstances of the case and the nature of the usage in question. In certain fields, such as air and space law, the rules have developed quickly; in others, the process is much slower. Duration is thus not the most important of the components of state practice.¹⁹ The essence of custom is to be sought elsewhere.

The basic rule as regards continuity and repetition was laid down in the Asylum case decided by the International Court of Justice (ICJ) in 1950.²⁰ The Court declared that a customary rule must be ‘in accordance with a constant and uniform usage practised by the States in question’.²¹

The case concerned Haya de la Torre, a Peruvian, who was sought by his government after an unsuccessful revolt. He was granted asylum by Colombia in its embassy in Lima, but Peru refused to issue a safe conduct to permit Torre to leave the country. Colombia brought the matter before the International Court of Justice and requested a decision recognising that it (Colombia) was ¹⁷ See e.g. D. Anzilotti, Corso di Diritto Internazionale, 3rd edn, 1928, pp. 73–6; K. Strupp, ‘Les Règles Générales du Droit International de la Paix’, 47 HR, 1934, p. 263; Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 113–33, and ‘Remarks on the Juridical Nature of Customary Norms of International Law’, 49 California Law Review, 1961, pp. 419–21; and B. Cheng, ‘United Nations Resolutions on Outer Space: “Instant” International Customary Law?’, 5 Indian Journal of International Law, 1965, p. 23.

¹⁸ ‘Théorie du Droit International Coutumier’, 1 Revue Internationale de la Théorie du Droit, 1939, pp. 253, 264–6. See also P. Guggenheim, Traité de Droit International Public, Paris, 1953, pp. 46–8; T. Gihl, ‘The Legal Character of Sources of International Law’, 1 Scandinavian Studies in Law, 1957, pp. 53, 84, and Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 27–31.

¹⁹ See D’Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 56–8, and Akehurst, ‘Custom as a Source’, pp. 15–16. Judge Negulesco in an unfortunate phrase emphasised that custom required immemorial usage: European Commission of the Danube, PCIJ, Series B, No. 14, 1927, p. 105; 4 AD, p. 126. See also the North Sea Continental Shelfcases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 43; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 72; and Draft Conclusion 8 provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015), noting that provided that the practice was general, no particular duration was required.

²⁰ ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 266; 17 ILR, p. 280. ²¹ ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 276–7; 17 ILR, p. 284.

competent to define Torre's offence, as to whether it was criminal as Peru maintained, or political, in which case asylum and a safe conduct could be allowed.

The Court, in characterising the nature of a customary rule, held that it had to constitute the expression of a right appertaining to one state (Colombia) and a duty incumbent upon another (Peru). However, the Court felt that in the Asylum litigation, state practices had been so uncertain and contradictory as not to amount to a 'constant and uniform usage' regarding the unilateral qualification of the offence in question.²² The issue involved here dealt with a regional custom pertaining only to Latin America and it may be argued that the same approach need not necessarily be followed where a general custom is alleged and that in the latter instance a lower standard of proof would be upheld.²³

The ICJ emphasised its view that some degree of uniformity amongst state practices was essential before a custom could come into existence in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case.²⁴ The United Kingdom, in its arguments against the Norwegian method of measuring the breadth of the territorial sea, referred to an alleged rule of custom whereby a straight line may be drawn across bays of less than ten miles from one projection to the other, which could then be regarded as the baseline for the measurement of the territorial sea. The Court dismissed this by pointing out that the actual practice of states did not justify the creation of any such custom. In other words, there had been insufficient uniformity of behaviour.

In the North Sea Continental Shelf cases,²⁵ which involved a dispute between Germany on the one hand and Holland and Denmark on the other over the delimitation of the continental shelf, the ICJ remarked that state practice, 'including that of states whose interests are specially affected', had to be 'both extensive and virtually uniform in the sense of the provision invoked'. This was held to be indispensable to the formation of a new rule of customary international law.²⁶ However, the Court emphasised in the Nicaragua v. United States case²⁷ that it was not necessary that the practice in question had to be 'in absolutely rigorous conformity' with the purported customary rule. The Court continued:

In order to deduce the existence of customary rules, the Court deems it sufficient that the conduct of states should, in general, be consistent with such rules, and that instances of state conduct inconsistent with a given rule should generally have been treated as breaches of that rule, not as indications of the recognition of a new rule.²⁸

The threshold that needs to be attained before a legally binding custom can be created will depend both upon the nature of the alleged rule and the opposition it arouses. This partly relates to the problem of ambiguity where it is not possible to point to the alleged custom with any degree of clarity, as in the Asylum case where a variety of conflicting and contradictory evidence had been brought forward.

²² Ibid. ²³ See further below, p. 68. ²⁴ ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 131 and 138; 18 ILR, p. 86.

²⁵ ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 3; 41 ILR, p. 29.

²⁶ ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 43; 41 ILR, p. 72. Note that the Court was dealing with the creation of a custom on the basis of what had been purely a treaty rule. See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 21, especially footnote 5. See also the Paquete Habana case, 175 US 677 (1900) and the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

²⁷ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349. ²⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 98; 76 ILR, p. 432.

On the other hand, an unsubstantiated claim by a state cannot be accepted because it would amount to unilateral law-making and compromise a reasonably impartial system of international law. If a proposition meets with a great deal of opposition then it would be an undesirable fiction to ignore this and talk of an established rule. Another relevant factor is the strength of the prior rule which is purportedly overthrown.²⁹ For example, the customary law relating to a state's sovereignty over its airspace developed very quickly in the years immediately before and during the First World War. Similarly, the principle of non-sovereignty over the space route followed by artificial satellites came into being soon after the launching of the first sputniks. Bin Cheng has argued that in such circumstances repetition is not at all necessary provided the opinio juris could be clearly established. Thus, 'instant' customary law is possible.³⁰

This contention that single acts may create custom has been criticised, particularly in view of the difficulties of proving customary rules any other way but through a series of usages.³¹ Nevertheless, the conclusion must be that it is the international context which plays the vital part in the creation of custom. In a society constantly faced with new situations because of the dynamics of progress, there is a clear need for a reasonably speedy method of responding to such changes by a system of prompt rule-formation. In new areas of law, customs can be quickly established by state practices by virtue of the newness of the situations involved, the lack of contrary rules to be surmounted and the overwhelming necessity to preserve a sense of regulation in international relations.

One particular analogy that has been used to illustrate the general nature of customary law was considered by de Visscher. He likened the growth of custom to the gradual formation of a road across vacant land. After an initial uncertainty as to direction, the majority of users begin to follow the same line which becomes a single path. Not long elapses before that path is transformed into a road accepted as the only regular way, even though it is not possible to state at which precise moment this latter change occurs. And so it is with the formation of a custom. De Visscher develops this idea by reflecting that just as some make heavier footprints than others due to their greater weight, the more influential states of the world mark the way with more vigour and tend to become the guarantors and defenders of the way forward.³²

The reasons why a particular state acts in a certain way are varied but are closely allied to how it perceives its interests. This in turn depends upon the power and role of the state and its international standing. Accordingly, custom should to some extent mirror the perceptions of the majority of states, since it is based upon usages which are practised by nations as they express their power and their hopes and fears. But it is inescapable that some states are more influential and powerful than others and that their activities should be regarded as of greater significance. This is reflected in international law so that custom may be created by a few states, provided those states are intimately connected with the issue at hand, whether because of their wealth and power or because of their special relationship with the subject-matter of the practice, as for example

²⁹ See D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 60–1, and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 19. See also Judge Alvarez, the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 152; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 105, and Judge Loder, the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, pp. 18, 34.

³⁰ Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions'. ³¹ See e.g. Daillier et al., Droit International Public, pp. 325–6.

³² De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 149. See also Lauterpacht, Development of International Law, p. 368; P. Cobbett, Leading Cases on International Law, 4th edn, London, 1922, p. 5; and Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 22–3.

maritime nations and sea law. Law cannot be divorced from politics or power and this is one instance of that proposition.³³

The influence of the United Kingdom, for example, on the development of the law of the sea and prize law in the nineteenth century when it was at the height of its power, was predominant. A number of propositions later accepted as part of international customary law appeared this way. Among many instances of this, one can point to navigation procedures. Similarly, the impact of the Soviet Union (now Russia) and the United States on space law has been paramount.³⁴

One can conclude by stating that for a custom to be accepted and recognised it must have the concurrence of the major powers in that particular field. A regulation regarding the breadth of the territorial sea is unlikely to be treated as law if the great maritime nations do not agree to or acquiesce in it, no matter how many landlocked states demand it. Other countries may propose ideas and institute pressure, but without the concurrence of those most interested, it cannot amount to a rule of customary law. This follows from the nature of the international system where all may participate but the views of those with greater power carry greater weight.

Accordingly, the duration and generality of a practice may take second place to the relative importance of the states precipitating the formation of a new customary rule in any given field. Universality is not required, but some correlation with power is. Some degree of continuity must be maintained but this again depends upon the context of operation and the nature of the usage.

Those elements reflect the external manifestations of a practice and establish that it is in existence and exhibited as such. That does not mean that it is law and this factor will be considered in the next subsection. But it does mean that all states who take the trouble can discover its existence. This factor of conspicuousness emphasises both the importance of the context within which the usage operates and the more significant elements of the overt act which affirms the existence of a custom.

The question is raised at this stage of how significant a failure to act is. Just how important is it when a state, or more particularly a major state, does not participate in a practice? Can it be construed as acquiescence in the performance of the usage? Or, on the other hand, does it denote indifference implying the inability of the practice to become a custom until a decision one way or the other has been made? Failures to act are in themselves just as much evidence of a state's attitudes as are actions. They similarly reflect the way in which a nation approaches its environment. Britain consistently fails to attack France, while Chad consistently fails to send a man to the moon. But does this mean that Britain recognises a rule not to attack its neighbour and that Chad accepts a custom not to launch rockets to the moon? Of course, the answer is in the first instance yes, and in the second example no. Thus, a failure to act can arise from either a legal obligation not to act, or an incapacity or unwillingness in the particular circumstances to act. Indeed, it has been maintained that the continued habit of not taking actions in certain situations may lead to the formation of a legal rule.³⁵

³³ See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 42–3; 41 IILR, pp. 29, 71–3. Note also Draft Conclusion 8 provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015), stating that ‘The relevant practice must be general, meaning that it must be sufficiently widespread and representative, as well as consistent’.

³⁴ See e.g. Cheng, ‘United Nations Resolutions’; C. Christol, The Modern International Law of Outer Space, New York, 1982, and Christol, Space Law: Past, Present and Future, The Hague, 1991. See further below, chapter 9.

³⁵ See e.g. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 116–17. But cf. D’Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 61–3 and 88–9.

The danger of saying that a failure to act over a long period creates a negative custom, that is a rule actually not to do it, can be shown by remarking on the absurdity of the proposition that a continual failure to act until the late 1950s is evidence of a legal rule not to send artificial satellites or rockets into space. On the other hand, where a particular rule of behaviour is established it can be argued that abstention from protest by states may amount to agreement with that rule.

In the particular circumstances of the Lotus case³⁶ the Permanent Court of International Justice, the predecessor of the International Court of Justice, laid down a high standard by declaring that abstention could only give rise to the recognition of a custom if it was based on a conscious duty to abstain. In other words, states had actually to be aware that they were not acting a particular way because they were under a definite obligation not to act that way. The decision has been criticised and would appear to cover categories of non-acts based on legal obligations, but not to refer to instances where, by simply not acting as against a particular rule in existence, states are tacitly accepting the legality and relevance of that rule.

It should be mentioned, however, that acquiescence must be based upon full knowledge of the rule invoked. Where a failure to take a course of action is in some way connected or influenced or accompanied by a lack of knowledge of all the relevant circumstances, then it cannot be interpreted as acquiescence.

What is State Practice?

Some of the ingredients of state activities have been surveyed and attempts made to place them in some kind of relevant context. But what is state practice? Does it cover every kind of behaviour initiated by the state, or is it limited to actual, positive actions? To put it more simply, does it include such things as speeches, informal documents and governmental statements or is it restricted to what states actually do?

It is how states behave in practice that forms the basis of customary law, but evidence of what a state does can be obtained from numerous sources. Obvious examples include administrative acts, legislation, decisions of domestic courts³⁷ and activities on the international stage, for example treaty-making.³⁸ A state is not a living entity, but consists of governmental departments and thousands of officials, and state activity is spread throughout a whole range of national organs. There are the state's legal officers, legislative institutions, courts, diplomatic agents and political leaders. Each of these engages in activity which relates to the international field and ³⁶ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

³⁷ See the Jurisdictional Immunities (Germany v Italy) case, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 99, 123, noting that 'State practice of particular significance is to be found in the judgments of national courts . . .'.

³⁸ See e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', pp. 815–8, and Congo v. Belgium, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 23–4; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 78–80. See also Draft Conclusion 6 provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015), noting that,

1. Practice may take a wide range of forms. It includes both physical and verbal acts. It may, under certain circumstances, include inaction. 2. Forms of State practice include, but are not limited to: diplomatic acts and correspondence; conduct in connection with resolutions adopted by an international organization or at an inter-governmental conference; conduct in connection with treaties; executive conduct, including operational conduct "on the ground"; legislative and administrative acts; and decisions of national courts. 3. There is no predetermined hierarchy among the various forms of practice.

Note that it is proposed to strike out the references to 'conduct in connection with resolutions adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference': see Special Rapporteur's Fourth Report, A/CN.4/695, Annex (2016).

therefore one has to examine all such material sources and more in order to discover evidence of what states do.³⁹

The obvious way to find out how countries are behaving is to read the newspapers, consult historical records, listen to what governmental authorities are saying and peruse the many official publications. There are also memoirs of various past leaders, official manuals on legal questions, diplomatic interchanges and the opinions of national legal advisers. All these methods are valuable in seeking to determine actual state practice.

In addition, one may note resolutions in the General Assembly, comments made by governments on drafts produced by the International Law Commission, decisions of the international judicial institutions, decisions of national courts, treaties and the general practice of international organisations.⁴⁰

International organisations in fact may be instrumental in the creation of customary law. For example, the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice declaring that the United Nations possessed international personality was partly based on the actual behaviour of the UN.⁴¹ The International Law Commission has pointed out that 'records of the cumulative practice of international organisations may be regarded as evidence of customary international law with reference to states' relations to the organisations'.⁴² The International Court has also noted that evidence of the existence of rules and principles may be found in resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the Security Council of the United Nations.⁴³

States' municipal laws may in certain circumstances form the basis of customary rules. In the Scotia case decided by the US Supreme Court in 1871,⁴⁴ a British ship had sunk an American vessel on the high seas. The Court held that British navigational procedures established by an Act of Parliament formed the basis of the relevant international custom since other states had legislated in virtually identical terms. Accordingly, the American vessel, in not displaying the correct lights, was at fault. The view has also been expressed that mere claims as distinct from actual physical acts cannot constitute state practice. This is based on the precept that 'until it [a state] takes enforcement action, the claim has little value as a prediction of what the state will ³⁹ See e.g. Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, pp. 368–72, and the Interhandel case, ICJ Reports, 1959, p. 27. Note also Brierly's comment that not all contentions put forward on behalf of a state represent that state's settled or impartial opinion, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 60. See also Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 2.

⁴⁰ The United States has produced an extensive series of publications covering its practice in international law. See the Digests of International Law produced by Wharton (1887), Moore (1906) and Whiteman (1963–70). From 1973 to 1980 an annual Digest of US Practice in International Law has been produced, while three composite volumes covering the years 1981–8 have appeared. The series resumed with effect from the year 2000. See also H. A. Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 2 vols., 1932–5; A. D. McNair, International Law Opinions, Cambridge, 3 vols., 1956; C. Parry, British Digest of International Law, London, 1965; and E. Lauterpacht, British Practice in International Law, London, 1963–7. Several yearbooks now produce sections devoted to national practice, e.g. British Yearbook of International Law and Annuaire Français de Droit International.

⁴¹ The Reparation case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See also the Reservations to the Genocide Convention case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 15, 25; 18 ILR, p. 364.

⁴² Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, pp. 368–72. See also Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 12. See also Draft Conclusion 4 provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015), stating that, 'In certain cases, the practice of international organizations also contributes to the formation, or expression, of rules of customary international law'.

⁴³ See the Court's advisory opinion in the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–90.

⁴⁴ 14 Wallace 170 (1871). See also the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 22; 22 ILR, p. 349; and the Paquete Habana case, 175 US 677 (1900).

actually do'.⁴⁵ But as has been demonstrated this is decidedly a minority view.⁴⁶ Claims and conventions of states in various contexts have been adduced as evidence of state practice and it is logical that this should be so,⁴⁷ though the weight to be attached to such claims, may, of course, vary according to the circumstances. This approach is clearly the correct one since the process of claims and counter-claims is one recognised method by which states communicate to each other their perceptions of the status of international rules and norms. In this sense they operate in the same way as physical acts. Whether in abstracto or with regard to a particular situation, they constitute the raw material out of which may be fashioned rules of international law.⁴⁸ It is suggested that the formulation that 'state practice covers any act or statements by a state from which views about customary law may be inferred',⁴⁹ is substantially correct. However, it should be noted that not all elements of practice are equal in their weight and the value to be given to state conduct will depend upon its nature and provenance.

*Opinio Juris*⁵⁰

Once one has established the existence of a specified usage, it becomes necessary to consider how the state views its own behaviour. Is it to be regarded as a moral or political or legal act or statement? The opinio juris, or belief that a state activity is legally obligatory, is the factor which turns the usage into a custom and renders it part of the rules of international law. To put it slightly differently, states will behave a certain way because they are convinced it is binding upon them to do so, or, as the Special Rapporteur's Draft Conclusion 9 put it, 'the practice in question must be undertaken with a sense of legal right or obligation'.⁵¹

The Permanent Court of International Justice expressed this point of view when it dealt with the Lotus case.⁵² The issue at hand concerned a collision on the high seas (where international law applies) between the Lotus, a French ship, and the Boz-Kourt, a Turkish ship. Several people aboard the latter ship were drowned and Turkey alleged negligence by the French officer of the watch. When the Lotus reached Istanbul, the French officer was arrested on a charge of manslaughter and the case turned on whether Turkey had jurisdiction to try him. Among the various arguments adduced, the French maintained that there existed a rule of customary law to the effect that the flag

⁴⁵ D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 88 and 50–1. See also Judge Read (dissenting), the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 191; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 132.

⁴⁶ Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 2–3. See also Thirlway, International Customary Law, p. 58.

⁴⁷ E.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277; 17 ILR, p. 280; the Rights of US Nationals in Morocco case, ICJ Reports, 1952, pp. 176, 200, 209; 19 ILR, p. 255; and the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32–3, 47 and 53; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 47, 56–8, 81–8, 119–20, 135 and 161; 55 ILR, p. 238.

⁴⁸ But see Thirlway, International Customary Law, pp. 58–9.

⁴⁹ Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', p. 10. This would also include omissions and silence by states: ibid.

⁵⁰ Ibid., pp. 31–42, and D'Amato, Concept of Custom, pp. 66–72. See also Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 818; Mendelson, 'Formation', p. 245; Bos, Methodology, pp. 236 ff.; P. Haggenmacher, 'Des Deux Éléments du Droit Coutumier dans la Pratique de la Cour Internationale', 91 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1985, p. 5; O. Elias, 'The Nature of the Subjective Element in Customary International Law', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 501; I. M. Lobo de Souza, 'The Role of State Consent in the Customary Process', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 521; and B. Cheng, 'Opinio Juris: A Key Concept in International Law that is Much Misunderstood', in International Law in the Post-Cold War World (ed. S. Yee and W. Tieya), London, 2001, p. 56.

⁵¹ Draft Conclusions provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015). Note that an amendment to this was proposed in Spring 2016 substituting 'accompanied by' for 'undertaken with', A/CN.4/695, p. 22.

⁵² PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153.

state of the accused (France) had exclusive jurisdiction in such cases and that accordingly the national state of the victim (Turkey) was barred from trying him. To justify this, France referred to the absence of previous criminal prosecutions by such states in similar situations and from this deduced tacit consent in the practice which therefore became a legal custom.

The Court rejected this and declared that even if such a practice of abstention from instituting criminal proceedings could be proved in fact, it would not amount to a custom. It held that 'only if such abstention were based on their [the states] being conscious of a duty to abstain would it be possible to speak of an international custom'.⁵³ Thus the essential ingredient of obligation was lacking and the practice remained a practice, nothing more.

A similar approach occurred in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases.⁵⁴ In the general process of delimiting the continental shelf of the North Sea in pursuance of oil and gas exploration, lines were drawn dividing the whole area into national spheres. However, West Germany could not agree with either Holland or Denmark over the respective boundary lines and the matter came before the International Court of Justice.

Article 6 of the Geneva Convention on the Continental Shelf of 1958 provided that where agreement could not be reached, and unless special circumstances justified a different approach, the boundary line was to be determined in accordance with the principle of equidistance from the nearest points of the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea of each state is measured. This would mean a series of lines drawn at the point where Germany met Holland on the one side and Denmark on the other and projected outwards into the North Sea. However, because Germany's coastline is concave, such equidistant lines would converge and enclose a relatively small triangle of the North Sea. The Federal Republic had signed but not ratified the 1958 Geneva Convention and was therefore not bound by its terms. The question thus was whether a case could be made out that the 'equidistance-special circumstances principle' had been absorbed into customary law and was accordingly binding upon Germany.

The Court concluded in the negative and held that the provision in the Geneva Convention did not reflect an already existing custom. It was emphasised that when the International Law Commission had considered this point in the draft treaty which formed the basis of discussion at Geneva, the principle of equidistance had been proposed with considerable hesitation, somewhat on an experimental basis and not at all as an emerging rule of customary international law.⁵⁵ The issue then turned on whether practice subsequent to the Convention had created a customary rule. The Court answered in the negative and declared that although time was not of itself a decisive factor (only three years had elapsed before the proceedings were brought):

an indispensable requirement would be that within the period in question, short though it might be, state practice, including that of states whose interests are specially affected, should have been both extensive and virtually uniform in the sense of the provision invoked, and should moreover have occurred in such a way as to show a general recognition that a rule of law or legal obligation is involved.⁵⁶

⁵³ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 28; 4 AD, p. 159. ⁵⁴ ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 3; 41 ILR, p. 29.

⁵⁵ ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 32-41.

⁵⁶ Ibid., p. 43. See also e.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277; 17 ILR, p. 280, and the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 42-3; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 55.

This approach was maintained by the Court in the Nicaragua case⁵⁷ and express reference was made to the North Sea Continental Shelf cases. The Court noted that:

for a new customary rule to be formed, not only must the acts concerned 'amount to a settled practice', but they must be accompanied by the opinio juris sive necessitatis. Either the States taking such action or other States in a position to react to it, must have behaved so that their conduct is 'evidence of a belief that this practice is rendered obligatory by the existence of a rule of law requiring it. The need for such a belief, i.e. the existence of a subjective element, is implicit in the very notion of the opinio juris sive necessitatis.'⁵⁸

This was reaffirmed by the Court in Germany v Italy (Greece Intervening), where it was further noted that:

Opinio juris in this context is reflected in particular in the assertion by States claiming immunity that international law accords them a right to such immunity from the jurisdiction of other States; in the acknowledgment, by States granting immunity, that international law imposes upon them an obligation to do so; and, conversely, in the assertion by States in other cases of a right to exercise jurisdiction over foreign States. While it may be true that States sometimes decide to accord an immunity more extensive than that required by international law, for present purposes, the point is that the grant of immunity in such a case is not accompanied by the requisite opinio juris and therefore sheds no light upon the issue currently under consideration by the Court.⁵⁹

It is thus clear that the Court has adopted and maintained a high threshold with regard to the overt proving of the subjective constituent of customary law formation. Confluence of practice in itself is not enough. This was reflected in the Diallo case, where the International Court held that the fact that various international agreements have established special legal regimes for investment protection or that such provisions are commonly included in contracts between states and foreign investors 'was insufficient to show that there has been a change in the customary rules of diplomatic protection: it could equally show the contrary'.⁶⁰

The great problem connected with the opinio juris is that if it calls for behaviour in accordance with law, how can new customary rules be created since that obviously requires action different from or contrary to what until then is regarded as law? If a country claims a three-mile territorial sea in the belief that this is legal, how can the rule be changed in customary law to allow claims of, for example, twelve miles, since that cannot also be in accordance with prevailing law?⁶¹ Obviously if one takes a restricted view of the psychological aspects, then logically the law will become stultified and this demonstrably has not happened.

Thus, one has to treat the matter in terms of a process whereby states behave in a certain way in the belief that such behaviour is law or is becoming law. It will then depend upon how other states react as to whether this process of legislation is accepted or rejected. It follows that rigid definitions

⁵⁷ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349.

⁵⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 108–9; 76 ILR, pp. 442–3, citing ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 44; 41 ILR, p. 73.

⁵⁹ ICJ Reports, 2012, para. 55.

⁶⁰ Guinea v. Democratic Republic of the Congo (Preliminary Objections), ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 582, 615. See generally S. Talmon, 'Determining Customary International Law: The ICJ's Methodology between Induction, Deduction and Assertion', 26 EJIL, 2015, p. 417.

⁶¹ See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 32–4 for attempts made to deny or minimise the need for opinio juris.

as to legality have to be modified to see whether the legitimating stamp of state activity can be provided or not. If a state proclaims a twelve-mile limit to its territorial sea in the belief that although the three-mile limit has been accepted law, the circumstances are so altering that a twelve-mile limit might now be treated as becoming law, it is vindicated if other states follow suit and a new rule of customary law is established. If other states reject the proposition, then the projected rule withers away and the original rule stands, reinforced by state practice and common acceptance. As the Court itself noted in the Nicaragua case,⁶² '[r]eliance by a State on a novel right or an unprecedented exception to the principle might, if shared in principle by other States, tend towards a modification of customary international law'. The difficulty in this kind of approach is that it is sometimes hard to pinpoint exactly when one rule supersedes another, but that is a complication inherent in the nature of custom. Change is rarely smooth but rather spasmodic.

This means taking a more flexible view of the opinio juris and tying it more firmly with the overt manifestations of a custom into the context of national and international behaviour. This should be done to accommodate the idea of an action which, while contrary to law, contains the germ of a new law and relates to the difficulty of actually proving that a state, in behaving a certain way, does so in the belief that it is in accordance with the law. An extreme expression of this approach is to infer or deduce the opinio juris from the material acts. Judge Tanaka, in his Dissenting Opinion in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, remarked that there was:

no other way than to ascertain the existence of opinio juris from the fact of the external existence of a certain custom and its necessity felt in the international community, rather than to seek evidence as to the subjective motives for each example of State practice.⁶³

However, states must be made aware that when one state takes a course of action, it does so because it regards it as within the confines of international law, and not as, for example, purely a political or moral gesture. There has to be an aspect of legality about the behaviour and the acting state will have to confirm that this is so, so that the international community can easily distinguish legal from non-legal practices. This is essential to the development and presentation of a legal framework amongst the states.⁶⁴

Faced with the difficulty in practice of proving the existence of the opinio juris,⁶⁵ increasing reference has been made to conduct within international organisations. This is so particularly ⁶² ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 109; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 443.

⁶³ ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 176; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 171. Lauterpacht wrote that one should regard all uniform conduct of governments as evidencing the opinio juris, except where the conduct in question was not accompanied by such intention: The Development of International Law, p. 580; but cf. Cheng, 'Custom: The Future', p. 36, and Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions', pp. 530–2.

⁶⁴ Note D'Amato's view that to become a custom, a practice has to be preceded or accompanied by the 'articulation' of a rule, which will put states on notice that an action etc. will have legal implications: Concept of Custom, p. 75. Cf. Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 35–6, who also puts forward his view that 'the practice of states needs to be accompanied by statements that something is already law before it can become law': such statements need not be beliefs as to the truths of the given situation, ibid., p. 37. Akehurst also draws a distinction between permissive rules, which do not require express statements as to opinio juris, and duty-imposing rules, which do: ibid., pp. 37–8.

⁶⁵ Forms of evidence of acceptance as law may include public statements made on behalf of States; official publications; government legal opinions; diplomatic correspondence; decisions of national courts; treaty provisions; and conduct in connection with resolutions adopted by an international organisation or at an intergovernmental conference: see Draft Conclusion 10 of the Draft Conclusions provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015).

with regard to the United Nations. The International Court of Justice has in a number of cases utilised General Assembly resolutions as confirming the existence of the opinio juris, focusing on the content of the resolution or resolutions in question and the conditions of their adoption.⁶⁶ The key, however, is the attitude taken by the states concerned, whether as parties to a particular treaty or as participants in the adoption of a UN resolution.⁶⁷ The Court has also referred to major codification conventions for the same purpose,⁶⁸ and to the work of the International Law Commission.⁶⁹

Protest, Acquiescence and Change in Customary Law⁷⁰

Customary law is thus established by virtue of a pattern of claim, absence of protest by states particularly interested in the matter at hand and acquiescence by other states.⁷¹ Together with related notions such as recognition, admissions and estoppel, such conduct or abstinence from conduct forms part of a complex framework within which legal principles are created and deemed applicable to states.⁷²

The Chamber of the International Court in the Gulf of Maine case defined acquiescence as 'equivalent to tacit recognition manifested by unilateral conduct which the other party may interpret as consent' and as founded upon the principles of good faith and equity.⁷³ Generally, where states are seen to acquiesce⁷⁴ in the behaviour of other states without protesting against them, the assumption must be that such behaviour is accepted as legitimate.⁷⁵

Some writers have maintained that acquiescence can amount to consent to a customary rule and that the absence of protest implies agreement. In other words, where a state or states take action which they declare to be legal, the silence of other states can be used as an expression of opinio juris or concurrence in the new legal rule. This means that actual protests are called for to ⁶⁶ See e.g. the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 254–5; 110 ILR, p. 163. See also the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 31–3; the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226; the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100, 101 and 106; 76 ILR, p. 349; and the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171–2; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–90.

⁶⁷ See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 99–100.

⁶⁸ See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 28–32 with regard to the 1958 Continental Shelf Convention and e.g. among many cases, Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 429–30 with regard to the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969.

⁶⁹ See e.g. the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 38–42 and 46; 116 ILR, pp. 1, 47–51 and 55.

⁷⁰ See H. Lauterpacht, 'Sovereignty over Submarine Areas', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 376; I. MacGibbon, 'Some Observations on the Part of Protest in International Law', 29 BYIL, 1953, p. 293; and MacGibbon, 'Customary International Law and Acquiescence', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 115; Wolfke, Custom, pp. 157–65; and I. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence', in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (ed. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 104. See also more generally N. Antunes, Estoppel, Acquiescence and Recognition in Territorial and Boundary Dispute Settlement, Durham, 2000.

⁷¹ See, for a good example, the decision of the International Court in the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 601; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 517, with regard to the joint sovereignty over the historic waters of the Gulf of Fonseca beyond the territorial sea of the three coastal states.

⁷² See e.g. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence', p. 104 and below, chapter 9, p. 382.

⁷³ ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 305; 71 ILR, p. 74.

⁷⁴ Note that the Court has stated that 'the idea of acquiescence . . . presupposes freedom of will', Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 597; 80 ILR, p. 459.

⁷⁵ See e.g. Grand-Duchy of Luxembourg v. Cie. Luxembourgeoise de Télédiffusion, 91 ILR, pp. 281, 286.

break the legitimising process.⁷⁶ As the Special Rapporteur has put it: 'Failure to react over time to a practice may serve as evidence of acceptance as law (opinio juris), provided that States were in a position to react and the circumstances called for some reaction'.⁷⁷

In the Lotus case, the Court held that 'only if such abstention were based on their [the states] being conscious of having a duty to abstain would it be possible to speak of an international custom'.⁷⁸ Thus, one cannot infer a rule prohibiting certain action merely because states do not indulge in that activity. But the question of not reacting when a state behaves a certain way is a slightly different one. It would seem that where a new rule is created in new fields of international law, for example space law, acquiescence by other states is to be regarded as reinforcing the rule whether it stems from actual agreement or lack of interest depending always upon the particular circumstances of the case. Acquiescence in a new rule which deviates from an established custom is more problematic.

The decision in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case⁷⁹ may appear to suggest that where a state acts contrary to an established customary rule and other states acquiesce in this, then that state is to be treated as not bound by the original rule. The Court noted that 'in any event the . . . rule would appear to be inapplicable as against Norway inasmuch as she had always opposed any attempt to apply it to the Norwegian coast'.⁸⁰ In other words, a state opposing the existence of a custom from its inception would not be bound by it. This is known as the persistent objector rule.⁸¹ However, the problem of one or more states seeking to dissent from recognised customs by adverse behaviour coupled with the acquiescence or non-reaction of other states remains unsettled.

States fail to protest for very many reasons. A state might not wish to give offence gratuitously or it might wish to reinforce political ties or other diplomatic and political considerations may be relevant. It could be that to protest over every single act with which a state does not agree would be an excessive requirement. It is, therefore, unrealistic to expect every state to react to every single act of every other state. If one accepted that a failure to protest validated a derogation from an established custom in every case then scores of special relationships would emerge between different states depending upon acquiescence and protest. In many cases a protest might be purely formal or part of diplomatic manoeuvring designed to exert pressure in a totally different field and thus not intended to alter legal relationships.

Where a new rule which contradicts a prior rule is maintained by a large number of states, the protests of a few states would not overrule it, and the abstention from reaction by other countries

⁷⁶ See e.g. MacGibbon, 'Customary International Law', p. 131, and H. S. McDougal et al., Studies in World Public Order, New Haven, 1960, pp. 763–72.

⁷⁷ Draft Conclusion 10(3) of the Draft Conclusions provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015).

⁷⁸ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 28; 4 ILR, p. 159. ⁷⁹ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86.

⁸⁰ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 131; 18 ILR, p. 93. See also the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 26–7; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 55–6; and the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 277–8; 17 ILR, pp. 280, 285. See also P. Dumberry, 'Incoherent and Ineffective: The Concept of the Persistent Objector Revisited', 55 ICLQ, 2010, p. 779, and C. Quince, The Persistent Objector and Customary International Law, Colorado, 2010.

⁸¹ Draft Conclusion 15 of the Draft Conclusions provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, proposes that: '1. Where a State has objected to a rule of customary international law while that rule was in the process of formation, the rule is not opposable to the State concerned for so long as it maintains its objection. 2. The objection must be clearly expressed, made known to other States, and maintained persistently.' A/CN.4/L.869 (2015). See also e.g. J. A. Green, The Persistent Objector in International Law, Oxford, 2016.

would merely reinforce it. Constant protest on the part of a particular state when reinforced by the acquiescence of other states might create a recognised exception to the rule, but it will depend to a great extent on the facts of the situation and the views of the international community. Behaviour contrary to a custom contains within itself the seeds of a new rule and if it is endorsed by other nations, the previous law will disappear and be replaced, or alternatively there could be a period of time during which the two customs co-exist until one of them is generally accepted,⁸² as was the position for many years with regard to the limits of the territorial sea.⁸³ It follows from the above, therefore, that customary rules are binding upon all states except for such states as have dissented from the start of that custom.⁸⁴ This raises the question of new states and custom, for the logic of the traditional approach would be for such states to be bound by all existing customs as at the date of independence. The opposite view, based upon the consent theory of law, would permit such states to choose which customs to adhere to at that stage, irrespective of the attitude of other states.⁸⁵ However, since such an approach could prove highly disruptive, the proviso is often made that by entering into relations without reservation with other states, new states signify their acceptance of the totality of international law.⁸⁶

Regional and Local Custom⁸⁷

It is possible for rules to develop which will bind only a set group of states, such as those in Latin America,⁸⁸ or indeed just two states.⁸⁹ Such an approach may be seen as part of the need for 'respect for regional legal traditions'.⁹⁰

In the Asylum case,⁹¹ the International Court of Justice discussed the Colombian claim of a regional or local custom peculiar to the Latin American states, which would validate its position over the granting of asylum. The Court declared that the 'party which relies on a custom of this kind must prove that this custom is established in such a manner that it has become binding on the other party'.⁹² It found that such a custom could not be proved because of uncertain and contradictory evidence.

In such cases, the standard of proof required, especially as regards the obligation accepted by the party against whom the local custom is maintained, is higher than in cases where an ordinary or general custom is alleged.

⁸² See also protests generally: Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 38–42. ⁸³ See below, chapter 10, p. 422.

⁸⁴ See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 38, 130; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 67, 137, and The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. I, pp. 25–6. See also T. Stein, 'The Approach of the Different Drummer: The Principle of the Persistent Objector in International Law', 26 Harvard International Law Journal, 1985, p. 457, and J. Charney, 'The Persistent Objector Rule and the Development of Customary International Law', 56 BYIL, 1985, p. 1.

⁸⁵ See e.g. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, p. 129. ⁸⁶ Ibid.

⁸⁷ See Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 29–31; Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 105; D'Amato, Concept of Custom, chapter 8; G. Cohen-Jonathan, 'La Coutume Locale', AFDI, 1961, p. 133; and Wolfke, Custom, pp. 88–90. Local custom is sometimes referred to as regional or special custom.

⁸⁸ See e.g. H. Gros Espiel, 'La Doctrine du Droit International en Amérique Latine avant la Première Conférence Panaméricaine', 3 Journal of the History of International Law, 2001, p. 1.

⁸⁹ Note the claim by Honduras in the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 597; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 513 that a 'trilateral local custom of the nature of a convention' could establish a condominium arrangement.

⁹⁰ See the Eritrea/Yemen (Maritime Delimitation) case, 119 ILR, pp. 417, 448.

⁹¹ ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 266; 17 ILR, p. 280. ⁹² ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 276; 17 ILR, p. 284.

In the Right of Passage over Indian Territory case,⁹³ Portugal claimed that there existed a right of passage over Indian territory as between the Portuguese enclaves, and this was upheld by the International Court of Justice over India's objections that no local custom could be established between only two states. The Court declared that it was satisfied that there had in the past existed a constant and uniform practice allowing free passage and that the 'practice was accepted as law by the parties and has given rise to a right and a correlative obligation'.⁹⁴ More generally, the Court stated that 'Where therefore the Court finds a practice clearly established between two States which was accepted by the Parties as governing the relations between them, the Court must attribute decisive effect to that practice for the purpose of determining their specific rights and obligations. Such a particular practice must prevail over any general rules.'⁹⁵

Such local customs therefore depend upon a particular activity by one state being accepted by the other state (or states) as an expression of a legal obligation or right. While in the case of a general customary rule the process of consensus is at work so that a majority or a substantial minority of interested states can be sufficient to create a new custom, a local custom needs the positive acceptance of both (or all) parties to the rule.⁹⁶ This is because local customs are an exception to the general nature of customary law, which involves a fairly flexible approach to law-making by all states, and instead constitutes a reminder of the former theory of consent whereby states are bound only by what they assent to. Exceptions may prove the rule, but they need greater proof than the rule to establish themselves.

TREATIES⁹⁷

In contrast with the process of creating law through custom, treaties (or international conventions) are a more modern and more deliberate method.⁹⁸ Article 38 refers to 'international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognised by the contracting states'. Treaties will be considered in more detail in chapter 15 but in this survey of the sources of international law reference must be made to the role of international conventions.

Treaties are known by a variety of differing names, ranging from Conventions, International Agreements, Pacts, General Acts, Charters, through to Statutes, Declarations and Covenants.⁹⁹ All these terms refer to a similar transaction, the creation of written agreements whereby the states participating bind themselves legally to act in a particular way or to set up particular relations between themselves. A series of conditions and arrangements are laid out which the parties oblige themselves to carry out.¹⁰⁰

⁹³ ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 6; 31 ILR, p. 23. ⁹⁴ ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 40; 31 ILR, p. 53. See Wolfke, Custom, p. 90.

⁹⁵ ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 44. ⁹⁶ See Cohen-Jonathan, 'La Coutume Locale'.

⁹⁷ See generally A. D. McNair, The Law of Treaties, Oxford, 1961; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 798; A. Aust, Modern Treaty Law and Practice, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2013; and R. Kolb, The Law of Treaties, Cheltenham, 2016. See further below, chapter 15.

⁹⁸ Oppenheim's International Law emphasises that 'not only is custom the original source of international law, but treaties are a source the validity and modalities of which themselves derive from custom', p. 31.

⁹⁹ See e.g. UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 404.

¹⁰⁰ See the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. Article 2(1)a defines a treaty for the purposes of the Convention as 'an international agreement concluded between states in written form and governed by international law, whether embodied in a single instrument or in two or more related instruments and whatever its particular designation'. See further below, p. 88 with regard to non-binding international agreements.

The obligatory nature of treaties is founded upon the customary international law principle that agreements are binding (pacta sunt servanda). Treaties may be divided into ‘law-making’ treaties, which are intended to have universal or general relevance, and ‘treaty-contracts’, which apply only as between two or a small number of states. Such a distinction is intended to reflect the general or local applicability of a particular treaty and the range of obligations imposed. It cannot be regarded as hard and fast and there are many grey areas of overlap and uncertainty.¹⁰¹

Treaties are express agreements and are a form of substitute legislation undertaken by states. They bear a close resemblance to contracts in a superficial sense in that the parties create binding obligations for themselves, but they have a nature of their own which reflects the character of the international system. The number of treaties entered into has expanded over the last century; witness the growing number of volumes of the United Nations Treaty Series or the United Kingdom Treaty Series. They fulfil a vital role in international relations.

As governmental controls increase and the technological and communications revolutions affect international life, the number of issues which require some form of inter-state regulation multiplies.

For many writers, treaties constitute the most important sources of international law as they require the express consent of the contracting parties. Treaties are thus seen as superior to custom, which is regarded in any event as a form of tacit agreement.¹⁰² As examples of important treaties one may mention the Charter of the United Nations, the Geneva Conventions on the treatment of prisoners and the protection of civilians and the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations. All kinds of agreements exist, ranging from the regulation of outer space exploration to the control of drugs and the creation of international financial and development institutions. It would be impossible to telephone abroad or post a letter overseas or take an aeroplane to other countries without the various international agreements that have laid down the necessary, recognised conditions of operation.

It follows from the essence of an international treaty that, like a contract, it sets down a series of propositions which are then regarded as binding upon the parties. How then is it possible to treat conventions as sources of international law, over and above the obligations imposed upon the contracting parties? It is in this context that one can understand the term ‘law-making treaties’. They are intended to have an effect generally, not restrictively, and they are to be contrasted with those treaties which merely regulate limited issues between a few states. Law-making treaties are those agreements whereby states elaborate their perception of international law upon any given topic or establish new rules which are to guide them for the future in their international conduct. Such law-making treaties, of necessity, require the participation of a large number of states to emphasise this effect, and may produce rules that will bind all.¹⁰³ They constitute normative treaties, agreements that prescribe rules of conduct to be followed. Examples of such treaties may include the Antarctic Treaty and the Genocide Convention. There are also many agreements which declare the existing law or codify existing customary rules, such as the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations of 1961.

¹⁰¹ See Virally, ‘Sources’, p. 126; Sørensen, Les Sources, pp. 58 ff.; and Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 93–5.

¹⁰² Tunkin, Theory of International Law, pp. 91–113. See also R. Müllerson, ‘Sources of International Law: New Tendencies in Soviet Thinking’, 83 AJIL, 1989, pp. 494, 501–9, and Danilenko, ‘Theory’, p. 9.

¹⁰³ But this may depend upon the attitude of other states. This does not constitute a form of international legislation: see e.g. Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 32; the Reparation case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 185; 16 AD, p. 318; and the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 56; 49 ILR, p. 2. See also R. Baxter, ‘Treaties and Custom’, 129 HR, 1970, p. 27; O. Schachter, ‘Entangled Treaty and Custom’, in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1989, p. 717; and Y. Dinstein, ‘The Interaction Between Customary International Law and Treaties’, 322 HR, 2006, p. 247.

Parties that do not sign and ratify the particular treaty in question are not bound by its terms. This is a general rule and was illustrated in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases¹⁰⁴ where West Germany had not ratified the relevant Convention and was therefore under no obligation to heed its terms. However, where treaties reflect customary law then non-parties are bound, not because it is a treaty provision but because it reaffirms a rule or rules of customary international law. Similarly, non-parties may come to accept that provisions in a particular treaty can generate customary law, depending always upon the nature of the agreement, the number of participants and other relevant factors.

The possibility that a provision in a treaty may constitute the basis of a rule which, when coupled with the opinio juris, can lead to the creation of a binding custom governing all states, not just those party to the original treaty, was considered by the International Court of Justice in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases¹⁰⁵ and regarded as one of the recognised methods of formulating new rules of customary international law. The Court, however, declared that the particular provision had to be 'of a fundamentally norm-creating character',¹⁰⁶ that is, capable of forming the basis of a general rule of law. What exactly this amounts to will probably vary according to the time and place, but it does confirm that treaty provisions may lead to custom providing other states, parties and non-parties to the treaty fulfil the necessary conditions of compatible behaviour and opinio juris. It has been argued that this possibility may be extended so that generalisable treaty provisions may of themselves, without the requirement to demonstrate the opinio juris and with little passage of time, generate ipso facto customary rules.¹⁰⁷ This, while recognising the importance of treaties, particularly in the human rights field, containing potential norm-creating provisions, is clearly going too far. The danger would be of a small number of states legislating for all, unless dissenting states actually entered into contrary treaties.¹⁰⁸ This would constitute too radical a departure for the current process of law-formation within the international community.

It is now established that even where a treaty rule comes into being covering the same ground as a customary rule, the latter will not be simply absorbed within the former but will maintain its separate existence. The Court in the Nicaragua case¹⁰⁹ did not accept the argument of the US that the norms of customary international law concerned with self-defence had been 'subsumed' and 'supervened' by article 51 of the United Nations Charter. It was emphasised that 'even if a treaty norm and a customary norm relevant to the present dispute were to have exactly the same content, this would not be a reason for the Court to hold that the incorporation of the customary ¹⁰⁴ ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 25; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 54.

¹⁰⁵ ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 41-2; 41 ILR, p. 71. The Court stressed that this method of creating new customs was not to be lightly regarded as having been attained, ibid.

¹⁰⁶ But see the minority opinions, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 56, 156-8, 163, 169, 172-80, 197-200, 221-32 and 241-7; 41 ILR, p. 85. See also the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 295; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 122, and the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 29-34; 81 ILR, pp. 239, 261-6.

¹⁰⁷ See D'Amato, Concept of Custom, p. 104, and D'Amato, 'The Concept of Human Rights in International Law', 82 Columbia Law Review, 1982, pp. 1110, 1129-47. See also Akehurst, 'Custom as a Source', pp. 42-52.

¹⁰⁸ D'Amato, 'Concept of Human Rights', p. 1146. ¹⁰⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14; 76 ILR, p. 349.

norm into treaty law must deprive the customary norm of its applicability as distinct from the treaty norm'.¹¹⁰ The Court concluded that 'it will therefore be clear that customary international law continues to exist and to apply separately from international treaty law, even where the two categories of law have an identical content'.¹¹¹ The effect of this in the instant case was that the Court was able to examine the rule as established under customary law, whereas due to an American reservation, it was unable to analyse the treaty-based obligation.

Of course, two rules with the same content may be subject to different principles with regard to their interpretation and application; thus the approach of the Court as well as being theoretically correct is of practical value also. In many cases, such dual source of existence of a rule may well suggest that the two versions are not in fact identical, as in the case of self-defence under customary law and article 51 of the Charter, but it will always depend upon the particular circumstances.¹¹²

Certain treaties attempt to establish a 'regime' which will, of necessity, also extend to non-parties.¹¹³ The United Nations Charter, for example, in its creation of a definitive framework for the preservation of international peace and security, declares in article 2(6) that 'the organisation shall ensure that states which are not members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles [listed in article 2] so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security'. One can also point to the 1947 General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) which set up a common code of conduct in international trade and has had an important effect on non-party states as well, being now transmuted into the World Trade Organization.

On the same theme, treaties may be constitutive in that they create international institutions and act as constitutions for them, outlining their proposed powers and duties.

'Treaty-contracts' on the other hand are not law-making instruments in themselves since they are between only small numbers of states and on a limited topic, but may provide evidence of customary rules. For example, a series of bilateral treaties containing a similar rule may be evidence of the existence of that rule in customary law, although this proposition needs to be approached with some caution in view of the fact that bilateral treaties by their very nature often reflect discrete circumstances.¹¹⁴

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF LAW¹¹⁵

In any system of law, a situation may very well arise where the court in considering a case before it realises that there is no law covering exactly that point, neither parliamentary statute nor ¹¹⁰ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 94–5; 76 ILR, pp. 428–9. See also W. Czaplinski, 'Sources of International Law in the Nicaragua Case', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 151.

¹¹¹ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 96; 76 ILR, p. 430. ¹¹² See further below, chapter 19, p. 861.

¹¹³ See further below, chapter 15, p. 704.

¹¹⁴ See further below, p. 514, with regard to extradition treaties and below, p. 635, with regard to bilateral investment treaties.

¹¹⁵ See e.g. B. Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, London, 1953; A. D. McNair, 'The General Principles of Law Recognised by Civilised Nations', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 1; H. Lauterpacht, Private Law Sources and Analogies of International Law, London, 1927; G. Herczegh, General Principles of Law and the International Legal Order, Budapest, 1969; O. Schachter, International Law in Theory and Practice, Dordrecht, 1991, pp. 50–5; O. Corten, L'Utilisation du 'Raisonnable' par le Juge International, Brussels, 1997; B. Vitanyi, 'Les Positions Doctrinales Concernant le Sens de la Notion de "Principes Généraux de Droit Reconnus par les Nations Civilisées"', 86 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1982, p. 48; H. Waldock, 'General Course on Public judicial precedent. In such instances the judge will proceed to deduce a rule that will be relevant, by analogy from already existing rules or directly from the general principles that guide the legal system, whether they be referred to as emanating from justice, equity or considerations of public policy. Such a situation is perhaps even more likely to arise in international law because of the relative underdevelopment of the system in relation to the needs with which it is faced.

There are fewer decided cases in international law than in a municipal system and no method of legislating to provide rules to govern new situations.¹¹⁶ It is for such a reason that the provision of 'the general principles of law recognised by civilised nations'¹¹⁷ was inserted into article 38 as a source of law, to close the gap that might be uncovered in international law and solve this problem which is known legally as non liquet.¹¹⁸ The question of gaps in the system is an important one. It is important to appreciate that while there may not always be an immediate and obvious rule applicable to every international situation, 'every international situation is capable of being determined as a matter of law'.¹¹⁹

There are various opinions as to what the general principles of law concept is intended to refer. Some writers regard it as an affirmation of Natural Law concepts, which are deemed to underlie the system of international law and constitute the method for testing the validity of the positive (i.e. man-made) rules.¹²⁰ Other writers, particularly positivists, treat it as a sub-heading under treaty and customary law and incapable of adding anything new to international law unless it reflects the consent of states. Soviet writers like Tunkin subscribed to this approach and regarded the 'general principles of law' as reiterating the fundamental precepts of international law, for example, the law of peaceful co-existence, which have already been set out in treaty and custom law.¹²¹

Between these two approaches, most writers are prepared to accept that the general principles do constitute a separate source of law but of fairly limited scope, and this is reflected in the decisions of the Permanent Court of International Justice and the International Court of Justice. It is not clear, however, in all cases, whether what is involved is a general principle of law

International Law', 106 HR, 1962, p. 54; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 832; Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 108; M. Sørensen, 'Principes de Droit International', 101 HR, 1960, p. 16; and V. Degan, 'General Principles of Law', 3 Finnish YIL, 1992, p. 1. See also G. Gaja, 'General Principles of Law', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law; and Thirlway, Sources, chapter IV.

¹¹⁶ Note that the International Court has regarded the terms 'principles' and 'rules' as essentially the same within international law: the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 288–90. Introducing the adjective 'general', however, shifts the meaning to a broader concept.

¹¹⁷ The additional clause relating to recognition by 'civilised nations' is regarded today as redundant: see e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 836.

¹¹⁸ See e.g. J. Stone, Of Law and Nations, London, 1974, chapter 3; H. Lauterpacht, 'Some Observations on the Prohibition of Non Liquet and the Completeness of the Legal Order', Symbolae Verzijl, 1958, p. 196; Pellet, 'Article 38', pp. 734 and 763; H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice', BYIL, 1988, p. 76, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 44; and P. Weil, 'The Court Cannot Conclude Definitively ...? Non Liquet Revisited', 36 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1997, p. 109. See also the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, p. 46; 41 ILR, p. 29, and the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 135; 76 ILR, p. 349.

¹¹⁹ Oppenheim's International Law, p. 13. See, however, the conclusion of the International Court that it was unable to state whether there was a rule of international law prohibiting or permitting the threat or use of nuclear weapons by a state in self-defence where its very survival was at stake: the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 244; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 194. Cf. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Higgins, ibid.; 110 ILR, pp. 532 ff. See also Eritrea/Yemen (First Phase), 114 ILR, pp. 1, 119 and 121–2.

¹²⁰ See e.g. Lauterpacht, Private Law Sources. See also Waldock, 'General Course', p. 54; C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958, p. 169; and Judge Tanaka (dissenting), South-West Africa case (Second Phase), ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 294–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455–9.

¹²¹ Tunkin, Theory of International Law, chapter 7.

appearing in municipal systems or a general principle of international law or indeed, as it has been expressed, such principles of municipal law as are applicable to the relations between states.¹²²

While the reservoir from which one can draw contains the legal operations of 190 or so states, it does not follow that judges have to be experts in every legal system. There are certain common themes that run through the many different orders. Anglo-American common law has influenced a number of states throughout the world, as have the French and Germanic systems. There are many common elements in the law in Latin America, and most Afro-Asian states have borrowed heavily from the European experience in their efforts to modernise the structure administering the state and westernise economic and other enterprises.¹²³

Reference will now be made to some of the leading cases in this field to illustrate how this problem has been addressed.

In the Chorzów Factory case in 1928,¹²⁴ which followed the seizure of a nitrate factory in Upper Silesia by Poland, the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that 'it is a general conception of law that every violation of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation'. The Court also regarded it as:

a principle of international law that the reparation of a wrong may consist in an indemnity corresponding to the damage which the nationals of the injured state have suffered as a result of the act which is contrary to international law.

The most fertile fields, however, for the implementation of municipal law analogies have been those of procedure, evidence and the machinery of the judicial process. In the German Settlers in Poland case,¹²⁵ the Court, approaching the matter from the negative point of view,¹²⁶ declared that 'private rights acquired under existing law do not cease on a change of sovereignty . . . It can hardly be maintained that, although the law survived, private rights acquired under it perished. Such a contention is based on no principle and would be contrary to an almost universal opinion and practice.'¹²⁷ The International Court of Justice in the Corfu Channel case,¹²⁸ when referring to circumstantial evidence, pointed out that 'this indirect evidence is admitted in all systems of law and its use is recognised by international decisions'. International judicial reference has also been made to the concept of res judicata, that is that the decision in the circumstances is final, binding and without appeal.¹²⁹

¹²² Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 36–7.

¹²³ See generally, R. David and J. Brierley, Major Legal Systems in the World Today, 2nd edn, London, 1978. Note that the Tribunal in AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia stated that while a practice or legal provisions common to a number of nations would be an important source of international law, the French concepts of administrative unilateral acts or administrative contracts were not such practices or legal provisions: 89 ILR, pp. 366, 461.

¹²⁴ PCIJ, Series A, No. 17, 1928, p. 29; 4 AD, p. 258. See also the Chile–United States Commission decision with regard to the deaths of Letelier and Moffitt: 31 ILM, 1982, pp. 1, 9; 88 ILR, p. 727.

¹²⁵ PCIJ, Series B, No. 6, p. 36.

¹²⁶ See also the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 47; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 280–1, for a statement that the notion of actio popularis was not part of international law as such nor able to be regarded as imported by the concept of general principles of law.

¹²⁷ See also the Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, p. 42, and the Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 46, p. 167.

¹²⁸ ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 18; 16 AD, pp. 155, 157. ¹²⁹ The Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 248.

In the Administrative Tribunal case,¹³⁰ the Court dealt with the problem of the dismissal of members of the United Nations Secretariat staff and whether the General Assembly had the right to refuse to give effect to awards to them made by the relevant Tribunal. In giving its negative reply, the Court emphasised that:

according to a well-established and generally recognised principle of law, a judgment rendered by such a judicial body is res judicata and has binding force between the parties to the dispute.¹³¹

The question of res judicata was discussed in some detail in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Serbia and Montenegro) case,¹³² where the issue focused on the meaning of the 1996 decision of the Court rejecting preliminary objections to jurisdiction.¹³³ The Court emphasised that the principle 'signifies that the decisions of the Court are not only binding on the parties, but are final, in the sense that they cannot be reopened by the parties as regards the issues that have been determined, save by procedures, of an exceptional nature, specially laid down for that purpose. That principle signifies that the decisions of the Court are not only binding on the parties, but are final, in the sense that they cannot be reopened by the parties as regards the issues that have been determined, save by procedures, of an exceptional nature, specially laid down for that purpose.'¹³⁴ The Court noted that two purposes, one general and one specific, underpinned the principle of res judicata, internationally as well as nationally. The first referred to the stability of legal relations that requires that litigation come to an end. The second was that it is in the interest of each party that an issue which has already been adjudicated in favour of that party not be argued again. It was emphasised that depriving a litigant of the benefit of a judgment it had already obtained must in general be seen as a breach of the principles governing the legal settlement of disputes. The Court noted that the principle applied equally to preliminary objections judgments and merits judgments and that, since jurisdiction had been established by virtue of the 1996 judgment, it was not open to a party to assert in current proceedings that, at the date the earlier judgment was given, the Court had no power to give it, because one of the parties could now be seen to have been unable to come before it. This would be to call in question the force as res judicata of the operative clause of the judgment.¹³⁵

Further, the Court in the preliminary objections phase of the Right of Passage case¹³⁶ stated that:

¹³⁰ ICJ Reports, 1954, p. 47; 21 ILR, p. 310.

¹³¹ ICJ Reports, 1954, p. 53; 21 ILR, p. 314, and the Laguna del Desierto (Argentina/Chile) case, 113 ILR, pp. 1, 43, where it was stated that 'A judgment having the authority of res judicata is judicially binding on the Parties to the dispute. This is a fundamental principle of the law of nations repeatedly invoked in the jurisprudence, which regards the authority of res judicata as a universal and absolute principle of international law.' See also AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia, 89 ILR, pp. 366, 558; Cheng, General Principles, chapter 17; Rosenne's Law and Practice of the International Court, 1920–2015 (ed. M. N. Shaw), 5th edn, Leiden, 2016, pp. 1657 ff.; M. Shahabuddeen, Precedent in the International Court, Cambridge, 1996, pp. 30 and 168; and I. Scobbie, 'Res Judicata, Precedent and the International Court', 20 Australian YIL, 2000, p. 299.

¹³² ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 43, 89. ¹³³ ICJ Reports, 1996, p. 595; 115 ILR, p. 110. ¹³⁴ ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 43, 90.

¹³⁵ Ibid., at pp. 90–4. See also Nicaragua v. Colombia (Application by Honduras for Permission to Intervene), ICJ Reports, 2011, pp. 420, 443 and Nicaragua v. Colombia (Delimitation of the Continental Shelf beyond 200 nautical miles), Preliminary Objections, 2016, paras. 58 ff.

¹³⁶ ICJ Reports, 1957, pp. 125, 141–2; 24 ILR, pp. 840, 842–3. See also the Argentina–Chile Boundary Award of 21 October 1994, XXII UNRIAA, 2006, pp. 3, 24 and 39.

it is a rule of law generally accepted, as well as one acted upon in the past by the Court, that, once the Court has been validly seized of a dispute, unilateral action by the respondent state in terminating its Declaration [i.e. accepting the jurisdiction of the Court], in whole or in part, cannot divest the Court of jurisdiction.

The Court has also considered the principle of estoppel which provides that a party that has acquiesced in a particular situation cannot then proceed to challenge it. In the Temple case¹³⁷ the International Court of Justice applied the doctrine, but in the Serbian Loans case¹³⁸ in 1929, in which French bondholders were demanding payment in gold francs as against paper money upon a series of Serbian loans, the Court declared the principle inapplicable.

As the International Court noted in the ELSI case,¹³⁹ there were limitations upon the process of inferring an estoppel in all circumstances, since 'although it cannot be excluded that an estoppel could in certain circumstances arise from a silence when something ought to have been said, there are obvious difficulties in constructing an estoppel from a mere failure to mention a matter at a particular point in somewhat desultory diplomatic exchanges'.¹⁴⁰ The meaning of estoppel was confirmed in Cameroon v. Nigeria,¹⁴¹ where the Court emphasised that 'An estoppel would only arise if by its acts or declarations Cameroon had consistently made it fully clear that it had agreed to settle the boundary dispute submitted to the Court by bilateral avenues alone. It would further be necessary that, by relying on such an attitude, Nigeria had changed position to its own detriment or had suffered some prejudice.' In Mauritius v. United Kingdom, the Tribunal noted that 'evidence of opportunities foregone in reliance upon a representation constitutes one of the clearest forms of detrimental reliance, although a benefit conveyed on the representing State will also suffice'.¹⁴²

Another example of a general principle was provided by the Arbitration Tribunal in the AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia case,¹⁴³ where it was stated that 'the full compensation of prejudice, by awarding to the injured party the damnum emergens and lucrum cessans is a principle common to the main systems of municipal law, and therefore, a general principle of law which may be considered as a source of international law'. Another principle would be that of respect for acquired rights,¹⁴⁴ a further one that a party advancing a point of fact in support of its claim must establish that fact,¹⁴⁵ while yet another argued general principle is that of proportionality, which notes that in areas ranging from recourse to self-defence and the actual use of force in the conduct of hostilities to maritime delimitation, counter-measures in WTO (World Trade Organization) and investment law and in human rights, the application of a particular rule may be constrained by relevant factors.¹⁴⁶ One crucial general principle of international law is ¹³⁷ ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 23, 31 and 32; 33 ILR, pp. 48, 62, 69–70. ¹³⁸ PCIJ, Series A, No. 20; 5 AD, p. 466.

¹³⁹ ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 44; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 350.

¹⁴⁰ See also the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, pp. 52 ff.; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100–2; the decision of the Eritrea/Ethiopia Boundary Commission of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 35–6; the Saiga (No. 2) case, 120 ILR, pp. 143, 230; and H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1960–89 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 29. See also below, chapter 9, p. 382.

¹⁴¹ ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303. ¹⁴² Arbitral Award of 18 March 2015, para. 442. ¹⁴³ 89 ILR, pp. 366, 504.

¹⁴⁴ See, for example, the German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, 1926, p. 22; Starrett Housing Corporation v. Iran 85 ILR, p. 34; the Shufeld claim, 5 AD, p. 179; and AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 496. See further below, p. 757.

¹⁴⁵ Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 31 and see also chapter 18, p. 827.

¹⁴⁶ See e.g. M. Newton and L. May, Proportionality in International Law, Oxford, 2014 and the chapters below concerning human rights, p. 216; law of the sea, p. 441; use of force, p. 868 and international humanitarian law, p. 906. Note that that of pacta sunt servanda, or the idea that international agreements are binding. The law of treaties rests inexorably upon this principle since the whole concept of binding international agreements can only rest upon the presupposition that such instruments are commonly accepted as possessing that quality.¹⁴⁷

Perhaps the most important general principle, underpinning many international legal rules, is that of good faith.¹⁴⁸ This principle is enshrined in the United Nations Charter, which provides in article 2(2) that ‘all Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfil in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter’, and the elaboration of this provision in the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 2625 (XXV), 1970, referred to the obligations upon states to fulfil in good faith their obligations resulting from international law generally, including treaties. It therefore constitutes an indispensable part of the rules of international law generally.¹⁴⁹

The International Court declared in the Nuclear Tests cases¹⁵⁰ that:

One of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations, whatever their source, is the principle of good faith. Trust and confidence are inherent in international co-operation, in particular in an age when this co-operation in many fields is becoming increasingly essential. Just as the very rule of pacta sunt servanda in the law of treaties is based on good faith, so also is the binding character of an international obligation assumed by unilateral obligation.

Nevertheless, the Court has made the point that good faith as a concept is ‘not in itself a source of obligation where none would otherwise exist’.¹⁵¹ The principle of good faith, therefore, is a background principle informing and shaping the observance of existing rules of international law and in addition constraining the manner in which those rules may legitimately be exercised.¹⁵² As the International Court has noted, the principle of good faith relates ‘only to the fulfilment of existing obligations’.¹⁵³ A further principle to be noted is that of er article 5(4) of the Treaty on European Union defines the principle of proportionality as requiring that the ‘content and form’ of EU action ‘shall not exceed what is necessary to achieve the objectives of the Treaties’.

¹⁴⁷ See McNair, Law of Treaties, vol. I, chapter 30. See also article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, and AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 495–7.

¹⁴⁸ Oppenheim’s International Law notes that this is ‘of overriding importance’, p. 38. See E. Zoller, Bonne Foi en Droit International Public, Paris, 1977; R. Kolb, La Bonne Foi en Droit International Public, Paris, 2000; Thirlway, ‘Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)’, pp. 3, 7 ff., and Thirlway, ‘Supplement’, p. 7; and G. Fitzmaurice, The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, Cambridge, 1986, vol. I, p. 183 and vol. II, p. 609. See also Good Faith and International Economic Law (ed. A. D. Mitchell, M. Somarajah and T. Voon), Oxford, 2015.

¹⁴⁹ See also Case T-115/94, Opel Austria GmbH v. Republic of Austria, 22 January 1997.

¹⁵⁰ ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 268; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412.

¹⁵¹ The Border and Transborder Armed Actions case (Nicaragua v. Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 105; 84 ILR, p. 218. See also Judge Ajibolo’s Separate Opinion in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 71–4; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 69–72, and the statement by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Re-introduction of the Death Penalty in Peru case, 16 Human Rights Law Journal, 1995, pp. 9, 13.

¹⁵² See also the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 33; 55 ILR, pp. 238, 268; the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 46–7; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 76; the Lac Lannoux case, 24 ILR, p. 119; and the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 264 ff.; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 214–15. Note also Principles 19 and 27 of the Rio Declaration on Environment and Development, 1992, 31 ILM, 1992, p. 876.

¹⁵³ Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 304.

injuria jus non oritur, which posits that facts flowing from wrongful conduct cannot determine the law.¹⁵⁴

Thus it follows that it is the Court which has the discretion as to which principles of law to apply in the circumstances of the particular case under consideration, and it will do this upon the basis of the inability of customary and treaty law to provide the required solution. In this context, one must consider the Barcelona Traction case¹⁵⁵ between Belgium and Spain. The International Court of Justice relied heavily upon the municipal law concept of the limited liability company and emphasised that if the Court were to decide the case in disregard of the relevant institutions of municipal law it would, without justification, invite serious legal difficulties. It would lose touch with reality, for there are no corresponding institutions of international law to which the Court could resort.¹⁵⁶

However, international law did not refer to the municipal law of a particular state, but rather to the rules generally accepted by municipal legal systems which, in this case, recognise the idea of the limited company.¹⁵⁷

Equity and International Law¹⁵⁸

Apart from the recourse to the procedures and institutions of municipal legal systems to reinforce international law, it is also possible to see in a number of cases references to ¹⁵⁴ See e.g. the Gabčikovo–Nagymaros Project case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 76; 116 ILR, p. 1, and the Brcko case, 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 422.

¹⁵⁵ ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178.

¹⁵⁶ ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 37; 46 ILR, p. 211. See also generally the Abu Dhabi arbitration, 1 ICLQ, 1952, p. 247; 18 ILR, p. 44, and Texaco v. Libya 53 ILR, p. 389.

¹⁵⁷ See also the Abyei Award of 22 July 2009, Permanent Court of Arbitration, at paras. 401 ff. and 416 ff., discussing the general principle of review of judicial decisions. Note also the general principle that the compatibility of an act with international law can be determined only by reference to the law in force at the time when the act occurred: see Germany v. Italy (Greece Intervening), ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 99, 124. See also article 13 of the International Law Commission Articles on Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts; J. Crawford, State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2013, pp. 241 ff.; and see further below, p. 600.

¹⁵⁸ See M. Akehurst, 'Equity and General Principles of Law', 25 ICLQ, 1976, p. 801; B. Cheng, 'Justice and Equity in International Law', 8 Current Legal Problems, 1955, p. 185; V. Degan, L'Équité et le Droit International, Paris, 1970; C. de Visscher, De l'Équité dans le Règlement Arbitral ou Judiciaire des Litiges de Droit International Public, Paris, 1972; E. Lauterpacht, 'Equity, Evasion, Equivocation and Evolution in International Law', Proceedings of the American Branch of the ILA, 1977–8, p. 33, and Lauterpacht, Aspects of the Administration of International Justice, Cambridge, 1991, pp. 117–52; R. Y. Jennings, 'Equity and Equitable Principles', Annuaire Suisse de Droit International, 1986, p. 38; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 43; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 13; M. Miyoshi, Considerations of Equity in the Settlement of Territorial and Boundary Disputes, The Hague, 1993; S. Rosenne, 'Equitable Principles and the Compulsory Jurisdiction of International Tribunals', Festschrift für Rudolf Bindschedler, Berne, 1980, p. 410, and Rosenne, 'The Position of the International Court of Justice on the Foundations of the Principle of Equity in International Law', in Forty Years International Court of Justice: Jurisdiction, Equality and Equity (ed. A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk), Dordrecht, 1988, p. 108; Pirotte, 'La Notion d'Équité dans la Jurisprudence Récente de la CIJ', 77 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1973, p. 131; Chattopadhyay, 'Equity in International Law: Its Growth and Development', 5 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, 1975, p. 381; R. Lapidot, 'Equity in International Law', 22 Israel Law Review, 1987, p. 161; Schachter, International Law, p. 49; A. V. Lowe, 'The Role of Equity in International Law', 12 Australian YIL, 1992, p. 54; P. Weil, 'L'Équité dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour Internationale de Justice', in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, p. 121; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 796; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 49, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 26. Note especially Judge Weeramantry's study of equity in the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 211; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 579. See also F. Francioni, 'Equity', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law and Thirlway, Sources, chapter IV (2).

equity¹⁵⁹ as a set of principles constituting the values of the system. The most famous decision on these lines was that of Judge Hudson in the Diversion of Water from the Meuse case¹⁶⁰ in 1937 regarding a dispute between Holland and Belgium. Hudson pointed out that what are regarded as principles of equity have long been treated as part of international law and applied by the courts. 'Under article 38 of the Statute', he declared, 'if not independently of that article, the Court has some freedom to consider principles of equity as part of the international law which it must apply.' However, one must be very cautious in interpreting this, although on the broadest level it is possible to see equity (on an analogy with domestic law) as constituting a creative charge in legal development, producing the dynamic changes in the system rendered inflexible by the strict application of rules.¹⁶¹

The concept of equity¹⁶² has been referred to in several cases. In the Rann of Kutch Arbitration between India and Pakistan in 1968¹⁶³ the Tribunal agreed that equity formed part of international law and that accordingly the parties could rely on such principles in the presentation of their cases.¹⁶⁴ The International Court of Justice in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases directed a final delimitation between the parties – West Germany, Holland and Denmark – 'in accordance with equitable principles'¹⁶⁵ and discussed the relevance to equity in its consideration of the Barcelona Traction case.¹⁶⁶ Judge Tanaka, however, has argued for a wider interpretation in his Dissenting Opinion in the Second Phase of the South-West Africa cases¹⁶⁷ and has treated the broad concept as a source of human rights ideas.¹⁶⁸

However, what is really in question here is the use of equitable principles in the context of a rule requiring such an approach. The relevant courts are not applying principles of abstract justice to the cases,¹⁶⁹ but rather deriving equitable principles and solutions from the applicable law.¹⁷⁰ The Court

¹⁵⁹ Equity generally may be understood in the contexts of adapting law to particular areas or choosing between several different interpretations of the law (equity infra legem), filling gaps in the law (equity praeter legem) and as a reason for not applying unjust laws (equity contra legem): see Akehurst, 'Equity', and Judge Weeramantry, the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 226–34; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 594–602. See also below, chapter 16, for the extensive use of equity in the context of state succession.

¹⁶⁰ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 70, pp. 73, 77; 8 AD, pp. 444, 450.

¹⁶¹ See e.g. Judge Weeramantry, the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 217; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 585. Cf. Judge Schwebel's Separate Opinion, ICJ Reports, 1993, p. 118; 99 ILR, p. 486.

¹⁶² Note that the International Court in the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53, declared that 'equity as a legal concept is a direct emanation of the idea of justice'. However, see G. Abi-Saab's reference to the International Court's 'flight into equity' in 'The ICJ as a World Court', in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, pp. 3, 11.

¹⁶³ 50 ILR, p. 2.

¹⁶⁴ Ibid., p. 18. In deciding the course of the boundary in two deep inlets, the Tribunal had recourse to the concept of equity: ibid., p. 520.

¹⁶⁵ ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 53; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 83. Equity was used in the case in order to exclude the use of the equidistance method in the particular circumstances: ibid., pp. 48–50; 41 ILR, pp. 78–80.

¹⁶⁶ ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178. See also the Burkina Faso v. Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 631–3; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 532–5.

¹⁶⁷ ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 294–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455–9. See also the Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, p. 155.

¹⁶⁸ See also AMCO v. Republic of Indonesia 89 ILR, pp. 366, 522–3.

¹⁶⁹ The International Court of Justice may under article 38(2) of its Statute decide a case ex aequo et bono if the parties agree, but it has never done so: see e.g. Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 793.

¹⁷⁰ See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 47; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 76, and the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 3, 33; 55 ILR, pp. 238, 268. The Court reaffirmed in the Libya/Malta case, ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 40; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 272, 'the principle that there can be no question of distributive justice'.

declared in the Libya/Malta case¹⁷¹ that ‘the justice of which equity is an emanation, is not an abstract justice but justice according to the rule of law; which is to say that its application should display consistency and a degree of predictability; even though it also looks beyond it to principles of more general application’.

Equity has been used by the courts as a way of mitigating certain inequities, not as a method of refashioning nature to the detriment of legal rules.¹⁷² Its existence, therefore, as a separate and distinct source of law is at best highly controversial. As the International Court noted in the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case,¹⁷³ it is bound to apply equitable principles as part of international law, and to balance up the various considerations which it regards as relevant in order to produce an equitable result. While it is clear that no rigid rules exist as to the exact weight to be attached to each element in the case, this is very far from being an exercise of discretion or conciliation; nor is it an operation of distributive justice.¹⁷⁴

The use of equitable principles, however, has been particularly marked in the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention. Article 59, for example, provides that conflicts between coastal and other states regarding the exclusive economic zone are to be resolved ‘on the basis of equity’, while by article 74 delimitation of the zone between states with opposite or adjacent coasts is to be effected by agreement on the basis of international law in order to achieve an equitable solution. A similar provision applies by article 83 to the delimitation of the continental shelf.¹⁷⁵ These provisions possess flexibility, which is important, but are also somewhat uncertain. Precisely how any particular dispute may be resolved, and the way in which that is likely to happen and the principles to be used, are far from clear and an element of unpredictability may have been introduced.¹⁷⁶ The Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses, 1997,¹⁷⁷ also lays great emphasis upon the concept of equity. Article 5, for example, provides that watercourse states shall utilise an international watercourse in an equitable and reasonable manner both in their own territories and in participating generally in the use, development and protection of such a watercourse.

Equity may also be used in certain situations in the delimitation of non-maritime boundaries. Where there is no evidence as to where a boundary line lies, an international tribunal may resort

¹⁷¹ ICJ Reports, 1985, pp. 13, 39; 81 ILR, pp. 238, 271.

¹⁷² See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 49–50; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 78–80, and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978, pp. 116–17; 54 ILR, pp. 6, 123–4. See also the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53, and the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 313–14 and 325–30; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 140–1 and 152–7.

¹⁷³ ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 60; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 53.

¹⁷⁴ See generally R. Y. Jennings, ‘The Principles Governing Marine Boundaries’, in Festschrift für Karl Doehring, Berlin, 1989, p. 408, and M. Bedjaoui, ‘L’“enigme” des “principes équitables” dans le Droit des Delimitations Maritimes’, Revista Español de Derecho Internacional, 1990, p. 376.

¹⁷⁵ See also article 140 providing for the equitable sharing of financial and other benefits derived from activities in the deep sea-bed area.

¹⁷⁶ However, see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 443, where the Court declared that its jurisprudence showed that in maritime delimitation disputes, ‘equity is not a method of delimitation, but solely an aim that should be borne in mind in effecting the delimitation’. See further below, chapter 10, p. 439.

¹⁷⁷ Based on the Draft Articles of the International Law Commission: see the Report of the International Law Commission on the Work of its Forty-Sixth Session, A/49/10, 1994, pp. 197, 218 ff.

to equity. In the case of Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali,¹⁷⁸ for example, the Court noted with regard to the pool of Soum, that 'it must recognise that Soum is a frontier pool; and that in the absence of any precise indication in the texts of the position of the frontier line, the line should divide the pool of Soum in an equitable manner'. This would be done by dividing the pool equally. Although equity did not always mean equality, where there are no special circumstances the latter is generally the best expression of the former.¹⁷⁹ The Court also emphasised that 'to resort to the concept of equity in order to modify an established frontier would be quite unjustified'.¹⁸⁰ A further example is provided by the Diallo case, where the International Court declared that 'Quantification of compensation for non-material injury necessarily rests on equitable considerations'.¹⁸¹

Although generalised principles or concepts that may be termed community value-judgements inform and pervade the political and therefore the legal orders in the broadest sense, they do not themselves constitute as such binding legal norms. This can only happen if they have been accepted as legal norms by the international community through the mechanisms and techniques of international law creation. Nevertheless, 'elementary principles of humanity' may lie at the base of such norms and help justify their existence in the broadest sense, and may indeed perform a valuable role in endowing such norms with an additional force within the system. The International Court has, for example, emphasised in the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion¹⁸² that at the heart of the rules and principles concerning international humanitarian law lies the 'overriding consideration of humanity'.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS¹⁸³

Although these are, in the words of article 38, to be utilised as a subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law rather than as an actual source of law, judicial decisions can be of immense importance. While by virtue of article 59 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice the decisions of the Court have no binding force except as between the parties and in respect of the case under consideration, the Court has striven to follow its previous judgments and insert a measure of certainty within the process: so that while the doctrine of precedent as it is known in the common law, whereby the rulings of certain courts must be followed by other courts, does not exist in international law, one still finds that states in disputes and textbook

¹⁷⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 633; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 535. ¹⁷⁹ Ibid.

¹⁸⁰ Ibid. See also the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 514–15, and the Brcko case, 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 427 ff. However, note that in the latter case, the Arbitral Tribunal was expressly authorised to apply 'relevant legal and equitable principles': see article V of Annex 2 of the Dayton Accords, 1995, ibid., p. 400. See also J. M. Sorel, 'L'Arbitrage sur la Zona de Brcko Tragi-comédie en Trois Actes et un Épilogue à Suivre', AFDI, 1997, p. 253.

¹⁸¹ ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 324, 334.

¹⁸² ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 257, 262–3; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 207, 212–13. See also the Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, p. 155. See further below, chapter 20, p. 908.

¹⁸³ See e.g. Lauterpacht, Development of International Law; Waldock, 'General Course'; and Schwarzenberger, International Law, pp. 30 ff. See also Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part Two)', pp. 3, 127, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 114; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 854; and P. Cahier, 'Le Rôle du Juge dans l'Élaboration du Droit International', in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century (ed. J. Makarczyk), The Hague, 1996, p. 353. See also Thirlway, Sources, chapter V.

writers quote judgments of the Permanent Court and the International Court of Justice as authoritative decisions.

The International Court of Justice itself will closely examine its previous decisions and will carefully distinguish those cases which it feels should not be applied to the problem being studied.¹⁸⁴ But just as English judges, for example, create law in the process of interpreting it, so the judges of the International Court of Justice sometimes do a little more than merely 'determine' it. One of the most outstanding instances of this occurred in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,¹⁸⁵ with its statement of the criteria for the recognition of baselines from which to measure the territorial sea, which was later enshrined in the 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone.

Other examples include the Reparation case,¹⁸⁶ which recognised the legal personality of international institutions in certain cases, the Genocide case,¹⁸⁷ which dealt with reservations to treaties, the Nottebohm case,¹⁸⁸ which considered the role and characteristics of nationality, and the range of cases concerning maritime delimitation.¹⁸⁹

Of course, it does not follow that a decision of the Court will be invariably accepted in later discussions and formulations of the law. One example of this is part of the decision in the Lotus case,¹⁹⁰ which was criticised and later abandoned in the Geneva Conventions on the Law of the Sea. But this is comparatively unusual and the practice of the Court is to examine its own relevant case-law with considerable attention and to depart from it rarely.¹⁹¹ At the very least, it will constitute the starting point of analysis, so that, for example, the Court noted in the Cameroon v. Nigeria case that 'the real question is whether, in this case, there is cause not to follow the reasoning and conclusion of earlier cases'.¹⁹²

In addition to the Permanent Court and the International Court of Justice, the phrase 'judicial decisions' also encompasses international arbitral awards and the rulings of national courts. There have been many international arbitral tribunals, such as the Permanent Court of Arbitration created by the Hague Conferences of 1899 and 1907 and the various mixed-claims tribunals, including the Iran-US Claims Tribunal, and, although they differ from the international courts in some ways, many of their decisions have been extremely significant in the development of international law. This can be seen in the existence and number of the Reports of International Arbitral Awards published since 1948 by the United Nations.

One leading example is the Alabama Claims arbitration,¹⁹³ which marked the opening of a new era in the peaceful settlement of international disputes, in which increasing use was made of judicial and arbitration methods in resolving conflicts. This case involved a vessel built on Merseyside to the specifications of the Confederate States, which succeeded in capturing some seventy Federal ships during the American Civil War. The United States sought compensation after the war for the depredations of the Alabama and other ships and this was accepted by the ¹⁸⁴ See further Shahabuddeen, Precedent.

¹⁸⁵ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86. See further below, chapter 10, p. 415.

¹⁸⁶ ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See further below, chapter 22, p. 991.

¹⁸⁷ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 15; 18 ILR, p. 364. ¹⁸⁸ ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 4; 22 ILR, p. 349.

¹⁸⁹ See e.g. Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 116, and see below, chapter 10, p. 439.

¹⁹⁰ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 5. See below, p. 461.

¹⁹¹ See e.g. Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 93; Liechtenstein v. Germany, ICJ Reports, 2005, p. 6; and the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 135, 154-6; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 71-4.

¹⁹² ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 292. ¹⁹³ J. B. Moore, International Arbitrations, New York, 1898, vol. I, p. 653.

Tribunal. Britain had infringed the rules of neutrality and was accordingly obliged to pay damages to the United States. Another illustration of the impact of arbitral awards is the Island of Palmas case,¹⁹⁴ which has proved of immense significance to the subject of territorial sovereignty and will be discussed in chapter 9. In addition, the growing significance of the case-law of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda needs to be noted.¹⁹⁵ As a consequence, it is not rare for international courts of one type or another to cite each other's decisions, sometimes as support¹⁹⁶ and sometimes to disagree.¹⁹⁷

As has already been seen, the decisions of municipal courts¹⁹⁸ may provide evidence of the existence of a customary rule. They may also constitute evidence of the actual practice of states which, while not a description of the law as it has been held to apply, nevertheless affords examples of how states actually behave, in other words the essence of the material act which is so necessary in establishing a rule of customary law.¹⁹⁹ British and American writers, in particular, tend to refer fairly extensively to decisions of national courts.

One may, finally, also point to decisions by the highest courts of federal states, like Switzerland and the United States, in their resolution of conflicts between the component units of such countries, as relevant to the development of international law rules in such fields as boundary disputes. A boundary disagreement between two US states which is settled by the Supreme Court is in many ways analogous to the International Court of Justice considering a frontier dispute between two independent states, and as such provides valuable material for international law.²⁰⁰

WRITERS²⁰¹

Article 38 includes as a subsidiary means for the determination of rules of law, 'the teachings of the most highly qualified publicists of the various nations'.

¹⁹⁴ 2 RIAA, p. 829; 4 AD, p. 3. See also the Beagle Channel award, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93, and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978; 54 ILR, p. 6. Note the Abyei award of 22 July 2009 which concerned the Government of Sudan and its then southern province.

¹⁹⁵ See below, p. 292.

¹⁹⁶ See e.g. the references in the Saiga (No. 2) case, International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, judgment of 1 July 1999, paras. 133–4; 120 ILR, p. 143, to the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, p. 7. See also the Diallo case, ICJ Reports, 2010, pp. 582, 606 ff.

¹⁹⁷ For example, the views expressed in the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia's decision in the Tadić case (IT-94-1-A, paras. 115 ff.; 124 ILR, p. 61) disapproving of the approach adopted by the ICJ in the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 14, with regard to the test for state responsibility in respect of paramilitary units. The International Court indeed reaffirmed its approach in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 43, 209 ff.

¹⁹⁸ See e.g. Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar, Bentzon v. Boyle 9 Cranch 191 (1815); the Paquete Habana 175 US 677 (1900) and the Scotia 14 Wallace 170 (1871). See also the Lotus case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, p. 153. For further examples in the fields of state and diplomatic immunities particularly, see below, chapter 12.

¹⁹⁹ See e.g. Congo v. Belgium, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 24; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 80.

²⁰⁰ See e.g. Vermont v. New Hampshire 289 US 593 (1933) and Iowa v. Illinois 147 US 1 (1893).

²⁰¹ See e.g. Parry, British Digest, pp. 103–5 and Lauterpacht, Development of International Law, pp. 23–5. See also R. Y. Jennings, 'International Lawyers and the Progressive Development of International Law', in Makarczyk, Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century, 1996, p. 325; Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 868; M. Peil, 'Scholarly Writings as a Source of Law; A Survey of the Use of Doctrine by the International Court of Justice', 1 Cambridge Journal of International and Comparative Law, 2012, p. 136; M. Wood, 'Teachings of the Most Highly Qualified

Historically, of course, the influence of academic writers on the development of international law has been marked. In the heyday of Natural Law it was analyses and juristic opinions that were crucial, while the role of state practice and court decisions was of less value. Writers such as Gentili, Grotius, Pufendorf, Bynkershoek and Vattel were the supreme authorities of the sixteenth to eighteenth centuries and determined the scope, form and content of international law.²⁰²

With the rise of positivism and the consequent emphasis upon state sovereignty, treaties and custom assumed the dominant position in the exposition of the rules of the international system, and the importance of legalistic writings began to decline. Thus, one finds that textbooks are used as a method of discovering what the law is on any particular point rather than as the fount or source of actual rules. There are still some writers who have had a formative impact upon the evolution of particular laws, for example Gidel on the law of the sea,²⁰³ and others whose general works on international law tend to be referred to virtually as classics, for example Oppenheim and Rousseau, but the general influence of textbook writers has somewhat declined.

Nevertheless, books are important as a way of arranging and putting into focus the structure and form of international law and of elucidating the nature, history and practice of the rules of law. Academic writings also have a useful role to play in stimulating thought about the values and aims of international law as well as pointing out the defects that exist within the system, and making suggestions as to the future.

Because of the lack of supreme authorities and institutions in the international legal order, the responsibility is all the greater upon the publicists of the various nations to inject an element of coherence and order into the subject as well as to question the direction and purposes of the rules.

States in their presentation of claims, national law officials in their opinions to their governments, the various international judicial and arbitral bodies in considering their decisions, and the judges of municipal courts when the need arises, all consult and quote the writings of the leading juristic authorities.

Of course, the claim can be made, and often is, that textbook writers merely reflect and reinforce national prejudices,²⁰⁴ but it is an allegation which has been exaggerated. It should not lead us to dismiss the value of writers, but rather to assess correctly the writer within his particular environment.

OTHER POSSIBLE SOURCES OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

In the discussion of the various sources of law prescribed by the Statute of the International Court of Justice, it might have been noted that there is a distinction between, on the one hand, actual sources of rules, that is those devices capable of instituting new rules such as law-making treaties, customary law and many decisions of the International Court of Justice since they cannot be confined to the category of merely determining or elucidating the law, and on the other hand those practices and devices which afford evidence of the existence of rules, such as juristic writings, many treaty-contracts and some judicial decisions both at the international and municipal level. In fact, each source is capable, to some extent, of both developing new law and identifying existing law. This results partly from the disorganised state of international law and partly from the terms of article 38 itself.

Publicists', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law; Thirlway, Sources, p. 126; and d'Aspremont, Formalism, p. 209.

²⁰² See above, chapter 1. ²⁰³ Droit International Public de la Mer, Chateauroux, 3 vols., 1932–4.

²⁰⁴ See e.g. Huber in the Spanish Zone of Morocco case, 2 RIAA, pp. 615, 640; 2 AD, pp. 157, 164 (note). See also Carty, Decay of International Law?, pp. 128–31.

A similar confusion between law-making, law-determining and law-evidencing can be discerned in the discussion of the various other methods of developing law that have emerged since the conclusion of the Second World War. Foremost among the issues that have arisen and one that reflects the growth in the importance of the Developing Countries ('Third World') states and the gradual de-Europeanisation of the world order is the question of the standing of the resolutions and declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations.²⁰⁵

Unlike the UN Security Council, which has the competence to adopt resolutions under articles 24 and 25 of the UN Charter binding on all member states of the organisation,²⁰⁶ resolutions of the Assembly are generally not legally binding and are merely recommendatory, putting forward opinions on various issues with varying degrees of majority support.²⁰⁷ This is the classic position and reflects the intention that the Assembly was to be basically a parliamentary advisory body with the binding decisions being taken by the Security Council.

Nowadays, the situation is somewhat more complex. The Assembly has produced a great number of highly important resolutions and declarations and it was inevitable that these should have some impact upon the direction adopted by modern international law. The way states vote in the General Assembly and the explanations given upon such occasions constitute evidence of state practice and state understanding as to the law. Where a particular country has consistently voted in favour of, for example, the abolition of apartheid, it could not afterwards deny the existence of a usage condemning racial discrimination and it may even be that that usage is for that state converted into a binding custom.

The Court in the Nicaragua case tentatively expressed the view that the opinio juris requirement could be derived from the circumstances surrounding the adoption and application of a General Assembly resolution. It noted that the relevant ²⁰⁵ See e.g. O. Y. Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, The Hague, 1966; D. Johnson, 'The Effect of Resolutions of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 32 BYIL, 1955-6, p. 97; J. Castañeda, Legal Effects of United Nations Resolutions, New York, 1969; and R. A. Falk, 'On the Quasi-Legislative Competence of the General Assembly', 60 AJIL, 1966, p. 782. See also A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, London, 1986, pp. 192-5; M. Virally, 'La Valeur Juridique des Recommendations des Organisations Internationales', AFDI, 1956, p. 69; B. Sloan, 'The Binding Force of a Recommendation of the General Assembly of the United Nations', 25 BYIL, 1948, p. 1, and Sloan, 'General Assembly Resolutions Revisited (40 Years After)', 58 BYIL, 1987, p. 39; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 6; O. Schachter, 'United Nations Law', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 1; A. Pellet, 'La Formation du Droit International dans le Cadre des Nations Unies', 6 EJIL, 1995, p. 401, and Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 771; and S. Schwebel, 'United Nations Resolutions, Recent Arbitral Awards and Customary International Law', in Realism in Law-Making (ed. M. Bos and H. Siblesz), Dordrecht, 1986, p. 203. See also Judge Weeramantry's Dissenting Opinion in the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 185; 105 ILR, pp. 226, 326.

²⁰⁶ See e.g. the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 54; 49 ILR, p. 29 and the Lockerbie case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 3, 15; 94 ILR, p. 478. See further below, chapter 21.

²⁰⁷ Some resolutions of a more administrative nature are binding: see e.g. article 17 of the UN Charter.

opinio juris may, though with all due caution, be deduced from, inter alia, the attitude of the Parties [i.e. the US and Nicaragua] and the attitude of States towards certain General Assembly resolutions, and particularly resolution 2625 (XXV) entitled 'Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations'.²⁰⁸

The effect of consent to resolutions such as this one 'may be understood as acceptance of the validity of the rule or set of rules declared by the resolution by themselves'.²⁰⁹ This comment, however, may well have referred solely to the situation where the resolution in question defines or elucidates an existing treaty (i.e. Charter) commitment.

Where the vast majority of states consistently vote for resolutions and declarations on a topic, that amounts to a state practice and a binding rule may very well emerge provided that the requisite opinio juris can be proved. For example, the 1960 Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, which was adopted with no opposition and only nine abstentions and followed a series of resolutions in general and specific terms attacking colonialism and calling for the self-determination of the remaining colonies, has, it would seem, marked the transmutation of the concept of self-determination from a political and moral principle to a legal right and consequent obligation, particularly taken in conjunction with the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law.²¹⁰

Declarations such as that on the Legal Principles Governing Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space (1963) can also be regarded as examples of state practices which are leading to, or have led to, a binding rule of customary law. As well as constituting state practice, it may be possible to use such resolutions as evidence of the existence of or evolution towards an opinio juris without which a custom cannot arise. Apart from that, resolutions can be understood as authoritative interpretations by the Assembly of the various principles of the United Nations Charter depending on the circumstances.²¹¹

Accordingly, such resolutions are able to speed up the process of the legalisation of a state practice and thus enable a speedier adaptation of customary law to the conditions of modern life. The presence of representatives of virtually all of the states of the world in the General

²⁰⁸ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 99–100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 433–4. ²⁰⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 100; 76 ILR, p. 434.

²¹⁰ See further below, chapter 5, p. 200.

²¹¹ See e.g. O. Schachter, 'Interpretation of the Charter in the Political Organs of the United Nations', in Law, States and International Order, 1964, p. 269; R. Higgins, The Development of International Law Through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963; and M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, chapter 2. Note that the Special Rapporteur has proposed in Draft Conclusion 12, that:

1. A resolution adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference cannot, of itself, create a rule of customary international law. 2. A resolution adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference may provide evidence for establishing the existence and content of a rule of customary international law, or contribute to its development. 3. A provision in a resolution adopted by an international organization or at an intergovernmental conference may reflect a rule of customary international law if it is established that the provision. Draft Conclusions provisionally adopted by the ILC Drafting Committee on the Identification of Customary International Law, A/CN.4/L.869 (2015). In 2016, it was proposed to replace 'cannot' in subsection 1 with 'does not' and in subsection 2 to replace 'establishing' with 'determining' and to delete the phrase 'or contribute to its development': A/CN.4/695, p. 22.

Assembly enormously enhances the value of that organ in general political terms and in terms of the generation of state practice that may or may not lead to binding custom. As the International Court noted, for example, in the Nicaragua case,²¹² ‘the wording of certain General Assembly declarations adopted by states demonstrates their recognition of the principle of the prohibition of force as definitely a matter of customary international law’. The Court put the issue the following way in the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons Advisory Opinion:²¹³

The Court notes that General Assembly resolutions, even if they are not binding, may sometimes have normative value. They can, in certain circumstances, provide evidence important for establishing the existence of a rule or the emergence of an opinio juris. To establish whether this is true of a General Assembly resolution, it is necessary to look at its content and the conditions of its adoption; it is also necessary to see whether an opinio juris exists as to its normative character. Or a series of resolutions may show the gradual evolution of the opinio juris required for the establishment of a new rule.

The Court in this case examined a series of General Assembly resolutions concerning the legality of nuclear weapons and noted that several of them had been adopted with substantial numbers of negative votes and abstentions. It was also pointed out that the focus of such resolutions had not always been constant. The Court therefore concluded that these resolutions fell short of establishing the existence of an opinio juris on the illegality of nuclear weapons.²¹⁴

Nevertheless, one must be alive to the dangers in ascribing legal value to everything that emanates from the Assembly. Resolutions are often the results of political compromises and arrangements and, comprehended in that sense, never intended to constitute binding norms. Great care must be taken in moving from a plethora of practice to the identification of legal norms.

As far as the practice of other international organisations is concerned,²¹⁵ the same approach, but necessarily tempered with a little more caution, may be adopted. Resolutions may evidence an existing custom or constitute usage that may lead to the creation of a custom and the opinio juris requirement may similarly emerge from the surrounding circumstances, although care must be exercised here.²¹⁶

It is sometimes argued more generally that particular non-binding instruments or documents or non-binding provisions in treaties form a special category that may be termed ‘soft law’. This terminology is meant to indicate that the instrument or provision in question is not of itself ‘law’, but its importance within the general framework of international legal development is such that particular attention requires to be paid to it.²¹⁷ ‘Soft law’ is not law. That needs to be emphasised, but a document, for example, does not need to constitute a binding treaty before it can exercise

²¹² ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 102; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 436.

²¹³ ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 254–5; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 204–5.

²¹⁴ Ibid., p. 255; 110 ILR, p. 205. See as to other cases, above, p. 62.

²¹⁵ See generally, as to other international organisations in this context, A. J. P. Tammes, ‘Decisions of International Organs as a Source of International Law’, 94 HR, 1958, p. 265; Virally, ‘La Valeur Juridique’, p. 66; and H. Thierry, ‘Les Résolutions des Organes Internationaux dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour Internationale de Justice’, 167 HR, 1980, p. 385.

²¹⁶ See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100–2; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 434–6.

²¹⁷ See e.g. Boyle and Chinkin, The Making of International Law, pp. 211 ff.; Pellet, ‘Article 38’, p. 772; H. Hillgenberg, ‘A Fresh Look at Soft Law’, 10 EJIL, 1999, p. 499; M. Bothe, ‘Legal and Non-Legal Norms – A Meaningful Distinction an influence in international politics. The Helsinki Final Act of 1975 is a prime example of this. This was not a binding agreement, but its influence in Central and Eastern Europe in emphasising the role and importance of international human rights proved incalculable.²¹⁸ Certain areas of international law have generated more ‘soft law’, in the sense of the production of important but non-binding instruments, than others. Here one may cite particularly international economic law²¹⁹ and international environmental law.²²⁰ The use of such documents, whether termed, for example, recommendations, guidelines, codes of practice or standards, is significant in signalling the evolution and establishment of guidelines, which may ultimately be converted into legally binding rules. This may be accomplished either by formalisation into a binding treaty or by acceptance as a customary rule, provided that the necessary conditions have been fulfilled. The propositions of ‘soft law’ are important and influential, but do not in themselves constitute legal norms. In many cases, it may be advantageous for states to reach agreements with each other or through international organisations which are not intended to be binding and thus subject to formal legal implementation, but which reflect a political intention to act in a certain way. Such agreements may be more flexible, easier to conclude and easier to adhere to for domestic reasons.

A study by the US State Department concerning non-binding international agreements between states²²¹ noted that it has long been recognised in international practice that governments may agree on joint statements of policy or intention that do not establish legal obligations. In recent decades, this has become a common means of announcing the results of diplomatic exchanges, stating common positions on policy issues, recording their intended course of action on matters of mutual concern, or making political commitments to one another. These documents are sometimes referred to as non-binding agreements, gentlemen’s agreements, joint statements or declarations.

What is determinative as to status in such situations is not the title given to the document in question, but the intention of the parties as inferred from all the relevant circumstances as to whether they intended to create binding legal relationships between themselves on the matter in question.

in International Relations, 11 Netherlands YIL, 1980, p. 65; I. Seidl-Hohenveldern, ‘International Economic Soft Law’, 163 HR, 1980, p. 164, and Seidl-Hohenveldern, International Economic Law, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1992, p. 42; J. Gold, ‘Strengthening the Soft International Law of Exchange Arrangements’, 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 443; PASIL, 1988, p. 371; G. J. H. Van Hoof, Re-thinking the Sources of International Law, Deventer, 1983, p. 187; C. M. Chinkin, ‘The Challenge of Soft Law: Development and Change in International Law’, 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 850; L. Henkin, International Law, Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995, pp. 94 and 192; W. M. Reisman, ‘The Concept and Functions of Soft Law in International Politics’, in Essays in Honour of Judge Taslim Olawale Elias (ed. E. G. Bello and B. Ajibola), Dordrecht, 1992, vol. I, p. 135; A. E. Boyle, ‘Some Reflections on the Relationship of Treaties and Soft Law’, 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 901; F. Francioni, ‘International “Soft Law”: A Contemporary Assessment’, in Lowe and Fitzmaurice, Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice, p. 167; and Commitment and Compliance: The Role of Non-Binding Norms in the International Legal System (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2000.

²¹⁸ See e.g. the reference to it in the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 3, 100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 434.

²¹⁹ See e.g. Seidl-Hohenveldern, International Economic Law, pp. 42 ff.

²²⁰ See e.g. P. Birnie and A. Boyle, International Law and the Environment, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2002, pp. 24 ff.

²²¹ Memorandum of the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, US State Department, quoted in 88 AJIL, 1994, pp. 515 ff. See also A. Aust, ‘The Theory and Practice of Informal International Instruments’, 35 ICLQ, 1984, p. 787; O. Schachter, ‘The Twilight Existence of Nonbinding International Agreements’, 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 296; McNair, The Law of Treaties, p. 6; and A. T. Guzman, ‘The Design of International Agreements’, 16 EJIL, 2005, p. 579.

The International Law Commission

The International Law Commission was established by the General Assembly in 1947 with the declared object of promoting the progressive development of international law and its codification.²²² It consists of thirty-four members from Africa, Asia, America and Europe, who remain in office for five years each and who are appointed from lists submitted by national governments. The Commission is aided in its deliberations by consultations with various outside bodies including the Asian–African Legal Consultative Committee, the European Commission on Legal Cooperation and the Inter-American Council of Jurists.²²³

Many of the most important international conventions have grown out of the Commission's work. Having decided upon a topic, the International Law Commission will prepare a draft. This is submitted to the various states for their comments and is usually followed by an international conference convened by the United Nations. Eventually a treaty will emerge. This procedure was followed in such international conventions as those on the Law of the Sea in 1958, Diplomatic Relations in 1961, Consular Relations in 1963, Special Missions in 1969 and the Law of Treaties in 1969. Of course, this smooth operation does not invariably occur: witness the many conferences at Caracas in 1974, and Geneva and New York from 1975 to 1982, necessary to produce a new Convention on the Law of the Sea.

Apart from preparing such drafts, the International Law Commission also issues reports and studies, and has formulated such documents as the Draft Declaration on Rights and Duties of States of 1949 and the Principles of International Law recognised in the Charter of the Nuremberg Tribunal and in the Judgment of the Tribunal of 1950. The Commission produced a set of draft articles on the problems of jurisdictional immunities in 1991, a draft statute for an international criminal court in 1994 and a set of draft articles on state responsibility in 2001. The drafts of the ILC are often referred to in the judgments of the International Court of Justice. Indeed, in his speech to the UN General Assembly in 1997, President Schwebel noted in referring to the decision in the Gabčíkovo–Nagymaros Project case²²⁴ that the judgment:

²²² See, as to the relationship between codification and progressive development, Judge ad hoc Sørensen's Dissenting Opinion in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 242–3; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 217–19.

²²³ See articles 2, 3 and 8 of the Statute of the ILC. See also e.g. B. Ramcharan, The International Law Commission, Leiden, 1977; The Work of the International Law Commission, 4th edn, New York, 1988; I. Sinclair, The International Law Commission, Cambridge, 1987; The International Law Commission and the Future of International Law (ed. M. R. Anderson, A. E. Boyle, A. V. Lowe and C. Wickremasinghe), London, 1998; International Law on the Eve of the Twenty-first Century: Views from the International Law Commission, New York, 1997; S. Rosenne, 'The International Law Commission 1949–59', 36 BYIL, 1960, p. 104, and Rosenne, 'Relations Between Governments and the International Law Commission', 19 YBWA, 1965, p. 183; B. Graefrath, 'The International Law Commission Tomorrow: Improving its Organisation and Methods of Work', 85 AJIL, 1991, p. 597; R. P. Dhokalia, The Codification of Public International Law, Manchester, 1970; F. L. Bordin, 'Reflections of Customary International Law: The Authority of Codification Conventions and ILC Draft Articles in International Law', 63 ICLQ, 2014, p. 535; and G. Gaja, 'Interpreting Articles Adopted by the International Law Commission', BYIL, 2015, <http://bybil.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2015/09/01/bybil.brv001.full>.

²²⁴ ICJ Reports, 1997, p. 7; 116 ILR, p. 1.

is notable, moreover, because of the breadth and depth of the importance given in it to the work product of the International Law Commission. The Court's Judgment not only draws on treaties concluded pursuant to the Commission's proceedings: those on the law of treaties, of State succession in respect of treaties, and the law of international watercourses. It gives great weight to some of the Commission's Draft Articles on State Responsibility, as did both Hungary and Slovakia. This is not wholly exceptional; it rather illustrates the fact that just as the judgments and opinions of the Court have influenced the work of the International Law Commission, so the work of the Commission may influence that of the Court.²²⁵

Thus, one can see that the International Law Commission is involved in at least two of the major sources of law. Its drafts may form the bases of international treaties which bind those states which have signed and ratified them and which may continue to form part of general international law, and its work is part of the whole range of state practice which can lead to new rules of customary law. Its drafts, indeed, may constitute evidence of custom, contribute to the corpus of usages which may create new law and evidence the opinio juris.²²⁶ In addition, it is not to be overlooked that the International Law Commission is a body composed of eminently qualified publicists, including many governmental legal advisers, whose reports and studies may be used as a method of determining what the law actually is, in much the same way as books.

Other Bodies

Although the International Law Commission is by far the most important of the organs for the study and development of the law, there do exist certain other bodies which are involved in the same mission. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) and the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), for example, are actively increasing the range of international law in the fields of economic, financial and development activities, while temporary organs such as the Committee on the Principles of International Law have been engaged in producing various declarations and statements. Nor can one overlook the tremendous work of the many specialised agencies like the International Labour Organization and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), which are constantly developing international law in their respective spheres.

There are also some independent bodies which are actively involved in the field. The International Law Association and the Institut de Droit International are the best known of such organisations which study and stimulate the law of the world community, while the various Harvard Research drafts produced before the Second World War are still of value today.

Unilateral Acts

In certain situations, the unilateral acts of states, including statements made by relevant state officials, may give rise to international legal obligations.²²⁷ Such acts might include recognition and protests, which are intended to have legal consequences. Unilateral acts, while not sources of ²²⁵ See www.icj-cij.org/icjwww/ipresscom/SPEECHES/Ga1997e.htm. ²²⁶ See above, p. 62.

²²⁷ See Virally, 'Sources', pp. 154–6; W. Fiedler, 'Unilateral Acts in International Law', in Encyclopedia of Public International Law (ed. R. Bernhardt), Amsterdam, 2000, vol. IV, p. 1018; G. Venturini, 'La Portée et les Effets Juridiques des Attitudes et des Actes Unilatéraux des États', 112 HR, 1964, p. 363; J. Charpentier, 'Engagements Unilatéraux et Engagements Conventionnels', in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century, international law as understood in article 38(1) of the Statute of the ICJ, may constitute sources of obligation.²²⁸ For this to happen, the intention to be bound of the state making the declaration in question is crucial, as will be the element of publicity or notoriety.²²⁹ Such intention may be ascertained by way of interpretation of the act, and the principle of good faith plays a crucial role. The International Court has stressed that where states make statements by which their freedom of action is limited, a restrictive interpretation is required.²³⁰ Recognition will be important here in so far as third states are concerned, in order for such an act or statement to be opposable to them. Beyond this, such unilateral statements may be used as evidence of a particular view taken by the state in question.²³¹

HIERARCHY OF SOURCES AND JUS COGENS²³²

The question of the hierarchy of sources is more complex than appears at first sight. Although there does exist a presumption against normative conflict,²³³ international law is not as clear as

p. 367; A. P. Rubin, 'The International Legal Effects of Unilateral Declarations', 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 1; K. Zemanek, 'Unilateral Legal Acts Revisited', in Wellens, International Law, p. 209; E. Suy, Les Actes Unilatéraux en Droit International Public, Paris, 1962; and J. Garner, 'The International Binding Force of Unilateral Oral Declarations', 27 AJIL, 1933, p. 493. The International Law Commission studied the question of the Unilateral Acts of States as from 1996, see A/51/10, pp. 230 and 328–9, and in 2006 produced Guiding Principles applicable to unilateral declarations of states capable of creating legal obligations, A/61/10, pp. 369 ff.

²²⁸ See e.g. the Report of the International Law Commission, A/57/10, 2002, p. 215 and Guiding Principle 1, A/61/10, p. 370.

²²⁹ The Nuclear Tests cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 267; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412. The Court underlined that: 'Just as the very rule of pacta sunt servanda in the law of treaties is based on good faith, so also is the binding character of an international obligation assumed by unilateral obligation', ibid. See also the Request for an Examination of the Situation in Accordance with Paragraph 63 of the Court's Judgment of 20 December 1974 in the Nuclear Tests (New Zealand v. France) Case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 288, 305; 106 ILR, pp. 1, 27; the Nova-Scotia/Newfoundland (First Phase) case, 2001, para. 3.14; 128 ILR, pp. 425, 449; and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 2002, para. 4.70; 130 ILR, pp. 1, 69. Such a commitment may arise in oral pleadings before the Court itself: see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 452. Guiding Principle 4 establishes that such a declaration may bind the State internationally only if made by an authority vested with the power to do so, while Principle 6 states that such declarations may be addressed to the international community as a whole or to one or several States or to other entities and Principle 7 requires that such declaration be stated in clear and specific terms, A/61/10, pp. 372 and 376.

²³⁰ Nuclear Tests cases, ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 253, 267; 57 ILR, pp. 398, 412. See also the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 132; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 466, and the Burkina Faso v. Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 573–4; 80 ILR, pp. 459, 477–8. The Court in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases declared that the unilateral assumption of the obligations of a convention by a state not party to it was 'not lightly to be presumed', ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 25; 41 ILR, p. 29. The Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 22, 88, noted that a denial could not be interpreted as a binding undertaking where not made in response to a claim by the other party or in the context of a dispute between them.

²³¹ See e.g. the references to a press release issued by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Norway and the wording of a communication of the text of an agreement to Parliament by the Norwegian Government in the Jan Mayen case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 38, 51; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 419. See also Judge Ajibola's Separate Opinion in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 58; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 56.

²³² See D. Shelton, 'Normative Hierarchy in International Law', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 291; M. Koskeniemi, 'Hierarchy in International Law: A Sketch', 8 EJIL, 1997, p. 566; B. Simma and D. Pulkowski, 'Of Planets and the Universe: Self-contained Regimes in International Law', 17 EJIL, 2006, p. 483; P. Weil, 'Towards Relative Normativity in International Law?', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 413, and 'Vers une Normativité Relative en Droit International?', 86 RGDIP, 1982, p. 5; M. Akehurst, 'The Hierarchy of the Sources of International Law', 47 BYIL, 1974–5, p. 273; and Virally, 'Sources', pp. 165–6. See also H. Mosler, The International Society as a Legal Community, Leiden, 1980, pp. 84–6; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure of the ICJ (Part One)', p. 143, and Thirlway, 'Supplement', p. 52; U. Fastenrath, 'Relative Normativity in International Law', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 305; and Thirlway, Sources, chapter VI.

²³³ See e.g. 'Fragmentation of International Law: Difficulties Arising from the Diversification and Expansion of International Law', Report of the Study Group of the International Law Commission (finalised by M. Koskeniemi), A/CN.4/L.682, 2006, p. 25.

domestic law in listing the order of constitutional authority²³⁴ and the situation is complicated by the proliferation of international courts and tribunals existing in a non-hierarchical fashion,²³⁵ as well as the significant expansion of international law, both substantively and procedurally. Judicial decisions and writings clearly have a subordinate function within the hierarchy in view of their description as subsidiary means of law determination in article 38(1) of the statute of the ICJ, while the role of general principles of law as a way of complementing custom and treaty law places that category fairly firmly in third place.²³⁶ The question of priority as between custom and treaty law is more complex.²³⁷ As a general rule, that which is later in time will have priority (lex posterior derogate priori). Treaties are usually formulated to replace or codify existing custom,²³⁸ while treaties in turn may themselves fall out of use and be replaced by new customary rules. However, where the same rule appears in both a treaty and a custom, there is no presumption that the latter is subsumed by the former. The two may co-exist.²³⁹ There is in addition a principle to the effect that a special rule prevails over a general rule (lex specialis derogat legi generali), so that, for example, treaty rules between states as lex specialis would have priority as against general rules of treaty or customary law between the same states,²⁴⁰ although not if the general rule in question was one of jus cogens.²⁴¹

The position is complicated by the existence of norms or obligations deemed to be of a different or higher status than others, whether derived from custom or treaty. These may be obligations erga omnes or rules of jus cogens (peremptory norms).²⁴² While there may be significant overlap between these two in terms of the content of rules to which they relate, there is a difference in nature. The former concept concerns the scope of application of the relevant rule, that is the extent to which states as a generality may be subject to the rule in question and may be seen as having a legal interest in the matter.²⁴³ It has, therefore, primarily a procedural focus. Rules of jus cogens, on the other hand, are substantive rules recognised to be of a higher status as such. The International Court stated in the Barcelona Traction

²³⁴ Pellet, however, notes that while there is no formal hierarchy as between conventions, custom and general principles, the International Court uses them in successive order and 'has organized a kind of complementarity between them', 'Article 38', pp. 841 ff. Dupuy argues that there is no hierarchy of sources: see Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, pp. 370 ff. The ILC Study on Fragmentation, however, agrees with writers proclaiming that 'treaties generally enjoy priority over custom and particular treaties over general treaties', p. 47.

²³⁵ See further below, chapter 18, p. 848. ²³⁶ Pellet, 'Article 38', p. 852.

²³⁷ Ibid., p. 778, and see H. Villager, Customary International Law and Treaties, Dordrecht, 1985.

²³⁸ See R. Baxter, 'Multilateral Treaties as Evidence of Customary International Law', BYIL, 1965-6, p. 275.

²³⁹ See the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 95.

²⁴⁰ See ILC Report on Fragmentation, pp. 30 ff., and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1270 and 1280. See also the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 76; 116 ILR, pp. 1, 85; the Beagle Channel case, 52 ILR, pp. 141-2; the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 44; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 56; the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons case, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 240; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 190; the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 38; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 31, and the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 3, 137; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 471.

²⁴¹ See e.g. the OSPAR (Ireland v. UK) case, 126 ILR, p. 364, para. 84, and further below, p. 93.

²⁴² See e.g. A. Orakhelashvili, Peremptory Norms in International Law, Oxford, 2006; T. Weatherall, Jus Cogens: International Law and Social Contract, Cambridge, 2015; R. Kolb, Peremptory International Law - Jus Cogens: A General Inventory, Oxford, 2015 and 'La Determination du Concept de Jus Cogens', 118 RGDIP, 2014, p. 5; and Thirlway, Sources, chapter VII. Note that the International Law Commission commenced a study on jus cogens in 2015 and appointed a Special Rapporteur, A/70/10, p. 138.

²⁴³ See e.g. Article 48 of the ILC Draft Articles on State Responsibility and the commentary thereto, A/56/10, pp. 126 ff. See also the Furundžija case before the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260.

case²⁴⁴ that there existed an essential distinction between the obligations of a state towards the international community as a whole and those arising vis-à-vis another state in the field of diplomatic protection. By their very nature the former concerned all states and ‘all states can be held to have a legal interest in their protection; they are obligations erga omnes’. Examples of such obligations included the outlawing of aggression and of genocide and the protection from slavery and racial discrimination.²⁴⁵ To this one may add the prohibition of torture.²⁴⁶ Further, the International Court in the East Timor case stressed that the right of peoples to self-determination ‘has an erga omnes character’,²⁴⁷ while reiterating in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case that ‘the rights and obligations enshrined in the Convention are rights and obligations erga omnes’.²⁴⁸

This easing of the traditional rules concerning locus standi in certain circumstances with regard to the pursuing of a legal remedy against the alleged offender state may be linked to the separate question of superior principles in international law. Article 53 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, provides that a treaty will be void ‘if, at the time of its conclusion, it conflicts with a peremptory norm of general international law’. Further, by article 64, if a new peremptory norm of general international law emerges, any existing treaty which is in conflict with that norm becomes void and terminates. This rule (jus cogens) will also apply in the context of customary rules so that no derogation would be permitted to such norms by way of local or special custom.

Such a peremptory norm is defined by the Convention as one ‘accepted and recognised by the international community of states as a whole as a norm from which no derogation is permitted and which can be modified only by a subsequent norm of general international law having the same character’.²⁴⁹ The concept of jus cogens is based upon an acceptance of fundamental and superior values within the system and in some respects is akin to the notion of public order or public policy in domestic legal orders.²⁵⁰ It also reflects the influence of Natural Law thinking. Rules of jus cogens are not new rules of international law as such. It is a question rather of a particular and superior quality that is recognised as adhering in existing rules of international law. Various examples of rules of jus cogens have been provided, particularly during the discussions on the topic in the International Law Commission, such as an unlawful use of ²⁴⁴ ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 32; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 206.

²⁴⁵ See also the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 100; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 468, and Judge Weeramantry’s Dissenting Opinion in the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 172 and 204; 105 ILR, pp. 226, 313 and 345. See, in addition, Simma, ‘Bilateralism’, pp. 230 ff.; M. Ragazzi, The Concept of International Obligations Erga Omnes, Oxford, 1997; and J. Crawford, The International Law Commission’s Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 242–4.

²⁴⁶ Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 422, 449–50. See also e.g. the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260.

²⁴⁷ ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226. ²⁴⁸ ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 595, 616; 115 ILR, p. 10.

²⁴⁹ It was noted in US v. Matta-Ballesteros that: ‘Jus cogens norms which are nonderogable and peremptory, enjoy the highest status within customary international law, are binding on all nations, and cannot be preempted by treaty’, 71 F. 3d 754, 764 n. 4 (9th circuit, 1995).

²⁵⁰ See e.g. J. Sztucki, Jus Cogens and the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, New York, 1974; I. Sinclair, The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 2nd edn, Manchester, 1984, p. 203; M. Virally, ‘Réflexions sur le Jus Cogens’, 12 AFDI, 1966, p. 1; Shelton, ‘Normative Hierarchy’, pp. 297 ff.; C. Rozakis, The Concept of Jus Cogens in the Law of Treaties, Amsterdam, 1976; Cassese, International Law, chapter 11; Gomez Robledo, ‘Le Jus Cogens International’, 172 HR, 1981, p. 17; G. Gaja, ‘Jus Cogens beyond the Vienna Conventions’, 172 HR, 1981, p. 279; Crawford, ILC’s Articles, pp. 187–8 and 243; J. Verhoeven, ‘Jus Cogens and Reservations or “Counter-Reservations” to the Jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice’, in Wellens, International Law, p. 195; and L. Hannikainen, Peremptory Norms (Jus Cogens) in International Law, Helsinki, 1988. See also article 26 of the ILC’s Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, and below, chapter 15, p. 715.

force, genocide, slave trading and piracy.²⁵¹ The International Court has stated that in its opinion the prohibition of torture had become a peremptory norm.²⁵² However, no clear agreement has been manifested regarding other areas,²⁵³ and even the examples given are by no means uncontroverted. Nevertheless, the rise of individual responsibility directly for international crimes marks a further step in the development of jus cogens rules. Of particular importance, however, is the identification of the mechanism by which rules of jus cogens may be created, since once created no derogation is permitted.

A two-stage approach is here involved in the light of article 53: first, the establishment of the proposition as a rule of general international law; and, secondly, the acceptance of that rule as a peremptory norm by the international law community of states as a whole. It will be seen therefore that a stringent process is involved, and rightly so, for the establishment of a higher level of binding rules has serious implications for the international law community. The situation to be avoided is that of foisting peremptory norms upon a political or ideological minority, for that in the long run would devalue the concept. The appropriate test would thus require universal acceptance of the proposition as a legal rule by states and recognition of it as a rule of jus cogens by an overwhelming majority of states, crossing ideological and political divides.²⁵⁴ It is also clear that only rules based on custom or treaties may form the foundation of jus cogens norms. This is particularly so in view of the hostile attitude of many states to general principles as an independent source of international law and the universality requirement of jus cogens formation. As article 53 of the Vienna Convention notes, a treaty that is contrary to an existing rule of jus cogens is void ab initio,²⁵⁵ whereas by virtue of article 64 an existing treaty that conflicts with an emergent rule of jus cogens terminates from the date of the emergence of the rule. It is not void ab initio, nor by article 71 is any right, obligation or legal situation created by the treaty prior to its termination affected, provided that its maintenance is not in itself contrary to the new peremptory norm. Article 41(2) of the ILC's Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, provides that no state shall recognise as lawful a 'serious breach' of a peremptory norm.²⁵⁶ Reservations that offended a rule of jus cogens may well be unlawful,²⁵⁷ while it has been suggested that state ²⁵¹ Yearbook of the ILC, 1966, vol. II, p. 248. See, as regards the prohibition of torture as a rule of jus cogens, the decision of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 257–8 and 260–2; Siderman v. Argentina 26 F. 2d 699, 714–18; 103 ILR, p. 454; Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 3) [2000] 1 AC 147, 247 (Lord Hope), 253–4 (Lord Hutton) and 290 (Lord Phillips); 119 ILR, pp. 135, 200, 206–7 and 244; and the Al-Adsani case, European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 61; 123 ILR, pp. 24, 41–2. See also, as regards the prohibition of extrajudicial killing, the decision of the US District Court in Alejandro v. Cuba 121 ILR, pp. 603, 616, and as regards non-discrimination, the decision of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in its advisory opinion concerning the Juridical Condition and Rights of the Undocumented Migrants, OC-18/03, Series A, No. 18 (2003).

²⁵² Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 422, 457. However, Judge Abraham termed this obiter dictum, Separate Opinion, pp. 471, 477.

²⁵³ See e.g. Lord Slynn in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) who stated that 'Nor is there any jus cogens in respect of such breaches of international law [international crimes] which require that a claim of state or head of state immunity . . . should be overridden': [2000] 1 AC 61, 79; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 67.

²⁵⁴ See e.g. Sinclair, Vienna Convention, pp. 218–24, and Akehurst, 'Hierarchy'.

²⁵⁵ See Yearbook of the ILC, 1966, vol. II, pp. 91–2.

²⁵⁶ One that involves a gross or systematic failure by the responsible state to fulfil the obligation: article 40(2). See also article 50(d).

²⁵⁷ See e.g. Judges Padilla Nervo, Tanaka and Sørensen in the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 97, 182 and 248; 41 ILR, p. 29. See also General Comment No. 24 (52) of the UN Human Rights Committee, CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6.

conduct violating a rule of jus cogens may not attract a claim of state immunity.²⁵⁸ The relationship between the rules of jus cogens and article 103 of the United Nations Charter, which states that obligations under the Charter have precedence as against obligations under other international agreements, was discussed by Judge Lauterpacht in his Separate Opinion in the Bosnia case.²⁵⁹ He noted in particular that ‘the relief which article 103 of the Charter may give the Security Council in case of conflict between one of its decisions and an operative treaty obligation cannot – as a matter of simple hierarchy of norms – extend to a conflict between a Security Council resolution and jus cogens’.

It is also to be emphasised that the establishment of a rule of jus cogens does not as such grant jurisdiction to the International Court (or any other court, of course). The status of a rule, whether or not a rule erga omnes, is a separate question from that of consent to the exercise of jurisdiction.²⁶⁰

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

- A. Boyle and C. Chinkin, The Making of International Law, Oxford, 2007
- B. Cheng, General Principles of Law as Applied by International Courts and Tribunals, London, 1953
- A. Pellet, ‘Article 38’, in The Statute of the International Court of Justice: A Commentary (ed. A. Zimmermann, C. Tomuschat and K. Oellers-Frahm), 2nd edn, Oxford, 2012, p. 731
- H. Thirlway, The Sources of International Law, Oxford, 2014

²⁵⁸ See e.g. Cassese, International Law, pp. 105 ff., citing the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Wald in Princz v. Federal Republic of Germany, a decision of the US Court of Appeals, 1994, 103 ILR, p. 618, but see the Al-Adsani case, European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 21 November 2001; 123 ILR, p. 24.

²⁵⁹ ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 440; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 158. See also the decision of the House of Lords in the Al-Jedda case [2007] UKHL 58 concerning the priority of article 103 obligations (here Security Council resolutions) over article 5 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

²⁶⁰ Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda, ICJ Reports, 2006, pp. 6, 31–2 and Germany v. Italy (Greece Intervening), ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 99, 141–2.

4

International Law and Municipal Law

The role of the state in the modern world is a complex one. According to legal theory, each state is sovereign and equal.¹ In reality, with the phenomenal growth in communications and consciousness, and with the constant reminder of global rivalries, not even the most powerful of states can be entirely sovereign. Interdependence and the close-knit character of contemporary international commercial and political society ensures that virtually any action of a state could well have profound repercussions upon the system as a whole and the decisions under consideration by other states. This has led to an increasing interpenetration of international law and domestic law across a number of fields, such as human rights, environmental and international investment law, where at the least the same topic is subject to regulation at both the domestic and the international level (and indeed the regional level in the case of the European Union). With the rise and extension of international law, questions begin to arise paralleling the role played by the state within the international system and concerned with the relationship between the internal legal order of a particular country and the rules and principles governing the international community as a whole. Municipal law governs the domestic aspects of government and deals

¹ See generally Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, vol. I, p. 52; L. Reydams, Universal Jurisdiction: International and Municipal Legal Perspectives, Oxford, 2004; Y. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations Between National and International Courts, Oxford, 2007; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1968, vol. I, p. 90; R. A. Falk, The Role of Domestic Courts in the International Legal Order, Princeton, 1964; H. Kelsen, Principles of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1966, pp. 290–4 and 551–88; Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (ed. J. Crawford), 8th edn, Oxford, 2012, chapter 3; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1970, vol. I, pp. 151–77; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, chapter 12, and Cassese, 'Modern Constitutions and International Law', 192 HR, 1985 III, p. 335; P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, p. 105; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 12; K. Marek, 'Les Rapports entre le Droit International et le Droit Interne à la Lumière de la Jurisprudence de la CIJ', Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1962, p. 260; L. Ferrari-Bravo, 'International Law and Municipal Law: The Complementarity of Legal Systems', in The Structure and Process of International Law (ed. R. St J. Macdonald and D. Johnston), Dordrecht, 1983, p. 715; F. Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice and the Supremacy of International Law', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 42; B. Conforti, International Law and the Role of Domestic Legal Systems, The Hague, 1993; J. G. Starke, 'Monism and Dualism in the Theory of International Law Considered from the Standpoint of the Rule of Law', 92 HR, 1957, pp. 5, 70–80; H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1960–89 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 114; Report of the Committee on International Law and Municipal Law, International Law Association: Report of the Sixty-Sixth Conference, 1994, p. 326; V. Erades, Interactions Between International and Municipal Law – A Comparative Caselaw Study, Leiden, 1993; and V. Heiskanen, International Legal Topics, Helsinki, 1992, chapter 1. See also International Law and Domestic Legal Systems (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2011; A. Nollkaemper, National Courts and the International Rule of Law, Oxford, 2011 and New Perspectives on the Divide Between National and International Law (ed. J. Nijman and A. Nollkaemper), Oxford, 2007.

with issues between individuals, and between individuals and the administrative apparatus, while international law focuses primarily upon the relations between states. That is now, however, an overly simplistic assertion. There are many instances where problems can emerge and lead to difficulties between the two systems. In a case before a municipal court a rule of international law may be brought forward as a defence to a charge, as for example in R v. Jones, where the defence of seeking to prevent a greater crime (essentially of international law) was claimed with regard to the alleged offence of criminal damage (in English law),² or where a vessel is being prosecuted for being in what, in domestic law, is regarded as territorial waters but in international law would be treated as part of the high seas. Further, there are cases where the same situation comes before both national and international courts, which may refer to each other's decisions in a complex process of interaction. For example, the failure of the US to allow imprisoned foreign nationals access to consular assistance in violation of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 was the subject of case-law before the International Court of Justice,³ the Inter-American Court of Human Rights⁴ and US courts,⁵ while there is a growing tendency for domestic courts to be used to address violations of international law.⁶

THE THEORIES⁷

Positivism stresses the overwhelming importance of the state and tends to regard international law as founded upon the consent of states. It is actual practice, illustrated by custom and by treaty, that formulates the role of international law, and not formalistic structures, theoretical deductions or moral stipulations. Accordingly, when positivists such as Triepel⁸ and Strupp⁹ consider the relationship of international law to municipal law, they do so upon the basis of the supremacy of the state, and the existence of wide differences between the two functioning orders. This theory, known as dualism, stresses that the rules of the systems of international law and municipal law exist separately and cannot purport to have an effect on, or overrule, the other.

This is because of the fundamentally different nature of inter-state and intra-state relations and the different legal structure employed on the one hand by the state and on the other hand as

² [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668. See further below, p. 110.

³ See e.g. the LaGrand case, ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 466; 134 ILR, p. 1; and the Avena case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

⁴ The Right to Information on Consular Assistance in the Framework of the Guarantees of the Due Process of Law, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 16, 1999.

⁵ See e.g. Breard v. Greene 523 US 371 (1998) and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S.Ct. 2669 (2006). See also Medillin v. Texas 522 US (2008) (Slip Opinion).

⁶ See e.g. R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668; ex parte Abbasi [2002] EWCA Civ 1598; 126 ILR, p. 685; R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2008] 1 AC 1356; and R v. Mohamed Gul [2012] EWCA Crim 280.

⁷ See above, chapters 1 and 2. See also above, note 1 and J. H. Jackson, 'Status of Treaties in Domestic Legal Systems: A Policy Analysis', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 310; N. Valticos, 'Pluralité des Ordres Juridiques et Unité de Droit International Public', in Theory of International Law at the Threshold of the 21st Century (ed. J. Markarczyk), The Hague, 1996, p. 301; and J. Dhommeaux, 'Monismes et Dualismes en Droit International des Droits de l'Homme', AFDI, 1995, p. 447. See also D. T. Bjorgvinsson, The Intersection of International Law and Domestic Law: A Theoretical and Practical Analysis, Cheltenham, 2015.

⁸ H. Triepel, Völkerrecht und Landesrecht, Berlin, 1899.

⁹ K. Strupp, 'Les Règles Générales du Droit International de la Paix', 47 HR, 1934, p. 389. See also D. Anzilotti, Corso di Diritto Internazionale, 3rd edn, Rome, 1928, vol. I, pp. 43 ff.

between states. Where municipal legislation permits the exercise of international law rules, this is on sufferance as it were and is an example of the supreme authority of the state within its own domestic jurisdiction, rather than of any influence maintained by international law within the internal sphere.¹⁰

Those writers who disagree with this theory and who adopt the monist approach tend to fall into two distinct categories: those who, like Lauterpacht, uphold a strong ethical position with a deep concern for human rights, and others, like Kelsen, who maintain a monist position on formalistic logical grounds. The monists are united in accepting a unitary view of law as a whole and are opposed to the strict division posited by the positivists.

The 'naturalist' strand represented in England by Lauterpacht's works sees the primary function of all law as concerned with the well-being of individuals, and advocates the supremacy of international law as the best method available of attaining this. It is an approach characterised by deep suspicion of an international system based upon the sovereignty and absolute independence of states, and illuminated by faith in the capacity of the rules of international law to imbue the international order with a sense of moral purpose and justice founded upon respect for human rights and the welfare of individuals.¹¹

The method by which Kelsen elucidates his theory of monism is markedly different and utilises the philosophy of Kant as its basis. Law is regarded as constituting an order which lays down patterns of behaviour that ought to be followed, coupled with provision for sanctions which are employed once an illegal act or course of conduct has occurred or been embarked upon. Since the same definition appertains within both the internal sphere and the international sphere, a logical unity is forged, and because states owe their legal relationship to one another to the rules of international law, such as the one positing equality, since states cannot be equal before the law without a rule to that effect, it follows that international law is superior to or more basic than municipal law.¹²

Reference has already been made to Kelsen's hierarchical system whereby the legality of a particular rule is affirmed once it conforms to an anterior rule. This process of referring back to previous or higher rules ends with the so-called basic norm of the legal order. However, this basic norm is basic only in a relative sense, since the legal character of states, such as their jurisdiction, sovereignty and equality, is fixed by international law. Thus, Kelsen emphasises the unity of the entire legal order upon the basis of the predominance of international law by declaring that it is the basic norm of the international legal order which is the ultimate reason of validity of the national legal orders too.¹³

A third approach, being somewhat a modification of the dualist position and formulated by Fitzmaurice and Rousseau amongst others, attempts to establish a recognised theoretical framework tied to reality. This approach begins by denying that any common field of operation exists as between international law and municipal law by which one system is superior or inferior to the other. Each order is supreme in its own sphere, much as French law and English law are in France

¹⁰ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 53.

¹¹ Lauterpacht, International Law. See also Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950.

¹² Kelsen, Principles, pp. 557–9. See also Kelsen, General Theory of Law and State, Cambridge, 1945, pp. 363–80. Note that Scelle, for example, finds international legal monism upon an intersocial monism, essentially a sociological explanation: see Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 108.

¹³ See further above, chapter 2, p. 37.

and England. And just as one cannot talk in terms of the supremacy of French law over English law, but only of two distinct legal systems each operating within its own field, so it is possible to treat international law and municipal law in the same way. They are both the legal element contained within the domestic and international systems respectively, and they exist within different juridical orders.

What may, and often does, happen is what is termed 'a conflict of obligations', that is the state within its own domestic sphere does not act in accordance with its obligations as laid down by international law. In such a case, the domestic position is unaffected (and is not overruled by the contrary rule of international law) but rather the state as it operates internationally has broken a rule of international law and the remedy will lie in the international field, whether by means of diplomatic protest or judicial action.

This method of solving the problem does not delve deeply into theoretical considerations, but aims at being practical and in accord with the majority of state practice and international judicial decisions.¹⁴ In fact, the increasing scope of international law has prompted most states to accept something of an intermediate position, where the rules of international law are seen as part of a distinct system, but capable of being applied internally depending on circumstance, while domestic courts are increasingly being obliged to interpret rules of international law.¹⁵ As a consequence of this realisation, a number of principles of co-ordination have arisen. From its perspective, international law underlines that (as noted in the following section) a state cannot evade a rule of international law by pleading a rule of municipal or national law. International instruments, particularly those establishing international or regional courts, seek to permit contracting states a space within which to operate their own rules. For example, the European Court of Human Rights has developed the concept of the margin of appreciation whereby parties to that convention may have rather more freedom of construction and application with regard to some provisions rather than others.¹⁶ Again, under article 5 of the Treaty on European Union the idea of subsidiarity establishes that decisions are to be taken as closely as possible to the citizen so that action taken at EU level is justified in light of the possibilities available at national, regional or local level. Subsidiarity is the principle whereby the EU does not take action (except in the areas that fall within its exclusive competence), unless it is more effective than action taken at national, regional or local level. It is closely bound up with the principle of proportionality, which requires that any action by the EU should not go beyond what is necessary to achieve the objectives of the Treaties. Similarly, the principle of complementarity, a principle of admissibility in the International Criminal Court, reflected in article 17 of the Statute of that court, seeks to ensure that the court will only exercise jurisdiction where the national legal system cannot or will not investigate or prosecute the crime alleged.¹⁷ More ¹⁴ G. Fitzmaurice, 'The General Principles of International Law Considered from the Standpoint of the Rule of Law', 92 HR, 1957 II, pp. 5, 70–80; C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1979, pp. 4–16; E. Borchard, 'The Relations between International Law and Municipal Law', 27 Virginia Law Review, 1940, p. 137; M. S. McDougal, 'The Impact of International Law upon National Law: A Policy-Orientated Perspective', in McDougal et al., Studies in World Public Order, New Haven, 1960, p. 157; P.-M. Dupuy, 'Relations between the International Law of Responsibility and Responsibility in Municipal Law', in The Law of International Responsibility (ed. J. Crawford, A. Pellet and S. Olleson), Oxford, 2010, p. 173; and H. Lauterpacht, The Development of International Law by the International Court, London, 1958, pp. 262, 314 and 332. See also A. Nollkaemper, 'Rethinking the Supremacy of International Law', 65 Zeitschrift für öffentliches Recht, 2010, p. 65.

¹⁵ See further as to relevant theories, Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations, pp. 92 ff.

¹⁶ See further chapter 6, p. 264. ¹⁷ See chapter 7, p. 302.

generally, there is a rule that before a state can take up a claim on the international stage of one of its nationals, the latter should have exhausted available and effective local remedies¹⁸ and the same rule appears in international and regional human rights treaties.¹⁹ From the national perspective, principles have emerged that seek to manage the relationship, such as the presumption that legislation should be interpreted in a manner consistent with international law²⁰ and the concept that customary international law forms part of the common law unless there is contrary legislation.²¹ Particular difficulties have arisen of late concerning the relationship between national security and international human rights in an era of increased international terrorism.

THE ROLE OF MUNICIPAL RULES IN INTERNATIONAL LAW²²

The perspective from international law is very clear. The general rule with regard to the position of municipal law within the international sphere is that a state which has broken a stipulation of international law cannot justify itself by referring to its domestic legal situation. It is no defence to a breach of an international obligation to argue that the state acted in such a manner because it was following the dictates of its own municipal laws. The reasons for this inability to put forward internal rules as an excuse to evade international responsibility are obvious. Any other situation would permit international law to be evaded by the simple method of domestic legislation.

Accordingly, state practice and international cases have established this provision and thereby prevented countries involved in international litigation from pleading municipal law as a method of circumventing international law. Article 3 of the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility declares that: 'The characterization of an act of a state as internationally wrongful is governed by international law. Such characterization is not affected by the characterization of the same act as lawful by internal law.'²³ Article 27 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 lays down that in so far as treaties are concerned, a party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justification for its failure to carry out an international agreement, while article 46(1) provides that a state may not invoke the fact that its consent to be bound by a treaty has been expressed in violation of a provision of its internal law regarding competence to conclude treaties as invalidating its consent.²⁴ This is so unless the violation of its internal law in question was 'manifest and concerned a rule of fundamental importance'. Article 46(2) states that such a violation is manifest where it would be objectively evident to any state conducting itself in the matter in accordance with normal practice and in good faith. The International Court considered this provision in Cameroon v. Nigeria in the context of Nigeria's argument that the Maroua ¹⁸ See chapter 13, p.620. ¹⁹ See chapter 6, p. 215. ²⁰ See below, p. 116. ²¹ See below, p. 106.

²² See e.g. C. W. Jenks, The Prospects of International Adjudication, London, 1964, chapter 9; H. Lauterpacht, The Development of International Law; and Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 43 ff. See also A. Roberts, 'Comparative International Law? The Role of National Courts in International Law', 61 ICLQ, 2011, p. 57.

²³ Appended to General Assembly resolution 56/83, 2001. See further below, chapter 13.

²⁴ Note also article 13 of the Draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States, 1949, which provides that every state 'has the duty to carry out in good faith its obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law, and it may not invoke provisions in its constitution or its laws as an excuse for failure to perform this duty', Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, pp. 286, 289.

Declaration of 1975 signed by the two heads of state was not valid as it had not been ratified.²⁵ It was noted that article 7(2) of the Vienna Convention provided that heads of state belonged to the group of persons who in virtue of their functions and without having to produce full powers are considered as representing their state. The Court also took the view that 'there is no general legal obligation for States to keep themselves informed of legislative and constitutional developments in other States which are or may become important for the international relations of these States'.²⁶

Such provisions are reflected in the case-law. In the Alabama Claims arbitration of 1872, the United States objected strenuously when Britain allowed a Confederate ship to sail from Merseyside to prey upon American shipping. It was held that the absence of British legislation necessary to prevent the construction or departure of the vessel could not be brought forward as a defence, and Britain was accordingly liable to pay damages for the depredations caused by the warship in question.²⁷ In the Polish Nationals in Danzig case, the Court declared that 'a State cannot adduce as against another State its own constitution with a view to evading obligations incumbent upon it under international law or treaties in force'.²⁸

The International Court, in the Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate case,²⁹ has underlined 'the fundamental principle of international law that international law prevails over domestic law', while Judge Shahabuddeen emphasised in the Lockerbie case³⁰ that inability under domestic law to act was no defence to non-compliance with an international obligation. This was reinforced in the LaGrand case,³¹ where the Court noted that the effect of the US procedural default rule,³² which was to prevent counsel for the LaGrand brothers from raising the violation by the US of its obligations under the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 before the US federal courts system, had no impact upon the responsibility of the US for the breach of the convention.³³ The Court underlined this approach in the Avena case,³⁴ noting that 'The rights guaranteed under the Vienna Convention are treaty rights which the United States has undertaken to comply with in relation to the individual concerned, irrespective of the due process rights under the United States constitutional law.' The Court took a step further in that case, ²⁵ ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 430 ff.

²⁶ Ibid., p. 430. But see the view of the Court in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case that the UK as a coastal state greatly interested in North Sea fishing 'could not have been ignorant' of a relevant Norwegian decree, despite claiming that Norway's delimitation system was not known to it: ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 101.

²⁷ J. B. Moore, International Arbitrations, New York, 1898, vol. I, pp. 495, 653. See also e.g. the Free Zones case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 46, 1932, p. 167; 6 AD, p. 362; the Greco-Bulgarian Communities case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 17, 1930, p. 32; 5 AD, p. 4; and the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 20-1; 22 ILR, pp. 349, 357-8.

²⁸ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 44, pp. 21, 24; 6 AD, p. 209. See also the Georges Pinson case, 5 RIAA, p. 327; 4 AD, p. 9.

²⁹ ICJ Reports, 1988, pp. 12, 34; 82 ILR, pp. 225, 252.

³⁰ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 3, 32; 94 ILR, pp. 478, 515. See also Westland Helicopters Ltd and AOI 80 ILR, pp. 595, 616.

³¹ ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 466, 497-8; 134 ILR, pp. 1, 35-6.

³² This US federal rule of criminal law essentially prevents a claim from being heard before a federal court if it has not been presented to a state court: see ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 477-8.

³³ See also the Advisory Opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights on the Promulgation and Enforcement of Law in Violation of the Convention 116 ILR, pp. 320, 332-3.

³⁴ ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 12, 65; 134 ILR, pp. 120, 168.

which also concerned the failure to allow foreign prisoners access to the consular officials of their state in breach of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, declaring that ‘the remedy to make good these violations should consist in an obligation on the United States to permit review and reconsideration of these nationals’ cases by the United States courts ... with a view to ascertaining whether in each case the violation of Article 36 committed by the competent authorities caused actual prejudice to the defendant in the process of administration of criminal justice’.³⁵ By way of contrast, the International Court pointed out in the Elettronica Sicula SpA (ELSI) case³⁶ that the fact that an act of a public authority may have been unlawful in municipal law did not necessarily mean that the act in question was unlawful in international law.

However, such expressions of the supremacy of international law over municipal law in international tribunals do not mean that the provisions of domestic legislation are either irrelevant or unnecessary.³⁷ On the contrary, the role of internal legal rules is vital to the workings of the international legal machine. One of the ways that it is possible to understand and discover a state’s legal position on a variety of topics important to international law is by examining municipal laws.³⁸ A country will express its opinion on such vital international matters as the extent of its territorial sea, or the jurisdiction it claims or the conditions for the acquisition of nationality through the medium of its domestic law-making. Thus, it is quite often that in the course of deciding a case before it, an international court will feel the necessity to make a study of relevant pieces of municipal legislation. Indeed, there have been instances, such as the Serbian Loans case of 1929,³⁹ when the crucial issues turned upon the interpretation of internal law, and the rules of international law in a strict sense were not at issue. Further, a court may turn to municipal law concepts where this is necessary in the circumstances.⁴⁰ However, it is clear that caution is necessary where an international court or tribunal is considering concepts of national law in the absence of an express or implied requirement so to do and no automatic transposition should occur.⁴¹

In addition to the role of municipal law in revealing the legal position of the state on topics of international importance, the rules of municipal law constitute facts in proceedings before international courts and tribunals, but may also be utilised as evidence

³⁵ Ibid., p. 60. President Bush then issued an order to the state courts to give effect to the decision of the International Court: see 44 ILM, p. 461 (28 February 2005). The US also withdrew its acceptance of the Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, which had provided for the jurisdiction of the International Court in cases of dispute over the convention.

³⁶ ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 73–4; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 379–80. See also Compañía de Aguas del Aconquija v. Argentina 41 ILM, 2002, pp. 1135, 1154.

³⁷ See e.g. Jenks, Prospects, pp. 547–603, and K. Marek, Droit International et Droit Interne, Paris, 1961.

³⁸ See e.g. the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. case, ICJ Reports, 1952, p. 93; 19 ILR, p. 507.

³⁹ PCIJ, Series A, No. 20; 5 AD, p. 466. See also the Brazilian Loans case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 21.

⁴⁰ See e.g. the Barcelona Traction case concerning the nature of a limited liability company, ICJ Reports, 1970, p. 3; 46 ILR, p. 178.

⁴¹ See e.g. the Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 10, pp. 19–21; 3 AD, p. 378. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge McNair in the South West Africa case, ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 148; 17 ILR, p. 47, noting that private law institutions could not be imported into international law ‘lock, stock and barrel’; the Separate Opinion of Judge Fitzmaurice in the Barcelona Traction case, ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 66–7; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 240–1; and the Separate and Dissenting Opinion of President Cassese in the Erdemović case, 111 ILR, pp. 298, 387 ff.

of compliance or non-compliance with international obligations and part of any relevant applicable law.⁴² In the Certain German Interests in Polish Upper Silesia case, the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that:

From the standpoint of International Law and of the Court, which is its organ, municipal laws are merely facts which express the will and constitute the activities of States, in the same manner as do legal decisions or administrative measures. The Court is certainly not called upon to interpret the Polish law as such; but there is nothing to prevent the Court's giving judgment on the question whether or not, in applying that law, Poland is acting in conformity with its obligations towards Germany under the Geneva Convention.⁴³

Nevertheless, and despite the many functions that municipal law rules perform within the sphere of international law, the point must be emphasised that the presence or absence of a particular provision within the internal legal structure of a state, including its constitution if there is one, cannot be applied to evade an international obligation. Any other solution would render the operations of international law rather precarious. On the other hand, international law cannot render invalid as such any rule of municipal law⁴⁴ and will rarely interpret a national law in a manner contrary to the domestic authorities.⁴⁵

INTERNATIONAL LAW BEFORE MUNICIPAL COURTS⁴⁶

The problem of the role of international law within the municipal law system as seen from the domestic system is, however, rather more complicated than the position discussed

⁴² See e.g. with regard to uti possidetis, below, chapter 9, p. 391.

⁴³ PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, p. 19; 3 AD, p. 5. See also the Saiga (No. 2) case before the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, 120 ILR, pp. 143, 188, and Benin v. Niger, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 125 and 148. For criticism, see e.g. Brownlie's Principles, pp. 52–4.

⁴⁴ See e.g. Interpretation of the Statute of Memel, PCIJ Series A/B, No. 49, pp. 294, 336.

⁴⁵ See e.g. Diallo, ICJ Reports, 2010, para. 70, noting that:

The Court recalls that it is for each State, in the first instance, to interpret its own domestic law. The Court does not, in principle, have the power to substitute its own interpretation for that of the national authorities, especially when that interpretation is given by the highest national courts (see, for this latter case, Serbian Loans, Judgment No. 14, 1929, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 20, p. 46 and Brazilian Loans, Judgment No. 15, 1929, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 21, p. 124). Exceptionally, where a State puts forward a manifestly incorrect interpretation of its domestic law, particularly for the purpose of gaining an advantage in a pending case, it is for the Court to adopt what it finds to be the proper interpretation.

⁴⁶ See e.g. Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 48–66, and Conforti, International Law. See also H. Mosler, 'L'Application du Droit International Public par les Tribunaux Nationaux', 91 HR, 1957 I, p. 619; W. Wenger, 'Réflexions sur l'Application du Droit International Public par les Tribunaux Internes', 72 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1968, p. 921; E. Benveniste, 'Judges and Foreign Affairs: A Comment on the Institut de Droit International's Resolution on "The Activities of National Courts and the International Relations of their State"', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 423. See also The Interpretation of International Law by Domestic Courts (ed. H. P. Aust and G. Nolte), Oxford, 2016; S. Weill, The Role of National Courts in Applying International Humanitarian Law, Oxford, 2014; P.-H. Verdier and M. Versteeg, 'International Law in National Legal Systems: An Empirical Investigation', 109 AJIL, 2015, p. 514; A. Nollkaemper, 'The Duality of Direct Effect of International Law', 25 EJIL, 2014, p. 105; and International Law Association, Final Report of Study Group on the Principles on the Engagement of Domestic Courts with International Law, 2016.

above, and there have been a number of different approaches to it. States are, of course, under a general obligation to act in conformity with the rules of international law and will bear responsibility for breaches of it, whether committed by the legislative, executive or judicial organs and irrespective of domestic law.⁴⁷ Further, international treaties may impose requirements of domestic legislation upon states parties,⁴⁸ while binding Security Council resolutions may similarly require that states take particular action within their jurisdictions.⁴⁹ There is indeed a clear trend towards the increasing penetration of international legal rules within domestic systems coupled with the exercise of an ever-wider jurisdiction with regard to matters having an international dimension by domestic courts. This has led to a blurring of the distinction between the two previously maintained autonomous zones of international and domestic law, a re-evaluation of the role of international legal rules and a greater preparedness by domestic tribunals to analyse the actions of their governments in the light of international law.⁵⁰ Further, domestic courts may often have to determine the meaning of an international rule that is relevant for a case before them⁵¹ or to seek to resolve conflicts between international rules, such as that between state immunity and the prohibition of torture⁵² and that between treaty rules of human rights and binding Security Council resolutions.⁵³ As between the two systems, there will be no res judicata (or binding or conclusive effect) at the international level with regard to a national decision in the absence of a specific direction to this effect in the particular case,⁵⁴ while practice is variable with regard to international decisions in the municipal system. Often, domestic courts will ascribe persuasive influence to such decisions and may grant res judicata effect to international and domestic arbitral awards.⁵⁵ At the same time, the constitution of the state in question will be critical in determining precisely how the rules of international law will be treated within the domestic system, so that in the UK, for example, the key relevant principles will include the separation of powers, the supremacy of Parliament and the independence of the judiciary.⁵⁶

⁴⁷ See e.g. the Exchange of Greek and Turkish Populations case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 10, p. 20, and the Finnish Ships Arbitration, 3 RIAA, p. 1484. See further below, chapter 13.

⁴⁸ See e.g. as to requirements imposed by anti-terrorist conventions, below, chapter 11, p. 504. See also the decision of Trial Chamber II in the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 218, 248–9.

⁴⁹ See as to the effect of counter-terrorism and weapons of mass destruction proliferation measures taken by the Security Council, below chapter 21, pp. 886.

⁵⁰ See e.g. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations; A. Nollkaemper, 'Internationally Wrongful Acts in Domestic Courts', 101 AJIL, 2007, p. 760, and New Perspectives on the Divide Between National and International Law (ed. A. Nollkaemper and J. E. Nijman), Oxford, 2007. See also Conforti, International Law.

⁵¹ For example, the concept of jurisdiction as laid down in the European Convention on Human Rights: see Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 26; 133 ILR, p. 693.

⁵² See e.g. Jones v. Saudi Arabia [2006] UKHL 26; 129 ILR, p. 713.

⁵³ See Al-Jedda v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 58.

⁵⁴ See e.g. Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law, p. 59.

⁵⁵ See Shany, p. 159 ff. See also UK Arbitration Act 1996, sections 58 and 66; 9 USC § 13 and UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Law, 2006, article 17 (H) 1. Much will, of course, depend upon the parties and subject matter in question. See as to the precedential effect of decisions and opinions of the International Court of Justice, below, chapter 18, p. 847.

⁵⁶ See e.g. R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44, para. 105, per Lord Millett.

In this section, the approach adopted by municipal courts will be noted. We shall look first at the attitudes adopted by the British courts, and then proceed to note the views taken by the United States and other countries.⁵⁷

The United Kingdom⁵⁸

It is part of the public policy of the United Kingdom that the courts should in principle give effect to clearly established rules of international law.⁵⁹ This does not, however, mean that where a court is exercising a discretionary power, it is obliged to ensure that the government acts compatibly with its international obligations and not in breach of them.⁶⁰

Various theories have been put forward to explain the applicability of international law rules within the jurisdiction. One expression of the positivist–dualist position has been the doctrine of transformation. This is based upon the perception of two quite distinct systems of law, operating separately, and maintains that before any rule or principle of international law can have any effect within the domestic jurisdiction, it must be expressly and specifically ‘transformed’ into municipal law by the use of the appropriate constitutional machinery, such as an Act of Parliament. This doctrine grew from the procedure whereby international agreements are rendered operative in municipal law by the device of ratification by the sovereign and the idea has developed from this that any rule of international law must be transformed, or specifically adopted, to be valid within the internal legal order.

Another approach, known as the doctrine of incorporation, holds that international law is part of the municipal law automatically without the necessity for the interposition of a constitutional ⁵⁷ Note the view expressed in Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 54, that ‘states show considerable flexibility in the procedures whereby they give effect within their territories to the rules of international law . . . while the procedures vary, the result that effect is given within states to the requirements of international law is by and large achieved by all states’.

⁵⁸ See e.g. Morgenstern, ‘Judicial Practice’; H. Lauterpacht, ‘Is International Law a Part of the Law of England?’, 25 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1939, p. 51; J. E. S. Fawcett, The British Commonwealth in International Law, London, 1963, chapter 2; Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 39–41; and W. Holdsworth, Essays in Law and History, Oxford, 1946, p. 260. See also J. Collier, ‘Is International Law Really Part of the Law of England?’, 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 924; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 12; R. O’Keefe, ‘Customary International Crimes in English Courts’, 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 293; K. Reece Thomas, ‘The Changing Status of International Law in English Domestic Law’, 53 NILR, 2006, p. 371; S. Fatima, Using International Law in Domestic Courts, Oxford, 2005; D. Feldman, ‘Monism, Dualism and Constitutional Legitimacy’, 20 Australian YIL, 1999, p. 105; and C. McLachlan, Foreign Relations Law, Cambridge, 2014. See also P. Sales and J. Clement, ‘International Law in Domestic Courts: The Developing Framework’, LQR, 2008, p. 388, and Sanctions, Accountability and Governance in a Globalised World (ed. J. Farrall and K. Rubenstein), Cambridge, 2014.

⁵⁹ See e.g. Upjohn J in In re Claim by Herbert Wragg & Co. Ltd [1956] Ch 323, 334, and Lord Cross in Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249, 277; 72 ILR, p. 446. See The Cabinet Manual, 1st edn, October 2011, p. 26, para. 3.46, which notes that ‘Ministers are under an overarching duty to comply with the law, including international law and treaty obligations’. This references the Ministerial Code. However, the latest version (15 October 2015) of the UK Ministerial Code, setting out standards of conduct expected of ministers, replaced the previous requirement to ‘comply with the law including international law and treaty obligations’ by the phrase simply to ‘comply with the law’. This occasioned some disquiet. However, the Cabinet Office declared that the new phrase was meant to include international law. See E. Faulkner and M. Everett, House of Commons Briefing Paper, ‘The Ministerial Code and the Independent Adviser on Ministers’ Interests, No. 03750, 21 October 2015. See also www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-34634533.

⁶⁰ See R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, 747–8 (Lord Bridge) and R (Yam) v. Central Criminal Court [2016] AC 782–3 (Elias LJ).

ratification procedure. The best-known exponent of this theory is the eighteenth-century lawyer Blackstone, who declared in his Commentaries that:

the law of nations, wherever any question arises which is properly the object of its jurisdiction, is here adopted in its full extent by the common law, and it is held to be a part of the law of the land.⁶¹

This doctrine refers to customary international law and different rules apply to treaties. However, the previously accepted dichotomy between the reception of custom and treaty is now maintained absolutely would distort the many developments currently taking place. As will be seen, English courts have had to deal with the effect of legal decisions emanating from the EU and its Court of Justice and the European Court of Human Rights,⁶² as well as the other consequences resulting from membership of the EU and of the Council of Europe; have been concerned with the interpretation of an increasing number of rules of international law incorporated into English law through the ratification of international treaties (particularly the significant number dealing with terrorist issues) and subsequent domestic legislation that they have required;⁶³ have sought to tackle conflicts of international legal rules and have dealt with the changing configuration of the doctrine of non-justiciability of issues raising questions as to the executive's conduct of foreign policy. They have also had to concern themselves with the validity of foreign laws deemed to conflict with international law and the acceptability of evidence obtained abroad in circumstances that may have violated international law.⁶⁴ English courts take judicial notice of international law,⁶⁵ so that formal proof of a proposition does not need to be demonstrated (unlike propositions of foreign law which need to be proved as fact by evidence) and this itself has been a key factor in determining the relationship between international law and domestic law. Judges are deemed to know international law. In practice this means that judges and lawyers trained in domestic law have had to grapple with the different sources of international law and the difficulties of this task have percolated through the relationship.

Customary International Law

It is in this sphere that the doctrine of incorporation become the main British approach. It is an old-established theory dating back to the eighteenth century, owing its prominence at that stage to the considerable discussion then taking place as to the precise extent of diplomatic immunity and in the light of the predominance of natural law concepts.

A few of the more important cases will be briefly surveyed. In Buvot v. Barbuit,⁶⁶ Lord Talbot declared unambiguously that 'the law of nations in its full extent was part of the law of England', so that a Prussian commercial agent could not be rendered liable for failing to perform a decree.

⁶¹ Commentaries, IV, chapter 5.

⁶² See section 3(1) of the European Communities Act 1972 and section 2 of the Human Rights Act 1998, incorporating into domestic law respectively the EU treaties and the European Convention on Human Rights. See also Kay v. Lambeth Borough Council [2006] UKHL 10.

⁶³ See below, chapter 11, p. 504.

⁶⁴ See below, p. 145. See also A & Ors v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71.

⁶⁵ F. Bennion, Statutory Interpretation, 5th edn, London, 2007, p. 823 citing Re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Ltd [1892] 1 Ch 219 at 226. See also Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000, 2001 SLT 507, 512–13; Chung Chi Cheung v. R [1939] AC 160; Trendtex v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356 at 379 (per Stephenson LJ); and Post Office v. Estuary Radio [1968] 2 QB 740, 756.

⁶⁶ (1737) Cases t. Talbot 281.

This was followed twenty-seven years later by Triquet v. Bath,⁶⁷ where Lord Mansfield, discussing the issue as to whether a domestic servant of the Bavarian Minister to Britain could claim diplomatic immunity, upheld the earlier case and specifically referred to Talbot's statement.

This acceptance of customary international law rules as part and parcel of the common law of England, so vigorously stated in a series of eighteenth-century cases, was subject to the priority granted to Acts of Parliament and tempered by the principle of stare decisis or precedent, maintained by the British courts and ensuring that the judgments of the higher courts are binding upon the lower courts of the hierarchical system. Accordingly, a rule of international law would not be implemented if it ran counter to a statute or decision by a higher court.⁶⁸ It is also important to note that during this period the rules of customary international law were relatively few in number so that few conflicts between the systems were to be envisaged in practice.

In the nineteenth century, a series of cases occurred which led many writers to dispute the validity of the hitherto accepted incorporation doctrine and replace it with the theory of transformation, according to which the rules of customary international law only form part of English law if they have been specifically adopted, either by legislation or case-law. This new approach reflected the decline in natural law thinking and the rise of positivism with its emphasis upon state sovereignty and state practice. The turning point in this saga is marked by the case of R v. Keyn,⁶⁹ where a German ship, the Franconia, collided with and sank a British vessel in the English Channel within three miles of the English coast. The German captain was indicted for manslaughter following the death of a passenger from the British ship, and the question that came before the Court for Crown Cases Reserved was whether an English court did indeed have jurisdiction to try the offence in such circumstances.

The Court came to the conclusion that no British legislation existed which provided for jurisdiction over the three-mile territorial sea around the coasts. It was true that such a rule might be said to exist in international law, but it was one thing to say that the state had the right to legislate over a part of what had previously been the high seas, and quite another to conclude that the state's laws operate at once there, independently of any legislation. One thing did not follow from another, and it was imperative to keep distinct on the one hand the power of Parliament to make laws, and on the other the authority of the courts, without appropriate legislation, to apply the criminal law where it could not have been applied before. The question, as Lord Cockburn emphasised, was whether, acting judicially, the Court could treat the power of Parliament to legislate as making up for the absence of actual legislation. The answer came in the negative and the German captain was released.

This case was seen by some as marking a change to a transformation approach,⁷⁰ but the judgment was in many respects ambiguous, dealing primarily with the existence or not of any right of jurisdiction over the territorial sea.⁷¹ In many respects the differences between the incorporation and transformation theories have revolved in practice more around evidential questions than any comprehensive theoretical revolution. In any event, any doubts as to the ⁶⁷ (1764) 3 Burr. 1478.

⁶⁸ But see Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356; 64 ILR, p. 111; below, p. 109.

⁶⁹ (1876) 2 Ex.D. 63.

⁷⁰ See e.g. Holdsworth, Essays, pp. 263–6, and W. Halsbury, Laws of England, 3rd edn, London, 1968, vol. VII, p. 264.

⁷¹ See e.g. Lauterpacht, 'Is International Law a Part?', pp. 60–1.

outcome of any further Franconia situations were put to rest by the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act 1878, which expressed British jurisdiction rights in similar circumstances.

The opinions put forward in the West Rand Gold Mining Co. case⁷² showed a further blurring of the distinction between the incorporation and transformation theories. Lord Alverstone declared that whatever had received the common consent of civilised nations must also have received the assent of Great Britain and as such would be applied by the municipal tribunals. However, he went on to modify the impact of this by noting that any proposed rule of international law would have to be proved by satisfactory evidence to have been 'recognised and acted upon by our own country' or else be of such a nature that it could hardly be supposed any civilised state would repudiate it. Lord Mansfield's view in Triquet's case could not be so interpreted as to include within the common law rules of international law which appear in the opinions of textbook writers and as to which there is no evidence that Britain ever assented.⁷³ This emphasis on assent, it must be noted, bears a close resemblance to the views put forward by the Court in R v. Keyn as to the necessity for conclusive evidence regarding the existence and scope of any particular rule of customary law. Indeed, the problem is often one of the uncertainty of existence and scope of customary law.

Not long after the West Rand case, another important dispute came before the courts. In Mortensen v. Peters,⁷⁴ a Danish captain was convicted by a Scottish court for contravening a fishing by-law regarding the Moray Firth. His ship had been operating within the Moray Firth and was within the area covered by the relevant by-law, but it was beyond the three-mile limit recognised by international law. The issue came to the Scottish High Court of Justiciary, where Lord Dunedin, in discussing the captain's appeal, concentrated upon the correct construction to be made of the relevant legislation. He noted that an Act of Parliament duly passed and assented to was supreme and the Court had no option but to give effect to its provisions. In other words, statutes had predominance over customary law, and a British court would have to heed the terms of an Act of Parliament even if it involved the breach of a rule of international law. This is so even though there is a presumption in British law that the legislation is to be so construed as to avoid a conflict with international law. Where such a conflict does occur, the statute has priority and the state itself will have to deal with the problem of the breach of a customary rule.⁷⁵

This modified incorporation doctrine was clearly defined by Lord Atkin in *Chung Chi Cheung v. R.*⁷⁶ He noted that:

international law has no validity except in so far as its principles are accepted and adopted by our own domestic law . . . The courts acknowledge the existence of a body of rules which nations accept among themselves. On any judicial issue they seek to ascertain what the relevant rule is, and having found it they will treat it as incorporated into the domestic law, so far as it is not inconsistent with rules enacted by statutes or finally declared by their tribunals.

⁷² [1905] 2 KB 391. ⁷³ Ibid., pp. 407–8. ⁷⁴ (1906) 8 F(J) 93.

⁷⁵ See also 170 HC Deb., col. 472, 4 March 1907 and the Trawling in Prohibited Areas Prevention Act 1909.

⁷⁶ [1939] AC 160, 168; 9 AD, p. 264. See also Commercial and Estates Co. of Egypt v. Board of Trade [1925] 1 KB 271, 295; 2 AD, p. 423.

It was thus a key requirement that any alleged rule of customary law must be proved to be a valid rule of international law, and not merely an unsupported proposition. This underlined the need to examine what states were actually doing.

In ascertaining the existence and nature of any particular rule, the courts may have recourse to a wider range of authoritative material than would normally be the case, such as 'international treaties and conventions, authoritative textbooks, practice and judicial decisions' of the courts of other countries.⁷⁷

The high-water-mark case of Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria raised anew many of these issues. The case concerned a claim for sovereign or state immunity by the Central Bank of Nigeria.⁷⁸ In Trendtex all three judges of the Court of Appeal accepted the incorporation doctrine as the correct one. Lord Denning noted that 'the rules of international law are incorporated into English law automatically and considered to be part of English law unless they are in conflict with an Act of Parliament' and, reversing his opinion in an earlier case,⁷⁹ stressed that otherwise the courts could not recognise changes in the norms of international law.⁸⁰ Stephenson LJ emphasised, in an important statement, that:

it is the nature of international law and the specific problems of ascertaining it which create the difficulty in the way of adopting or incorporating or recognising as already incorporated a new rule of international law.⁸¹

The issue of stare decisis, or precedent, and customary international law was also discussed in this case. It had previously been accepted that the doctrine of stare decisis would apply in cases involving customary international law principles as in all other cases before the courts, irrespective of any changes in the meantime in such law.⁸² This approach was reaffirmed in Thai-Europe Tapioca Service Ltd v. Government of Pakistan.⁸³ However, in Trendtex, Lord Denning and Shaw LJ emphasised that international law did not know a rule of stare decisis.⁸⁴ Where international law had changed, the court could implement that change 'without waiting for the House of Lords to do it'.⁸⁵ The true principle, noted Shaw LJ, was that 'the English courts must at any given time discover what the prevailing international rule is and apply that rule'.⁸⁶

The incorporationist approach was reaffirmed in principle by the Court of Appeal in J. H. Rayner v. Department of Trade and Industry.⁸⁷ This case concerned the consequences of ⁷⁷ Per Lord MacMillan, The Cristina [1938] AC 485, 497; 9 AD, p. 250. See Re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586, 588; 7 AD, p. 213; and Stephenson LJ, Trendtex Trading Corporation v. Central Bank of Nigeria [1977] 2 WLR 356, 379; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 135. But see also Lauterpacht, 'Is International Law a Part?', p. 87, note m.

⁷⁸ [1977] 2 WLR 356; 64 ILR, p. 111. See further below, chapter 12.

⁷⁹ R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [1974] 2 WLR 593, 597; 59 ILR, p. 450.

⁸⁰ [1977] 2 WLR 356, 365; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 128. See also Shaw LJ, ibid., 386 and Stephenson LJ, ibid., 378–81.

⁸¹ [1977] 2 WLR 356, 379.

⁸² See e.g. Chung Chi Cheung v. R [1939] AC 160, 169; 9 AD, p. 264. But see Morgenstern, 'Judicial Practice', pp. 80–2.

⁸³ [1975] 3 All ER 961, 967, 969–70; 64 ILR, p. 81. ⁸⁴ [1977] 2 WLR 356, 365; 64 ILR, pp. 111, 128.

⁸⁵ Per Lord Denning [1977] 2 WLR 356, 366.

⁸⁶ ibid., 388; 64 ILR, p. 152. But cf. Stephenson LJ, ibid., 381. See also e.g. Goff J, I° Congreso del Partido [1977] 3 WLR 778, 795; 64 ILR, p. 154. This approach was supported by Lord Slynn in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 77; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 65.

⁸⁷ [1988] 3 WLR 1033; 80 ILR, p. 49.

the demise of the International Tin Council and the attempts inter alia to render states that were members of the ITC liable for the debts incurred by that unfortunate organisation. Nourse LJ emphasised that the Trendtex case had resolved the rivalry between the incorporation and transformation doctrines in favour of the former.⁸⁸ One of the major points at issue in the Tin Council litigation was whether a rule existed in international law stipulating that the states members of an international organisation with separate personality could be rendered liable for the latter's debts.

If such a rule did exist, the question would then arise as to how that would be accepted or manifested in the context of municipal law. This, of course, would depend upon the precise content of such a claimed international rule and, as Kerr LJ noted, no such rule did exist in international law permitting action against member states 'in any national court'.⁸⁹ It was also not possible for an English court to remedy the gap in international law by itself creating such a rule.⁹⁰ Nourse LJ, however, took a different position on this point, stating that 'where it is necessary for an English court to decide such a question [i.e. an uncertain question of international law], and whatever the doubts and difficulties, it can and must do so'.⁹¹ This, with respect, is not and cannot be the case, not least because it strikes at the heart of the community-based system of international law creation.

Lord Oliver in the House of Lords judgment⁹² clearly and correctly emphasised that

It is certainly not for a domestic tribunal in effect to legislate a rule into existence for the purposes of domestic law and on the basis of material that is wholly indeterminate.⁹³

Such approaches find support in the Pinochet decisions. Lord Lloyd, for example, in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) referred to the 'well-established principles of customary international law, which principles form part of the common law of England',⁹⁴ while Lord Slynn took the view that the doctrine of precedent did not apply to the incorporation of rules of customary international law.⁹⁵ Lord Millett in Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 3) stressed that 'Customary international law is part of the common law'.⁹⁶ In Lord Advocate's Reference No. 1 of 2000, the High Court of Justiciary stated that 'A rule of customary international law is a rule of Scots law',⁹⁷ and the point was emphasised by the Arbitration Tribunal in Sandline v. Papua New Guinea that 'it is part of the public policy of England that its courts should give effect to clearly established rules of international law'.⁹⁸

The doctrine that customary international law formed part of the law of England was discussed by the House of Lords in R v. Jones,⁹⁹ where the issue focused upon whether the customary international law rule prohibiting aggression had automatically entered into English criminal law. Lord Bingham, while noting that the general principle was not at issue between the parties, commented that he 'would for my part hesitate, at any rate without much fuller argument, to ⁸⁸ [1988] 3 WLR 1116; 80 ILR, p. 132.

⁸⁹ [1988] 3 WLR 1095; 80 ILR, p. 109. ⁹⁰ Ibid.

⁹¹ [1988] 3 WLR 1118; 80 ILR, p. 135.

⁹² [1989] 3 All ER 523; 81 ILR, p. 671.

⁹³ [1989] 3 All ER 554; 81 ILR, p. 715.

⁹⁴ [2000] 1 AC 61, 98 and see also at 90; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 87.

⁹⁵ See Ex Parte Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 77; 119 ILR, pp. 50, 65.

⁹⁶ [2000] 1 AC 147, 276; 119 ILR, pp. 135, 230. See also Regina (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [2004] UKHL 55, paras. 22 ff. (per Lord Bingham); 131 ILR, pp. 652, 671 ff.

⁹⁷ 2001 SLT 507, 512. See also S. Neff, 'International Law and Nuclear Weapons in Scottish Courts', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 171.

⁹⁸ 117 ILR, pp. 552, 560. ⁹⁹ [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668.

accept this proposition in quite the unqualified terms in which it has often been stated'. Preference was expressed for the view maintained by Brierly that international law was not a part, but was rather one of the sources, of English law.¹⁰⁰

More specifically, the House of Lords unanimously accepted that the incorporation doctrine did not apply to the customary international law offence of aggression. While it was accepted that a crime recognised in customary international law 'may' be assimilated into domestic criminal law without statutory provision, this was not automatic.¹⁰¹ The English courts no longer had the power to create new criminal offences, which could only now be done by statute, and in practice when domestic effect was sought for customary international crimes this was achieved through legislation.¹⁰² Further, a charge of aggression would involve a determination not only of the guilt of the accused, but also of the state itself and possibly of other states, should the state go to war with allies and this raised constitutional issues as to non-justiciability.¹⁰³

This more nuanced approach was reaffirmed by the UK Supreme Court in Keyu v Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, where Lord Mance noted that 'Common law judges on any view retain the power and duty to consider how far customary international law on any point fits with domestic constitutional principles and understandings',¹⁰⁴ pointed out that domestic courts face a policy issue in deciding whether to recognise and enforce a rule of international law¹⁰⁵ and concluded that 'the presumption when considering any such policy issue is that CIL [customary international law], once established, can and should shape the common law, whenever it can do so consistently with domestic constitutional principles, statutory law and common law rules which the courts can themselves sensibly adapt without it being, for example, necessary to invite Parliamentary intervention or consideration'.¹⁰⁶

¹⁰⁰ Ibid., para. 11; 132 ILR, p. 675, and see J. Brierly, 'International Law in England', 51 LQR, 1935, pp. 24, 31.

¹⁰¹ R v. Jones, para. 23; 132 ILR, p. 680, per Lord Bingham, who noted that 'customary international law is applicable in the English courts only where the constitution permits', quoting O'Keefe, 'Customary International Crimes in English Courts', p. 335, and that 'international law could not create a crime triable directly, without the intervention of Parliament, in an English court', quoting Sir Franklin Berman, 'Jurisdiction: The State', in Asserting Jurisdiction: International and European Legal Perspectives (ed. P. Capps, M. Evans and S. Konstadinidis), Oxford, 2003, pp. 3, 11.

¹⁰² R v. Jones, para. 28; 132 ILR, p. 683 and R (Gentle) V. Prime Minister [2008] UKHL 20, para. 49 (per Lady Hale). See also Kneller (Publishing, Printing and Promotions) Ltd v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1973] AC 435. Lord Hoffmann in R v. Jones noted that 'new domestic offences should in my opinion be debated in Parliament, defined in a statute and come into force on a prescribed date. They should not creep into existence as a result of an international consensus to which only the executive of this country is a party', para. 62; 132 ILR, pp. 694–5; and see Lord Mance at paras. 102–3; 132 ILR, pp. 705–6. See also Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain (2004) 159 L Ed 2d 718, 765; 127 ILR, pp. 769, 807 (per Scalia J) and the Federal Court of Australia decision in Nulyarimma v. Thompson (1999) 165 ALR 621, 630; 120 ILR, pp. 353, 364.

¹⁰³ R v. Jones, para. 30; 132 ILR, p. 684, and Lord Hoffmann, paras. 63–7; 132 ILR, pp. 695–6. See further as to non-justiciability, below, p. 138.

¹⁰⁴ [2015] UKSC 69, para. 146. Lord Denning's judgment in Trendtex was further discussed and criticised in para. 147.

¹⁰⁵ Ibid., para. 149, citing Merkel J in Nulyarimma v. Thompson [1999] FCA 1192, para. 109.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., para. 150. See also The Freedom and Justice Party v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2016] EWCA 2010 (Admin), para. 166 (per Lloyd-Jones LJ), noting inter alia that 'It seems preferable to regard customary international law not as a part but as a source of the common law on which national judges may draw'. See also Belhaj and Rahmatullah (No. 1) v. Ministry of Defence [2017] UKSC 3, where Lord Sumption stated that, 'In principle, judges applying the common law are not at liberty to create, abrogate or modify municipal law rights or obligations in accordance with unincorporated norms derived from international law, whether customary or treaty-based. But, as Lord Bingham pointed out in R V. Lyons [2003] 1 AC 976, at para 13,

Accordingly, a considerable degree of caution may therefore now be necessary with regard to the traditionally and baldly expressed proposition that customary international law is part of English law.¹⁰⁷ This will be subject not only, as in the past, to the rule that common law (including where incorporating an international customary rule) gives way to statute, but also to considerations of a constitutional nature. Courts will be obliged to determine whether a particular provision indeed constitutes a rule of custom and, additionally, whether there are any constitutional bars to incorporation and indeed whether the custom in question is capable of being applied within the domestic legal system. This is since most of the rules of customary international law actually relate to matters of concern between two or more states and by definition a domestic court is unable to determine the rights and duties of a third state, partly because the domestic court would be unable in such circumstances to enforce its decision against or within the third state and partly because the international rule will often itself provide for implementation and sanctions within the international system upon a state to state or multilateral basis.¹⁰⁸ Other relevant factors may well include whether the custom is inconsistent with an earlier rule of common law¹⁰⁹ or with public policy.¹¹⁰ Accordingly, the approach positing automatic incorporation has given way to one proposing presumptive incorporation.

Treaties¹¹¹

As far as treaties are concerned, different rules apply as to their application within the domestic jurisdiction for very good historical and political reasons. While customary law develops through the evolution of state practice, international conventions are in the form of contracts binding upon the signatories. For a custom to emerge it is usual, though not always necessary, for several states to act in a certain manner believing it to be in conformity with the international law may none the less affect the interpretation of ambiguous statutory provisions, guide the exercise of judicial or executive discretions and influence the development of the common law. Although the courts are not bound, even in these contexts, to take account of international law, they are entitled to do so if it is appropriate and relevant': para. 252.

¹⁰⁷ See R. O'Keefe, 'The Doctrine of Incorporation Revisited', 79 BYIL, p. 7; Sales and Clement, 'International Law in Domestic Courts'; J. Collier, 'Is International Law Part of English Law?', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 890; J. Crawford, 'International Law in the House of Lords and in the High Court of Australia, 1996–2008: A Comparison', www.austlii.edu.au/au/journals/AUyrbkIntLaw/2009/1.pdf; M. Kirby, 'International Law and the Common Law: Conceptualising the New Relationship', 2009, www.michaelkirby.com.au/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=82&Itemid=12 and Sir Anthony Mason, 'International Law as a Source of Domestic Law', in International Law and Australian Federalism (ed. B. R. Opeskin and D. R. Rothwell), 1998, p. 210.

¹⁰⁸ See e.g. West Rand Central Gold Mining Company v. R [1905] 2 KB 391, 408 ff. and R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Thakrar [1974] 1 QB 684, 702.

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. Chung Chi Cheung v. R [1939] AC 160, 167–8 (Lord Atkin); West Rand [1905] 2 KB 391, 408 (Lord Alverstone CJ); and Chagos Islanders v. Attorney General and Others [2003] EWHC 2222, paras. 374–9 (Ouseley J).

¹¹⁰ See Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company [2002] UKHL 19, para. 18 (Lord Nicholls). See also Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249, 277–8.

¹¹¹ See generally A. D. McNair, The Law of Treaties, Oxford, 1961, pp. 81–97; A. Aust, Modern Treaty Law and Practice, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2013, chapter 10; F. A. Mann, 'The Enforcement of Treaties by English Courts', 44 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1958–9, p. 29; R. Higgins in The Effect of Treaties in Domestic Law (ed. F. Jacobs and S. Roberts), London, 1987, p. 123; D. Lasok, 'Les Traités Internationaux dans la Système Juridique Anglaise', 70 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1966, p. 961; I. Sinclair, 'The Principles of Treaty Interpretation and their Application by the English Courts', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 508; I. Sinclair and S. J. Dickson, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: United Kingdom', in National Treaty Law and Practice (ed. M. Leigh and M. R. Blakeslee), 1995, p. 223; and C. Warbrick, 'Treaties', 49 ICLQ, 2000, p. 944. See also The Role of Domestic Courts in Treaty Enforcement: A Comparative Study (ed. D. Sloss), Cambridge, 2014.

law. Therefore, in normal circumstances the influence of one particular state is not usually decisive. In the case of treaties, the states involved may create new law that would be binding upon them irrespective of previous practice or contemporary practice. In other words, the influence of the executive is generally of greater impact where treaty law is concerned than is the case with customary law and this is particularly so where, as in the United Kingdom, ratification of treaties is an executive act.

It follows from this that were treaties to be rendered applicable directly within the state without any intermediate stage after signature and ratification and before domestic operation, the executive would be able to legislate without the legislature. Because of this, any incorporation theory approach to treaty law has been rejected. Indeed, as far as this topic is concerned, it seems to turn more upon the particular relationship between the executive and legislative branches of government than upon any preconceived notions of international law.

One of the principal cases in English law illustrating this situation is the case of the Parlement Belge.¹¹² It involved a collision between this ship and a British tug, and the claim for damages brought by the latter vessel before the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty division of the High Court. The Parlement Belge belonged to the King of the Belgians and was used as a cargo boat. During the case, the Attorney General intervened to state that the Court had no jurisdiction over the vessel as it was the property of the Belgian monarch, and that further, by a political agreement of 1876 between Britain and Belgium, the same immunity from foreign legal process as applied to warships should apply also to this packet boat. In discussing the case, the Court concluded that only public ships of war were entitled to such immunity and that such immunity could not be extended to other categories by a treaty without parliamentary consent. Indeed, it was stated that this would be 'a use of the treaty-making prerogative of the Crown ... without precedent, and in principle contrary to the law of the constitution'.¹¹³

It is the Crown which in the United Kingdom possesses the constitutional authority to enter into treaties and this prerogative power cannot be impugned by the courts.¹¹⁴ However, this power may be affected by legislation. Section 6 of the European Parliamentary Elections Act 1978 provided, for example, that no treaty providing for any increase in the powers of the European Parliament would be ratified by the United Kingdom without being first approved by Parliament.¹¹⁵ Thus it is that treaties cannot operate of themselves within the state, but require the passing of an enabling statute. The Crown in the United Kingdom retains the right to sign and ratify international agreements, but is unable to legislate directly. Before a treaty can become part of English law, an Act of Parliament is essential. This fundamental proposition was clearly spelt out by Lord Oliver in the House of Lords decision in J. H. Rayner v. Department of Trade and Industry.¹¹⁶ He noted that:

¹¹² (1879) 4 PD 129. ¹¹³ Ibid., p. 154.

¹¹⁴ See e.g. Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1985] AC 374, 418. See also Rustomjee v. R (1876) 2 QBD 69 and Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 611.

¹¹⁵ See R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Rees-Mogg [1994] 2 WLR 115.

¹¹⁶ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 531; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 684. See also Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 687; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 611.

as a matter of the constitutional law of the United Kingdom, the royal prerogative, whilst it embraces the making of treaties, does not extend to altering the law or conferring rights on individuals or depriving individuals of rights which they enjoy in domestic law without the intervention of Parliament. Treaties, as it is sometimes expressed, are not self-executing. Quite simply, a treaty is not part of English law unless and until it has been incorporated into the law by legislation.¹¹⁷

It therefore followed that as far as individuals were concerned such treaties were res inter alia acta from which they could not derive rights and by which they could not be deprived of rights or subjected to obligations.¹¹⁸ Lord Templeman emphasised that ‘Except to the extent that a treaty becomes incorporated into the laws of the United Kingdom by statute, the courts of the United Kingdom have no power to enforce treaty rights and obligations at the behest of a sovereign government or at the behest of a private individual.’¹¹⁹ This was reaffirmed by Lord Bingham in A (FC) and Others (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, noting that ‘a treaty, even if ratified by the United Kingdom, has no binding force in the domestic law of this country unless it is given effect by statute or expresses principles of customary international law’.¹²⁰ The interpretation of treaties not incorporated by statute into municipal law, and the decision as to whether they have been complied with, are matters exclusively for the Crown as ‘the court must speak with the same voice as the Executive’.¹²¹ An exception is where reference to a treaty is needed in order to explain the relevant factual background,¹²² for example where the terms of a treaty are incorporated into a contract.¹²³ Where the legislation in question refers expressly to a relevant but unincorporated treaty, it is permissible to utilise the latter in order to constrain any discretion provided for in the former.¹²⁴ Further, it has been argued that ratification of an international treaty (where no incorporation has taken place) may give rise to legitimate expectations that the executive, in the absence of statutory or executive indications to the contrary, will act in conformity with the treaty.¹²⁵

¹¹⁷ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544–5; 81 ILR, p. 701. See also Littrell v. USA (No. 2) [1995] 1 WLR 82 and Thomas v. Baptiste [2000] 2 AC 1 (PC) at 23 and 31–3. But see R. Y. Jennings, ‘An International Lawyer Takes Stock’, 39 ICLQ, 1990, pp. 513, 523–6.

¹¹⁸ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544–5; 81 ILR, p. 701. See further as to the non-justiciability of unincorporated treaties, below, p. 142.

¹¹⁹ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 526; 81 ILR, p. 676. See also Ex Parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, 747–8; 85 ILR, p. 29; and R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44; 131 ILR, p. 538.

¹²⁰ [2005] UKHL 71, para. 27. Lord Bingham in R v. Asfaw [2008] UKHL 31, para. 29 stated that, ‘While, therefore, one would expect any government intending to legislate inconsistently with an obligation binding on the UK to make its intention very clear, there can on well known authority be no ground in domestic law for failing to give effect to an enactment in terms unambiguously inconsistent with such an obligation.’

¹²¹ Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 688; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 613. See also GUR Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 All ER 449, 454, 459 and 466–7; 75 ILR, p. 675; and Sierra Leone Telecommunications v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821, 828; 114 ILR, p. 466. See in addition R v. Lyons [2003] 1 AC 976, 995 (Lord Hoffmann).

¹²² Lord Oliver in J. H. Rayner v. Department of Trade and Industry emphasised that the conclusion of an international treaty is a question of fact, thus a treaty may be referred to as part of the factual background against which a particular issue arises, [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 702. See further below, p. 141.

¹²³ Lonrho Exports v. ECGD [1996] 4 All ER 673, 688; 108 ILR, pp. 596, 613.

¹²⁴ See e.g. R v. Secretary of State, On the Application of the Channel Tunnel Group 119 ILR, pp. 398, 407–8.

¹²⁵ See Lord Woolf MR in Ex Parte Ahmed and Patel [1998] INLR 570, 584, relying upon the approach of the High Court of Australia in Minister of Immigration v. Teoh, as to which see below, p. 128. Hobhouse LJ in Ex Parte Ahmed and Patel noted that where the Secretary of State had adopted a specific policy, it was not possible to derive a legitimate expectation from the treaty going beyond the scope of the policy: at 592. Note, as to the special position of human rights treaties as against other multilateral treaties, e.g. Matthew v. Trinidad and Tobago State [2004] UKPC 33; 134 ILR, p. 687.

However, treaties relating to the conduct of war, cession of territory and the imposition of charges on the public purse¹²⁶ do not need an intervening act of legislation before they can be made binding upon the citizens of the country.¹²⁷ A similar situation exists also with regard to relatively unimportant administrative agreements which do not require ratification, providing of course they do not purport to alter municipal law. In certain cases, Parliament will give its approval generically in advance for the conclusion of treaties in certain fields within specified limits, subject to the terms negotiated for particular treaties being promulgated by statutory instrument (secondary legislation).¹²⁸ Such exceptions occur because it is felt that, having in mind the historical compromises upon which the British constitutional structure is founded, no significant legislative powers are being lost by Parliament. In all other cases where the rights and duties of British subjects are affected, an Act of Parliament is necessary to render the provisions of the particular treaty operative within Britain. In conclusion, it may be stated that parliamentary legislation will be required where a treaty for its application in the United Kingdom requires a modification of, or addition to, existing common law or statute, affects private rights, creates financial obligations for the United Kingdom, provides for an increase in the powers of the European Parliament, involves the cession of British territory or increases the powers of the Crown.¹²⁹

There is no rule specifying the precise legislative method of incorporation of a treaty¹³⁰ and a variety of means are available in practice.¹³¹ For example, a treaty may be incorporated into domestic law by being given the force of law in a statute with or without being scheduled to the relevant Act; by being referred to in a statute otherwise than in an incorporating statute; by tangential reference in a statute;¹³² and by statutory referral to definitions contained in a treaty.¹³³

It had been the practice in the United Kingdom to lay before both Houses of Parliament all treaties which the United Kingdom had either signed or to which it intended to accede.¹³⁴ The text ¹²⁶ See the evidence presented by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords, UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 405.

¹²⁷ See e.g. S. de Smith and R. Brazier, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 6th edn, London, 1989, pp. 140–2, and W. Wade and O. H. Phillips, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 9th edn, London, 1977, pp. 303–6. See also Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario [1937] AC 326, 347; 8 AD, p. 41; Walkerv. Baird [1892] AC 491; Republic of Italy v. Hambro's Bank [1950] 1 All ER 430; Cheney v. Conn [1968] 1 WLR 242; 41 ILR, p. 421; Porter v. Freudenberg [1915] 1 KB 857, 874–80; and McNair, Law of Treaties, pp. 89–91.

¹²⁸ See the evidence presented by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the Royal Commission on the Reform of the House of Lords, UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 405, citing the examples of extradition and double-taxation treaties.

¹²⁹ Sinclair and Dickson, 'National Treaty Law', p. 230. This was confirmed in Miller v. Secretary of State for Exiting the European Union [2017] UKSC 5, where the full Supreme Court noted that section 2 of the European Communities Act authorised EU law as an independent and overriding source of domestic law and underlined that it was common ground that UK domestic law would change as a result of the UK ceasing to be a party to the EU treaties and that the rights enjoyed by UK residents granted through EU law would be affected. It was held, accordingly, that authorisation by a prior Act of Parliament was required before the exercise by ministers of any power to withdraw from the EU Treaties.

¹³⁰ See Regina (European Roma Rights Centre) v. Immigration Officer at Prague Airport and Another [2004] UKHL 55, para. 42; 131 ILR, p. 683 (per Lord Steyn).

¹³¹ See e.g. Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 57 ff.

¹³² For example, section 2 of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 provides that nothing in the immigration rules within the Immigration Act 1971 shall lay down any practice contrary to the Refugee Convention.

¹³³ See e.g. the International Criminal Court Act 2001.

¹³⁴ It is also the practice to put before Parliament Orders in Council made under the United Nations Act 1946 in order, for example, to implement United Nations sanctions internally: see s. 1(4) of the Act and H. Fox and C. Wickremasinghe, of any agreement requiring ratification, acceptance, approval or accession had to be laid before Parliament at least twenty-one sitting days before any of these actions was taken. This was termed the 'Ponsonby Rule'.¹³⁵ All treaties signed after 1 January 1997 and laid before Parliament under this rule are accompanied by an Explanatory Memorandum.¹³⁶ The matter is now regulated by Part 2 of the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act 2010. This provides that a treaty may only be ratified if a period of twenty-one days has elapsed from the placing of the treaty before Parliament by the relevant Minister calling for ratification and the House of Commons has not otherwise resolved.¹³⁷

There is in English law a presumption that legislation is to be so construed as to avoid a conflict with international law.¹³⁸ This operates particularly where the Act of Parliament which is intended to bring the treaty into effect is itself ambiguous. Accordingly, where the provisions of a statute implementing a treaty are capable of more than one meaning, and one interpretation is compatible with the terms of the treaty while others are not, it is the former approach that will be adopted. For, as Lord Diplock pointed out: 'Parliament does not intend to act in breach of international law, including therein specific treaty obligations.'¹³⁹ It is also to be noted that the words of a statute may require consideration of international law by the relevant domestic authorities.¹⁴⁰

Although there is a general presumption that English law accords with international obligations,¹⁴¹ where the words of a statute are unambiguous the courts have no choice but

'UK Implementation of UN Economic Sanctions', 42 ICLQ, 1993, pp. 945, 959. See also R v. HM Treasury and the Bank of England, ex parte Centro-Com, Times Law Reports, 7 October 1993.

¹³⁵ See 171 HC Deb., col. 2001, 1 April 1924.

¹³⁶ UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 406. See now section 24 of the Constitutional Reform and Governance Act 2010.

¹³⁷ Section 20. This section does not apply to a treaty if a Minister is of the opinion that, exceptionally, the treaty should be ratified without the requirements of that section having been met, unless either House of Parliament has resolved that there be no ratification. There are also certain kinds of treaties which are not covered by these provisions: see section 23 (treaties providing for increase in European Parliament's powers are not to be ratified unless approved by Act of Parliament: section 12 of the European Parliamentary Elections Act 2002; treaties amending founding treaties of the European Union not to be ratified without Parliamentary approval: section 5 of the European Union (Amendment) Act 2008; treaties in relation to which an Order in Council may be made under section 158 of the Inheritance Tax Act 1984 (double taxation conventions) or section 2 of the Taxation (International and Other Provisions) Act 2010 (double taxation arrangements) or section 173 of the Finance Act 2006 (international tax enforcement arrangements); treaties concluded (under authority given by the government of the United Kingdom) by the government of a British overseas territory, of any of the Channel Islands or of the Isle of Man).

¹³⁸ See e.g. Garland v. British Rail Engineering Ltd [1983] 2 AC 751; 93 ILR, p. 622; and Ex Parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, 748; 85 ILR, p. 29, where this presumption is referred to as 'a mere canon of construction which involves no importation of international law into the domestic field'. See also Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edn, London, 1969, p. 183; A (FC) and Others (FC) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2005] UKHL 71, para. 27; and Al-Skeini v. Secretary of State for Defence [2007] UKHL 26, para. 45; 133 ILR, pp. 715–16 (per Lord Rodger).

¹³⁹ Salomon v. Commissioners of Customs and Excise [1967] 2 QB 116, 143; Post Office v. Estuary Radio Ltd [1968] 2 QB 740; and Brown v. Whimster [1976] QB 297. See also National Smokeless Fuels Ltd v. IRC, The Times, 23 April 1986, p. 36; Lord Oliver in J. H. v. Department of Trade and Industry [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 702; and R (Adams) v. Secretary of State for Justice [2011] UKSC 18, para. 14 (Lord Phillips).

¹⁴⁰ Section 1(4) of the Diplomatic and Consular Premises Act 1987 permits the Secretary of State to change the status of diplomatic and consular premises by giving or withdrawing consent or withdrawing acceptance to such status only 'if he is satisfied that to do so is permissible under international law'.

¹⁴¹ Lord Hoffmann noted in R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44, para. 27, that 'there is a strong presumption in favour of interpreting English law (whether common law or statute) in a way which does not place the United Kingdom in breach of an international obligation'. See also Assange v. The Swedish Prosecution Authority [2012] UKSC 22, para. 10 (Lord Phillips); Hounga v. Allen [2014] UKSC 47, para. 50 (Lord Wilson); and Pham v. Secretary of State for the

to apply them irrespective of any conflict with international agreements.¹⁴² Of course, any breach of an international obligation will import the responsibility of the United Kingdom at the international level irrespective of domestic considerations.¹⁴³ Attempts have been made in the past to consider treaties in the context of domestic legislation not directly enacting them, or as indications of public policy, particularly with regard to human rights treaties,¹⁴⁴ and it seems that account may be taken of them in seeking to interpret ambiguous provisions.¹⁴⁵ However, ministers are under no obligation to do this in reaching decisions.¹⁴⁶

One particular issue has arisen in the case of the implementation of international obligations and that relates to United Nations sanctions. In the United Kingdom, such sanctions are enforced as a consequence of the United Nations Act 1946, which enables the Crown to adopt Orders in Council so that effect can be given to sanctions.¹⁴⁷ Such secondary legislation tends to be detailed and thus the possibility of differential interpretations arises. It is to be noted that the relevance and application of rules of the European Union may also be in issue.¹⁴⁸ Further, one may note the obligation contained in article 29 of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, adopted by binding UN Security Council resolution 827 (1993), for all states to co-operate with the Tribunal and in particular to 'comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber', including the arrest and detention of persons and their surrender or transfer to the Home Department [2015] UKSC 19, para. 77 (Lord Mance), noting that, 'But it is not axiomatic that consistency is either always achievable or what Parliament intended or did achieve', ibid.

¹⁴² Ellerman Lines v. Murray [1931] AC 126; 5 AD, p. 342; and IRC v. Collco Dealings Ltd [1962] AC 1; 33 ILR, p. 1. See Sinclair, 'Principles of Treaty Interpretation', and C. Schreuer, 'The Interpretation of Treaties by Domestic Courts', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 255. See also F. A. Mann, Foreign Affairs in English Courts, Oxford, 1986, pp. 97–114; R. Gardiner, 'Treaty Interpretation in the English Courts since Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines (1980)', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 620; and Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 65 ff. The UK Supreme Court emphasised in HM Treasury v. Ahmed [2010] UKSC 2, paras. 45 ff., that the principle of legality required that general or ambiguous statutory words should not be interpreted in a manner that infringed fundamental rights.

¹⁴³ See above, p. 100. ¹⁴⁴ See e.g. Blathwayt v. Baron Cawley [1976] AC 397.

¹⁴⁵ See e.g. in the context of the European Convention on Human Rights prior to its incorporation by the Human Rights Act 1998, R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Bhajan Singh [1975] 2 All ER 1081; 61 ILR, p. 260; R v. Chief Immigration Officer, Heathrow Airport, ex parte Salamat Bibi [1976] 3 All ER 843; 61 ILR, p. 267; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Phansopkar [1976] QB 606; 61 ILR, p. 390; Waddington v. Miah [1974] 1 WLR 683; 57 ILR, p. 175; Cassell v. Broome [1972] AC 1027; Malone v. MPC [1979] Ch 344; 74 ILR, p. 304; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Anderson [1984] 1 All ER 920; Trawnik v. Ministry of Defence [1984] 2 All ER 791; and Ex Parte Launder [1997] 1 WLR 839. In R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Brind [1991] 1 AC 696, it was held that subordinate legislation and executive discretion did not fall into this category. See also Derbyshire County Council v. Times Newspapers Ltd [1993] AC 534, HL; Rantzen v. Mirror Group Newspapers (1986) Ltd [1993] 3 WLR 953, CA; Attorney-General v. Associated Newspapers Ltd [1993] 3 WLR 74; R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Wynne [1993] 1 WLR 115; and R v. Brown [1993] 2 WLR 556. See also A. Cunningham, 'The European Convention on Human Rights, Customary International Law and the Constitution', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 537.

¹⁴⁶ See e.g. R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Fernandes [1984] 2 All ER 390.

¹⁴⁷ See e.g. the Iraq and Kuwait (UN Sanctions) Order 1990, SI 1990 No. 1651; the Serbia and Montenegro (UN Sanctions) Orders 1992 and 1993, SI 1992 No. 1302 and SI 1993 No. 1188; the Libya (UN Sanctions) Orders 1992 and 1993, SI 1992 Nos. 973 and 975 and SI 1993 No. 2807; the Former Yugoslavia (UN Sanctions) Order 1994, SI 1994 No. 2673.

¹⁴⁸ See e.g. Ex Parte Centro-Com [1994] 1 CMLR 109; [1997] ECR I-81; and [1997] 3 WLR 239; 117 ILR, p. 444. See also R. Pavoni, 'UN Sanctions in EU and National Law: The Centro-Com Case', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 582. See further below, p. 136, note 283 237.

Tribunal. This was implemented by secondary legislation adopted under the United Nations Act 1946.¹⁴⁹

In the interpretation of international treaties incorporated by statute, the English courts have adopted a broader approach than is customary in statutory interpretation, utilising the international rules of treaty interpretation as reflected in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969 rather than the stricter rules of statutory construction.¹⁵⁰ In particular, recourse to the relevant travaux préparatoires may be possible.¹⁵¹ However, different approaches have been taken by the British courts as to how to deal with the question of interpretation in such circumstances. In Sidhu v. British Airways, Lord Hope, adopting the broad approach signalled in Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines, stated that it was ‘well-established that a purposive approach should be taken to the interpretation of international conventions which have the force of law in this country’.¹⁵² Lord Mustill in Semco Salvage v. Lancer Navigation took a more traditional approach founded upon the relevant articles of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969,¹⁵³ in particular emphasising the significance of a textual interpretation of the words in question as understood in their ordinary meaning.¹⁵⁴ In Al-Atiyyah v. Al-Thani,¹⁵⁵ it was noted that it was legitimate to construe the terms of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties 1969 that have been incorporated into domestic law by reference to all of its provisions, including those that had not been so incorporated.

In a rather special position is the Human Rights Act 1998, which incorporated the European Convention on Human Rights. Section 3(1) provides that, ‘So far as it is possible to do so, primary and subordinate legislation must be read and given effect in a way which is compatible with Convention rights’, although this does not affect the validity, continuing operation or enforcement of any incompatible primary legislation.¹⁵⁶ The obligation imposed by section 3 arises crucially in relation to both previous and subsequent enactments.¹⁵⁷ Where legislation cannot be ¹⁴⁹ The UN (International Tribunal) (Former Yugoslavia) Order 1996, SI 1996 No. 716. See for differing approaches to this procedure, C. Warbrick, ‘Co-operation with the International Criminal Tribunal for Yugoslavia’, 45 ICLQ, 1996, p. 947, and H. Fox, ‘The Objections to Transfer of Criminal Jurisdiction to the Tribunal’, 46 ICLQ, 1997, p. 434.

¹⁵⁰ Lord Slynn stated in R (Al Fawwaz) v. Governor of Brixton Prison that ‘to apply to extradition treaties the strict canons appropriate to the construction of domestic statutes would often tend to defeat rather than serve [their] purpose’: [2001] UKHL 69, para. 39, citing Lord Bridge in Ex Parte Postlethwaite [1988] AC 924, 947. See also Reyes v. Al-Malki [2015] EWCA Civ 32, para. 46. See M. Waibel, ‘Principles of Treaty Interpretation: Developed for and Applied by National Courts’, in The Interpretation of International Law by Domestic Court (ed. H. P. Aust and G. Nolte), p. 9.

¹⁵¹ See Buchanan v. Babco [1978] AC 141 and Fothergill v. Monarch Airlines [1981] AC 251; 74 ILR, p. 648. Compare in the latter case the restrictive approach of Lord Wilberforce, [1981] AC 278; 74 ILR, p. 656 with that of Lord Diplock, [1981] AC 283; 74 ILR, pp. 661–2. See also Goldman v. Thai Airways International Ltd [1983] 3 All ER 693. Note also that in Wahda Bank v. Arab Bank plc Times Law Reports, 16 December 1992, Phillips J referred to UN sanctions resolutions in examining the question of the applicability of the Order in Council implementing the sanctions internally to the case in question. See further Re H (Minors) [1998] AC 72. See also R (ST) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2012] UKSC 12 at para. 30 (Lord Hope). It was also noted that: ‘however generous and purposive its approach to interpretation may be, the court’s task remains one of interpreting the document to which the contracting parties have committed themselves by their agreement. As Lord Bingham was at pains to emphasise in the Roma Rights case, at para 18, it must interpret what the parties have agreed to’ (at para. 31).

¹⁵² [1997] 1 All ER 193, 202. ¹⁵³ See below, chapter 15, p. 706. ¹⁵⁴ [1997] 1 All ER 502, 512.

¹⁵⁵ [2016] EWHC 212 (QB), para. 39.

¹⁵⁶ Section 3(2)(b). Nor that of incompatible subordinate legislation where primary legislation prevents removal of the incompatibility: section 3(2)(c).

¹⁵⁷ Section 3(2)(a). See further H. Fenwick, Civil Liberties and Human Rights, 3rd edn, London, 2002, p. 139; and R. Clayton and H. Tomlinson, Human Rights Law, London, 2000, chapter 4.

rendered compatible with Convention rights, then a declaration of incompatibility can be made under section 4 and Parliament may then modify the offending provisions under section 10.

The courts have also adopted a broader, purposive approach to interpretation of domestic legislation in order to ensure its compatibility with the Convention.¹⁵⁸ In the process of interpreting domestic legislation so as to render it compatible if possible with the Convention rights, the courts ‘must take into account’¹⁵⁹ any relevant jurisprudence from the European Court of Human Rights, although this is not a provision imposing an obligation to follow such case-law.¹⁶⁰ Reference should also be made to the growing importance of entry into the European Communities in this context. The case-law of the Communities demonstrates that fundamental rights are an integral part of the general principles of law, the observance of which the European Court of Justice seeks to ensure. The system provides that Community law prevails over national law and that the decisions of the European Court are to be applied by the domestic courts of the member states. The potential for change through this route is, therefore, significant.¹⁶¹ Further, in interpreting domestic legislation made pursuant to the European Communities Act 1972 where the former appears to conflict with the Treaty of Rome (establishing the European Community), the House of Lords has held that a purposive approach should be adopted.¹⁶²

The United States¹⁶³

As far as the American position on the relationship between municipal law and customary international law is concerned, it appears to be very similar to British practice, apart from the need to take the Constitution into account. The US Supreme Court in Boos v. Barry emphasised that, ‘As a general proposition, it is of course correct that the United States has a vital national interest in complying with international law.’ However, the rules of international law were subject to the Constitution.¹⁶⁴

¹⁵⁸ See e.g. the decision of the House of Lords in R v. A [2001] 2 WLR 1546; and R (on the application of Alconbury Ltd) v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions [2001] 2 All ER 929. Note also the issue raised in HM Treasury v. Ahmed [2010] UKSC 2 concerning the application of UN sanctions imposed within the UK by Orders in Council under the terms of section 1(1) of the United Nations Act 1946. Lord Hope emphasised that ‘fundamental rights cannot be overridden by general or ambiguous words’, at para. 61.

¹⁵⁹ Section 2 of the Human Rights Act. ¹⁶⁰ See further below, chapter 6, p. 255.

¹⁶¹ See e.g. Nold v. EC Commission [1974] ECR 491, 508 and Rutili v. Ministry of Interior of French Republic [1975] ECR 1219.

¹⁶² Pickstone v. Freemans [1988] 3 WLR 265. See also Litster v. Forth Dry Dock Engineering [1989] 1 All ER 1194.

¹⁶³ See e.g. P. R. Dubinsky, ‘United States’, in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 631; C. A. Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2015; International Law in the US Supreme Court (ed. D. L. Sloss, M. D. Ramsay and W. S. Dodge), Cambridge, 2011; J. F. Murphy, The United States and the Rule of Law in International Affairs, Cambridge, 2004, chapter 2; J. J. Paust, International Law as Law of the United States, Durham, NC, 1996, and Paust, ‘International Law as Law of the United States: Trends and Prospects’, 1 Chinese JIL, 2002, p. 615; Morgenstern, ‘Judicial Practice’; I. Seidl-Hohenveldern, ‘Transformation or Adoption of International Law into Municipal Law’, 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 88; Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 74 ff.; C. Dickinson, ‘The Law of Nations as Part of the National Law of the United States’, 101 University of Pennsylvania Law Review, 1953, p. 793; L. Henkin, Foreign Affairs and the Constitution, New York, 1972; L. Henkin, ‘International Law: as Law in the United States’, 82 Michigan Law Review, 1984, p. 1555; J. J. Paust, ‘Customary International Law: Its Nature, Sources and Status as Law in the United States’, 12 Michigan Journal of International Law, 1990, p. 59; and Treaties and Other International Agreements: A Study Prepared for the Committee on Foreign Relations, US Senate, 2001.

¹⁶⁴ 99 L Ed 2d 333, 345–7 (1988); 121 ILR, p. 551.

An early acceptance of the incorporation doctrine was later modified as in the United Kingdom. It was stated in the Paquete Habana case¹⁶⁵ that international law is part of our law and must be ascertained and administered by the courts of justice of appropriate jurisdiction as often as questions of right depending upon it are duly presented for their determination.¹⁶⁶

Similarly, the early pure incorporation cases gave way to a more cautious approach.¹⁶⁷

The current accepted position is that customary international law in the United States is federal law and that its determination by the federal courts is binding on the state courts,¹⁶⁸ although this masks some controversy as to the impact upon such incorporation upon democratic governance.¹⁶⁹ The similarity of approach with the United Kingdom is not surprising in view of common historical and cultural traditions, and parallel restraints upon the theories are visible. US courts are bound by the doctrine of precedent and the necessity to proceed according to previously decided cases, and they too must apply statute as against any rules of customary international law that do not accord with it.¹⁷⁰ The Court of Appeals reaffirmed this position in the Committee of United States Citizens Living in Nicaragua v. Reagan case,¹⁷¹ where it was noted that 'no enactment of Congress can be challenged on the ground that it violates customary international law'.¹⁷²

It has been noted that the political and judicial organs of the United States have the power to ignore international law, where this occurs pursuant to a statute or 'controlling executive act'. This has occasioned much controversy,¹⁷³ as has the general relationship between custom and inconsistent pre-existing statutes.¹⁷⁴ However, it is now accepted that statutes supersede earlier treaties or customary rules of international law.¹⁷⁵ It has also been held that it would run counter to the Constitution for a court to decide that a decision of the International Court of Justice overrules a binding decision of the US Supreme Court and thus affords a judicial remedy to an ¹⁶⁵ 175 US 677 (1900). See also Respublica v. De Longchamps 1 Dall. 111.

¹⁶⁶ 175 US 677, 700. This is only when there is not already a controlling executive or legislative act, ibid. See Hilton v. Guyot 159 US 113 and United States v. Melekh 190 F.Supp. 67 (1960); cf. Pauling v. McElroy 164 F.Supp. 390 (1958).

¹⁶⁷ See e.g. Cook v. United States 288 US 102 (1933); 6 AD, p. 3; and United States v. Claus 63 F.Supp. 433 (1944).

¹⁶⁸ See US v. Belmont 301 US 324, 331, 57 S.Ct. 758, 761 (1937); 8 AD, p. 34; and Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. I, pp. 48–52. See also Kadić v. Karadžić 70 F.3d 232, 246 (2d Cir. 1995); 104 ILR, pp. 149, 159; and In Re Estate of Ferdinand E. Marcos Human Rights Litigation 978 F.2d 493, 502 (9th Cir. 1992); 103 ILR, pp. 521, 529. However, see C. A. Bradley and J. L. Goldsmith, 'Customary International Law as Federal Common Law: A Critique of the Modern Position', 110 Harvard Law Review, 1997, p. 816; and J. Paust, 'Customary International Law in the United States: Clean and Dirty Laundry', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 78.

¹⁶⁹ See e.g. Bradley, 'International Law in the US', chapter 5. ¹⁷⁰ See e.g. Schroeder v. Bissell 5 F.2d 838, 842 (1925). ¹⁷¹ 859 F.2d 929 (1988).

¹⁷² Ibid., at 939. See also Tag v. Rogers 267 F.2d 664, 666 (1959); 28 ILR, p. 467; and US v. Yunis (No. 3) 724 F.2d 1086, 1091 (1991); 88 ILR, pp. 176, 181. This position has essentially been reaffirmed in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain 542 US 692, 737–8 (2004) and Samantar v. Yousuf 130 S.Ct 2278 (2010).

¹⁷³ See Brown v. United States 12 US (8 Cranch) 110, 128 (1814) and Whitney v. Robertson 124 US 190, 194 (1888). See also Henkin, 'International Law', p. 1555. See also Rodriguez-Fernandez v. Wilkinson 654 F.2d 1382 (1981); 505 F. Supp. 787 (1980); US v. PLO 695 F.Supp. 1456 (1988) and Klinghoffer v. SNC Achille Lauro 739 F.Supp. 854 (1990).

¹⁷⁴ See Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 63–9 (§115); the Reagan case, 859 F.2d 929; and Goldklang, 'Back on Board the Paquete Habana', 25 Va. JIL, 1984, p. 143.

¹⁷⁵ See previous note.

individual for a violation of the Constitution.¹⁷⁶ However, the question of the impact of a ruling of the International Court upon US courts has been discussed in the light of decisions of the former¹⁷⁷ as to the violation of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963 by the failure to permit access to consular officials by imprisoned foreigners.¹⁷⁸

There does exist, as in English law, a presumption that legislation does not run counter to international law and, as it was stated by the Court in Schroeder v. Bissell,¹⁷⁹ unless it unmistakably appears that a congressional act was intended to be in disregard of a principle of international comity, the presumption is that it was intended to be in conformity with it.¹⁸⁰

The relationship between US law and customary law has been the subject of re-examination in the context of certain human rights situations. In Filartiga v. Pena-Irala,¹⁸¹ the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit dealt with an action brought by Paraguayans against a Paraguayan for the torture and death of the son of the plaintiff. The claim was based on the Alien Tort Claims Act of 1789¹⁸² which provides that '[t]he district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action by an alien for a tort only, committed in violation of the law of nations'. The Court of Appeals held that torture constituted a violation of international customary law and was thus actionable. The Court accordingly held against the defendant despite the fact that both parties were alien and all the operative acts occurred in Paraguay. The Court also noted that in ascertaining the content of international law, the contemporary rules and principles of international law were to be interpreted and not those as of the date of the prescribing statute.¹⁸³ Other cases came before the courts in which the incorporation of international customary law provisions concerning human rights issues was argued with mixed success.¹⁸⁴

¹⁷⁶ Valdez v. Oklahoma, US Court of Criminal Appeals of Oklahoma, Case No. PCD-2001-1011, 2002.

¹⁷⁷ See the LaGrand case (Germany v. United States of America), ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 466; 134 ILR, p. 1; and the Avena and Other Mexican Nationals case (Mexico v. United States of America), ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

¹⁷⁸ See e.g. Torres v. State of Oklahoma 43 ILM, 2004, p. 1227, and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S.Ct. 2669 (2006), holding that a violation of article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations did not necessarily require reversal of a criminal conviction or sentence. As to civil remedies, see United States v. Rodriguez 162 Fed. Appx. 853, 857 (11th Cir. 2006), Cornejo v. County of San Diego 504 F.3d 853, 872 (9th Cir. 2007) and Gandara v. Bennett, Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, judgment of 22 May 2008, holding that the Vienna Convention did not create judicially enforceable individual rights. It was emphasised in Cornejo that '[f]or any treaty to be susceptible to judicial enforcement it must both confer individual rights and be self-executing', at p. 856.

¹⁷⁹ 5 F.2d 838 (1925).

¹⁸⁰ Ibid., p. 842. See also MacLeod v. United States 229 US 416 (1913) and Littlejohn & Co. v. United States 270 US 215 (1926); 3 AD, p. 483.

¹⁸¹ 630 F.2d 876 (1980); 77 ILR, p. 169. See e.g. R. B. Lillich, Invoking Human Rights Law in Domestic Courts, Charlottesville, 1985, and Comment, 'Torture as a Tort in Violation of International Law', 33 Stanford Law Review, 1981, p. 353.

¹⁸² 28 USC 1350 (1988).

¹⁸³ 630 F.2d 876, 881 (1980); 77 ILR, pp. 169, 175. See also Amerada Hess v. Argentine Republic 830 F.2d 421; 79 ILR, p. 1. The norms of international law were to be found by 'consulting the works of jurists, writing professedly on public law; or by the general usage and practice of nations; or by judicial decisions recognising and enforcing that law', 630 F.2d 876, 880; 77 ILR, p. 174, quoting United States v. Smith 18 US (5 Wheat.), 153, 160-1. See also Kadić v. Karadžić 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1592. Note that Bradley writes that after Filartiga, the 'leading academic view' was that customary international law had the status in the US of 'self-executing federal common law'. However, more recently this has been challenged: see International Law in the US Legal System, p. 155 ff. His conclusion is that US courts should proceed cautiously in incorporating it into domestic law, ibid., p.167.

¹⁸⁴ See e.g. Fernandez v. Wilkinson 505 F.Supp. 787 (1980) and In re Alien Children Education Litigation 501 F.Supp. 544 (1980).

An attempt to obtain a judgment in the United States against the Republic of Argentina for torturing its own citizens, however, ultimately foundered upon the doctrine of sovereign immunity,¹⁸⁵ while it has been held that acts of ‘international terrorism’ are not actionable under the Alien Tort Claims Act.¹⁸⁶ In Kadić v. Karadžić,¹⁸⁷ the US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit held that claims based on official torture and summary executions did not exhaust the list of actions that may be covered by the Alien Tort Claims Act and that allegations of genocide, war crimes and other violations of international humanitarian law would also be covered.¹⁸⁸ However, in Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain,¹⁸⁹ the Supreme Court held that the Alien Tort Claims Act was a jurisdictional statute creating no new causes of action and enacted on the understanding that the common law would provide a cause of action for the modest number of international law violations thought to carry personal liability at the time, being offences against ambassadors, violation of safe conducts, and piracy. The federal courts, it was declared, should not recognise claims under federal common law for violations of any international law norm with less ‘definite content and acceptance among civilized nations’ than these particular offences deemed to exist at the date of the adoption of the Act.¹⁹⁰ Accordingly, both ‘a specificity comparable to the features of the 18th-century paradigms’ and a foundation resting upon ‘a norm of international character accepted by the civilized world’ were required in order to form the basis of a claim under the statute.¹⁹¹

The ambit of the Alien Tort Claims Act was further limited by the Supreme Court in Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Corporation, where the court in examining whether and under what circumstances the courts may recognise a cause of action under the Act for violations of the law of nations occurring within the territory of a sovereign other than the United States, held that the presumption against extraterritoriality applied to claims under the Act, and that nothing in the statute rebutted that presumption.¹⁹²

The relative convergence of practice between Britain and the United States with respect to the assimilation of customary law is not reflected as regards the treatment of international ¹⁸⁵ Siderman v. Republic of Argentina, No. CV 82-1772-RMT (MCx) and International Practitioner’s Notebook, July 1985, p. 1. See also below, chapter 12.

¹⁸⁶ Tel-Oren v. Libyan Arab Republic 517 F.Supp. 542 (1981), aff’d per curiam, 726 F.2d 774 (1984), cert. denied 53 USLW 3612 (1985); 77 ILR, p. 192. See e.g. A. D’Amato, ‘What Does Tel-Oren Tell Lawyers?’, 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 92. See also De Sanchez v. Banco Central de Nicaragua 770 F.2d 1385, 1398 (1985); 88 ILR, pp. 75, 90; and Linder v. Portocarrero 747 F.Supp. 1452; 99 ILR, p. 55.

¹⁸⁷ 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1592.

¹⁸⁸ Note that the US Torture Victim Protection Act 1991, 106 Stat. 73 (1992) (codified at 28 U.S.C. § 1350 (1994)), provides a cause of action for official torture and extrajudicial killing where an individual, under actual or apparent authority or colour of law of any foreign law subjects, engages in such activities. In Mohamad v. Palestinian Authority, the Supreme Court held that the Act only covered natural persons and did not impose liabilities against legal persons or corporations, 566 US (2012), slip opinion 11-88. The Act is not a jurisdictional statute, so that claims of official torture will be pursued under the jurisdiction conferred by the Alien Tort Claims Act or under the general federal question jurisdiction of section 1331: see e.g. Xuncax v. Gramajo 886 F.Supp. 162 (1995); 104 ILR, p. 165. In addition, local remedies must have been exhausted. See e.g. E. Apostolova, ‘The Relationship between the Alien Tort Statute and the Torture Victim Protection Act’, 28 Berkeley Journal of International Law, 2010, p. 640.

¹⁸⁹ 542 US 692, 714 ff. (2004). See also Sarei v. Rio Tinto, Sarei v. Rio Tinto, PLC, 671 F.3d 736, 747 (CA9 2011) (en banc) and Doe v. Exxon Mobil Corp., 654 F.3d 11, 20 (CAD 2011).

¹⁹⁰ Ibid., at 732.

¹⁹¹ Ibid., at 725 and 738. See also Vietnam Association for Victims of Agent Orange v. Dow Chemical Company, US Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, Docket No. 05-1953-cv, 22 February 2008.

¹⁹² 569 US (2013), slip opinion 10-1491.

treaties.¹⁹³ In the United Kingdom, it is the executive branch which negotiates, signs and ratifies international agreements, with the proviso that parliamentary action is required prior to the provisions of the agreement being accepted as part of English law. In the United States, on the other hand, Article VI Section 2 of the Constitution provides that:

all Treaties made or which shall be made with the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land and the Judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or Laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.¹⁹⁴

There is also a difference in the method of approval of treaties, for Article II of the Constitution notes that while the President has the power to make international agreements, he may only ratify them if at least two-thirds of the Senate approve.

There is an exception and this is the institution of the executive agreements. These are usually made by the President on his own authority, but still constitute valid treaties within the framework of international law. As distinct from ordinary treaties, the creation of executive agreements is not expressly covered by the Constitution, but rather implied from its terms and subsequent practice, and they have been extensively used. The Supreme Court, in cases following the 1933 Litvinov Agreement, which established US recognition of the Soviet government and provided for the assignment to the United States of particular debts owing to the USSR, emphasised that such executive agreements possessed the same status and dignity as treaties made by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate under Article II of the Constitution.¹⁹⁵

American doctrines as to the understanding of treaty law are founded upon the distinction between 'self-executing' and 'non-self-executing' treaties.¹⁹⁶ The former are able to operate automatically within the domestic sphere, without the need for any municipal legislation, while the latter require enabling acts before they can function inside the country and bind the American courts. Self-executing treaties apply directly within the United States as part of the supreme law of the land, whereas those conventions deemed not self-executing are obliged to undergo a legislative transformation and, until they do so, they cannot be regarded as legally enforceable against American citizens or institutions.¹⁹⁷

¹⁹³ See e.g. Jackson, 'Status of Treaties', p. 310, and D. Vagts, 'The United States and its Treaties: Observance and Breach', 95 AJIL, 2001, p. 313. See also Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, chapter 2.

¹⁹⁴ See e.g. Ware v. Hylton 3 US (3 Dall.) 199 (1796); Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253 (1829); and US v. Belmont 301 US 324, 331 (1937). See also on treaty powers and the 'reserved powers' of the states, the tenth amendment, Missouri v. Holland 252 US 416 (1920); 1 AD, p. 4 and United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corporation 299 US 304 (1936); 8 AD, p. 48. See also D. Sloss, The Death of Treaty Supremacy, Oxford, 2016.

¹⁹⁵ See e.g. United States v. Pink 315 US 203 (1942); 10 AD, p. 48. See, as regards the President's power to settle claims and create new rules of law applicable to pending legislation, Dames & Moore v. Regan 101 SC 2972 (1981); 72 ILR, p. 270. See also Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, chapter 3.

¹⁹⁶ See e.g. Y. Iwasawa, 'The Doctrine of Self-Executing Treaties in the United States: A Critical Analysis', 26 Va. JIL, 1986, p. 635; J. Paust, 'Self-Executing Treaties', 82 AJIL, 1986, p. 760; T. Buergenthal, 'Self-Executing and Non-Self-Executing Treaties in National and International Law', 235 HR, 1992 IV, p. 303; and C. M. Vázquez, 'The Four Doctrines of Self-Executing Treaties', 89 AJIL, 1995, p. 695.

¹⁹⁷ See e.g. Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253, 311, 7 L.Ed. 415 (1829); United States v. Percheman 32 US (7 Pet.) 51 (1833); United States v. Postal 589 F.2d 862, 875 (5th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 444 US 832; and Linder v. Portocarrero 747 F.Supp. 1452, 1463; 99 ILR, pp. 55, 67–8.

But how does one know when an international agreement falls into one category or the other? This matter has absorbed the courts of the United States for many years, and the distinction appeared until recently to have been made upon the basis of a variety of factors including political content. In other words, where a treaty involves political questions of definition or exposition, then the issue should be left to the legislative organs of the nation, rather than automatic operation.¹⁹⁸ Examples of this would include the acquisition or loss of territory and financial arrangements. The Supreme Court in *Edye v. Robertson*¹⁹⁹ declared that treaties which contain provisions which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country . . . [are] in the same category as other laws of Congress.

This would seem to mean that an international convention would become a law of the land, where its terms determine the rights and duties of private citizens, and contrasts with the position where a political issue is involved and the treaty is thereby treated as non-self-executing.

Of course such generalisations as these are bound to lead to considerable ambiguity and doubt in the case of very many treaties; and the whole matter was examined again in 1952 before the Supreme Court of California in Sei Fujii v. California.²⁰⁰ The plaintiff was a Japanese citizen who had purchased some land in 1948 in California. By legislation enacted in that state, aliens had no right to acquire land. To prevent the property from going to the state, the plaintiff argued that, amongst other things, such legislation was not consistent with the Charter of the United Nations, an international treaty which called for the promotion of human rights without racial distinction.

The issue raised was whether the UN Charter was a self-executing treaty and, by virtue of such, part of the law of the land, which would supersede inconsistent local statutes. The Court declared that, in making a decision as to whether a treaty was self-executing or not, it would have to consult the treaty itself to try to deduce the intentions of the signatories and examine all relevant circumstances. Following Edye's case it would have to see whether the provisions of the treaty laid down rules that were to be enforceable of themselves in the municipal courts.

The Court concluded after a comprehensive survey that the relevant provisions of the UN Charter were not intended to be self-executing. They laid down various principles and objectives of the United Nations Organisation, but 'do not purport to impose legal obligations on the individual member nations or to create rights in private persons'. The Court held that it was obvious that further legislative action by the signatories would be called for to turn the principles of the UN into domestic laws binding upon the individual citizens of states.²⁰¹ Accordingly, they could not be regarded as part of the law of the land and could not operate to deflect the ¹⁹⁸ See Chief Justice Marshall, Foster v. Neilson 27 US (2 Pet.) 253, 314 (1829). See also J. C. Yoo, 'Globalism and the Constitution: Treaties, Non-Self-Execution, and the Original Understanding', 99 Columbia Law Review, 1999, p. 1955, and Vagts, 'US and its Treaties', p. 321. In US v. Postal 589 F.2d 862, 877 (5th Cir. 1979), the court referred inter alia to the purposes of the treaty, the existence of domestic procedures, the availability and feasibility of alternative enforcement methods and the consequences of self- or non-self execution.

¹⁹⁹ 112 US 580 (1884). ²⁰⁰ 38 Cal (2d) 718 (1952). ²⁰¹ Ibid., p. 721.

Californian legislation in question. The case was decided in favour of the plaintiff, but on other grounds altogether.²⁰²

However, in Medellín v. Texas, the US Supreme Court focused heavily upon a textual analysis of the relevant treaty (the UN Charter) rather than upon a wider range of factors and concluded that the Charter (and the Statute of the International Court of Justice and the Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations) were not self-executing and in the absence of incorporation into US law, the international instruments in question would not be given judicial effect.²⁰³ The Court thus rejected the view that there existed a presumption in favour of self-execution, tending rather to the approach that the matter had to be settled on a treaty-by-treaty basis, depending upon the text, structure and ratification history of the particular treaty in question. However, it was noted that there was a presumption that treaties did not confer privately enforceable rights.²⁰⁴

As is the case with the UK system, it is possible for the US legislature to take action which not only takes no account of international law rules but may be positively contrary to them, and in such an instance the legislation would be supreme within the American jurisdiction.

In Diggs v. Schultz,²⁰⁵ for example, the Court had to consider the effect of the Byrd Amendment which legalised the importation into the USA of strategic materials, such as chrome from Rhodesia, a course of action that was expressly forbidden by a United Nations Security Council resolution which in the circumstances was binding. The Court noted that the Byrd Amendment was ‘in blatant disregard of our treaty undertakings’ but concluded that: ‘under our constitutional scheme, Congress can denounce treaties if it sees fit to do so, and there is nothing the other branches of government can do about it.’ Although in municipal terms the Amendment was unchallengeable, the United States was, of course, internationally liable for the breach of an international legal rule.²⁰⁶

However, there is a presumption that Congress will not legislate contrary to the international obligations of the state²⁰⁷ and a principle of interpretation that where an Act and a treaty deal with the same subject, the courts will seek to construe them so as to give effect to both of them without acting contrary to the wording of either. Where the two are inconsistent, ²⁰² See e.g. People of Saipan ex rel. Guerrero v. United States Department of Interior 502 F.2d 90 (1974); 61 ILR, p. 113. See also Camacho v. Rogers 199 F.Supp. 155 (1961) and Diggs v. Dent 14 ILM, 1975, p. 797. Note also O. Schachter, ‘The Charter and the Constitution’, 4 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1951, p. 643. In Medellín v. Texas 128 S.Ct. 1346 (2008), the US Supreme Court held that the decision of the International Court of Justice in the Avena (Mexico v. US) case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12, requiring the US to provide ‘further review and reconsideration’ of the convictions in question, did not constitute directly enforceable federal law as the relevant treaties (the UN Charter, the Statute of the International Court and the Optional Protocol to the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations) were non-self-executing. See further as to the Avena case, below, chapter 12, p. 585 and chapter 18, p. 839, note 331. See also the similar conclusion adopted by the Supreme Court of the Netherlands in Association of Lawyers for Peace and Four Other Organizations v. State of the Netherlands, Nr C02/217HR; LJN: AN8071; NJ 2004/329.

²⁰³ 552 US 491, 508 and 511 (2008). ²⁰⁴ Ibid., 506 n. 3.

²⁰⁵ 470 F.2d 461, 466–7 (1972); 60 ILR, pp. 393, 397. See also Breard v. Greene 523 US 371, 376 (1998) and Havana Club Holding, Inc. v. Galleon SA 974 F.Supp. 302 (SDNY 1997), aff’d 203 F.3d (2d Cir. 2000).

²⁰⁶ This, of course, reflects the general rule. See e.g. G. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1940–4, vol. V, pp. 185–6 and 324–5. See also Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, 1987, para. 115(1)b.

²⁰⁷ See e.g. Marshall CJ, Murray v. Schooner Charming Betsy 6 US (2 Cranch) 64; Weinberger v. Rossi 456 US 25 (1982) and Cook v. United States 288 US 102 (1933). See also R. Steinhardt, ‘The Role of International Law as a Canon of Domestic Statutory Construction’, 43 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1990, p. 1103, and C. A. Bradley, ‘The Charming Betsy Canon and Separation of Powers’, 86 Georgia Law Journal, 1998, p. 479.

the general rule has been posited that the later in time will prevail, provided the treaty is self-executing.²⁰⁸

The question of a possible conflict between treaty obligations and domestic legislation was raised in United States v. Palestine Liberation Organisation.²⁰⁹ The Anti-Terrorism Act of the previous year²¹⁰ provided for the closure of all PLO offices in the United States and this was construed by the Attorney-General to include the PLO mission to the United Nations, an action which would have breached the obligations of the United States under the United Nations Headquarters Agreement. However, the District Court found that it could not be established that the legislation clearly and unequivocally intended that an obligation arising out of the Headquarters Agreement, a valid treaty, was to be violated.²¹¹

The issue of the relationship between international treaties and municipal law came before the US Supreme Court in Breard v. Greene.²¹² The Court noted that 'respectful consideration' should be given to the interpretation of an international treaty by a relevant international court;²¹³ however, 'it has been recognised in international law that absent a clear and express statement to the contrary, the procedural rules of the forum State govern the implementation of the treaty in that State'.²¹⁴ Accordingly, the effect of resort to a domestic procedural rule might result in preventing the provision of an international treaty from being applied in any given case. The Supreme Court also affirmed that international treaties under the Constitution were recognised as the 'supreme law of the land', but so were the provisions of the Constitution. An Act of Congress was 'on full parity' with a treaty, so that a later statute would render an earlier treaty null to the extent of any conflict.²¹⁵

Other Countries

(i) Other Common Law and Related Legal Systems

In other countries where the English common law was adopted, such as the majority of Commonwealth states and, for example, Israel,²¹⁶ it is possible to say that in general the same ²⁰⁸ See the decision of the Supreme Court in Whitney v. Robertson 124 US 190 (1888). The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 63 ff. suggests that an Act of Congress will supersede an earlier rule of international law or a provision in an international agreement 'if the purpose of the act to supersede the earlier rule or provision is clear or if the act and the earlier rule or provision cannot be fairly reconciled'.

²⁰⁹ 695 F.Supp. 1456 (1988). ²¹⁰ 22 USCA, paras. 5201–3.

²¹¹ Ibid. See the Advisory Opinion of the International Court in the Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate case, ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 12; 82 ILR, p. 225. See also DUSPIL, 1981–8, part I, pp. 8 ff.

²¹² 140 L.Ed. 2d 529 (1998); 118 ILR, p. 22. See also S. Breyer, The Court and the World: American Law and the New Global Realities, New York, 2015, chapter 9.

²¹³ The issue concerned the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, and the international court in question was the International Court of Justice in Paraguay v. USA, ICJ Reports, 1998, p. 248; 118 ILR, p. 1.

²¹⁴ 140 L.Ed.2d 529, 537 (1998); 118 ILR, p. 22.

²¹⁵ Ibid. See above, note 202. As to the interpretation of treaties, the US Supreme Court in Lozano v. Montoya Alvarez 572 US (2014), pp. 8–15, held, citing United States v. Choctaw Nation 179 US 494, 535 (1900), that the Court's 'duty [i]s to ascertain the intent of the parties' by looking to the document's text and context. See also Abbott v. Abbott 560 US 1 (2010). The courts will accord 'great weight' to the executive's interpretation of treaties, ibid., 15 and Medellin v. Texas 552 US 491, 513 (2008). See also S. Breyer, The Court and the World, chapter 7.

²¹⁶ See the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5; T. Einhorn, 'Israel', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 288; R. Lapidoth, Les Rapports entre le Droit International Public et le Droit Interne en Israel, Paris, 1959, and Lapidoth, 'International Law Within the Israel Legal System', 24 Israel Law Review, 1990, p. 251. See also the Affo case before the Israeli Supreme Court, 29 ILM, 1990, pp. 139, 156–7; 83 ILR, p. 121; and The Public Committee against principles apply. Customary law is regarded on the whole as part of the law of the land.²¹⁷ Municipal laws are presumed not to be inconsistent with rules of international law, but in cases of conflict the former have precedence.

The Canadian Supreme Court in the Reference Re Secession of Quebec judgment²¹⁸ noted that it had been necessary for the Court in a number of cases to look to international law to determine the rights or obligations of some actor within the Canadian legal system.²¹⁹ As far as treaties are concerned, Lord Atkin expressed the general position in Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario,²²⁰ in a case dealing with the respective legislative competences of the Dominion Parliament and the provincial legislatures. He noted that within the then British Empire it was well enshrined that the making of a treaty was an executive act, while the performance of its obligations, if they involved alteration of the existing domestic law, required legislative action. 'The question', remarked Lord Atkin, is not how is the obligation formed, that is the function of the executive, but how is the obligation to be performed, and that depends upon the authority of the competent legislature or legislatures.²²¹

The doctrine that customary international law forms part of the domestic law of Canada has been reaffirmed in a number of cases.²²² This has also been accepted in New Zealand²²³ and in Australia.²²⁴ In Horgan v. An Taoiseach, it was affirmed that 'established principles of customary Torture in Israel et al. v. The Government of Israel et al., HCJ 769/02. See also A & B v. State of Israel, Israeli Supreme Court, 11 June 2008; and Y. Ronen, 'The Use of International Jurisprudence in Domestic Court: The Israeli Experience', in International Law and Domestic Politics (ed. M. Wind), forthcoming, http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=2599016.

²¹⁷ But see as to doubts concerning the application of the automatic incorporation of customary international law into Australia, I. Shearer, 'The Internationalisation of Australian Law', 17 Sydney Law Review, 1995, pp. 121, 124. See also G. Triggs, 'Customary International Law and Australian Law', in The Emergence of Australian Law (ed. M. P. Ellinghaus, A. J. Bradbrook and A. J. Duggan), 1989, p. 376. Note that Brennan J in Mabo v. Queensland (1992) 175 CLR 1, 41–2, stated that 'international law is a legitimate and important influence on the development of the common law'.

²¹⁸ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 399; 115 ILR, p. 536. See also G. La Forest, 'The Expanding Role of the Supreme Court of Canada in International Law Issues', 34 Canadian YIL, 1996, p. 89; and S. Beaulac and J. H. Currie, 'Canada', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 116.

²¹⁹ See also Reference re Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences [1943] SCR 208; Reference re Ownership of Offshore Mineral Rights of British Columbia [1967] SCR 792; 43 ILR, p. 93; and Reference re Newfoundland Continental Shelf [1984] 1 SCR 86; 86 ILR, p. 593.

²²⁰ [1937] AC 326; 8 AD, p. 41.

²²¹ Ibid., pp. 347–8; 8 AD, pp. 43–4. See also Pfizer Inc. v. Canada [1999] 4 CF 441 and R v. Council of Canadians 2003 CanLII 28426, paras. 35–7 (2005), affirmed 2006 CanLII 400222, 217 OAC 316.

²²² See e.g. Reference re Exemption of US Forces from Canadian Criminal Law [1943] 4 DLR 11, 41 and Reference re Powers to Levy Rates on Foreign Legations and High Commissioners' Residences [1943] SCR 208. See also R v. Munyaneza [2009] QJ No. 4913; ILDC 1339 (CA 2009).

²²³ See W. J. Hopkins, 'New Zealand', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 429; and e.g. Marine Steel Ltd v. Government of the Marshall Islands [1981] 2 NZLR 1; 64 ILR, p. 539; and Governor of Pitcairn and Associated Islands v. Sutton [1995] 1 NZLR 426; 104 ILR, p. 508. The courts have also referred to a presumption of statutory interpretation that, so far as wording allows, legislation should be read in a way that is consistent with New Zealand's obligations: see e.g. Rajan v. Minister of Immigration [1996] 3 NZLR 543, 551; and Wellington District Legal Services v. Tangiora [1998] 1 NZLR 129, 137; 115 ILR, pp. 655, 663. See, as to the use of treaties in statutory interpretation, Attorney-General v. Zaoui [2005] NZSC 38, [2006] 1 NZLR 289, (2005) 7 HRNZ 860. See also Nguyen Tuong Van v. Public Prosecutor [2004] SGCA 47; 134 ILR, p. 660 with regard to Singapore.

²²⁴ See e.g. Potter v. BHP Co. Ltd (1906) 3 CLR 479, 495, 506–7 and 510; Wright v. Cantrell (1943) 44 SR (NSW) 45; Polites v. Commonwealth (1945) 70 CLR 60; and Chow Hung Ching v. R (1948) 77 CLR 449. These cases are unclear as to international law may be incorporated into Irish domestic law providing that they are not contrary to the provisions of the Constitution, statute law or common law'.²²⁵ The relationship between treaties and domestic law was examined by the High Court of Australia in Minister of State for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs v. Teoh.²²⁶ The Court upheld the traditional doctrine to the effect that the provisions of an international treaty to which Australia is a party do not form part of Australian law, and do not give rise to rights, unless those provisions have been validly incorporated into municipal law by statute.²²⁷ It was noted that this was because of the constitutional separation of functions whereby the executive made and ratified treaties, while the legislature made and altered laws.²²⁸ The majority of the Court, however, went on to hold that the fact that a treaty had not been incorporated did not mean that its ratification by the executive held no significance for Australian law. Where a statute or subordinate legislation was ambiguous, the courts should favour that construction which accorded with Australia's obligations under the particular treaty,²²⁹ while a statute generally had to be interpreted as far as its language permitted so that it was in conformity and not in conflict with the established rules of international law.²³⁰ Indeed, the Court felt that a narrow conception of ambiguity in this context should be rejected.²³¹ Referring to Ex Parte Brind,²³² the Court stated that this principle was no more than a canon of construction and did not import the terms of the treaty into municipal law.²³³ Moving beyond this approach, which is generally consistent with common law doctrines, the majority of the Court took the view that ratification of a convention itself would constitute an adequate foundation for a legitimate expectation (unless there were statutory or executive indications to the contrary) that administrative decision-makers would act in conformity with the unincorporated but ratified convention.²³⁴ This particular proposition is controversial in whether the incorporationist or transformation approaches have been adopted as the appropriate theoretical basis. As to the view that international law is the 'source' of domestic law, see Dixon J in Chow Hung Ching and Merkel J in Nulyarimma v. Thompson (1999) 165 ALR 621, 653–5; 120 ILR, p. 353. See also Public International Law: An Australian Perspective (ed. S. Blay, R. Piotrowicz and B. M. Tsamenyi), Oxford, 1997, chapter 5; S. Reye, 'The Place of Customary International Law in Australian Law: Unfinished Business', 21 Australian YIL, 2001, p. 39; and A. de Jonge, 'Australia', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 23.

²²⁵ 132 ILR, pp. 407, 442.

²²⁶ (1995) 128 ALR 353; 104 ILR, p. 466. See also Blay et al., Public International Law: An Australian Perspective.

²²⁷ See e.g. judgment by Mason CJ and Deane J, (1995) 128 ALR 353, 361. See also Dietrich v. The Queen (1992) 177 CLR 292, 305 and Coe v. Commonwealth of Australia (1993) 118 ALR 193, 200–1; 118 ILR, p. 322. Reaffirmed by the High Court in Kruger v. Commonwealth of Australia (1997) 146 ALR 126, 161; 118 ILR, p. 371. See e.g. Kenneth Good v. Attorney-General, Court of Appeal Civil Appeal No. 028 of 2005 for the similar situation in Botswana. In Dube v. American Embassy ILDC 1347 (BW 2006), the court in Botswana noted that the rules of customary international law became part of the law of the land unless they were in conflict with statutes or common law. See also Nallararatnam Singarasa v. Attorney General, S.C. Spl (LA) No. 182/99 (2006) with regard to Sri Lanka.

²²⁸ (1995) 128 ALR 353, 362 and see e.g. Simsek v. Macphree (1982) 148 CLR 636, 641–2.

²²⁹ Judgment of Mason CJ and Deane J. See also Chung Kheng Lin v. Minister for Immigration (1992) 176 CLR 1, 38. In Kruger v. Commonwealth of Australia, Dawson J noted that such a construction was not required where the obligations arise only under a treaty and the legislation in question was enacted before the treaty, (1997) 146 ALR 126, 161; 118 ILR, p. 371.

²³⁰ See also Kartinyeri v. The Commonwealth (1998) 195 CLR 337 at 384 and Ahmed Ali Al-Kateb v. Goodwin [2004] HCA 37. In the latter case, McHugh J criticised the rule, but concluded that it was too well established to be repealed by judicial decision: ibid. at para. 65.

²³¹ (1995) 128 ALR 353, 361. See also Polites v. The Commonwealth (1945) 70 CLR 60, 68–9, 77, 80–1.

²³² [1991] 1 AC 696 at 748; 85 ILR, p. 29. ²³³ (1995) 128 ALR 353, 362.

²³⁴ Ibid., 365. See also the judgment of Toohey J, ibid. at 371–2, and the judgment of Gaudron J, ibid. at 375–6. Cf. the judgment of McHugh J, ibid. at 385–7.

legal doctrine, but is an interesting example of the fact that internal decision-makers may not always be expected to be immune from the influence of obligations undertaken by the state.²³⁵

There are further signs of an increasingly flexible approach. For example, in Hosking & Hosking v. Runtig and Pacific Magazines NZ Ltd,²³⁶ the New Zealand Court of Appeal referred to the 'increasing recognition of the need to develop the common law consistently with international treaties to which New Zealand is a party. That is an international trend. The historical approach to the State's international obligations as having no part in the domestic law unless incorporated by statute is now recognised as too rigid.' Further, the Canadian Supreme Court, in noting that genocide was a crime in both customary international law and treaty law, declared that international law was therefore called upon to play a crucial role as an aid in interpreting domestic law, particularly as regards the elements of the crime of incitement to genocide, and emphasised the importance of interpreting domestic law in a manner that accorded with the principles of customary international law and with Canada's treaty obligations.²³⁷ This, however, would go further than most common law states would accept.

Although the basic approach adopted by the majority of common law states is clear, complications have arisen where the country in question has a written constitution, whether or not specific reference is made therein to the treatment of international agreements. The use of international law in interpreting the Constitution has occasioned much debate in Australia.²³⁸ In Ahmed Ali Al-Kateb v. Godwin, for example, two judges of the High Court of Australia came to radically different conclusions. One judge regarded the view that the Constitution should be read consistently with the rules of international law as 'heretical',²³⁹ while another declared that 'opinions that seek to cut off contemporary Australian law (including constitutional law) from the ²³⁵ Note that after the decision in Teoh, the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Attorney-General issued a Joint Statement (10 May 1995) denying the existence of any such legitimate expectation upon the ratification of a treaty: see M. Allars, 'One Small Step for Legal Doctrine, One Giant Leap Towards Integrity in Government: Teoh's Case and the Internationalisation of Administrative Law', 17 Sydney Law Review, 1995, pp. 204, 237–41. The Government also introduced the Administrative Decisions (Effect of International Instruments) Bill 1995 into the Parliament with the specific purpose of denying that treaties or conventions give rise to a legitimate expectation of how a decision-maker will make a decision in an area affected by such international instruments. See also Trick or Treaty? Commonwealth Power to Make and Implement Treaties, a Report by the Senate Legal and Constitutional References Committee, November 1995. See now also Minister for Immigration and Multicultural Affairs; Ex Parte Lam [2003] HCA 6, which is critical of Teoh.

²³⁶ [2004] NZCA 34, para. 6.

²³⁷ Mugesera v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [2005] 2 SCR 100, para. 82; 132 ILR, pp. 295–6. See also Baker v. Canada (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) [1999] 2 SCR 817, paras. 69–71.

²³⁸ See e.g. D. Hovell and G. Williams, 'A Tale of Two Systems: The Use of International Law in Constitutional Interpretation in Australia and South Africa', 29 Melbourne University Law Review, 2005, p. 95; H. Charlesworth, M. Chiam, D. Hovell and G. Williams, 'Deep Anxieties: Australia and the International Legal Order', 25 Sydney Law Review, 2003, pp. 423, 446–63; International Law in Australia (ed. K. W. Ryan), Sydney, 1984; Blay et al., Public International Law: An Australian Perspective; A. Byrnes and H. Charlesworth, 'Federalism and the International Legal Order: Recent Developments in Australia', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 622; and Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen, High Court of Australia 39 ALR 417 (11 May 1982); 68 ILR, p. 181; Tabag v. Minister for Immigration and Ethnic Affairs, Federal Court of Australia, 45 ALR 705 (23 December 1982); Commonwealth of Australia v. State of Tasmania, High Court of Australia, 46 ALR 625 (1 July 1983); 68 ILR, p. 266; Polyukhovich v. Commonwealth (1991) 172 CLR 501; and Minister for Foreign Affairs v. Magno (1992) 37 FCR 298.

²³⁹ [2004] HCA 37, para. 63 (McHugh J).

persuasive force of international law are doomed to fail'.²⁴⁰ This debate reflects differing approaches to constitutional interpretation.²⁴¹

The Indian Constitution refers only in the vaguest of terms to the provisions of international law,²⁴² whereas by contrast the Irish Constitution clearly states that the country will not be bound by any treaty involving a charge upon public funds unless the terms of the agreement have been approved by the Dáil.²⁴³ Under article 169(3) of the Cyprus Constitution, treaties concluded in accordance with that provision have, as from publication in the Official Gazette of the Republic, 'superior force to any municipal law on condition that such treaties, conventions and agreements are applied by the other party thereto'.²⁴⁴ In such cases where there is a written constitution, serious questions of constitutional law may be involved, and one would have to consider the situation as it arises and within its own political context.²⁴⁵ But in general common law states tend to adopt the British approach.

(ii) Civil Law Systems

The practice of those states which possess the civil law system, based originally on Roman law, manifests certain differences.²⁴⁶ The Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany,²⁴⁷ for example, specifically states in article 25 that 'the general rules of public international law are an integral part of federal law. They shall take precedence over the laws and shall directly create rights and duties for the inhabitants of the federal territory.'²⁴⁸ This provision, which not only treats international law as part of municipal law but regards it as superior to municipal legislation, has been the subject of a great deal of controversy as writers and lawyers have tried to establish whether international legal rules would invalidate any inconsistent municipal legislation and, indeed, whether international rules could override the constitution. Similarly, the phrase 'general rules of public international law' has led to problems over interpretation as it may refer to all aspects of international law, including ²⁴⁰ Ibid., para. 190 (Kirby J).

²⁴¹ Simpson and Williams have concluded that '[j]udges will approach extrinsic materials, such as international law, differently depending on whether they favour rigidly applying the Constitution as originally drafted and intended or, at the other extreme, updating the instrument for societal change consistent with a vision of the Constitution as a "living force"': A. Simpson and G. Williams, 'International Law and Constitutional Interpretation', 11 Public Law Review, 2000, pp. 205, 226.

²⁴² See e.g. D. D. Basu, Commentaries on the Constitution of India, New Delhi, 1962, vol. II, and Constitutions of the World (ed. R. Peaslee), 3rd edn, New York, 1968, vol. II, p. 308. See also K. Thakore, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: India', in Leigh and Blakeslee, National Treaty Law and Practice, p. 79.

²⁴³ Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 463 (article 29(5)2). Article 29 also states that Ireland accepts the generally recognised principles of international law as its rule of conduct in its relations with other states. See e.g. Re O'Laighléis 24 ILR, p. 420 and Re Woods 53 ILR, p. 552. See also Crotty v. An Taoiseach 93 ILR, p. 480; McGimpsey v. Ireland [1988] IR 567; and Kavanagh v. Governor of Mountjoy Prison [2002] 3 IR 97, 125–6; 132 ILR, pp. 394, 401–2. Note also the decision of the Irish High Court in Horgan v. An Taoiseach on 28 April 2003 reaffirming that article 29 does not confer individual rights, 132 ILR, pp. 407, 446.

²⁴⁴ See e.g. Malachtou v. Armefti and Armefti 88 ILR, p. 199.

²⁴⁵ See e.g. International Law Chiefly as Interpreted and Applied in Canada (ed. H. Kindred), 6th edn, Toronto, 2000, chapter 4; Re Newfoundland Continental Shelf [1984] 1 SCR 86; and C. Okeke, The Theory and Practice of International Law in Nigeria, London, 1986.

²⁴⁶ See e.g. L. Wildhaber and S. Breitenmoser, 'The Relationship Between Customary International Law and Municipal Law in Western European Countries', 48 ZaöRV, 1988, p. 163; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 63 ff.; and Henkin et al., International Law: Cases and Materials, pp. 154 ff.

²⁴⁷ See H. D. Treviranus and H. Beemelmans, 'National Treaty Law and Practice: Federal Republic of Germany', in Leigh and Blakeslee, National Treaty Law and Practice, p. 43; and H.-P. Folz, 'Germany', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 240.

²⁴⁸ See e.g. the Parking Privileges for Diplomats case, 70 ILR, p. 396.

customary and treaty rules, or merely general principles common to all, or perhaps only certain nations.²⁴⁹ German courts will seek to interpret domestic law consistently with international law.²⁵⁰

As far as treaties are concerned, the German federal courts will regard these as superior to domestic legislation, though they will not be allowed to operate so as to affect the constitution. Article 59 of the Basic Law declares that treaties which regulate the political relations of the federation or relate to matters of federal legislation shall require the consent or participation, in the form of a federal law, of the bodies competent in any specific case for such federal legislation. Thereafter such treaties will be treated as incorporated into German law, but with the status (no higher) of a federal law. Such laws may indeed be challenged before the German courts by means of a constitutional complaint if the treaty in question contains provisions directly encroaching upon the legal sphere of the individual.²⁵¹ In its decision of 15 December 2015, the German Constitutional Court (second Senate) confirmed that by a process of ‘treaty override’ the German Parliament, in the light of the constitutional principle of democracy, was able to make or amend a law, even if this violated an international treaty ratified by a previous Parliament.²⁵²

Article 91(1) of the Netherlands Constitution 1983 requires the prior approval of Parliament before treaties, or their denunciation, become binding, while article 91(3) provides that any provisions of a treaty that conflict with the Constitution or which lead to conflicts with it may be approved by the Chambers of the Parliament, provided that at least two-thirds of the votes cast are in favour. Article 93 states that provisions of treaties and of decisions by international organisations which may be binding by virtue of their contents are to become binding after they have been published, while article 94 provides that statutory regulations in force within the kingdom shall not be applicable if such application is in conflict with provisions of treaties that are binding on all persons or with resolutions by international institutions.²⁵³ Customary international law is not referred to in the Constitution. It is deemed to apply internally, although it seems that ²⁴⁹ See e.g. German Consular Notification case (Individual Constitutional Complaint Procedure), BVerfG, 2 BvR 2115/01, 19 September 2006; and Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint), BVerfG, 2 BvR 1481/04 of 14 October 2004, 111 Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), 307–32, [2004] Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 3407–3412. See also D. P. O’Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, pp. 71–6, and sources therein cited. See also generally A. Drzemczewski, The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law, Oxford, 1983; and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 361.

²⁵⁰ See H.-P. Folz, ‘Germany’, in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, pp. 240, 245–6.

²⁵¹ See the Unification Treaty Constitutionality case, 94 ILR, pp. 2, 54. See also the East Treaties Constitutionality case, 73 ILR, p. 691 and the Görgülü case (Individual Constitutional Complaint), BVerfG, 2 BvR 1481/04 of 14 October 2004, 111 Entscheidungen des Bundesverfassungsgerichts (BVerfGE), 307–32, [2004] Neue Juristische Wochenschrift (NJW) 3407–12.

²⁵² 2BvL 1/12, see A. Peters, ‘New German Constitutional Court Decision on “Treaty Override”: Trierplianism Continued’, EJIL: Talk!, <http://www.ejiltalk.org/new-german-constitutional-court-decision-on-treaty-override-trieplianism-continued-2/#more-14105>.

²⁵³ See e.g. E. A. Alkema, ‘Netherlands’, in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 407 and ‘Fundamental Human Rights and the Legal Order of the Netherlands’, in International Law in the Netherlands (ed. H. Van Panhuys et al.), Dordrecht, 1980, vol. III, p. 109; Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 652; Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 69; and H. Schermers, The Effect of Treaties in Domestic Law (ed. F. Jacobs and S. Roberts), Leiden, 1987, p. 109. See also e.g. Nordstern Allgemeine Versicherungs AG v. Vereinigte Stinees Rheinreedereien 74 ILR, p. 2 and Public Prosecutor v. JO 74 ILR, p. 130. Note also J. Klabbers, ‘The New Dutch Law on the Approval of Treaties’, 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 629.

statute will prevail in cases of conflict.²⁵⁴ It is for the courts to establish whether the provisions of a treaty or decision by an international organisation are binding on all persons within the meaning of articles 93 and 94 of the Constitution.²⁵⁵

In a provision contained in other constitutions, article 10 of the Italian Constitution of 1947 stipulates that the Italian legal order 'shall conform with the generally recognised rules of international law'. This is interpreted to indicate that international customary law will override inconsistent ordinary national legislation.²⁵⁶ In Judgment No. 238-2014, the Italian Constitutional Court held that international customary law obligations on state immunity from jurisdiction could be applied automatically within the Italian legal order, but only as long as they were in conformity with the fundamental rights contained in the Constitution.²⁵⁷

Article 8(1) of the Portuguese Constitution provides that the rules and principles of general or customary international law are an integral part of Portuguese law,²⁵⁸ while under article 87 of Poland's Constitution of 1997, a ratified international treaty, equal to a statute, is one of the sources of law.²⁵⁹ The Supreme Court of Belgium has taken the view that directly effective treaty provisions have superiority over the Constitution,²⁶⁰ as well as over a conflicting legislative act.²⁶¹

The French Constitution of 1958 declares that treaties duly ratified and published shall operate as laws within the domestic system.²⁶² However, the Constitution provides that, although in principle it is the President of the Republic who negotiates and ratifies ordinary treaties under Article 52, with regard to important treaties such as peace treaties, commercial treaties which entail some form of financial outlay, treaties relating to international organisations, treaties modifying legislation, treaties involving the cession, exchange or acquiring of territory and treaties affecting personal status, ratification must take place by Act of Parliament, thus effectively approximating this to the common law dualist approach

²⁵⁴ See e.g. H. F. van Panhuys, 'The Netherlands Constitution and International Law: A Decade of Experience', 58 AJIL, 1964, pp. 88–108. See also Handelskwekerij GJ Bier BV v. Mines de Potasse d'Alsace SA 11 Netherlands YIL, 1980, p. 326.

²⁵⁵ See Reinier van Arkel Foundation and Others v. Minister for Transport, Public Works and Water Management, Case Nr 200401178/1; LJN: AR2181; AB 2005/12.

²⁵⁶ See G. Cataldi, 'Italy', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 328; and Cassese, International Law, p. 225, note 21. See also the decision of the Italian Court of Cassation in Canada v. Cargnello 114 ILR, p. 559, and, for a similar view in Latvia, Judgment of the Constitutional Court of the Republic of Latvia on a Request for Constitutional Review, No. 2004–01–06 of 7 July 2004, Latvian Herald, 9 July 2004, No. 108, 3056.

²⁵⁷ 54 ILM, 2015, p. 471. The Court found that there was an inconsistency between the customary rule on state immunity as defined by the International Court of Justice in the Jurisdictional Immunities (Germany v. Italy) case, ICJ Reports, 2012, p. 99 and articles 2 and 24 of the Italian Constitution.

²⁵⁸ See F. F. de Almeida, 'Portugal', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 500 and e.g. the decision of the Supreme Court of Portugal in the Brazilian Embassy Employee case, May 1984, 116 ILR, p. 625.

²⁵⁹ See Resolution of the Supreme Court of 19 February 2003, I KZP 47/02.

²⁶⁰ B.M., Cass. 16 November 2004, nr P.04.0644.N, Pas. 2004, I, 1795, RCJB 2007, 36, RW 2005–06, 387, CDPK 2005, 610, RABG 2005, 504, T.Strafr. 2005, 285. See also Gruyeyz and Rolland v. Municipality of Sint-Genesius-Rode, Court of Appeal of Brussels, 28 January 2003, AR nr 2002/KR/412.

²⁶¹ Franco-Suisse Le Ski (Hof van Cassatie/Cour de Cassation), 21 May 1971, Pas. 1971, I, 886.

²⁶² See Title VI of the Constitution. See also e.g. E. Decaux, 'France', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 207; Daillier et al., Droit International Public, pp. 251 ff.; P. M. Dupuy, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, pp. 422 ff.; D. Alland, 'Jamais, Parfois, Toujours. Réflexions sur la Compétence de la Cour de Cassation en Matière d'Interprétation des Conventions Internationales', Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1996, p. 599; V. Kronenberger, 'A New Approach to the Interpretation of the French Constitution in Respect to International Conventions: From Hierarchy of Norms to Conflict of Competence', NILR, 2000, p. 323.

(Article 53). Once the relevant legislation has been passed, the agreement is promulgated and becomes binding upon the courts. Article 55 of the Constitution provides that duly ratified or approved treaties or agreements shall upon publication override domestic laws, subject only to the application of the treaty or agreement by the other party or parties to the treaty.²⁶³ It is also now accepted that the French courts may declare a statute inapplicable for conflicting with an earlier treaty.²⁶⁴ However, the Cour de Cassation has held that the supremacy of international agreements in the domestic order does not extend to constitutional provisions.²⁶⁵

In 1993, South Africa adopted a new (interim) constitution.²⁶⁶ Whereas the previous constitutions of 1910, 1961 and 1983 had been silent on the question of international law, the 1993 Constitution contained several relevant provisions. Section 231(4) states that 'the rules of customary international law binding on the Republic, shall, unless inconsistent with this Constitution or an Act of Parliament, form part of the law of the Republic'. This formulation confirms essentially the common law position and would also suggest that the principle of stare decisis is not applicable to customary international law. As far as treaties are concerned, the previous position whereby an Act of Parliament was required in order to incorporate an international agreement has been modified. While the negotiation and signature of treaties is a function of the President (section 82(1)i), ratification is now a function of the Parliament (section 231(2)).²⁶⁷ Section 231(3) provides that 'such international agreement shall be binding on the Republic and shall form part of the law of the Republic, provided Parliament expressly so provides and such agreement is not inconsistent with this constitution'. Thus South Africa has moved from the British system to a position akin to the civil law tradition. It should also be noted that this interim constitution expressly provides that the National Defence Force shall 'not breach international customary law binding on the Republic relating to aggression', while in armed conflict, it would 'comply with its obligations under international customary law and treaties binding on the Republic' (section 227(2)).²⁶⁸

²⁶³ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 65–8; Rousseau, Droit International Public; and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, p. 312. See also SA Rothmans International France and SA Philip Morris France 93 ILR, p. 308.

²⁶⁴ See the Cafés Jacques Vabre case, 16 Common Market Law Review, 1975, p. 336; and In re Nicolo 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 765; 93 ILR, p. 286. Under article 54 of the Constitution, the Constitutional Council may declare a treaty to be contrary to the Constitution, so that the Constitution must first be amended before the treaty may be ratified or approved. See e.g. Re Treaty on European Union 93 ILR, p. 337. See also Ligue Internationale Contre le Racisme et l'Antisémitisme, AFDI, 1993, p. 963 and AFDI, 1994, pp. 963 ff.

²⁶⁵ See Pauline Fraisse, 2 June 2000, Bulletin de l'Assemblée Plénière, No. 4, p. 7 and Levacher, RFDA, 2000, p. 79. The position with regard to customary law is unclear: see e.g. Aquarone, RGDIP, 1997–4, pp. 1053–4; Barbie, Cass. Crim., 6 October 1983, Bull., p. 610; and Kadahfi, RGDIP, 2001–2, pp. 474–6. See also Decaux, 'France', pp. 235 ff. with regard to divergent positions taken by the Conseil d'Etat and the Conseil Constitutionnel.

²⁶⁶ See 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1043. This interim constitution came into force on 27 April 1994 and was intended to remain in force for five years to be replaced by a constitution adopted by a Constitutional Assembly consisting of the National Assembly and Senate of Parliament: see below. See J. Dugard, International Law: A South African Perspective, 4th edn, Kenwyn, 2011, and Hovell and Williams, 'A Tale of Two Systems', pp. 113 ff. See also E. de Wet, 'South Africa', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 567; and D. Tladi, 'Interpretation of Treaties in an International Law-Friendly Framework: The Case of South Africa', in The Interpretation of International Law by Domestic Courts, p. 135.

²⁶⁷ See Dugard, International Law. Note that this change means that treaties entered into before the Constitution came into force do not form part of municipal law unless expressly incorporated by legislation, while those treaties that post-date the new Constitution may.

²⁶⁸ Note that article 144 of the Namibian Constitution provides that 'unless otherwise provided by this Constitution or Act of Parliament, the general rules of public international law and international agreements binding upon Namibia

These provisions were considered and refined by the Constitutional Assembly, which on 8 May 1996 adopted a new constitution.²⁶⁹ Section 231(1) of this constitution provides that the negotiating and signing of all international agreements is the responsibility of the national executive, while such an agreement would only bind the Republic after approval by resolution in both the National Assembly and the National Council of Provinces.²⁷⁰ Any international agreement becomes domestic law when enacted into law by national legislation, although a self-executing provision of an agreement that has been approved by Parliament is law in the Republic unless it is inconsistent with the Constitution or an Act of Parliament.²⁷¹ Section 232 provides that customary international law is law in the Republic unless it is inconsistent with the Constitution or an Act of Parliament, while section 233 stipulates that when interpreting any legislation, every court must prefer any reasonable interpretation of the legislation which is consistent with international law over any alternative interpretation that is inconsistent with international law. It is also to be particularly noted that section 200(2) of the Constitution states that the primary object of the defence force is to defend and protect the Republic, its territorial integrity and its people, 'in accordance with the Constitution and the principles of international law regulating the use of force'.²⁷²

The Russian Federation adopted a new constitution in 1993.²⁷³ Under article 86, the President negotiates and signs treaties and signs the ratification documents, while under article 106 the Federal Council (the upper chamber of the federal parliament) must consider those federal laws adopted by the State Duma (the lower chamber) that concern the ratification and denunciation of international agreements. The Constitutional Court may review the constitutionality of treaties not yet in force (article 125(2)) and treaties that conflict with the Constitution are not to be given effect (article 125(6)). Article 15(4) of the new constitution provides that 'the generally recognised principles and norms of international law and the international treaties of the Russian Federation shall constitute part of its legal system. If an international treaty of the Russian Federation under this Constitution shall form part of the law of Namibia': see B. Erasmus, 'The Namibian Constitution and the Application of International Law', 15 South African Yearbook of International Law, 1989–90, p. 81.

²⁶⁹ See 36 ILM, 1997, p. 744.

²⁷⁰ Section 231(2). This is unless either such an agreement is of a 'technical, administrative or executive nature' or it is one not requiring ratification (or accession), in which case tabling in the Assembly and the Council within a reasonable time is required: section 231(3).

²⁷¹ Section 231(4). See also Democratic Alliance v. Minister of International Relations and Cooperation and Others, Judgment of 22 February 2017, High Court of South Africa, where it was held that prior parliamentary approval was necessary before South Africa could withdraw from the Rome Statute establishing the International Criminal Court. The South African Constitution contained no explicit provision on withdrawal from treaties, but since section 231(2) of the Constitution required Parliamentary approval for treaties subject to ratification, the Court found that it could be inferred that this provision required the consent of Parliament to withdraw from such treaties. In these circumstances the Government's notice of withdrawal was unconstitutional and invalid. See also Miller v. Secretary of State for Exiting the European Union [2017] UKSC 5, above, footnote 129.

²⁷² Note that O'Regan J stated in Kaunda v. President of the Republic of South Africa that 'our Constitution recognises and asserts that, after decades of isolation, South Africa is now a member of the community of nations, and a bearer of obligations and responsibilities in terms of international law': CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, para. 222.

²⁷³ See G. M. Danilenko, 'The New Russian Constitution and International Law', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 451 and Danilenko, 'Implementation of International Law in CIS States: Theory and Practice', 10 EJIL, 1999, p. 51; V. S. Vereshchetin, 'New Constitutions and the Old Problem of the Relationship between International Law and National Law', 7 EJIL, 1996, p. 29; and S. Y. Marochkin, 'International Law in the Courts of the Russian Federation: Practice of Application', 6 Chinese JIL, 2007, p. 329. See also Y. Tikhomirov, 'Russia', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 517; and L. Mälksoo, Russian Approaches to International Law, Oxford, 2015, chapter 3(9). See, as regards the practice of the Soviet Union, K. Grzybowski, Soviet Public International Law, Leiden, 1970, pp. 30–2.

establishes other rules than those stipulated by the law, the rules of the international treaty shall apply.' Thus both treaty law and customary law²⁷⁴ are incorporated into Russian law, while treaty rules have a higher status than domestic laws.²⁷⁵ The Constitutional Court takes the view that customary international law and international treaties ratified by Russia are norms incorporated into Russian law.²⁷⁶

Under article 73(3) of the Japanese Constitution of 1946,²⁷⁷ the Cabinet has authority to conclude treaties with the prior or subsequent approval of the Diet, although executive agreements may be entered into without such approval, usually by simple exchange of notes. Promulgation of a treaty takes place by publication in the Official Gazette under the name of the Emperor once the Diet has approved and the Cabinet ratified the agreement (article 7). Article 98(2) provides that 'treaties concluded by Japan and established laws of nations shall be faithfully observed' and this provision is taken as incorporating international law, both relevant treaty and customary law, into Japan's legal system.²⁷⁸ Japan has also experienced some difficulty²⁷⁹ in the context of the relative definition of self-governing and non-self-governing treaties.²⁸⁰

(iii) Conclusion

This survey of the attitudes adopted by various countries of the common law and civil law traditions leads to a few concluding remarks. The first of these is that a strict adherence to either the monist or the dualist position will not suffice. Most countries accept the operation of customary rules within their own jurisdictions, providing there is no conflict with existing laws, and some will allow international law to prevail over municipal provisions in certain circumstances. One can regard this as a significant element in extending the principles and protection of international law, whether or not it is held that the particular provision permitting this, whether by constitutional enactment or by case-law, illustrates the superiority of municipal law in so acting. In noting this, it must be emphasised that an increasing number of states now subject the incorporation of customary international law to the supremacy of constitutional ²⁷⁴ See e.g. Re Khordodovskiy, 133 ILR, p. 365 (2006).

²⁷⁵ See also article 5 of the Russian Federal Law on International Treaties adopted on 16 June 1995, 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1370. This repeats article 15(4) of the Constitution and also provides that 'the provisions of officially published international treaties of the Russian Federation which do not require the publication of intra-state acts for application shall operate in the Russian Federation directly. Respective legal acts shall be adopted in order to effectuate other provisions of international treaties of the Russian Federation.' See further W. E. Butler, The Law of Treaties in Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States, Cambridge, 2002, who notes (at p. 36) that the change brought about by article 15(4) 'is among the most momentous changes of the twentieth century in the development of Russian Law'.

²⁷⁶ Butler, Law of Treaties in Russia, p. 37. See also generally, Constitutional Reform and International Law in Central and Eastern Europe (ed. R. Müllerson, M. Fitzmaurice and M. Andenas), The Hague, 1998; T. Schweisfurth and R. Alleweldt, 'The Position of International Law in the Domestic Legal Orders of Central and Eastern European Countries', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 164; I. Ziemele, 'The Application of International Law in the Baltic States', 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 243; and W. Czaplinski, 'International Law and Polish Municipal Law', 53 ZaöRV, 1993, p. 871.

²⁷⁷ See Shin Hae Bong, 'Japan', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 360. See generally S. Oda, The Practice of Japan in International Law 1961-1970, Leiden, 1982; Y. Iwasawa, 'The Relationship Between International Law and National Law: Japanese Experiences', 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 333; H. Oda, Japanese Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 1999; and Y. Iwasawa, International Law, Human Rights, and Japanese Law - The Impact of International Law on Japanese Law, Oxford, 1998.

²⁷⁸ Iwasawa, 'Relationship', p. 345. ²⁷⁹ Ibid., pp. 349 ff.

²⁸⁰ See generally with regard to China, T. Wang, 'International Law in China', 221 HR, 1990, p. 195; J. Z. Li and S. Guo, 'China', in Shelton, International Law and Domestic Legal Systems, p. 158; and H. Xue and Q. Jin, 'International Treaties in the Chinese Domestic Legal System', 8 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2009, p. 299.

provisions or principles. The concept of the automatic incorporation of customary international law into domestic law is now to be seen as an insufficient description of what actually happens within municipal legal systems.

The situation as regards treaties is much more complex, as different attitudes are maintained by different states. In some countries, certain treaties will operate internally by themselves (self-executing) while others must undergo a process of domestic legalisation. There are countries where legislation is needed for virtually all international agreements: for example, Belgium.²⁸¹ It is by no means settled as a general principle whether treaties prevail over domestic rules. Some countries allow treaties to supersede all municipal laws, whether made earlier or later than the agreement. Others, such as Norway, adopt the opposite stance. Where there are written constitutions, an additional complicating factor is introduced and some reasonably stable hierarchy incorporating ordinary laws, constitutional provisions and international law has to be maintained. This is particularly so where a federal system is in operation. It will be up to the individual country to adopt its own list of preferences.²⁸²

Of course, such diverse attitudes can lead to confusion, but in the light of the present state of international law, it is inevitable that its enforcement and sphere of activity will become entangled with the ideas and practices of municipal law. Indeed, it is precisely because of the inadequate enforcement facilities that lie at the disposal of international law that one must consider the relationship with municipal law as of more than marginal importance. This is because the extent to which domestic courts apply the rules of international law may well determine the effectiveness of international legislation and judicial decision-making.

However, to declare that international legal rules therefore prevail over all relevant domestic legislation at all times is incorrect in the vast majority of cases and would be to overlook the real in the face of the ideal. States jealously guard their prerogatives, and few are more meaningful than the ability to legislate free from outside control; and, of course, there are democratic implications. The consequent supremacy of municipal legal systems over international law in the domestic sphere is not exclusive, but it does exist as an undeniable general principle.

It is pertinent to refer here briefly to the impact of the European Union.²⁸³ Article 3(5) of the consolidated version of the Treaty on the European Union (TEU) states that in its relations with the wider world the Union shall uphold and promote its values and shall contribute to the strict observance and the development of international law including respect for the principles of the ²⁸¹ See article 68 of the Constitution, which deals basically with treaties of commerce and treaties which impose obligations on the state or on individuals.

²⁸² See generally Drzemczewski, Domestic Law, and Peaslee, Constitutions, vol. III, pp. 76 and 689. See also, as regards the Philippines, the decision of the Supreme Court (en banc) in The Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. 102 ILR, p. 163, and, as regards Poland, W. Czaplinski, 'International Law and Polish Municipal Law – A Case Study', 8 Hague Yearbook of International Law, 1995, p. 31.

²⁸³ On 23 June 2016 the UK held a referendum in which the majority voted to leave the EU. On 29 March 2017, the UK made the required notification under article 50 of the Treaty on European Union providing a two year notice to leave the EU, see www.gov.uk/government/publications/prime-ministers-letter-to-donald-tusk-triggering-article-50 and www.consilium.europa.eu/en/press/press-releases/2017/03/29-euco-50-statement-uk-notification/. As to the EU, see e.g. S. Weatherill, Cases and Materials on EU Law, 12th edn, Oxford, 2016; P. Craig and G. de Búrca, EU Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 6th edn, Oxford, 2015; Steiner and Woods EU Law (ed. L. Woods and P. Watson), Oxford, 2014; L. Collins, European Community Law in the United Kingdom, 4th edn, London, 1990; and H. Kovar, 'The Relationship between Community Law and National Law', in Thirty Years of Community Law (Commission of the European Communities), 1981, p. 109.

United Nations Charter. The European Court of Justice has underlined that the European Union must respect international law including customary international law. For example, in Air Transport Association of America and Others v. Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change, the court noted that in the light of article 3(5), when the EU ‘adopts an act, it is bound to observe international law in its entirety, including customary international law, which is binding upon the institutions of the European Union’.²⁸⁴ Further, it was emphasised that the principles of customary international law ‘may be relied upon by an individual for the purpose of the Court’s examination of the validity of an act of the European Union in so far as, first, those principles are capable of calling into question the competence of the European Union to adopt that act . . . and, second, the act in question is liable to affect rights which the individual derives from European Union law or to create obligations under European Union law in his regard’.²⁸⁵

In terms of the relationship between EU law and national law, the European Court of Justice has held that Community law has supremacy over ordinary national law,²⁸⁶ and indeed over domestic constitutional law.²⁸⁷ In addition to the treaties creating the EC,²⁸⁸ there is a great deal of secondary legislation issuing forth from its institutions, which can apply to the member states. This takes the form of regulations, decisions or directives. Of these, the first two are directly applicable and enforceable within each of the countries concerned without the need for enabling legislation. While it is true that the legislation for this type of activity has been passed – for example, section 2(1) of the European Communities Act 1972²⁸⁹ in the United Kingdom, which permits in advance this form of indirect law-making, and is thus assimilated into municipal law – the fact remains that the member states have accepted an extraterritorial source of law, binding in certain circumstances upon them. The effect is thus that directly effective Community law has precedence over inconsistent UK legislation. This was confirmed by the House of Lords in Factortame Ltd v. Secretary of State for Transport.²⁹⁰ It was further noted that one of the consequences of UK entry into the European Communities and the European Communities Act 1972 was that an interim injunction could be granted, the effect of which would be to suspend the operation of a statute on the grounds that the legislation in question allegedly infringed Community law. This is one illustration of the ²⁸⁴ Case C-366/10, [2012] 2 CMLR 4, para. 101, citing Case C-286/90 Poulsen and Diva Navigation [1992] ECR I-6019, paras. 9 and 10, and Case C-162/96 Racke [1998] ECR I-3655, paras. 45 and 46.

²⁸⁵ Ibid., para. 107 (citing Joined Cases 89/85, 104/85, 114/85, 116/85, 117/85 and 125/85 to 129/85 Ahlström Osakeyhtiö and Others v. Commission [1988] ECR 5193, paras. 14–18; and Case C-405/92 Mondiet [1993] ECR I-6133, paras. 11–16). Note the Advocate General’s Opinion in Yassin Abdullah Kadi and Al Barakaat International Foundation v. Council of the European Union and Commission of the European Communities, that: ‘The application and interpretation of Community law is accordingly guided by the presumption that the Community wants to honour its international commitments. The Community Courts therefore carefully examine the obligations by which the Community is bound on the international stage and take judicial notice of those obligations’: Case C-402/05 P, 2008, at para. 22, citing the cases of Case 41/74 Van Duyn [1974] ECR 1337, para. 22; Case C-286/90 Poulsen and Diva Navigation [1992] ECR I-6019, paras. 9–11; Case C-431/05 Merck Genéricos-Produtos Farmacêuticos [2007] ECR I-07001; Case C-300/98 Dior and Others [2000] ECR I-11307, para. 33; Case C-162/96 Racke [1998] I-3655; and Joined Cases 21/72 to 24/72 International Fruit Company and Others [1972] ECR 1219.

²⁸⁶ See Costa v. ENEL, Case 6/64 [1964] ECR 585; 93 ILR, p. 23.

²⁸⁷ See Internationale Handelsgesellschaft v. Einfuhr- und Vorratsstelle für Getreide und Futtermittel [1970] ECR 1125.

²⁸⁸ Including the treaties of Maastricht (1992), Amsterdam (1997), Nice (2001) and Lisbon (2007, in force from 1 December 2009).

²⁸⁹ See also section 2(4).

²⁹⁰ See [1990] 2 AC 85, 140 (per Lord Bridge); 93 ILR, p. 652. See also Ex parte Factortame (No. 2) [1991] 1 AC 603; 93 ILR, p. 731; R v. Secretary of State for Transport, ex parte Factortame, European Court of Justice Case C-213/89, 93 ILR, p. 669 and Case C-221/89, 93 ILR, p. 731.

major effect which joining the Community has had in terms of the English legal system and previously accepted legal principles. The mistake, however, should not be made of generalising from this specific relationship to the sphere of international law as a whole.

NON-JUSTICIABILITY, ACT OF STATE AND RELATED DOCTRINES

An issue is justiciable basically if it can be tried according to law.²⁹¹ In this context, there must be a presumption of competence for the court to hear a matter brought before it in a manner consistent with the relevant procedural rules. There are, however, a number of principles of constraint, flowing from constitutional law and/or international law, which impact upon this presumption. These include, for example, the rule against the enforcement of foreign penal, revenue or public laws.²⁹²

Matters that are accepted constitutionally as falling within the exclusive competence of the executive branch of government are not justiciable before the courts. Accordingly, the test as to whether a matter is or is not justiciable involves an illumination of that grey area where the spheres of executive and judiciary merge and overlap. Recent years have seen a significant reduction in the sphere of exclusive competence of the executive free from judicial oversight and a number of important cases have sought to redraw the boundary, reflecting the increasing transparency of society in a number of states, as well as the vast increase in the availability of relevant information. The rise in the scope of justiciability also reflects the decline in the absolute nature of the sovereignty of foreign states as a concept restricting the competence of domestic courts to hear cases with a foreign element and the switch to concern with the internal constitutional balance with the state. As part of the latter dynamic is the move to restrain and limit the power of the state to adopt decisions that cannot be reviewed by the courts.

Non-justiciability as a concept is associated but not identical with the doctrine of act of state, which generally concerns the activities of the executive in relations with the sovereign acts of foreign states.²⁹³ In the context of international law and municipal courts non-justiciability ²⁹¹ See the lecture by Lord Sumption of the UK Supreme Court on 'Foreign Affairs in the English Courts Since 9/11', 14 May 2012, https://www.supremecourt.uk/docs/speech_120514.pdf. (2012); and Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 4. See also L. Collins, 'Foreign Relations and the Judiciary', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 485; R. Singh, 'Justiciability in the Areas of Foreign Relations and Defence', in The Iraq War and International Law (ed. P. Shiner and A. Williams), 2008, chapter 9; D. McGoldrick, 'The Boundaries of Justiciability', 60 ICLQ, 2010, p. 981; P. Daly, 'Justiciability and the "Political Question" Doctrine', Public Law, 2010, p. 160; Sales and Clement, 'International Law in Domestic Courts: The Developing Framework'; and O'Keefe, 'The Doctrine of Incorporation Revisited'. See also McLachlan, Foreign Relations Law, chapter 6 and pp. 523 ff.; H. Fox and P. Webb, The Law of State Immunity, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2013, chapter 3; D. McGoldrick, 'The Boundaries of Justiciability', 59 ICLQ, 2010, p. 981; and M. Nicholson, 'The Political Unconscious of the English Foreign Act of State and Non-justiciability Doctrines', 64 ICLQ, 2015, p. 743.

²⁹² See e.g. Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249 and Shergill v. Khaira [2014] UKSC 33, para. 41. The question of Crown act of state was discussed in Rahmatullah (No. 2) v. Ministry of Defence [2017] UKSC 1. This doctrine was defined as a 'prerogative act of policy in the field of international affairs performed by the Crown in the course of its relationship with another state or its subjects', ibid., para. 2 (as cited by Lady Hale). It was unanimously held that this doctrine (not to be confused with foreign act of state or non-justiciability as discussed in this section where the acts of foreign states are in issue and not that, or not only that, of the UK) defeated claims brought by non-UK citizens seeking to sue the Government in the English courts in respect of alleged torts committed abroad.

²⁹³ See e.g. Wade and Phillips, Constitutional and Administrative Law, pp. 299–303; J. B. Moore, Acts of State in English Law, New York, 1906; Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 9; Singer, 'The Act of State Doctrine of the UK', 75 AJIL, 1981, p. 283; M. Akehurst, 'Jurisdiction in International Law', 46 BYIL, 1972–3, pp. 145, 240; and M. Zander, 'The Act of refers particularly to the doctrine that no state can exercise jurisdiction over another state.²⁹⁴ As such it is based upon the principles of the sovereignty and equality of states.²⁹⁵ Non-justiciability acts as an evidential bar, since an issue cannot be raised or proved, in contrast to sovereign immunity, another doctrine of constraint, which provides that the courts cannot exercise the jurisdiction that exists with regard to the matter in question due to the status of the entity or individual concerned, although it is open to the state concerned to waive its immunity and thus remove the jurisdictional bar.²⁹⁶ Non-justiciability will usually concern a clear inter-state relationship or situation which is impleaded in a seemingly private action, while immunity issues will invariably arise out of a state-private party relationship not usually relating to inter-state activities as such.²⁹⁷ Nevertheless, it is not entirely clear whether the consequence of a finding of non-justiciability is that the claim to this effect is struck out with the possibility that a defence relying upon it is deprived of one of its arguments (or indeed the only one) or whether the otherwise justiciable claim is struck out on the ground that it cannot fairly be tried in the absence of the non-justiciable defence. Authority would seem to favour the latter.²⁹⁸

The concept of non-justiciability is essentially a composite doctrine with a number of manifestations. There are primarily two sources. The first is the internal, constitutional aspect, being the prerogative of the executive in the areas of foreign policy and national defence,²⁹⁹ where it is essentially a rule of law principle in a democratic system of government delineating the separation of powers,³⁰⁰ to respect for the sovereignty and independence of foreign states.³⁰¹ Accordingly, both domestic and foreign executive acts are covered, but from the perspective of the government and its competence constitutionally.³⁰² Thus, the courts will refuse, or at the least be extremely reluctant, to adjudicate upon an exercise of sovereign power, such as making war and peace, making international treaties or ceding territory.³⁰³ This would include the definition

State Doctrine', 53 AJIL, 1959, p. 826. Note that judicial acts will not be regarded as acts of state for the purposes of the act of state doctrine: see Altimo Holdings and Investment Ltd v. Kyrgyz Mobil Tel Ltd [2012] 1 WLR 1804; Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 73 ff. and 87 ff.; and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, para. 54.

²⁹⁴ See Lord Pearson, Nissan v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 179, 239; 44 ILR, pp. 359, 390.

²⁹⁵ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 365.

²⁹⁶ See Regina v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate, ex parte Pinochet Ugarte (No. 3) [2000] 1 AC 147 at 269 (per Lord Millett) noting the connection between act of state and certain aspects of sovereign immunity but noting that 'state immunity is a creature of international law and operates as a bar to the jurisdiction of the national court, whereas the act of state doctrine is a rule of domestic law which holds the national court incompetent to adjudicate upon the lawfulness of the sovereign acts of a foreign state'. See also Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 43 ff. and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, paras. 48 ff. See further as to sovereign or state immunity and diplomatic immunity, below, chapter 12.

²⁹⁷ See e.g. Amalgamated Metal Trading v. Department of Trade and Industry, The Times, 21 March 1989, p. 40. See also Shergill v. Khaira [2014] UKSC 33, para. 41.

²⁹⁸ Ibid., para. 42. ²⁹⁹ In the UK, areas traditionally covered by the Crown prerogative: see above, p. 113.

³⁰⁰ See e.g. Lord Hoffmann in R v. Lyons [2002] UKHL 44, para. 40; 131 ILR, p. 555; Lord Millett in R v. Lyons, para. 105; 131 ILR, p. 575; and Richards J in the CND case [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), para. 60.

³⁰¹ See Underhill v. Hernandez 168 US 250, 252.

³⁰² See Nissan v. Attorney-General [1970] AC 179 and Buron v. Denman (1848) 145 ER 450. See also S. de Smith and R. Brazier, Constitutional and Administrative Law, 6th edn, London, 1989, pp. 145–51, and Mann, Foreign Affairs, chapter 10.

³⁰³ Not simply because they form part of the Crown's prerogative powers, but because such powers are discretionary: see Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1984] 3 All ER 935, 956 and Lord Hoffmann in R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, para. 65; 132 ILR, pp. 695–6. See also Lord Reid in Chandler v. DPP [1964] AC 763, 791; Simon Brown LJ, R v. Ministry of Defence, ex parte Smith [1996] QB 517, 539; Laws LJ, Marchiori v. The Environment Agency [2002] EWCA Civ 3, paras. 38 and 40; 127 ILR, pp. 642 and 643; CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2759 at paras.

of territories within the United Kingdom³⁰⁴ as well as the conduct of foreign affairs.³⁰⁵ Lord Hoffmann held in R v. Jones that ‘the making of war and peace and the disposition of the armed forces has always been regarded as a discretionary power of the Crown into the exercise of which the courts will not enquire’.³⁰⁶ This was cited with approval by Lord Mance in Keyu v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.³⁰⁷

The second aspect relates to the acts of foreign states and relies upon the international law principles of sovereignty and legal equality of states. Lord Wilberforce, in the classic statement on the doctrine, declared in Buttes Gas and Oil Co. v. Hammer (No. 3).³⁰⁸

there exists in English law a general principle that the courts will not adjudicate upon the transactions of foreign sovereign states . . . it seems desirable to consider this principle . . . not as a variety of ‘act of state’ but one for judicial restraint or abstention.³⁰⁹

Such a principle was not one of discretion, but inherent in the nature of the judicial process. It flows not from internal constitutional concerns but from the character of the international system. Although the Buttes case concerned litigation in the areas of libel and conspiracy, the House of Lords felt that a determination of the issue would have involved the court in reviewing the transactions of four sovereign states and having to find that part of those transactions was contrary to international law. Quite apart from the possibility of embarrassment to the foreign relations of the executive, about which one needs to be cautious,³¹⁰ there were no judicial or 15 (Simon Brown LJ), 50 (Maurice Kay J) and 59 (Richards J); 126 ILR, pp. 735, 750 and 753; and R (on the application of Abbasi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, para. 106(iii); 126 ILR, p. 725.

³⁰⁴ See The Fagernes [1927] P 311, 324 (per Atkin LJ). See also Christian v. The Queen [2006] UKPC 47, paras. 9–10 (Lord Hoffmann) and 33 (Lord Woolf); 130 ILR, pp. 699–700, 707.

³⁰⁵ See e.g. R (Al-Rawi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2006] EWCA Civ 1279, paras. 131 ff. (Laws LJ), and cases cited in note 300, p. 139 above.

³⁰⁶ [2006] UKHL 16, para. 65; 132 ILR, p. 696. He concluded that ‘The decision to go to war [against Iraq], whether one thinks it was right or wrong, fell squarely within the discretionary powers of the Crown to defend the realm and conduct its foreign affairs . . . The discretionary nature or non-justiciability of the power to make war is in my opinion simply one of the reasons why aggression is not a crime in domestic law’: paras. 66 and 67, ibid., and see also Lord Mance, para. 103; ibid., pp. 705–6. More cautiously, Lord Bingham noted that ‘there are well established rules that the courts will be very slow to review the exercise of prerogative powers in relation to the conduct of foreign affairs and the deployment of the armed services’: para. 30, ibid., p. 684. The Jones approach was applied by the Court of Appeal in R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2006] EWCA Civ 1689, para. 33 (Clarke MR); 132 ILR, p. 737, where it was held that the question whether the UK had acted unlawfully in sending troops to Iraq was non-justiciable for two reasons: first, because it would require consideration of at least two international instruments (Security Council resolutions 678 and 1441); and, secondly, because it would require detailed consideration of policy decisions in the fields of foreign affairs and defence ‘which are the exclusive responsibility of the executive government’. In the House of Lords, [2008] UKHL 20, their Lordships essentially focused on the meaning of article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights, but Lord Bingham referred to the ‘restraint traditionally shown by the courts in ruling on what has been called high policy – peace and war, the making of treaties, the conduct of foreign relations’, ibid., para. 2, while Lord Hope noted that, ‘The issue of legality in this area of international law [the use of force by states] belongs to the area of relations between states . . . [and] . . . is a matter of political judgment . . . It is not part of domestic law reviewable here’, ibid., para. 24 (and see para. 26). See also Lady Hale, ibid., para. 58.

³⁰⁷ [2015] UKSC 69, para. 145. ³⁰⁸ [1982] AC 888; 64 ILR, p. 331.

³⁰⁹ [1982] AC 888, 931; 64 ILR, p. 344. See also Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover (1848) 1 HLC 1. See Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 385 ff. Note also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), paras. 74 and 160.

³¹⁰ See Korea National Insurance Corporation v. Allianz Global Corporate & Speciality AG [2008] EWCA Civ 1355 at para. 32. A distinction needs to be drawn between mild or marginal embarrassment and the disruption of international relations. The former would not be a bar as such to justiciability but the latter clearly underpinned the doctrine of non-justiciability: see Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855 at para. 65 and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ manageable standards by which to judge such issues.³¹¹ This is because such international decisions were taken in the light not just of international law but also of policy and politics.³¹² It has been held, for example, that judicial review would not be appropriate in a matter which would have serious international repercussions and which was more properly the sphere of diplomacy.³¹³ It has also been held that the courts could not adjudicate upon the claimed international law fishing rights of Mauritius within the waters of the British Indian Ocean Territory in the absence of that state as a party to the case.³¹⁴ The acts in question had to be of a sovereign rather than of a commercial nature and performed within the territory of a foreign state. The Court of Appeal has noted that the keeping and disposal of foreign bank notes for commercial purposes in the United Kingdom could not be treated as sovereign acts so as to bring the activity within the protection of the Buttes non-justiciability doctrine.³¹⁵ Legislation can, of course, impinge upon the question as to whether an issue is or is not justiciable,³¹⁶ while the State Immunity Act 1978 removed sovereign immunity for commercial transactions, thus rendering the state subject to the jurisdiction of the court.³¹⁷ One of the questions that the Court of Appeal addressed in *Maclaine Watson v. International Tin Council*³¹⁸ was whether in such circumstances the doctrine of non-justiciability survived. It was emphasised that the two concepts of immunity and non-justiciability had to be kept separate and concern was expressed that the Buttes non-justiciability principle could be used to prevent proceedings being brought against states in commercial matters, contrary to the Act.³¹⁹ Further, the English courts are likely to decline to seek to determine an issue where this could be ‘damaging to the public interest in the field of international relations, national security or defence’.³²⁰ Lord Bingham noted in R v. Jones that the courts would be ‘very slow to adjudicate upon rights arising out of transactions entered into between sovereign states on the plane of international law’.³²¹

The issue of justiciability was discussed in J. H. Rayner v. Department of Trade and Industry both by the Court of Appeal³²² and by the House of Lords³²³ in the context of the creation of the collapsed International Tin Council by a group of states by a treaty which was unincorporated into English law. Kerr LJ emphasised that the doctrine in this context rested upon the principles 1394, para. 66. See also Habib v. Australia, Decision on justiciability, (2010) FCAFC 12; ILDC 1518 (AU 2010) at para. 118.

³¹¹ [1982] AC 888, 938; 64 ILR, p. 351. ³¹² See the analysis in Shergill v. Khaira, below p. 147.

³¹³ See e.g. R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Pirbhai 107 ILR, p. 462. But see the Abbasi case below, p. 147.

³¹⁴ R (Bancoult) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2013] EWHC 1502 (Admin) at para. 153.

³¹⁵ A Ltd v. B Bank 111 ILR, pp. 590, 594–6.

³¹⁶ So that, for example, issues related to war crimes were justiciable in the light of the International Criminal Courts Act 2001: see R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, paras. 4 and 28; 132 ILR, pp. 672 and 683.

³¹⁷ See Empresa Exportadora de Azucar v. Industria Azucarera Nacional SA [1983] 2 LL R 171, 194–5; 64 ILR, p. 368. Note the view expressed in Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 92 ff. and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, paras. 54 ff. that there was a commercial exception to the non-justiciability or act of state rule. See further below as to state immunity, chapter 12.

³¹⁸ [1988] 3 WLR 1169; 80 ILR, p. 191. ³¹⁹ [1988] 3 WLR 1169, 1188 per Kerr LJ; 80 ILR, p. 209.

³²⁰ CND v. Prime Minister of the UK, para. 47, cited with approval by the Irish High Court in Horgan v. An Taoiseach, judgment of 28 April 2003, as emphasising ‘the strictly circumspect role which the courts adopt when called upon to exercise jurisdiction in relation to the Executive’s conduct of international relations generally’, 132 ILR, pp. 407, 440.

³²¹ [2006] UKHL 16, para. 30; 132 ILR, p. 684. See also R (Islamic Human Rights Commission) v. CAA [2006] EWHC 2465; 132 ILR, p. 707, and R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2008] UKHL 20, above, p. 181, note 272.

³²² [1988] 3 WLR 1033; 80 ILR, p. 49. ³²³ [1989] 3 All ER 523; 81 ILR, p. 671.

that unincorporated treaties do not form part of the law of England and that such international agreements were not contracts which the courts could enforce.³²⁴ However, this did not prevent reference to an unincorporated treaty where it was necessary or convenient, for example in order to assess the legal nature of the International Tin Council.³²⁵ Lord Oliver in the House of Lords decision, in reaffirming the essence of the doctrine of non-justiciability, noted that it was axiomatic that municipal courts have not and cannot have the competence to adjudicate upon or to enforce the rights arising out of transactions entered into by independent sovereign states between themselves on the plane of international law.³²⁶

However, this did not mean that the court must never look at or construe a treaty. A treaty could be examined as a part of the factual background against which a particular issue has arisen.³²⁷ It was pointed out that the creation of the International Tin Council by a group of states was a sovereign act and that the adjudication of the rights and obligations between the member states of the Council and the Council itself could only be undertaken on the international plane.³²⁸ In other words, the situation appeared to involve not only the Buttes form of non-justiciability concerning transactions involving foreign states, but also non-justiciability on the basis of an unincorporated treaty,³²⁹ a question which crosses the distinction between constitutional and international non-justiciability.

Hoffmann LJ in *Littrell v. USA (No. 2)*³³⁰ pointed out in the context of a status of forces agreement (providing for the placement of NATO troops in the UK) that the courts could look at such agreement to ensure that the foreign troops were here by invitation since the conclusion of a treaty was as much a fact as any other,³³¹ but this could not be taken to mean that the courts would actually enforce the terms of an unincorporated treaty. Additionally, it would not be open to the courts to determine whether a foreign sovereign ³²⁴ [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1075; 80 ILR, pp. 49, 86.

³²⁵ [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1075–6. See also Nourse LJ, ibid., p. 1130; 80 ILR, p. 148.

³²⁶ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544; 81 ILR, pp. 671, 700. See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), para. 107.

³²⁷ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 545; 81 ILR, p. 701. See also In the Matter of AY Bank Ltd [2005] EWCA Civ 1116 and Republic of Croatia v. Republic of Serbia [2009] EWHC 1559 (Ch), para. 40. Note that in Kirkpatrick v. Environmental Tectonics 110 S.Ct. 701, 822 ff. (1990); 88 ILR, p. 93, the US Supreme Court underlined that the act of state doctrine was not a doctrine of judicial abstention but a rule of decision which, where applicable, requires the court to decide cases by deeming acts of a foreign state to be valid. The court noted that the doctrine does not apply where the only issue was whether certain official acts of a foreign sovereign had occurred, as opposed to where the court was asked to enquire into them for the purpose of adjudicating upon their legal validity. This became known as the ‘Kirkpatrick exception’: see Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 95 ff. and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, paras. 54 and 89.

³²⁸ [1989] 3 All ER 523, 559; 81 ILR, p. 722. See also Ralph Gibson LJ in the Court of Appeal judgment [1988] 3 WLR 1033, 1143–4; 80 ILR, pp. 49, 163.

³²⁹ But see Re McKerr, where Lord Steyn noted that faced with the narrowness of this decision, a critical re-examination of this area of the law might become necessary in the future in the light of the ‘growing support for the view that human rights treaties enjoy a special status’: [2004] UKHL 12, paras. 51–2.

³³⁰ [1995] 1 WLR 82, 93.

³³¹ Similarly, Colman J in Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organisation for Industrialisation [1995] 2 WLR 126, 149, held that reference to the terms of the treaty establishing an international organisation and to the terms of the basic statute of that organisation in order to ascertain the governing law of that organisation and its precise nature did not transgress the boundary between what was justiciable and what was non-justiciable.

state had broken a treaty.³³² The basic position is that: 'Ordinarily speaking, English courts will not rule upon the true meaning and effect of international instruments which apply only at the level of international law.'³³³ However, the rule is not absolute.³³⁴ The courts are willing to look at the terms of an unincorporated treaty in specific situations: first, as noted above, in order to ascertain certain facts such as the existence and terms of, and the parties to, a treaty or where the treaty in question is incorporated into a contract or referred to in domestic legislation and is necessary to a particular decision; and, secondly, where the national courts have to adjudicate upon the interpretation of a particular international treaty in order to determine private rights and obligations under domestic law.³³⁵ The latter proposition would operate, for example, with regard to extradition and asylum cases where a view has to be taken with regard to the Geneva Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951 as a result of domestic legislation, the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996.³³⁶ In Republic of Ecuador v. Occidental Exploration and Production Company, the Court of Appeal, while affirming this principle, emphasised that context was always important, so that a treaty intended by its signatories to give rise to rights in favour of private investors capable of enforcement under the treaty in consensual arbitration against one or other of its signatory states in domestic proceedings would fall within this exception and thus be justiciable.³³⁷ The exception to non-justiciability laid down in the CND and Occidental cases was reaffirmed in In the Matter of AY Bank Ltd,³³⁸ where it was held that the right to prove in the liquidation of a joint venture bank in the United Kingdom (involving the National Bank of Yugoslavia), upon the dissolution of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and its National Bank and ³³² See British Airways Board v. Laker Airways Ltd [1985] AC 58, 85–6; Ex parte Molyneux [1986] 1 WLR 331; 87 ILR, p. 329; and Westland Helicopters Ltd v. Arab Organisation for Industrialisation [1995] 2 WLR 126, 136. See also Minister for Arts, Heritage and Environment v. Peko-Wallsend Ltd (1987) 75 ALR 218, 250–4; 90 ILR, pp. 32, 51–5, where the Australian Federal Court held that a Cabinet decision involving Australia's international relations in implementing a treaty was not a justiciable matter; and Arab Republic of Syria v. Arab Republic of Egypt 91 ILR, pp. 288, 305–6, where the Supreme Court of Brazil held that the courts of a third state could not exercise jurisdiction in a matter essentially of state succession between two other states even where the property was within the jurisdiction.

³³³ CND v. Prime Minister of the UK and Others [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), paras. 23, 36 and 47. See also R v. Lyons [2002] 3 WLR 1562; 131 ILR, p. 538.

³³⁴ See Lord Oliver in J. H. Rayner (Mincing Lane) Ltd v. Department of Trade and Industry [1989] 3 All ER 523, 544. Lord Steyn in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos. 4 and 5) [2002] 2 AC 883, 1101 considered that the principle was not 'a categorical rule'. See also Fatima, Using International Law, pp. 273 ff.

³³⁵ See e.g. CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), paras. 35–6 (Simon Brown LJ) and 61(iii) (Richards J). See also above, note 303, p.139. See also Belhaj v. Straw, para. 92, noting that 'when it is necessary to do so for the vindication of justiciable rights, courts in this jurisdiction will be under an obligation to decide issues of public international law'; Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598; R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2008] AC 1356, para. 8 and Shergill v. Khaira [2014] UKSC 33, para. 43.

³³⁶ See e.g. Ex parte Adan [2000] UKHL 67.

³³⁷ [2005] EWCA Civ 1116, paras. 31 and 37. Mance LJ went on to say that 'For the English Court to treat the extent of such rights as non-justiciable would appear to us to involve an extension, rather than an application, of existing doctrines developed in different contexts', ibid. See also paras. 39–42. Somewhat confusingly, Mance LJ concluded that the doctrine of non-justiciability could not be ousted by consent, ibid., para. 57.

³³⁸ [2006] EWHC 830 (Ch), paras. 51 ff. See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), paras. 118–20 and Republic of Croatia v. Republic of Serbia [2009] EWHC 1559 (Ch), paras. 27 ff. Note that in this case, Briggs J declared (at para. 31) that the AY Bank case was also authority for a further exception to the non-justiciability principle, to the effect that even where the English courts will not adjudicate upon the merits of a dispute between foreign states, they may none the less grant protective measures so as to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of such disputes.

consequential apportionment among the successor states, arose in domestic law, so that the existence of the Agreement on Succession Issues, signed by the successor states formally apportioning the assets and debts of the Former Yugoslavia, did not render the question non-justiciable.

Further, a treaty may be rendered justiciable where a government or public official expressly states that he or she has taken such treaty into consideration in reaching a decision or justifies the decision in relation to the terms of the treaty.³³⁹

It will thus be seen that the principle of non-justiciability operates across two planes. In the first, it functions as a constitutional principle based on the separation of powers as between the executive and the judiciary. This is founded upon the norm of democratic governance, but also constitutes a recognition that in certain situations only the executive has access to the special information and expertise relevant to the particular circumstances.³⁴⁰ This would cover the allocation of determining authority in certain limited areas, such as resort to the use of force, as well as the reluctance to permit indirect legislation by virtue of the automatic incorporation of treaties. In this area, it is clear that the scope of the non-justiciable prerogative has been narrowing significantly and this simply reflects political changes within society where the mere invocation of, for example, the Crown Prerogative no longer suffices as such to withdraw the matter from the competence of the court to review decisions.

In the second instance, non-justiciability is a reflection of the sovereignty and equality of states, with the consequential requirement in general principle that the courts of one state cannot sit in judgment upon the sovereign acts of another state. This category is also shrinking as the emphasis in the justification for non-justiciability flows towards constitutional concerns. Further, there may be a distinction between an executive act on the international plane and the consequences of this act in domestic law. For example, in The Freedom and Justice Party v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs,³⁴¹ the Court of Appeal noted that while recognition by the Foreign Office of a special mission from abroad was not justiciable, the actual question of the immunity granted was a matter subject to the jurisdiction of the court. This reflects the argument in cases such as the CND and AY Bank cases discussed above, where the courts will look at questions which it sees as necessary in order to determine private rights or, in other words, where the apparently non-justiciable element has 'no foothold in domestic law'³⁴² or 'no domestic foothold'.³⁴³

The precise relationship between non-justiciability and act of state is unclear. On the one hand, the view is taken that the two concepts are separate from each other,³⁴⁴ while on the other, the ³³⁹ R (Corner House Research) v. Serious Fraud Office (HL(E)) [2009] 1 AC 756, at paras. 118–19.

³⁴⁰ See e.g. Lord Hoffmann, Secretary of State for the Home Department v. Rehman [2003] 1 AC 153, para. 62; and Laws LJ, Marchiori v. Environment Agency [2002] EWCA Civ 3, para. 38. See also Binyam Mohamed v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2010] EWCA Civ 65; and R (Noor Khan) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2014] EWCA Civ 24.

³⁴¹ [2016] EWCA 2010, para. 57.

³⁴² Simon Brown LJ in CND v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin), para. 40; see also paras. 36, 37 and 47(i).

³⁴³ See R (Al-Haq) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2009] EWHC 1910 (Admin), para. 60.

³⁴⁴ A distinction has been drawn between a narrower doctrine of act of state, which concerns the recognition of acts of a foreign state within its own territory, and a broader principle of non-justiciability in respect of 'certain sovereign acts' of a foreign state with effects beyond its own territory: see Mance J in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company [1999] CLC 31, 56; 116 ILR, pp. 534, 568, basing himself upon Lord Wilberforce in Buttes Gas and Oil v. Hammer [1982] AC 888, 930–2; 64 ILR, p. 331. Mance J's analysis was approved by Lord Lloyd in Ex Parte approach has been expressed that the two are part of the same principle.³⁴⁵ The principle of non-justiciability must exist in an international system founded upon sovereign and formally equal states.³⁴⁶ Having said that, there is no doubt that the extent of the doctrine is open to question. While the courts would regard a question concerning the constitutionality of a foreign government as non-justiciable³⁴⁷ and would not as a general rule inquire into the validity of acts done in a sovereign capacity, such as the constitutionality of foreign laws,³⁴⁸ the latter proposition may be subject to limitation.³⁴⁹ The House of Lords addressed the question in Kuwait Airways Corporation v. Iraqi Airways Company.³⁵⁰ Lord Nicholls noted that in appropriate circumstances it was legitimate for an English court to have regard to the content of international law in deciding whether to recognise a foreign law and it did not flow inevitably from the non-justiciability principle that the judiciary must ignore a breach of international law committed by one state against another ‘where the breach is plain and, indeed, acknowledged’.³⁵¹ In such cases, the difficulty discussed by Lord Wilberforce in Buttes Gas and Oil concerning the lack of judicial or manageable standards by which to deal with a sovereignty dispute between two foreign states did not apply.³⁵² The acceptability of a provision of foreign law had to be judged by contemporary standards and the courts had to give effect to clearly established rules of international law.³⁵³ Where foreign legislation was adopted consequential upon a fundamental breach of international law (such as the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990 and seizure of its assets), enforcement or recognition of such law by the courts would be ‘manifestly contrary to the public policy of English law’. Further, it was emphasised that international law recognised that a national court may decline to give effect to legislative and other acts of foreign states which are in violation of international law.³⁵⁴ Lord Steyn noted that the extension of the public policy exception to recognition of foreign laws from human rights violations to ‘flagrant breaches of international law’ was correct. Reference was made to the UN Charter, binding Security Council resolutions and international opinion in general.³⁵⁵ Lord Hope emphasised that ‘very narrow limits must be placed on any exception to the act of state rule’, but there was no need for restraint

Pinochet (No. 1) [2000] 1 AC 61, 102; 119 ILR, pp. 51, 91. See also Shergill v. Khaira [2014] UKSC 33, para. 41; Rahmattulah v. Ministry of Defence [2014] EWHC 3846 (QB), paras. 120 and 123; Serdar Mohammed v. Ministry of Defence [2015] EWCA Civ 843, paras. 318, 320 and 339 ff.; and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, para. 129.

³⁴⁵ See e.g. Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 40 ff. and 66, particularly noting that non-justiciability was ‘not so much a separate principle’ from act of state but rather a ‘more general and fundamental principle’, para. 48. See further Yukos v. Rosneft (No. 2) [2014] QB 458 and Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, paras. 53–5 and 67. See also Serdar Mohammed v. Ministry of Defence [2015] EWCA Civ 843, para. 318.

³⁴⁶ See e.g. the decision of the Belgian Conseil d’État in T v. Belgium on 9 April 1998 that the process of declaring a foreign diplomat persona non grata was not justiciable both because the request from the receiving state was a matter between states and because it was the sending state that had to recall the person in question or terminate his functions and the Conseil d’État had no jurisdiction over an act emanating from a foreign state: 115 ILR, p. 442.

³⁴⁷ See e.g. Ex parte Turkish Cypriot Association 112 ILR, p. 735.

³⁴⁸ See Buck v. Attorney-General [1965] 1 Ch 745; 42 ILR, p. 11.

³⁴⁹ See Yukos v. Rosneft [2012] EWCA Civ 855, paras. 68 ff. Note that in this case Rix LJ stated that where a foreign court has acted in a way which is an abuse of its own responsibilities as a court of law: ‘the courts of this country are not obliged to give effect to the potential jurisdiction or past acts of such a court, provided that the failings of the foreign court are sufficiently cogently brought home to the English court. We consider that this is the teaching of the Privy Council in AK Investment v. Kyrgyz Mobil [2011] 4 All ER 1027’, at paras. 73 and 87. See also Berezovsky v. Abramovich [2011] EWCA Civ 153, paras. 93 ff.

³⁵⁰ Decision of 16 May 2002: [2002] UKHL 19; 125 ILR, p. 677. ³⁵¹ Ibid., para. 26. ³⁵² See above, p. 140.

³⁵³ [2002] UKHL 19, para. 28. See also Blathwayt v. Baron Cawley [1976] AC 397, 426 and Oppenheimer v. Cattermole [1976] AC 249, 278.

³⁵⁴ [2002] UKHL 19, para. 29. See also Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 371 ff. ³⁵⁵ [2002] UKHL 19, para. 114.

on grounds of public policy ‘where it is plain beyond dispute that a clearly established norm of international law has been violated’.³⁵⁶ He concluded that ‘a legislative act by a foreign state which is in flagrant breach of clearly established rules of international law ought not to be recognised by the courts of this country as forming part of the lex situs of that state’.³⁵⁷

This approach was underlined in Belhaj v. Straw,³⁵⁸ where the Court of Appeal regarded it as ‘established that the doctrine [of act of state] may be disapplied on grounds of public policy where there is a violation of international law or a grave infringement of fundamental human rights’. It is to be recalled that in Belhaj the Court of Appeal took the view that act of state and non-justiciability constituted one doctrine.³⁵⁹

The courts may thus not feel constrained in expressing their views as to foreign sovereign activities where a breach of international law, particularly human rights, is involved³⁶⁰ and may not feel constrained from investigating, in a dispute involving private rights, the legal validity of an act done by a citizen purporting to act on behalf of the sovereign or sovereign state, this being distinct from examining the legal validity of an act of an undisputed sovereign.³⁶¹ It is clear that the courts will regard as non-justiciable policy decisions by the government concerning relationships with friendly foreign states, on the basis that foreign policy is pre-eminently an area for the government and not the courts.³⁶² In particular, a number of cases have laid down the proposition that decisions taken by the executive in its dealings with foreign states regarding the protection of British citizens abroad are non-justiciable.³⁶³

This approach, however, is subject to some qualification.³⁶⁴ This concerns in particular the evolving law of judicial review³⁶⁵ both with regard to its scope concerning the executive and in terms of ‘legitimate expectation’,³⁶⁶ or a reasonable expectation that a regular practice will continue. Where diplomatic protection of a national abroad is concerned, the Court of Appeal has noted that ‘The Secretary of State must be free to give full weight to foreign policy considerations, ³⁵⁶ Ibid., paras. 138–40. ³⁵⁷ Ibid., para. 148. See also Lord Scott, ibid., para. 192.

³⁵⁸ [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, para. 81. ³⁵⁹ Ibid., paras. 53–5.

³⁶⁰ See e.g. Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, paras. 57 and 66 (per Lord Phillips MR); 126 ILR, pp. 710 and 713. See also Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs v. Rahmatullah [2012] UKSC 48. See views expressed in Belhaj and Rahmatullah (No. 1) v. Ministry of Defence [2017] UKSC 3.

³⁶¹ See e.g. Dubai Bank v. Galadari, The Times, 14 July 1990. See also Belhaj v. Straw [2014] EWCA Civ 1394, para. 89, where the Court of Appeal noted that ‘the act of state doctrine would not impose any constraints upon such an investigation or examination by our courts in circumstances where the validity, legality, lawfulness or effectiveness of an act of a foreign state or its agents is not directly in issue in the proceedings’, citing Kirkpatrick v. Environmental Tectonics 110 S.Ct. 701, 822 ff. (1990).

³⁶² See Ex parte Everett [1989] 1 QB 811; 84 ILR, p. 713; Ex parte Ferhut Butt 116 ILR, pp. 607, 620–1; and Foday Saybana Sankoh 119 ILR, pp. 389, 396. See further above, p. 139. In Belhaj and Rahmatullah (No. 1) v. Ministry of Defence [2017] UKSC 3, however, there are indications that certain of the Supreme Court justices seemed to regard foreign act of state as the overriding category with non-justiciability referring to a sub-category, that is the rule of judicial restraint concerning the acts of foreign state outside their own territory: ibid., 40 (Lord Mance) and 123 (Lord Neuberger).

³⁶³ See e.g. Council of Civil Service Unions v. Minister for the Civil Service [1985] 1 AC 374, 411 (per Lord Diplock); Ex parte Pirbhai 107 ILR, pp. 462, 479; Ex parte Ferhut Butt 116 ILR, pp. 607, 615 and 622; and R (Suresh and Manickavasagam) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2001] EWHC Admin 1028, para. 19; 123 ILR, p. 598.

³⁶⁴ See Lord Phillips MR in Abbasi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, paras. 80 ff; 126 ILR, p. 718. See also Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs v. Rahmatullah [2012] UKSC 48.

³⁶⁵ See e.g. S. A. De Smith, H. Woolf and J. Jowell, Judicial Review, 5th edn, London, 1998, pp. 419 ff.

³⁶⁶ See Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office v. The Queen (on the application of Bancoult) [2007] EWCA Civ 498, paras. 72 ff.

which are not justiciable. However, this does not mean the whole process is immune from judicial scrutiny. The citizen's legitimate expectation is that his request will be "considered", and that in that consideration all relevant factors will be thrown into the balance.³⁶⁷ Taylor LJ referred, for example, in ex parte Everett to the 'normal expectation of every citizen' that, if he were subjected abroad to a violation of a fundamental right, the British government would not simply wash their hands of the matter and abandon him to his fate.³⁶⁸ The Court in Abassi concluded that judicial review would lie where the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, contrary to its stated policy, refused even to consider whether to make diplomatic representations on behalf of a subject whose fundamental rights were being violated. However, beyond this, no general proposition could be stated, being dependent upon the precise circumstances. In particular, there was no enforceable duty to protect the citizen, only a discretion.³⁶⁹ In Al-Rawi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Court of Appeal denied that any such legitimate expectation as to the exercise of discretion would extend to the position of non-nationals.³⁷⁰

The approach to non-justiciability was further examined by the Supreme Court in Shergill v. Khaira.³⁷¹ In a judgment by Lords Neuberger, Sumption and Hodge (with which Lords Mance and Clarke agreed), reference was made to the Buttes case,³⁷² where the issue in question was non-justiciable because it was political and it was political for two reasons: first, since it trespassed on the proper province of the executive, as the organ of the state charged with the conduct of foreign relations; and, secondly, because of the absence of judicial or manageable standards. This was because the dispute in question had been resolved by the four states concerned 'by a mixture of diplomacy, political pressure and force' and to deal with the claimant's argument would involve the court in 'assessing decisions and acts of sovereign states which had not been governed by law but by power politics'.³⁷³ The Supreme Court held that non-justiciable cases generally fell into one of two categories. The first comprised cases where the issue in question was beyond the constitutional competence assigned to the courts under the concept of the separation of powers. Cases in this category were 'rare, and rightly so, for they may result in a denial of justice which could only exceptionally be justified either at common law or under article 6 of the Human Rights Convention'. The paradigm cases would be the non-justiciability of certain transactions of foreign states and of proceedings in Parliament. The distinctive feature of all these cases, it was noted, was that once the 'forbidden area' is ³⁶⁷ Per Lord Phillips MR in Abassi v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, para. 99.

³⁶⁸ [1989] 1 QB 811, paras. 96–8.

³⁶⁹ [2002] EWCA Civ 1598, paras. 104–7. The court concluded that this discretion was a very wide one but there was no reason why the decision or inaction of the Foreign Office should not be reviewable if it can be shown that the same is irrational or contrary to legitimate expectation. However, the court could not enter into the forbidden areas, including decisions affecting foreign policy: ibid., para. 106(iii). See also R v. Director of the Serious Fraud Office and BAE Systems [2008] EWHC 714 (Admin), para. 56.

³⁷⁰ [2006] EWCA Civ 1279, para. 89. Note, however, that in Ramadan Bashir v. Sovereign Base Authority [2016] EWHC 954 (Admin), Foskett J held that while the Refugee Convention 1951 did not apply as a matter of international law to the British Sovereign Bases on the island of Cyprus, the UK Government acting in its own right and through the Sovereign Base Authority had adopted a policy of treating the claimants as refugees and acting within the spirit of the Convention with regard to them and that as a matter of domestic public law, the adoption of this policy required the Secretary of State when making any decision concerning the claimants to have regard to the spirit of the Convention obligations.

³⁷¹ [2014] UKSC 33, paras. 37 ff. ³⁷² See above, p. 140. ³⁷³ [2014] UKSC 33, para. 40.

identified, the court ‘may not adjudicate on the matters within it, even if it was necessary to do so in order to decide some other issue which is itself unquestionably justiciable.’

The second category comprised claims or defences which were based neither on private legal rights or obligations, nor on reviewable matters of public law. Examples here would include: domestic disputes; transactions not intended by the participants to affect their legal relations; and issues of international law which engage no private right of the claimant or reviewable question of public law. Where the court was asked to decide them in the abstract, they might well be non-justiciable. However, they would be justiciable where their resolution was necessary in order to decide some other issue which was in itself justiciable. The best-known examples are in the domain of public law. Where no legal right of the citizen was engaged in public or private law, then the courts would decline to adjudicate, but the court would adjudicate if a justifiable legitimate expectation or European Human Rights Convention right depended upon it, similarly where a private law liability was asserted which depended on such a matter.³⁷⁴ Also relevant in such issues in particular circumstances might be the question of temporal jurisdiction or time bar questions, where the court may decline to adjudicate on the basis of a procedural time hurdle.³⁷⁵ In addition, while sovereign or state immunity may be waived, the principles of act of state or non-justiciability cannot.³⁷⁶

The issue was further rigorously examined by the Supreme Court in *Belhaj and Rahmatullah (No. 1)*³⁷⁷ where it was emphasised that whether an issue was or was not non-justiciable had to be considered on a case-by-case basis. It was both fact- and issue-sensitive.³⁷⁸ The key was whether the issue was of a sovereign, international or inter-state nature upon which a domestic court could not or should not appropriately adjudicate; in essence, could a domestic judge deal with the matter or should it be more appropriately dealt with on the international level?³⁷⁹ The Court distinguished between private law, ‘traditional’ or ‘municipal’ forms of foreign act of state in respect of legislation, property and other acts within the jurisdiction or sovereignty of the state in question on the one hand, which would be non-justiciable,³⁸⁰ and a different common law doctrine of judicial restraint on the other, which applied to the wider interactions of foreign states on the international stage. The latter doctrine was based both on international comity in the relationships between states and on the domestic constitutional principle of the separation of ³⁷⁴ Ibid., paras. 42–3, citing R (Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament) v. Prime Minister [2002] EWHC 2777 (Admin); R (Al-Haq) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2009] EWHC 1910; R (Abbasi) v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2003] UKHRR 76; and R (Gentle) v. Prime Minister [2008] 1 AC 1356. These comments were cited by the Court of Appeal in Serdar Mohammed v. Secretary of State for Defence [2015] EWCA Civ 843, para. 320. See also the discussion in The States of Guernsey and Another v. Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs [2016] EWHC 1847 (Admin), paras. 67 ff.

³⁷⁵ See here Keyu v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs [2015] UKSC 69; and Ministry of Defence v. Iraqi Civilians [2016] UKSC 25.

³⁷⁶ See High Commissioner of Pakistan v. Jah [2016] EWHC 1465 (Ch), para. 89. See further on state immunity, chapter 12.

³⁷⁷ [2017] UKSC 3. ³⁷⁸ Ibid., paras. 11(iv)(c) and 90 (Lord Mance).

³⁷⁹ Ibid., paras. 101 and 107(v) (Lord Mance). Lord Sumption noted that an English court had to ask whether the matter was one that could properly be resolved by reference to domestic law: para. 239.

³⁸⁰ Ibid., paras. 11(iii)(a)–(c) and 11(iv) (Lord Mance) and 159 (Lord Neuberger). It was accepted, however, on the existing case-law that this was subject to an exception where foreign legislation was inconsistent with fundamental principles of public policy: see at para. 153 (Lord Neuberger) citing Oppenheimer v. Cattermole and Kuwait Airways v. Iraqi Airways.

powers³⁸¹ and at the core of such non-justiciability lay the use of armed force by one state against another.³⁸² However, it was agreed that public policy considerations (such as violations of fundamental human rights) were relevant as an exception to non-justiciability or, arguably, as a part of its structure.³⁸³

The approach adopted in Abbasi was approved in Kaunda v. The President of the Republic of South Africa by the Constitutional Court of South Africa, which noted that ‘A decision as to whether, and if so, what protection should be given, is an aspect of foreign policy which is essentially the function of the executive.’³⁸⁴ This did not mean that the South African courts had no jurisdiction to deal with issues concerned with diplomatic protection. Since the exercise of all public power was subject to constitutional control, this would also apply to an allegation that the government has failed to respond appropriately to a request for diplomatic protection. If, for instance, the decision were to be irrational or made in bad faith, the court could intervene to require the government to deal with the matter properly.³⁸⁵

Australian courts also have emphasised the importance of separation of powers and the need for courts to exercise considerable caution with regard to foreign policy, expressly citing the Buttes case.³⁸⁶ The question of justiciability was one for the federal judicial branch.³⁸⁷ It has been noted, for example, that any question of a dispute as to the assessment made by the executive and legislative branches of government of the ‘terrorist threat’ to the safety of the public would not be justiciable, but that this situation would change upon the adoption of relevant legislation.³⁸⁸ In Habib v. Australia,³⁸⁹ the full court of the Federal Court of Australia decided that the doctrine of non-justiciability or act of state did not prevent consideration of a case concerning an Australian citizen, alleging torture in Pakistan, Egypt and Guantanamo Bay by state officials of the respective states, in view of the serious nature of the alleged human rights abuses.

The US courts have similarly recognised the existence of areas of non-justiciability for sensitive political reasons. This is usually referred to as the political question doctrine and operates to prevent the courts from considering issues of political delicacy in the field of foreign ³⁸¹ Ibid., paras. 89 ff. (Lord Mance), 147 (Lord Neuberger) and 234 ff. (Lord Sumption). It was accepted that this principle (termed ‘foreign act of state’) was one of judicial restraint: ibid., paras. 40 ff. (Lord Mance); 146, 151 (Lord Neuberger); and 234 ff. (Lord Sumption).

³⁸² Ibid., paras. 107(iii) (Lord Mance) and 234 (Lord Sumption).

³⁸³ Ibid., paras. 155 ff. (Lord Neuberger) and 249 ff. (Lord Sumption); cf. para. 11(iv)(c) (Lord Mance).

³⁸⁴ CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, para. 77 (per Chief Justice Chaskalson). See also Swissborough Diamond Mines v. South Africa, Supreme Court, Transvaal Provincial Division, 1997, 132 ILR, p. 454; and the decision of the German Federal Constitutional Court in Hess, where it was held that ‘the Federal Government enjoys wide discretion in deciding the question of whether and in what manner to grant protection against foreign States’, BVerfGE 55, 349; 90 ILR 386, 395.

³⁸⁵ CCT 23/04, [2004] ZACC 5, paras. 78–80.

³⁸⁶ See the decision of the High Court of Australia in Thorpe v. Commonwealth of Australia (No. 3) (1997) 144 ALR 677, 690–1; 118 ILR, p. 353; Re Dittfort (1988) 19 FCR 347, 369; 87 ILR, p. 170; Petrotimor Companhia de Petroleos SARL v. Commonwealth of Australia [2003] FCAFC 3; and Victoria Leasing Ltd v. United States (2005) 218 ALR 640. See also McLachlan, Foreign Relations Law, p. 533; G. Lindell, ‘The Justiciability of Political Questions: Recent Developments’, in Australian Constitutional Perspectives (ed. H. P. Lee and G. Winterton), Sydney, 1992, p. 180; and R. Garnett, ‘Foreign States in Australian Courts’, Melbourne University Law Review, 2005, p. 704.

³⁸⁷ Wilson v. Minister for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Affairs [1996] HCA 18; (1996) 189 CLR 1 at 11.

³⁸⁸ Thomas v. Mowbray [2007] HCA 33, para. 107.

³⁸⁹ Decision on justiciability, (2010) FCAFC 12; ILDC 1518 (AU 2010). See e.g. B. Batros and P. Webb, ‘Accountability for Torture Abroad and the Limits of the Act of State Doctrine: Comments on Habib v Commonwealth of Australia’, 8 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2010, p. 1153.

affairs.³⁹⁰ In the Greenham Women against Cruise Missiles v. Reagan case,³⁹¹ for example, the Court held that a suit to prevent the US deployment of cruise missiles at an air force base in the United Kingdom constituted a non-justiciable political question, not appropriate for judicial resolution.³⁹² Similarly, issues relating to rights of succession to the assets of a foreign state were non-justiciable.³⁹³ Much will depend upon the particular circumstances of the case. In Linder v. Portocarrero,³⁹⁴ for instance, concerning the murder of a US citizen working for the Nicaraguan government by rebel forces (the Contras), the US Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit held that the political question doctrine was not implicated since the complaint neither challenged the legitimacy of US policy on Nicaragua nor sought to require the Court to decide who was right and who was wrong in the civil war in that country. The complaint was rather narrowly focused on the lawfulness of the conduct of the defendants in a single incident. In Koohi v. United States,³⁹⁵ the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the courts were not precluded from reviewing military decisions, whether taken during war or peacetime, which caused injury to US or enemy civilians. The Court in Baker v. Carr,³⁹⁶ the leading case on the political question doctrine, while noting that not every case touching foreign relations was non-justiciable, provided a list of six factors that might render a case non-justiciable.³⁹⁷ The Court of Appeals underlined in *Kadić v. Karadžić*³⁹⁸ that ‘judges should not reflexively invoke these doctrines [political question and act of state doctrines] to avoid difficult and somewhat sensitive decisions in the context of human rights’. The fact that judicially discoverable and manageable standards exist would indicate that the issues involved were indeed justiciable.³⁹⁹ In Corrie v. Caterpillar, the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reaffirmed that the political question doctrine was a jurisdictional issue and that the Baker v. Carr factors precluded justiciability, noting in particular that the provision of military assistance by the US to foreign states constituted such a political question.⁴⁰⁰ Further, in El-Shifa v. United States, the D.C. Court of ³⁹⁰ See e.g. Underhill v. Hernandez 168 US 250 (1897); Baker v. Carr 369 US 181 (1962); and American Insurance Association v. Garamendi, US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, 23 June 2003. See also Henkin et al., International Law: Cases and Materials, p. 178; L. Henkin, ‘Is There a “Political Question” Doctrine?’, 85 Yale Law Journal, 1976, p. 597; J. Charney, ‘Judicial Deference in Foreign Relations’, 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 805; and T. M. Franck, Political Questions/Judicial Answers: Does the Rule of Law Apply to Foreign Affairs?, Princeton, 1992. See also Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, pp. 4 ff.; and S. Breyer, The Court and the World, pp. 19 ff.

³⁹¹ 591 F.Supp. 1332 (1984); 99 ILR, p. 44.

³⁹² But see Japan Whaling Association v. American Cetacean Society 478 US 221 (1986), where the Supreme Court held that the judicial interpretation of a US statute, even if it involved foreign relations, was not a political question precluding justiciability. See also Dellums v. Bush 752 F.Supp. 1141 (1990).

³⁹³ See e.g. Can and Others v. United States 14 F.3d 160 (1994); 107 ILR, p. 255.

³⁹⁴ 963 F.2d 332, 337 (1992); 99 ILR, pp. 54, 79. ³⁹⁵ 976 F.2d 1328, 1331–2 (1992); 99 ILR, pp. 80, 84–5.

³⁹⁶ 369 US 186, 211 (1962).

³⁹⁷ That there should be (1) a textually demonstrable constitutional commitment of the issue to a co-ordinate political department; or (2) a lack of judicially discoverable and manageable standards for resolving it; or (3) the impossibility of deciding without an initial policy determination of a kind clearly for non-judicial discretion; or (4) the impossibility of a court’s undertaking independent resolution without expressing lack of respect due co-ordinate branches of government; or (5) an unusual need for unquestioning adherence to a political decision already made; or (6) the potentiality of embarrassment of multifarious pronouncements by various departments on one question: Baker, 369 US at 217. See also Schneider v. Kissinger 412 F.3d 190 (DC Cir. 2005); Bancoult v. McNamara 445 F.3d 427 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Gonzalez-Vera v. Kissinger 449 F.3d 1260 (2006).

³⁹⁸ 1995 US App. LEXIS 28826.

³⁹⁹ See e.g. Klinghoffer v. SNC Achille Lauro 937 F.2d 44 (1991); Nixon v. United States 122 L.Ed.2d 1 (1993); Can v. United States 14 F.3d 160 (1994); Schneider v. Kissinger 310 F.Supp. 2d 251, 257–64 (DDC 2004).

⁴⁰⁰ 503 F.3d 974 CA 9 (Wash.), 2007.

Appeals held that a suit seeking review of ‘the President’s decision to launch an attack on a foreign target’ presented a non-justiciable political question,⁴⁰¹ while in In re Nazi Era Cases Against German Defendants Litigation, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed dismissal of the case as presenting a non-justiciable political question because adjudication ‘would express a lack of respect for the Executive Branch because of the Executive Branch’s longstanding foreign policy interest that issues relating to World War II and Nazi-era claims be resolved through intergovernmental negotiation’.⁴⁰²

However, in Zivotofsky v. Clinton,⁴⁰³ the US Supreme Court appeared to narrow the scope of the doctrine by reframing a question apparently questioning the executive’s right to define foreign policy (with regard to Israel’s sovereignty over Jerusalem) into one of statutory interpretation and the constitutionality of the statute in question (permitting US citizens born in Jerusalem to have their birthplace inscribed in a US passport as ‘Jerusalem, Israel’).⁴⁰⁴ The first two of the Baker factors were specifically noted.⁴⁰⁵ This approach rejecting justiciability challenges where the key issues can be interpreted as ones of the constitutionality and interpretation of statutes has since been followed by the lower courts.⁴⁰⁶

Also relevant in the context of non-justiciability is the doctrine of act of state as it operates in the United States. The *Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law*⁴⁰⁷ provides that ‘in the absence of a treaty or other unambiguous agreements regarding controlling legal principles, courts in the United States will generally refrain from examining the validity of a taking by a foreign state of property within its own territory, or from sitting in judgment on other acts of a governmental character done by a foreign state within its own territory and applicable there’.⁴⁰⁸ In Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino,⁴⁰⁹ the US Supreme Court held that the act of state concept was not a rule of public international law, but related instead to internal constitutional balances.⁴¹⁰ It was a rule of judicial self-restraint. The Court declared that the judicial branch would not examine the validity of a taking of property within its own territory by a foreign sovereign government,⁴¹¹ irrespective of the legality in international law of that action.⁴¹² This basic approach was supported in a subsequent case,⁴¹³ whereas in Alfred ⁴⁰¹ 607 F.3d 836, 844 (D.C. Cir. 2010) (en banc). ⁴⁰² 196 Fed.Appx. 93, 98 (3d Cir. 2006).

⁴⁰³ 132 S.Ct. 1421, 1425 (2012). ⁴⁰⁴ Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 2003, 116 Stat. 1350.

⁴⁰⁵ See above, note p. 397.

⁴⁰⁶ See e.g. Kaplan v. Central Bank of Islamic Republic of Iran 961 F. Supp. 2d 185, 191–3 (D.D.C. 2013).

⁴⁰⁷ 1987, para. 443, pp. 366–7. See also e.g. J. Harrison, ‘The American Act of State Doctrine’, 47 Georgetown Journal of International Law, 2016, p. 507.

⁴⁰⁸ This doctrine is subject to modification by act of Congress: Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, para. 444.

⁴⁰⁹ 376 US 398 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 2.

⁴¹⁰ 376 US 398, 427–8 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 37. In United States v. Noriega 746 F.Supp. 1506, 1521–3 (1990); 99 ILR, pp. 143, 163–5, the US District Court noted that the act of state doctrine was a function of the separation of powers, since it precluded judicial examination of the acts of foreign governments which might otherwise hinder the executive’s conduct of foreign relations.

⁴¹¹ 376 US 398 (1964); 35 ILR, p. 2.

⁴¹² This approach was reversed by Congress in the Hickenlooper Amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1964, Pub. L No. 86–663, para. 301(d)(4), 78 Stat. 1013 (1964), 79 Stat. 653, 659, as amended 22 USC, para. 23470(e)(2), (1982). Note that in Williams & Humbert Ltd v. W & H Trade Marks (Jersey) Ltd [1986] 1 All ER 129; 75 ILR, p. 312, the House of Lords held that an English court would recognise a foreign law effecting compulsory acquisition and any change of title to property which came under the control of the foreign state as a result and would accept and enforce the consequences of that compulsory acquisition without considering its merits.

⁴¹³ First National City Bank v. Banco Nacional de Cuba 406 US 759 (1972); 66 ILR, p. 102.

*Dunhill of London Inc. v. Republic of Cuba*⁴¹⁴ the Supreme Court employed sovereign immunity concepts as the reason for not recognising the repudiation of the commercial obligations of a state instrumentality as an act of state. However, it now appears that there is an exception to the strict act of state doctrine where a relevant treaty provision between the parties specifies the standard of compensation to be payable and thus provides ‘controlling legal principles’.⁴¹⁵

In an important case in 1990, the Supreme Court examined anew the extent of the act of state doctrine. *Kirkpatrick v. Environmental Tectonics*⁴¹⁶ concerned a claim brought by an unsuccessful bidder on a Nigerian government contract in circumstances where the successful rival had bribed Nigerian officials. The Court unanimously held that the act of state doctrine did not apply since the validity of a foreign sovereign act was not at issue. The Court also made the point that act of state issues only arose when a court ‘must decide – that is, when the outcome of the case turns upon – the effect of official action by a foreign sovereign’.⁴¹⁷ While the doctrine clearly meant that a US court had to accept that the acts of foreign sovereigns taken within their jurisdictions were to be deemed valid, this did not extend to cases and controversies that might embarrass foreign governments in situations falling outside this. Act of state was not to be extended.⁴¹⁸ The act of state doctrine was not a doctrine of judicial abstention but a rule of decision which, where applicable, requires the court to decide cases by deeming acts of a foreign state to be valid.

EXECUTIVE CERTIFICATES

There is an established practice adopted by the British courts of applying to the executive branch of government for the conclusive ascertainment of certain facts. Examples include the status of a foreign state or government, questions as to whether a state of war is in operation as regards a particular country or as between two foreign states, and whether or not a particular person is entitled to diplomatic status. This means that in such matters of state the courts will consult the government and regard the executive certificate (or Foreign Office certificate as it is sometimes called), which is issued following the request, as conclusive, irrespective of any relevant rules of international law.⁴¹⁹ This was firmly acknowledged in Duff Development Co. Ltd v. Kelantan,⁴²⁰ which concerned the status of the state of Kelantan in the Malay Peninsula and whether it was able to claim immunity in the English courts. The government declared that it was regarded as an ⁴¹⁴ 96 S. Ct. 1854 (1976); 66 ILR, p. 212. See also M. Halberstam, ‘Sabbatino Resurrected’, 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 68.

⁴¹⁵ See Kalamazoo Spice Extraction Co. v. Provisional Military Government of Socialist Ethiopia 729 F.2d 422 (1984). See also AIG v. Iran 493 F.Supp. 522 (1980) and Justice Harlan in the Sabbatino case, 376 US 398, 428 (1964); 35 ILR, pp. 25, 37. Note also McKesson Corp. v. Islamic Republic of Iran 672 F.3d 1066 (D.D.C. 2012).

⁴¹⁶ 110 S.Ct. 701 (1990); 88 ILR, p. 93. ⁴¹⁷ 110 S.Ct. 701, 705 (1990).

⁴¹⁸ See also Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, pp. 366–89; Bandes v. Harlow & Jones 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 820, where the Court of Appeals held that the act of state doctrine was inapplicable to takings by a foreign state of property located outside its territory; and First American Corp. v. Al-Nahyan 948 F.Supp. 1107 (1996). Note that the party claiming the application of the doctrine bears the burden of proving its applicability: see Daventre Ltd v. Republic of Azerbaijan 349 F.Supp.2d 736, 754 (SDNY 2004).

⁴¹⁹ See e.g. Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 1046 ff.

⁴²⁰ [1924] AC 797; 2 AD, p. 124. See also The Fagernes [1927] P. 311; 3 AD, p. 126; and Post Office v. Estuary Radio Ltd [1968] 2 QB 740; 43 ILR, p. 114. But cf. Hesperides Hotels v. Aegean Turkish Holidays [1978] 1 All ER 277; 73 ILR, p. 9.

independent state and the House of Lords noted that 'where such a statement is forthcoming, no other evidence is admissible or needed', and that:

it was not the business of the Court to inquire whether the Colonial Office rightly concluded that the Sultan [of Kelantan] was entitled to be recognised as a sovereign by international law.⁴²¹

This basic position was reaffirmed in R v. Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, ex parte Trawnik,⁴²² in which it was held that certificates under section 40(3) of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 and section 21 of the State Immunity Act 1978 were reviewable in the courts only if they constituted a nullity in that they were not genuine certificates or if, on their face, they had been issued outside the scope of the relevant statutory power. The contents of such certificates were conclusive of the matters contained therein and, in so far as they related to recognition of foreign states, were matters within the realm of the royal prerogative and not subject to judicial review. In R v. Mohammed Gul,⁴²³ a Foreign Office certificate was provided declaring that the conflicts in Iraq post-28 June 2004 and Afghanistan post-December 2001 constituted non-international armed conflicts. The appellant accepted this as highly persuasive but maintained that the decision had to be one for a jury. The point was not taken further and the court took the 'provisional view that the Certificate was conclusive' but that the way in which the case had developed did not require any further inquiry. In Khurts Bat v. Investigating Judge of the German Federal Court,⁴²⁴ the court treated a letter from the Foreign Office that it had not consented to the visit of a Mongolian official (in the context of a German extradition request and the claim that the person in question was on a special mission to the UK) as binding.⁴²⁵

Problems have arisen in the context of the decision of the United Kingdom announced in 1980 not to accord recognition to governments, but rather to treat the question of an unconstitutional change of regimes as one relating to diplomatic relations.⁴²⁶ In Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA,⁴²⁷ the court was faced with a confused situation concerning whether the interim government of Somalia was actually in effective control and the extent to which other factions controlled different areas of the country. The court noted that in reaching its decision as to whether the interim government was or was not the valid successor to the former legitimate government in the light of the degree of actual control exercised over the country, letters from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office

⁴²¹ Note that under s. 7, Diplomatic Privileges Act 1964 and s. 21, State Immunity Act 1978, such certificates are 'conclusive evidence' as to issues of diplomatic and state immunity. See R (Alamiyeseigha) v. Crown Prosecution Service [2005] EWHC 2704 (Admin) and R (Sultan of Pahang) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2011] EWCA Civ 616. See also s. 8, International Organisations Act 1968; and see further below, chapter 12.

⁴²² The Times, 18 April 1985, p. 4. See also C. Warbrick, 'Executive Certificates in Foreign Affairs: Prospects for Review and Control', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 138, and E. Wilmshurst, 'Executive Certificates in Foreign Affairs: The United Kingdom', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 157.

⁴²³ [2012] EWCA Crim 280, paras. 20ff. ⁴²⁴ [2011] EWHC 2029 (Admin).

⁴²⁵ At that time there was no formal procedure for the reception of special missions. In a written ministerial statement made on 4 March 2013, the then Foreign Secretary announced a new pilot process so that the Government's consent to a special mission could be addressed expressly before the mission arrives in the UK. Embassies and High Commissions in London were to be invited to inform the Foreign Office of forthcoming visits in cases where they wished to seek the Government's express consent as a special mission. It was noted that any legal consequences would ultimately be a matter for the courts: www.parliament.uk/documents/commons-vote-office/March-2013/4-3-13/6.FCO-Special-Mission-Immunity.pdf. See also Bouhadi v. Breish [2016] EWHC 602 (Comm), para. 43.

⁴²⁶ See further below, chapter 8, p. 355. ⁴²⁷ [1993] QB 54, 64–8; 94 ILR, pp. 608, 618–23.

became part of the evidence in the case. In so far as the three letters concerned statements as to what was happening in the country, 'such letters may not be the best evidence', but in so far as they dealt with the question as to whether and to what extent the UK government had dealings with the foreign government, such letters 'will almost certainly be the best and only conclusive evidence of that fact'.⁴²⁸

The United States State Department similarly offers 'suggestions' on such matters, although they tend to be more extensive than their British counterparts, and include comments upon the issues and occasionally the views of the executive rather than bare facts without legal conclusions.⁴²⁹ These are accepted as binding.⁴³⁰

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

- C. A. Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2015
 S. Fatima, Using International Law in Domestic Courts, Oxford, 2005
 D. Feldman, 'Monism, Dualism and Constitutional Legitimacy', 20 Australian YIL, 1999, p. 105
International Law and Domestic Legal Systems (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2011
International Law in the US Supreme Court (ed. D. L. Sloss, M. D. Ramsey and W. S. Dodge), Cambridge, 2011
 C. McLachlan, Foreign Relations Law, Cambridge, 2014
 Y. Shany, Regulating Jurisdictional Relations Between National and International Courts, Oxford, 2007

⁴²⁸ [1993] QB 54, 65; 94 ILR, pp. 608, 619. See also Sierra Leone Telecommunications Co. Ltd v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821; 114 ILR, p. 466; and North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London [2005] EWHC 1698 (Admin).

⁴²⁹ O'Connell, International Law, pp. 119–22. See The Pisaro 255 US 216 (1921); Anderson v. NV Transandine Handelmaatschappij 289 NY 9 (1942); 10 AD, p. 10; Mexico v. Hoffman 324 US 30 (1945); 12 AD, p. 143; the Navemar 303 US 68 (1938); and Samantar v. Yousef (2010) 130 S.Ct. 2278. See also M. Chorazak, 'Clarity and Confusion: Did Republic of Austria v. Altmann Revive State Department Suggestions of Foreign Sovereign Immunity?', 55 Duke Law Journal, 2005, p. 373; and H. Koh, 'Foreign Official Immunity After Samantar: A US Government Perspective', 44 Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law, 2011, p. 1141.

⁴³⁰ See, e.g., Manoharan v. Rajapaksa 711 F.3d 178, 179 (D.C. Cir. 2013); Habyarimana v. Kagame 696 F.3d 1029, 1031–3 (10th Cir. 2012); Giraldo v. Drummond Co. 493 F. App'x 106 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (per curiam), cert. denied, 133 S.Ct. 1637 (2013); Matar v. Dichter 563 F.3d 9, 13–15 (2d Cir. 2009); Ye v. Zemin 383 F.3d 620, 625, 627 (7th Cir. 2004); Doe v. Zedillo, No. 3:11-cv-01433-MPS (D. Conn. July 18, 2013); and Rosenberg v. Lashkar-e-Taiba, No. 1:10-cv-5381-DLI-CLP, 2013 WL 5502851, at *5–*7 (E.D.N.Y. Sept. 30, 2013).

5

The Subjects of International Law

LEGAL PERSONALITY – INTRODUCTION

In any legal system, certain entities, whether they be individuals or companies, will be regarded as possessing rights and duties enforceable at law.¹ Thus an individual may prosecute or be prosecuted for assault and a company can sue for breach of contract. They are able to do this because the law recognises them as 'legal persons' possessing the capacity to have and to maintain certain rights, and being subject to perform specific duties. Just which persons will be entitled to what rights in what circumstances will depend upon the scope and character of the law. But it is the function of the law to apportion such rights and duties to such entities as it sees fit. Legal personality is crucial. Without it institutions and groups cannot operate, for they need to be able to maintain and enforce claims. In municipal law individuals, limited companies and public corporations are recognised as each possessing a distinct legal personality, the terms of which are circumscribed by the relevant legislation.² It is the law which will determine the scope and nature of personality. Personality involves the examination of certain concepts within the law such as status, capacity, competence, as well as the nature and extent of particular rights and duties. The status of a particular entity may well be determinative of certain powers and obligations, while capacity will link together the status of a person with particular rights and duties. The whole process operates within the confines of the relevant legal system, which circumscribes personality, its nature and definition. This is especially true in international law. A particular view adopted of the system will invariably reflect upon the question of the identity and nature of international legal persons.³

¹ See e.g. R. Portmann, Legal Personality in International Law, Cambridge, 2010; J. E. Nijman, The Concept of International Legal Personality, The Hague, 2004; Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (ed. J. Crawford), 8th edn, Oxford, 2012, part II; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006; D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I; J. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1969, vol. II; O. Lissitzyn, 'Territorial Entities other than Independent States in the Law of Treaties', 125 HR, 1968, p. 5; H. Lauterpacht, International Law: Collected Papers, Cambridge, 1975, vol. II, p. 487; C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1974, vol. II; N. Mugerwa, 'Subjects of International Law', in Manual of Public International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, p. 247; G. Schwarzenberger, International Law, 3rd edn, London, 1957, vol. I, p. 89; A. Cassese, International Law in a Divided World, Oxford, 1986, chapter 4, and Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, part II; International Law: Achievements and Prospects (ed. M. Bedjaoui), Paris, 1991, part 1, title 1; Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 2; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 3; and S. Rosenne, 'The Perplexities of Modern International Law', 291 HR, 2001, chapter VII.

² R. Dias, Jurisprudence, 5th edn, London, 1985, chapter 12.

³ See, for example, the Soviet view: G. I. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974.

Personality in international law necessitates the consideration of the interrelationship between rights and duties afforded under the international system and capacity to enforce claims. One needs to have close regard to the rules of international law in order to determine the precise nature of the capacity of the entity in question. Certain preliminary issues need to be faced. Does the personality of a particular claimant, for instance, depend upon its possession of the capacity to enforce rights? Indeed, is there any test of the nature of enforcement, or can even the most restrictive form of operation on the international scene be sufficient? One view suggests, for example, that while the quality of responsibility for violation of a rule usually co-exists with the quality of being able to enforce a complaint against a breach in any legal person, it would be useful to consider those possessing one of these qualities as indeed having juridical personality.⁴ Other writers, on the other hand, emphasise the crucial role played by the element of enforceability of rights within the international system.⁵

However, a range of factors needs to be carefully examined before it can be determined whether an entity has international personality and, if so, what rights, duties and competences apply in the particular case. Personality is a relative phenomenon varying with the circumstances. One of the distinguishing characteristics of contemporary international law has been the wide range of participants. These include states, international organisations, regional organisations, non-governmental organisations, public companies, private companies and individuals. To these may be added groups engaging in international terrorism. Not all such entities will constitute legal persons, although they may act with some degree of influence upon the international plane. International personality is participation plus some form of community acceptance. The latter element will be dependent upon many different factors, including the type of personality under question. It may be manifested in many forms and may in certain cases be inferred from practice. It will also reflect a need. Particular branches of international law here are playing a crucial role. Human rights law, the law relating to armed conflicts and international economic law are especially important in generating and reflecting increased participation and personality in international law. Groups, entities and individuals not constituting states are often referred to as non-state actors, a term which brings together a large and increasing collection of those affecting or affected by international law in a manner which perhaps does not fully recognise the many differences between such persons.⁶

STATES

Despite the increasing range of actors and participants in the international legal system, states remain by far the most important legal persons and, despite the rise of globalisation and all that ⁴ See e.g. M. Sørensen, 'Principes de Droit International Public', 101 HR, 1960, pp. 5, 127. For a wider definition, see H. Mosler, The International Society as a Legal Community, Dordrecht, 1980, p. 32.

⁵ See e.g. Verzijl, International Law, p. 3.

⁶ See generally Participants in the International Legal System: Multiple Perspectives on Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. J. d'Aspremont), London, 2011; Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. M. Nortmann, A. Reinisch and C. Ryngaert), London, 2015; and R. McCorquodale, 'Defining the International Rule of Law: Defying Gravity?', 65 ICLQ, 2016, p. 277. There are varying definitions of non-state actors: some regard them as simply actors that are not state, more elaborate definitions refer inter alia to absence of state control, actual performance of functions in the international law arena and legally recognised and organized entities; see also International Law Association, Committee on Non-State Actors, Draft Final Report 2016, para. 17 and following, www.ila-hq.org/en/committees/index.cfm/cid/1023.

this entails, states retain their attraction as the primary focus for the social activity of humankind and thus for international law.

Lauterpacht observed that: 'the orthodox positivist doctrine has been explicit in the affirmation that only states are subjects of international law'.⁷ However, it is less clear that in practice this position was maintained. The Holy See (particularly from 1871 to 1929), insurgents and belligerents, international organisations, chartered companies and various territorial entities such as the League of Cities were all at one time or another treated as possessing the capacity to become international persons.⁸

Creation of statehood⁹

The relationship in this area between factual and legal criteria is a crucial shifting one. Whether the birth of a new state is primarily a question of fact or law and how the interaction between the criteria of effectiveness and other relevant legal principles may be reconciled are questions of considerable complexity and significance. Since terrae nullius are no longer apparent,¹⁰ the creation of new states in the future, once the decolonisation process is at an end, can only be accomplished as a result of the diminution or disappearance of existing states, and the need for careful regulation thus arises. Recent events such as the break-up of the Soviet Union, the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia underline this. In addition, the decolonisation movement has stimulated a re-examination of the traditional criteria. Article 1 of the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933¹¹ lays down the most widely accepted formulation of the criteria of statehood in international law. It notes that the state as an international person should possess the following qualifications: '(a) a permanent population; (b) a defined territory; (c) government; and (d) capacity to enter into relations with other states'.

The Arbitration Commission of the European Conference on Yugoslavia¹² in Opinion No. 1 declared that 'the state is commonly defined as a community which consists of a territory and a population subject to an organised political authority' and that 'such a state is characterised by sovereignty'. It was also noted that the form of internal political organisation and constitutional ⁷ Lauterpacht, International Law, p. 489.

⁸ See Verzijl, International Law, pp. 17–43, and Lauterpacht, International Law, pp. 494–500. See also the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 39; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 56; and Survey of International Law in Relation to the Work of Codification of the International Law Commission, Memorandum of the Secretary-General, 1949, A/CN.4/1/Rev.1, p. 24.

⁹ See in particular Crawford, Creation of States, chapter 2; R. Higgins, The Development of International Law through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963, pp. 11–57; K. Marek, Identity and Continuity of States in Public International Law, 2nd edn, Leiden, 1968; N. Caspersen, Unrecognised States, Cambridge, 2012; A. Duxbury, The Participation of States in International Organisations, Cambridge, 2013; M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1963, vol. I, pp. 221–33, 283–476; and P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, p. 449. See also Société Française pour le Droit International, L'État Souverain, Paris, 1994; L. Henkin, International Law: Politics and Values, Dordrecht, 1995, chapter 1; A. James, Sovereign Statehood: The Basis of International Society, London, 1986; and J. Vidmar, Democratic Statehood in International Law, Oxford, 2013.

¹⁰ See, as regards Antarctica, O'Connell, International Law, p. 451. See also below, chapter 9, p. 397.

¹¹ 165 LNTS 19. International law does not require the structure of a state to follow any particular pattern: Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 60–1.

¹² Established pursuant to the Declaration of 27 August 1991 of the European Community: see Bull. EC, 7/8 (1991). See generally, M. Craven, 'The EC Arbitration Commission on Yugoslavia', 65 BYIL, 1994, p. 333, and below, p. 159.

provisions constituted 'mere facts', although it was necessary to take them into account in order to determine the government's sway over the population and the territory.¹³

Such provisions are neither exhaustive nor immutable. As will be seen below, other factors may be relevant, including self-determination and recognition, while the relative weight given to such criteria in particular situations may very well vary. What is clear, however, is that the relevant framework revolves essentially around territorial effectiveness.

The existence of a permanent population¹⁴ is naturally required and there is no specification of a minimum number of inhabitants, as examples such as Nauru and Tuvalu¹⁵ demonstrate. However, one of the issues raised by the Falkland Islands conflict does relate to the question of an acceptable minimum with regard to self-determination issues,¹⁶ and it may be that the matter needs further clarification as there exists a number of small islands awaiting decolonisation.¹⁷

The need for a defined territory focuses upon the requirement for a particular territorial base upon which to operate. However, there is no necessity in international law for defined and settled boundaries. A state may be recognised as a legal person even though it is involved in a dispute with its neighbours as to the precise demarcation of its frontiers, so long as there is a consistent band of territory which is undeniably controlled by the government of the alleged state. For this reason at least, therefore, the 'State of Palestine' declared in November 1988 at a conference in Algiers cannot be regarded as a valid state. The Palestinian organisations did not control any part of the territory they claim.¹⁸

Albania prior to the First World War was recognised by many countries even though its borders were in dispute.¹⁹ More recently, Israel has been accepted by the majority of nations as well as the United Nations as a valid state despite the fact that its frontiers have not been finally settled and despite its involvement in hostilities with its Arab neighbours over its existence and territorial delineation.²⁰ What matters is the presence of a stable community within a certain ¹³ 92 ILR, pp. 162, 165. Note that Oppenheim's International Law, p. 120, provides that 'a state proper is in existence when a people is settled in a territory under its own sovereign government'.

¹⁴ A nomadic population might not thus count for the purposes of territorial sovereignty, although the International Court in the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 63–5; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 80–2, held that nomadic peoples did have certain rights with regard to the land they traversed.

¹⁵ Populations of some 12,000 and 10,000 respectively: see Whitaker's Almanack, London, 2003, pp. 1010 and 1089.

¹⁶ See below, p. 162.

¹⁷ But see, as regards artificial islands, United States v. Ray 51 ILR, p. 225; Chierici and Rosa v. Ministry of the Merchant Navy and Harbour Office of Rimini 71 ILR, p. 283; and Re Duchy of Sealand 80 ILR, p. 683. See also chapter 10, p. 419.

¹⁸ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 36438 (1989). See also General Assembly resolution 43/77; R. Lapidot and K. Calvo-Goller, 'Les Éléments Constitutifs de l'État et la Déclaration du Conseil National Palestinien du 15 Novembre 1988', AFDI, 1992, p. 777; J. Crawford, 'The Creation of the State of Palestine: Too Much Too Soon?', 1 EJIL, 1990, p. 307, and Crawford, 'Israel (1948–1949) and Palestine (1998–1999): Two Studies in the Creation of States', in The Reality of International Law (ed. G. Goodwin-Gill and S. Talmon), Oxford, 1999, p. 95. See below, p. 186, with regard to the evolution of Palestinian autonomy in the light of the Israel–Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) Declaration on Principles.

¹⁹ See e.g. the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32.

²⁰ In fact most of the new states emerging after the First World War were recognised de facto or de jure before their frontiers were determined by treaty: H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1948, p. 30. See Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State (1929), 5 AD, pp. 11, 15; the Mosul Boundary case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 12, p. 21; the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 32; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 62; and the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 22 and 26; 100 ILR, pp. 5, 21 and 25. See also Jessup speaking on behalf of the US regarding Israel's admission to the UN, SCOR, 3rd year, 383rd meeting, p. 41. The Minister of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in a statement on 5 February 1991, UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 557, noted that the UK 'recognises many states whose borders are not fully agreed with their neighbours'. See as to the doctrine of uti possidetis, the presumption that on independence entities will retain existing boundaries, below, chapter 9, p. 391.

area, even though its frontiers may be uncertain. Indeed, it is possible for the territory of the state to be split into distinct parts, for example Pakistan prior to the Bangladesh secession of 1971 or present-day Azerbaijan.

For a political society to function reasonably effectively it needs some form of government or central control. However, this is not a precondition for recognition as an independent country.²¹ It should be regarded more as an indication of some sort of coherent political structure and society, than the necessity for a sophisticated apparatus of executive and legislative organs.²² A relevant factor here might be the extent to which the area not under the control of the government is claimed by another state as a matter of international law as distinct from de facto control. The general requirement might be seen to relate to the nineteenth-century concern with 'civilisation' as an essential of independent statehood and ignores the modern tendency to regard sovereignty for non-independent peoples as the paramount consideration, irrespective of administrative conditions.²³

As an example of the former tendency one may note the Aaland Islands case of 1920. The report of the International Committee of Jurists appointed to investigate the status of the islands remarked, with regard to the establishment of the Finnish Republic in the disordered days following the Russian revolution, that it was extremely difficult to name the date that Finland became a sovereign state. It was noted that:

[t]his certainly did not take place until a stable political organisation had been created, and until the public authorities had become strong enough to assert themselves throughout the territories of the state without the assistance of the foreign troops.²⁴

Recent practice with regard to the new states of Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina emerging out of the former Yugoslavia suggests the modification of the criterion of effective exercise of control by a government throughout its territory. Both Croatia and Bosnia and Herzegovina were recognised as independent states by European Community member states²⁵ and admitted to membership of the United Nations (which is limited to 'states' by article 4 of the UN Charter²⁶)²⁷ at a time when both states were faced with a situation where non-governmental forces controlled ²¹ See e.g. the Congo case, Higgins, Development, pp. 162–4, and C. Hoskyns, The Congo Since Independence, Oxford, 1965. See also Higgins, Problems and Process, p. 40, and Nguyen Quoc Dinh et al., Droit International Public, pp. 415 ff.

²² See the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 60–1.

²³ See below, p. 198, on the right to self-determination.

²⁴ LNOJ Sp. Supp. No. 4 (1920), pp. 8–9. But cf. the view of the Commission of Rapporteurs in this case, LN Council Doc. B7 21/68/106 (1921), p. 22.

²⁵ On 15 January 1992 and 6 April 1992 respectively: see Keesing's Record of World Events, 1992, pp. 38703, 38704 and 38833. But see the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission's Opinion No. 5 of 11 January 1992 noting that Croatia had not met the requirements laid down in the Draft Convention on Yugoslavia of 4 November 1991 and in the Declaration on Yugoslavia and Guidelines on the Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union of 16 December 1991: see 92 ILR, p. 178. Opinion No. 4 expressed reservations concerning the independence of Bosnia and Herzegovina pending the holding of a referendum. A referendum showing a majority for independence, however, was held prior to recognition by the EC member states and admission by the UN, ibid., p. 173. See also below, p. 342.

²⁶ See e.g. V. Gowlland-Debbas, 'Collective Responses to the Unilateral Declarations of Independence of Southern Rhodesia and Palestine', 61 BYIL, 1990, p. 135.

²⁷ On 22 May 1992. See M. Weller, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 569.

substantial areas of the territories in question in civil war conditions. More recently, Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008 with certain Serb-inhabited areas apparently not under the control of the central government.²⁸ In such situations, lack of effective central control might be balanced by significant international recognition, culminating in membership of the UN. Nevertheless, a foundation of effective control is required for statehood. Conversely, however, a comprehensive breakdown in order and the loss of control by the central authorities in an independent state will not obviate statehood. Whatever the consequences in terms of possible humanitarian involvement, whether by the UN or otherwise depending upon the circumstances, the collapse of governance within a state (sometimes referred to as a 'failed state') has no necessary effect upon the status of that state as a state. Indeed the very designation of 'failed state' is controversial and, in terms of international law, misleading.²⁹

The capacity to enter into relations with other states is an aspect of the existence of the entity in question as well as an indication of the importance attached to recognition by other countries. It is a capacity not limited to sovereign nations, since international organisations, non-independent states and other bodies can enter into legal relations with other entities under the rules of international law. But it is essential for a sovereign state to be able to create such legal relations with other units as it sees fit. Where this is not present, the entity cannot be an independent state. The concern here is not with political pressure by one country over another, but rather the lack of competence to enter into legal relations. The difference is the presence or absence of legal capacity, not the degree of influence that may affect decisions.

The essence of such capacity is independence. This is crucial to statehood and amounts to a conclusion of law in the light of particular circumstances. It is a formal statement that the state is subject to no other sovereignty and is unaffected either by factual dependence upon other states or by submission to the rules of international law.³⁰ It is arguable that a degree of actual as well as formal independence may also be necessary. This question was raised in relation to the grant of independence by South Africa to its Bantustans. In the case of the Transkei, for example, a considerable proportion, perhaps 90 per cent, of its budget at one time was contributed by South Africa, while Bophuthatswana was split into a series of areas divided by South African territory.³¹ Both the Organization of African Unity and the United Nations declared such 'independence' invalid and called upon all states not to recognise the new entities. These entities were, apart from South Africa, totally unrecognised.³² However, many states are as dependent upon aid from other states, and economic success would not have altered the attitude of the international community. Since South Africa as a sovereign state was able to alienate parts of its own territory under international law, these entities would appear in the light of the formal ²⁸ See further below, p. 161.

²⁹ See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 719–22; S. Ratner, 'The Cambodia Settlement Agreements', 87 AJIL, 1993, p. 1; and T. M. Franck, 'The Democratic Entitlement', 29 University of Richmond Law Review, 1994, p. 1.

³⁰ See Austro-German Customs Union case (1931) PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, pp. 41 (Court's Opinion) and 57–8 (Separate Opinion of Judge Anzilotti); 6 AD, pp. 26, 28. See also Marek, Identity, pp. 166–80; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 62 ff.; and Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 53, 93.

³¹ This was cited as one of the reasons for UK non-recognition, by the Minister of State, FCO: see UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 507–8.

³² The 1993 South African Constitution provided for the repeal of all laws concerning apartheid, including the four Status Acts which purported to create the 'independent states' of the four Bantustans, thus effectively reincorporating these areas into South Africa: see J. Dugard, International Law – A South African Perspective, Kenwyn, 1994, p. 346.

criteria of statehood to have been formally independent. However, it is suggested that the answer as to their status lay elsewhere than in an elucidation of this category of the criteria of statehood. It lay rather in understanding that actions taken in order to pursue an illegal policy, such as apartheid, cannot be sustained.³³

An example of the complexities that may attend such a process is provided by the unilateral declaration of independence by Lithuania, one of the Baltic states unlawfully annexed by the Soviet Union in 1940, on 11 March 1990.³⁴ The 1940 annexation was never recognised de jure by the Western states and thus the control exercised by the USSR was accepted only upon a de facto basis. The 1990 declaration of independence was politically very sensitive, coming at a time of increasing disintegration within the Soviet Union, but went unrecognised by any state. In view of the continuing constitutional crisis within the USSR and the possibility of a new confederal association freely accepted by the fifteen Soviet republics, it was at that time premature to talk of Lithuania as an independent state, not least because the Soviet authorities maintained substantial control within that territory.³⁵ The independence of Lithuania and the other Baltic States was recognised during 1991 by a wide variety of states, including crucially the Soviet Union.³⁶

It is possible, however, for a state to be accepted as independent even though, exceptionally, certain functions of government are placed in the hands of an outside body. In the case of Bosnia and Herzegovina, for example, the Dayton Peace Agreement of 1995 provided for a High Representative to be appointed as the 'final authority in theatre' with regard to the implementation of the agreement,³⁷ and the High Representative has, for example, removed a number of persons from public office. None of this has been understood by the international community to affect Bosnia's status as an independent state, but the arrangement did arise as an attempt to reach and implement a peace agreement in the context of a bitter civil war with third-party intervention. More controversially, after a period of international administration,³⁸ Kosovo declared its independence on 17 February 2008, noting specifically that it accepted the obligations for Kosovo under the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement (the Ahtisaari Plan).³⁹ This Plan called for 'independence with international supervision' and the obligations for Kosovo included human rights and decentralisation guarantees together with an international presence to supervise implementation of the Settlement. The provisions of the Settlement were to take precedence over all other legal ³³ See M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa: International Legal Issues, Oxford, 1986, pp. 161–2. See also OAU Resolution CM.Res.493 (XXVII), General Assembly resolution 31/61A and Security Council statements on 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981. Note that the Minister of State at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office declared that 'the very existence of Bophuthatswana is a consequence of apartheid and I think that that is the principal reason why recognition has not been forthcoming', 126 HC Deb., cols. 760–1, 3 February 1988.

³⁴ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37299 (1990).

³⁵ See e.g. the view of the UK government, 166 HC Deb., col. 697, Written Answers, 5 February 1990.

³⁶ See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994, pp. 119 ff.

³⁷ See Annex 10 of the Dayton Peace Agreement. See also R. Caplan, 'International Authority and State Building: The Case of Bosnia and Herzegovina', 10 Global Governance, 2004, p. 53, and International Crisis Group, Bosnia: Reshaping the International Machinery, November 2001. The High Representative is nominated by the Steering Board of the Peace Implementation Council, a group of fifty-five countries and international organisations that sponsor and direct the peace implementation process, and this nomination is then endorsed by the Security Council. See further below, p. 181.

³⁸ See, as to the international administration of Kosovo, below, p. 182 and, as to recognition, below, chapter 8, p. 335.

³⁹ See www.assembly-kosova.org/?krye=newsnewsid=1635a&lang=en.

provisions in Kosovo. The international presence was to take the form of an International Civilian Representative (ICR), who would also be the European Union Special Representative, to be appointed by the International Steering Group.⁴⁰ The ICR would be the final authority in Kosovo regarding interpretation of the civilian aspects of the Settlement and, in particular, would have the ability to annul decisions or laws adopted by the Kosovo authorities and sanction and remove public officials whose actions were determined to be inconsistent with the Settlement terms.⁴¹ In addition, an international military presence, led by NATO, would ensure a safe environment throughout Kosovo.⁴²

Self-Determination and the Criteria of Statehood

It is the criterion of government which, as suggested above, has been most affected by the development of the legal right to self-determination. The traditional exposition of the criterion concentrated upon the stability and effectiveness needed for this factor to be satisfied,⁴³ while the representative and democratic nature of the government has also been put forward as a requirement. The evolution of self-determination has affected the standard necessary as far as the actual exercise of authority is concerned, so that it appears a lower level of effectiveness, at least in decolonisation situations, has been accepted.⁴⁴ This can be illustrated by reference to a couple of cases.

The former Belgian Congo became independent on 30 June 1960 in the midst of widespread tribal fighting which had spread to the capital. Within a few weeks the Force Publique had mutinied, Belgian troops had intervened and the province of Katanga announced its secession. Notwithstanding the virtual breakdown of government, the Congo was recognised by a large number of states after independence and was admitted to the UN as a member state without opposition. Indeed, at the time of the relevant General Assembly resolution in September 1960, two different factions of the Congo government sought to be accepted by the UN as the legitimate representatives of the state. In the event, the delegation authorised by the head of state was accepted and that of the Prime Minister rejected.⁴⁵ A rather different episode occurred with regard to the Portuguese colony of Guinea-Bissau. In 1972, a UN Special Mission was dispatched to the 'liberated areas' of the territory and concluded that the colonial power had lost effective administrative control of large areas of the territory.⁴⁶ On 24 September 1973, the PAIGC proclaimed the Republic of Guinea Bissau an independent state. The issue of the 'illegal occupation by Portuguese military forces of certain sections of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau' came before the General Assembly and a number of states affirmed the validity of the independence of the new state in international law. Western states

⁴⁰ To consist of France, Germany, Italy, Russia, the UK, the US, the EU, the European Commission and NATO.

⁴¹ See S/2007/168 and S/2007/168/Add.1. Annex IX of the latter document details the role of the ICR.

⁴² See Annex XI. An EU Rule of Law Mission (EULEX) was established on 16 February 2008 to support the Kosovan authorities. In the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence in Respect of Kosovo, the Court found that the declaration of independence was not contrary to international law: ICJ Reports, 2010, p. 403.

⁴³ See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 28. ⁴⁴ See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 107 ff.

⁴⁵ Keesing's Contemporary Archives, pp. 17594–5 and 17639–40, and Hoskyns, Congo, pp. 96–9.

⁴⁶ Yearbook of the UN, 1971, pp. 566–7, and A/AC.109/L.804, p. 19. See also A/8723/Rev.1 and Assembly resolution 2918 (XXVII).

denied that the criteria of statehood had been fulfilled. However, ninety-three states voted in favour of Assembly resolution 3061 (XXVIII) which mentioned 'the recent accession to independence of the people of Guinea-Bissau thereby creating the sovereign state of the Republic of Guinea-Bissau'.⁴⁷

In addition to modifying the traditional principle with regard to the effectiveness of government in certain circumstances, the principle of self-determination may also be relevant as an additional criterion of statehood. In the case of Rhodesia, UN resolutions denied the legal validity of the unilateral declaration of independence on 11 November 1965 and called upon member states not to recognise it.⁴⁸ No state did recognise Rhodesia and a civil war ultimately resulted in its transformation into the recognised state of Zimbabwe. Rhodesia might have been regarded as a state by virtue of its satisfaction of the factual requirements of statehood, but this is a dubious proposition. The evidence of complete non-recognition, the strenuous denunciations of its purported independence by the international community and the developing civil war militate strongly against this. It could be argued, on the other hand, that, in the absence of recognition, no entity could become a state, but this constitutive theory of recognition is not acceptable.⁴⁹ The best approach is to accept the development of self-determination as an additional criterion of statehood, denial of which would obviate statehood. This can only be acknowledged in relation to self-determination situations and would not operate in cases, for example, of secessions from existing states.⁵⁰ In other words, in the case of an entity seeking to become a state and accepted by the international community as being entitled to exercise the right of self-determination, it may well be necessary to demonstrate that the internal requirements of the principle have not been offended. One cannot define this condition too rigorously in view of state practice to date, but it would appear to be a sound proposition that systematic and institutionalised discrimination might invalidate a claim to statehood.

In particular, one may point to the practice of the international community concerning the successor states to the former Yugoslavia. The European Community adopted Guidelines on Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union on 16 December 1991,⁵¹ which constituted a common position on the process of recognition of such new states and referred specifically to the principle of self-determination. The Guidelines underlined the need to respect the rule of law, democracy and human rights and mentioned specifically the requirement for guarantees for the rights of minorities. Although these Guidelines deal with the issue of recognition and not as such the criteria for statehood, the two are interlinked and conditions required for recognition may in the circumstances, especially where expressed in general and not specific terms, often in practice be interpreted as additions to the criteria for statehood.

⁴⁷ See GAOR, 28th Session, General Committee, 213rd meeting, pp. 25–6, 28, 30 and 31; GAOR, 28th session, plenary, 2156th meeting, pp. 8, 12 and 16, and 2157th meeting, pp. 22–5 and 65–7. See also Yearbook of the UN, 1973, pp. 143–7, and CDDH/SR.4, pp. 33–7. See also the Western Sahara situation, below, p. 185, and the recognition of Angola in 1975 despite the continuing civil war between the three liberation movements nominally allied in a government of national unity: see Shaw, Title, pp. 155–6.

⁴⁸ E.g. General Assembly resolutions 2024 (XX) and 2151 (XXI) and Security Council resolutions 216 (1965) and 217 (1966). See R. Higgins, The World Today, 1967, p. 94, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 129 ff. See also Shaw, Title.

⁴⁹ Below, chapter 8, p. 330. ⁵⁰ See further below, pp. 171 and 188.

⁵¹ For the text see 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 1486–7 and 92 ILR, p. 173.

Recognition

Recognition is a method of accepting certain factual situations and endowing them with legal significance, but this relationship is a complicated one. In the context of the creation of statehood, recognition may be viewed as constitutive or declaratory, as will be noted in more detail in chapter 8. The former theory maintains that it is only through recognition that a state comes into being under international law, whereas the latter approach maintains that once the factual criteria of statehood have been satisfied, a new state exists as an international person, recognition becoming merely a political and not a legal act in this context. Various modifications have been made to these theories, but the role of recognition, at the least in providing strong evidential demonstration of satisfaction of the relevant criteria, must be acknowledged. In many situations, expressed requirements for recognition may be seen as impacting upon the question of statehood as the comments in the previous section on the EC Guidelines indicate. There is also an integral relationship between recognition and the criteria for statehood in the sense that the more overwhelming the scale of international recognition is in any given situation, the less may be demanded in terms of the objective demonstration of adherence to the criteria. Conversely, the more sparse international recognition is, the more attention will be focused upon proof of actual adherence to the criteria concerned.

Extinction of Statehood⁵²

Extinction of statehood may take place as a consequence of merger, absorption or, historically, annexation. It may also occur as a result of the dismemberment of an existing state.⁵³ In general, caution needs to be exercised before the dissolution of a state is internationally accepted.⁵⁴ While the disappearance, like the existence, of a state is a matter of fact,⁵⁵ it is a matter of fact that is legally conditioned in that it is international law that will apportion particular legal consequences to particular factual situations and the appreciation of these facts will take place within a certain legal framework.

While it is not unusual for governments to disappear, it is rather rarer for states to become extinct. This will not happen in international law as a result of the illegal use of force, as the Kuwait crisis of August 1990 and the consequent United Nations response clearly demonstrates,⁵⁶ nor as a consequence of internal upheavals within a state,⁵⁷ but it may occur by consent. Three recent examples may be noted. On 22 May 1990, North and South Yemen united, or merged, to form one state, the Republic of Yemen,⁵⁸ while on 3 October 1990, the two German states reunified as a result of the constitutional accession of the Länder of the ⁵² See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 700 ff., and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 206. See also H. Ruiz-Fabri, 'Genèse et Disparition de l'État à l'Époque Contemporaine', AFDI, 1992, p. 153.

⁵³ Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 206–7. Extinction of statehood may also take place as a consequence of the geographical disappearance of the territory of the state: see e.g. with regard to the precarious situation of Tuvalu, Guardian, 29 October 2001, p. 17.

⁵⁴ See e.g. Yugoslav Arbitration Commission, Opinion No. 8, 92 ILM, pp. 199, 201. ⁵⁵ Ibid.

⁵⁶ See further below, chapter 21, p. 950.

⁵⁷ Such as Somalia since the early 1990s: see e.g. Security Council resolutions 751 (1992); 767 (1992); 794 (1992); 814 (1993); 837 (1993); 865 (1993); 885 (1993); and 886 (1993). See also Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 412 ff.

⁵⁸ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37470 (1990). See also 30 ILM, 1991, p. 820, and R. Goy, 'La Réunification du Yémen', AFDI, 1990, p. 249.

German Democratic Republic to the Federal Republic of Germany.⁵⁹ The dissolution of Czechoslovakia⁶⁰ on 1 January 1993 and the establishment of the two new states of the Czech Republic and Slovakia constitutes a further example of the dismemberment, or disappearance, of a state.⁶¹

During 1991, the process of disintegration of the Soviet Union gathered force as the Baltic states reasserted their independence⁶² and the other Republics of the USSR stated their intention to become sovereign. In December of that year, the Commonwealth of Independent States was proclaimed, and it was stated in the Alma Ata Declaration⁶³ that, with the establishment of the CIS, 'the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics ceases to exist'. The states of the CIS agreed to support 'Russia's continuance of the membership of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Nations, including permanent membership of the Security Council, and other international organisations'.⁶⁴ It has been commonly accepted that Russia constitutes a continuation of the USSR, with consequential adjustments to take account of the independence of the other former Republics of the Soviet Union.⁶⁵ It is therefore a case of dismemberment basically consisting of the transformation of an existing state. The disappearance of the USSR was accompanied by the claim, internationally accepted, of the Russian Federation to be the continuation of that state. While the element of continuity is crucial in the framework of the rules of state succession,⁶⁶ it does constitute a complication in the context of extinction of states.

By way of contrast, not all the relevant parties accepted that the process of dissolution of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia during 1991–2 resulted in the dissolution of that state.⁶⁷ The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, comprising the former Republics of Serbia and Montenegro, saw itself as the continuation of the former state within reduced boundaries, while the other former Republics disputed this and maintained rather that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was a successor to the former Yugoslavia precisely on the same basis as the other former Republics such as Croatia, Slovenia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina. The matter was discussed by the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission. In Opinion No. 1 of 29 November 1991, it was noted that at that stage the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia was 'in the process of dissolution'.⁶⁸ However, in Opinion No. 8, adopted on 4 July 1992, the Arbitration Commission stated that the process of dissolution had been completed and that the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (SFRY) no longer existed. This conclusion was reached on the basis of the fact that Slovenia, Croatia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina had been recognised as new states, the republics of Serbia and Montenegro had adopted a new constitution for the 'Federal Republic of Yugoslavia' and UN resolutions had been adopted referring to 'the former ⁵⁹ See below, p. 178. See also C. Schrike, 'L'Unification Allemande', AFDI, 1990, p. 47, and W. Czaplinski, 'Quelques Aspects sur la Réunification de l'Allemagne', AFDI, 1990, p. 89.

⁶⁰ Termed at that stage the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic.

⁶¹ See e.g. J. Malenovsky, 'Problèmes Juridiques Liés à la Partition de la Tchécoslovaquie', AFDI, 1993, p. 305.

⁶² See L. Kherad, 'La Reconnaissance Internationale des États Baltes', RGDIP, 1992, p. 843.

⁶³ See 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 148–9. ⁶⁴ Ibid., p. 151. ⁶⁵ See further below, p. 728. ⁶⁶ See below, chapter 16.

⁶⁷ See also A. Pellet, 'La Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yougoslavie', AFDI, 1991, p. 329; AFDI, 1992, p. 220, and AFDI, 1993, p. 286.

⁶⁸ 92 ILR, pp. 164–5. One should note the importance of the federal structure of the state in determining the factual situation regarding dissolution. The Arbitration Commission pointed out that in such cases 'the existence of the state implies that the federal organs represent the components of the Federation and wield effective power', ibid., p. 165.

SFRY'.⁶⁹ The Commission also emphasised that the existence of federal states was seriously compromised when a majority of the constituent entities, embracing a majority of the territory and population of the federal state, constitute themselves as sovereign states with the result that federal authority could no longer be effectively exercised.⁷⁰ The UN Security Council in resolution 777 (1992) stated that 'the state formerly known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has ceased to exist'. This was reiterated in resolution 1022 (1995) in which the Security Council, in welcoming the Dayton Peace Agreement (the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina) between the states of the former Yugoslavia and suspending the application of sanctions, stated that the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia 'has ceased to exist'. On 1 November 2000, Yugoslavia was admitted to the UN as a new member,⁷¹ following its request sent to the Security Council on 27 October 2000.⁷²

The Fundamental Rights of States

The fundamental rights of states exist by virtue of the international legal order, which is able, as in the case of other legal orders, to define the characteristics of its subjects.⁷³

Independence⁷⁴

Perhaps the outstanding characteristic of a state is its independence, or sovereignty. This was defined in the Draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States prepared in 1949 by the International Law Commission as the capacity of a state to provide for its own well-being and development free from the domination of other states, providing it does not impair or violate their legitimate rights.⁷⁵ By independence, one is referring to a legal concept and it is no deviation from independence to be subject to the rules of international law. Any political or economic dependence that may in reality exist does not affect the legal independence of the state, unless that state is formally compelled to submit to the demands of a superior state, in which case dependent status is concerned.

⁶⁹ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 752 and 757 (1992). See also the resolution adopted by the European Community at the Lisbon Council on 27 June 1992, quoted in part in Opinion No. 9, 92 ILR, pp. 204–5.

⁷⁰ 92 ILR, p. 201. In Opinions Nos. 9 and 10, the Arbitration Commission noted that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) could not consider itself as the continuation of the SFRY, but was instead one of the successors to that state on the same basis as the recognised new states: ibid., pp. 205 and 208.

⁷¹ General Assembly resolution 55/12.

⁷² See the Application for Revision of the Judgment of 11 July 1996 (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia), ICJ Reports, 2003, p. 7.

⁷³ See e.g. A. Kiss, Répertoire de la Pratique Française en Matière de Droit International Public, Paris, 1966, vol. II, pp. 21–50, and Survey of International Law, prepared by the UN Secretary-General, A/CN.4/245. See also O. Spiermann, 'General Legal Characteristics of States: A View from the Past of the Permanent Court of International Justice', in Sovereignty, Statehood and State Responsibility: Essays in Honour of James Crawford (ed. C. Chinkin and F. Baetens), Cambridge, 2015, p. 144, and A. Orakhelashvili, 'The Dynamics of Statehood in the Practice of International and English Courts', ibid., p. 172.

⁷⁴ Oppenheim's International Law, p. 382. See also N. Schrijver, 'The Changing Nature of State Sovereignty', 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 65; C. Rousseau, 'L'Indépendance de l'État dans l'Ordre International', 73 HR, 1948 II, p. 171; H. G. Gelber, Sovereignty Through Independence, The Hague, 1997; and Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 465.

⁷⁵ Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, p. 286. Judge Huber noted in the Island of Palmas case that 'independence in regard to a portion of the globe is the right to exercise therein, to the exclusion of any other state, the functions of a state', 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, p. 3.

A discussion on the meaning and nature of independence took place in the Austro-German Customs Union case before the Permanent Court of International Justice in 1931.⁷⁶ It concerned a proposal to create a free trade customs union between the two German-speaking states and whether this was incompatible with the 1919 Peace Treaties (coupled with a subsequent protocol of 1922) pledging Austria to take no action to compromise its independence. In the event, and in the circumstances of the case, the Court held that the proposed union would adversely affect Austria's sovereignty. Judge Anzilotti noted that restrictions upon a state's liberty, whether arising out of customary law or treaty obligations, do not as such affect its independence. As long as such restrictions do not place the state under the legal authority of another state, the former maintains its status as an independent country.⁷⁷

The Permanent Court emphasised in the Lotus case⁷⁸ that '[r]estrictions upon the independence of states cannot therefore be presumed'. A similar point in different circumstances was made by the International Court of Justice in the Nicaragua case,⁷⁹ where it was stated that 'in international law there are no rules, other than such rules as may be accepted by the state concerned, by treaty or otherwise, whereby the level of armaments of a sovereign state can be limited, and this principle is valid for all states without exception'. The Court also underlined in the *Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons*⁸⁰ that '[s]tate practice shows that the illegality of the use of certain weapons as such does not result from an absence of authorisation but, on the contrary, is formulated in terms of prohibition'. The starting point for the consideration of the rights and obligations of states within the international legal system remains that international law permits freedom of action for states, unless there is a rule constraining this. However, such freedom exists within and not outside the international legal system and it is therefore international law which dictates the scope and content of the independence of states and not the states themselves individually and unilaterally.

The notion of independence in international law implies a number of rights and duties: for example, the right of a state to exercise jurisdiction over its territory and permanent population, or the right to engage upon an act of self-defence in certain situations. It implies also the duty not to intervene in the internal affairs of other sovereign states. Precisely what constitutes the internal affairs of a state is open to dispute and is in any event a constantly changing standard. It was maintained by the Western powers for many years that any discussion or action by the United Nations⁸¹ with regard to their colonial possessions was contrary to international law.

However, this argument by the European colonial powers did not succeed and the United Nations examined many colonial situations.⁸² In addition, issues related to human rights and racial oppression do not now fall within the closed category of domestic jurisdiction. It was ⁷⁶ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, 1931; 6 AD, p. 26.

⁷⁷ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 41, 1931, p. 77 (dissenting); 6 AD, p. 30 See also the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries case (1910); Scott, Hague Court Reports, p. 141 at p. 170; and the Wimbledon case, PCIJ, Series A, No. 1, 1923, p. 25; 2 AD, p. 99.

⁷⁸ PCIJ, Series A, No. 10, 1927, p. 18; 4 AD, pp. 153, 155.

⁷⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 135; 76 ILR, pp. 349, 469. See also the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 238-9; 110 ILR, p. 163.

⁸⁰ ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 247; 110 ILR, p. 163.

⁸¹ Article 2(7) of the UN Charter provides that 'nothing in the present Charter shall authorise the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state'.

⁸² See Higgins, Development, pp. 58-130; M. Rajan, United Nations and Domestic Jurisdiction, 2nd edn, London, 1961; and H. Kelsen, Principles of International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1966.

stated on behalf of the European Community, for example, that the 'protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms can in no way be considered an interference in a state's internal affairs'. Reference was also made to 'the moral right to intervene whenever human rights are violated'.⁸³

This duty not to intervene in matters within the domestic jurisdiction of any state was included in the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations and Co-operation among States adopted in October 1970 by the United Nations General Assembly. It was emphasised that [n]o state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other state. Consequently, armed intervention and all other forms of interference or attempted threats against the personality of the state or against its political, economic and cultural elements, are in violation of international law.

The prohibition also covers any assistance or aid to subversive elements aiming at the violent overthrow of the government of a state. In particular, the use of force to deprive peoples of their national identity amounts to a violation of this principle of non-intervention.⁸⁴

The principles surrounding sovereignty, such as non-intervention, are essential in the maintenance of a reasonably stable system of competing states. Setting limits on the powers of states vis-à-vis other states contributes to some extent to a degree of stability within the legal order. As the International Court of Justice pointed out in the Corfu Channel case in 1949, 'between independent states, respect for territorial sovereignty is an essential foundation of international relations'.⁸⁵

By a similar token a state cannot purport to enforce its laws in the territory of another state without the consent of the state concerned. However, international law would seem to permit in some circumstances the state to continue to exercise its jurisdiction, notwithstanding the illegality of the apprehension.⁸⁶ It also follows that the presence of foreign troops on the territory of a sovereign state requires the consent of that state.⁸⁷

Equality⁸⁸

One other crucial principle is the legal equality of states, that is equality of legal rights and duties. States, irrespective of size or power, have the same juridical capacities and functions, and are likewise entitled to one vote in the United Nations General Assembly. The doctrine of the legal equality of states is an umbrella category for it includes within its scope the recognised rights and obligations which fall upon all states.

⁸³ E/CN.4/1991/SR. 43, p. 8, quoted in UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 556. See also statement of the European Community in 1992 to the same effect, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, pp. 635–6. By way of contrast, the Iranian fatwa condemning the British writer Salman Rushdie to death was criticised by the UK government as calling into question Iran's commitment to honour its obligations not to interfere in the internal affairs of the UK, ibid., p. 635. See also M. Reisman, 'Sovereignty and Human Rights in Contemporary International Law', 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 866.

⁸⁴ See also the use of force, below, chapter 19. ⁸⁵ ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 35; 16 AD, pp. 155, 167. See below, p. 427.

⁸⁶ See e.g. the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5. But see further below, p. 502.

⁸⁷ See the statement made on behalf of the European Community on 25 November 1992 with regard to the presence of Russian troops in the Baltic states, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 724.

⁸⁸ Oppenheim's International Law, p. 339, and Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 472.

This was recognised in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law. This provides that:

All states enjoy sovereign equality. They have equal rights and duties and are equal members of the international community, notwithstanding differences of an economic, social, political or other nature.

In particular, sovereign equality includes the following elements:

- (a) States are juridically equal;
- (b) Each state enjoys the rights inherent in full sovereignty;
- (c) Each state has the duty to respect the personality of other states;
- (d) The territorial integrity and political independence of the state are inviolable;
- (e) Each state has the right freely to choose and develop its political, social, economic and cultural systems;
- (f) Each state has the duty to comply fully and in good faith with its international obligations and to live in peace with other states.⁸⁹

In many respects this doctrine owes its origins to Natural Law thinking. Just as equality was regarded as the essence of man and thus contributed philosophically to the foundation of the state, so naturalist scholars treated equality as the natural condition of states. With the rise in positivism, the emphasis altered and, rather than postulating a general rule applicable to all and from which a series of rights and duties may be deduced, international lawyers concentrated upon the sovereignty of each and every state, and the necessity that international law be founded upon the consent of states.

The notion of equality before the law is accepted by states in the sense of equality of legal personality and capacity. However, it would not be strictly accurate to talk in terms of the equality of states in creating law. The major states will always have an influence commensurate with their status, if only because their concerns are much wider, their interests much deeper and their power more effective.⁹⁰

Within the General Assembly of the United Nations, the doctrine of equality is maintained by the rule of one state, one vote.⁹¹ However, one should not overlook the existence of the veto possessed by the USA, Russia, China, France and the United Kingdom in the Security Council.⁹²

Peaceful Co-Existence

This concept has been formulated in different ways and with different views as to its legal nature by the USSR, China and the Developing Countries. It was elaborated in 1954 as the Five Principles of Peaceful Co-existence by India and China, which concerned mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty, mutual non-aggression, non-interference in each other's affairs and the principle of equality.⁹³

⁸⁹ See also Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, Helsinki, 1975, Cmnd 6198, pp. 2–3. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 322–4; P. Kooijmans, The Doctrine of the Legal Equality of States, Leiden, 1964; and Marshall CJ, The Antelope, 10 Wheat., 1825, pp. 66, 122.

⁹⁰ See Daillier et al., Droit International Public, pp. 1098 ff.

⁹¹ See e.g. L. Sohn, Cases on UN Law, 2nd edn, Brooklyn, 1967, pp. 232–90, and G. Clark and L. Sohn, World Peace Through World Law, 3rd edn, New York, 1966, pp. 399–402.

⁹² The doctrine of equality of states is also influential in areas of international law such as jurisdictional immunities, below, chapter 12, and act of state, above, chapter 4, p. 138.

⁹³ See e.g. Tunkin, Theory, pp. 69–75. See also B. Ramondo, Peaceful Co-existence, Baltimore, 1967, and R. Higgins, Conflict of Interests, London, 1965, pp. 99–170.

The idea was expanded in a number of international documents such as the final communiqué of the Bandung Conference in 1955 and in various resolutions of the United Nations.⁹⁴ Its recognised constituents also appear in the list of Principles of the Charter of the Organisation of African Unity. Among the points enumerated are the concepts of sovereign equality, non-interference in the internal affairs of states, respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, as well as a condemnation of subversive activities carried out from one state and aimed against another. Other concepts that have been included in this category comprise such principles as non-aggression and the execution of international obligations in good faith. The Soviet Union had also expressed the view that peaceful co-existence constituted the guiding principle in contemporary international law.⁹⁵ Interest in the concept has recently been renewed with the adoption of the Russia–China Declaration on the Promotion of International Law of 25 June 2016, which underlined the continuing relevance of the Five Principles of Co-existence of 1954.⁹⁶

Protectorates and Protected States⁹⁷

A distinction is sometimes made between a protectorate and a protected state. In the former case, in general, the entity concerned enters into an arrangement with a state under which, while separate legal personality may be involved, separate statehood is not. In the case of a protected state, the entity concerned retains its status as a separate state but enters into a valid treaty relationship with another state affording the latter certain extensive functions possibly internally and externally. However, precisely which type of arrangement is made and the nature of the status, rights and duties in question will depend upon the circumstances and, in particular, the terms of the relevant agreement and third-party attitudes.⁹⁸

In the case of Morocco, the Treaty of Fez of 1912 with France gave the latter the power to exercise certain sovereign powers on behalf of the former, including all of its international relations. Nevertheless, the ICJ emphasised that Morocco had in the circumstances of the case remained a sovereign state.⁹⁹

In the case of sub-Saharan Africa in the colonial period, treaties of protection were entered into with tribal entities that were not states. Such institutions were termed ‘colonial protectorates’ and constituted internal colonial arrangements. They did not constitute international treaties with internationally recognised states.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁴ See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 1236 (XII) and 1301 (XIII). See also Yearbook of the UN, 1957, pp. 105–9; ibid., 1961, p. 524; and ibid., 1962, p. 488.

⁹⁵ Tunkin, Theory, pp. 35–48.

⁹⁶ www.mid.ru/en/foreign_policy/news/-/asset_publisher/cKNonkJE02Bw/content/id/2331698.

⁹⁷ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 266; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 286 ff.; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 341–4; and Verzijl, International Law, pp. 412–27.

⁹⁸ See the Tunis and Morocco Nationality Decrees case (1923) PCIJ, Series B, No. 4, p. 27; 2 AD, p. 349. See also the question of the Ionian Islands, M. F. Lindley, The Acquisition and Government of Backward Territory in International Law, London, 1926, pp. 181–2.

⁹⁹ Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco, ICJ Reports, 1952, pp. 176, 188; 19 ILR, pp. 255, 263. See also to the same effect, Benaïm c. Procureur de la République de Bordeaux, AFDI, 1993, p. 971.

¹⁰⁰ See Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 404–7. See also the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 826, 858–9, and Shaw, Title, chapter 1.

The extent of powers delegated to the protecting state in such circumstances may vary, as may the manner of the termination of the arrangement. In these cases, formal sovereignty remains unaffected and the entity in question retains its status as a state, and may act as such in the various international fora, regard being had of course to the terms of the arrangement. The obligation may be merely to take note of the advice of the protecting state, or it may extend to a form of diplomatic delegation subject to instruction, as in the case of Liechtenstein. Liechtenstein was refused admission to the League of Nations since it was held unable to discharge all the international obligations imposed by the Covenant in the light of its delegation of sovereign powers, such as diplomatic representation, administration of post, telegraph and telephone services and final decisions in certain judicial cases.¹⁰¹ Liechtenstein, however, has been a party to the Statute of the International Court of Justice and was a party to the *Nottebohm*¹⁰² case before the Court, a facility only open to states. Liechtenstein joined the United Nations in 1990.

Federal States¹⁰³

There are various forms of federation or confederation, according to the relative distribution of power between the central and local organs. In some states, the residue of power lies with the central government, in others with the local or provincial bodies. A confederation implies a more flexible arrangement, leaving a considerable degree of authority and competence with the component units to the detriment of the central organ.¹⁰⁴

The Yugoslav Arbitration Commission noted in Opinion No. 1 that in the case of a federal state embracing communities possessing a degree of autonomy where such communities participate in the exercise of political power within the framework of institutions common to the federation, the 'existence of the state implies that the federal organs represent the components of the federation and wield effective power'.¹⁰⁵ In addition, the existence of such a federal state would be seriously compromised 'when a majority of these entities, embracing the greater part of the territory and population, constitute themselves as sovereign states with the result that federal authority may no longer be effectively exercised'.¹⁰⁶

The division of powers inherent in such arrangements often raises important questions for international law, particularly in the areas of personality, responsibility and immunity. Whether the federation dissolves into two or more states also brings into focus the doctrine of self-determination in the form of secession. Such dissolution may be the result of an amicable and constitutional agreement or may occur pursuant to a forceful exercise of secession. In the latter case, international legal rules may be pleaded in aid, but the position would seem to be that (apart from recognised colonial situations) there is no right of self-determination applicable to independent states that would justify the resort to secession. There is, of course, no international legal ¹⁰¹ See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 479 ff.; Report of the 5th Committee of the League, 6 December 1920, G. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1940, vol. I, pp. 48-9; and Higgins, Development, p. 34, note 30.

¹⁰² ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 4; 22 ILR, p. 349.

¹⁰³ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 245. See also I. Bernier, International Legal Aspects of Federalism, London, 1973, and 17 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1983, p. 1; and G. I. Hernández, 'Federated Entities in International Law', in Statehood and Self-Determination (ed. D. French), p. 491.

¹⁰⁴ See also below, p. 202. ¹⁰⁵ 92 ILR, p. 165. ¹⁰⁶ Opinion No. 8, ibid., p. 201.

duty to refrain from secession attempts, in the absence of a Security Council decision to the contrary: the situation remains subject to the domestic law. However, should such a secession prove successful in fact, then the concepts of recognition and the appropriate criteria of statehood would prove relevant and determinative as to the new situation.¹⁰⁷

The federal state will itself, of course, have personality, but the question of the personality and capability of the component units of the federation on the international plane can really only be determined in the light of the constitution of the state concerned and state practice. For instance, the then Soviet Republics of Byelorussia and the Ukraine were admitted as members of the United Nations in 1945 and to that extent possessed international personality.¹⁰⁸ Component states of a federation that have been provided with a certain restricted international competence may thus be accepted as having a degree of international personality. The issue has arisen especially with regard to treaties. Lauterpacht, in his Report on the Law of Treaties, for example, noted that treaties concluded by component units of federal states 'are treaties in the meaning of international law',¹⁰⁹ although Fitzmaurice adopted a different approach in his Report on the Law of Treaties by stating that such units act as agents for the federation which alone possesses international personality and which is the entity bound by the treaty and responsible for its implementation.¹¹⁰ Article 5(2) of the International Law Commission's Draft Articles on the Law of Treaties provided that

[s]tates members of a federal union may possess a capacity to conclude treaties if such capacity is admitted by the federal constitution and within the limits there laid down but this was ultimately rejected at the Vienna Conference on the Law of Treaties,¹¹¹ partly on the grounds that the rule was beyond the scope of the Convention itself. The major reasons for the rejection, however, were that the provision would enable third states to intervene in the internal affairs of federal states by seeking to interpret the constitutions of the latter and that, from another perspective, it would unduly enhance the power of domestic law to determine questions of international personality to the detriment of international law. This perhaps would indeed have swung the balance too far away from the international sphere of operation.

Different federations have evolved different systems with regard to the allocation of treaty-making powers. In some cases, component units may enter into such arrangements subject to varying conditions. The Constitution of Switzerland, for example, enables the cantons to conclude treaties with foreign states on issues concerning public economy, frontier relations and the police, subject to the provision that the Federal Council acts as the intermediary.¹¹² In the case of the United States, responsibility for the conduct of foreign relations rests exclusively with ¹⁰⁷ See below, p. 202.

¹⁰⁸ See e.g. Bernier, Federalism, pp. 64–6. These entities were also members of a number of international organisations and signed treaties.

¹⁰⁹ Yearbook of the ILC, 1953, vol. II, p. 139.

¹¹⁰ Yearbook of the ILC, 1958, vol. II, p. 24. Cf. Waldock, ibid., 1962, vol. II, p. 36.

¹¹¹ A/CONF.39/SR.8, 28 April 1969.

¹¹² See e.g. A. Looper, 'The Treaty Power in Switzerland', 7 American Journal of Comparative Law, 1958, p. 178.

the Federal Government,¹¹³ although American states have entered into certain compacts with foreign states or component units (such as Manitoba and Quebec, provinces of Canada) dealing with the construction and maintenance of highways and international bridges, following upon consultations with the foreign state conducted by the federal authorities. In any event, it is clear that the internal constitutional structure is crucial in endowing the unit concerned with capacity. What, however, turns this into international capacity is recognition.

An issue recently the subject of concern and discussion has been the question of the domestic implementation of treaty obligations in the case of federations, especially in the light of the fact that component units may possess legislative power relating to the subject-matter of the treaty concerned. Although this issue lies primarily within the field of domestic constitutional law, there are important implications for international law. In the US, for example, the approach adopted has been to insert 'federal' reservations to treaties in cases where the states of the Union have exercised jurisdiction over the subject-matter in question, providing that the Federal Government would take appropriate steps to enable the competent authorities of the component units to take appropriate measures to fulfil the obligations concerned.¹¹⁴ In general, however, there have been few restrictions on entry into international agreements.¹¹⁵

The question as to divided competence in federations and international treaties has arisen in the past, particularly with regard to conventions of the International Labour Organization, which typically encompass areas subject to the law-making competence of federal component units. In Canada, for example, early attempts by the central government to ratify ILO conventions were defeated by the decisions of the courts on constitutional grounds, supporting the views of the provinces,¹¹⁶ while the US has a poor record of ratification of ILO conventions on similar grounds of local competence and federal treaty-making.¹¹⁷ The issue that arises therefore is either the position of a state that refuses to ratify or sign a treaty on grounds of component unit competence in the area in question or alternatively the problem of implementation and thus responsibility where ratification does take place. In so far as the latter is concerned, the issue has been raised in the context of article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, to which the US is a party, and which requires, among other things, that states parties inform a foreigner under arrest of his or her right to communicate with the relevant consulate. The International Court of Justice has twice held the US in violation of this requirement, noting that the domestic doctrine known as the procedural default rule, preventing a claimant from raising an issue on appeal or on review if it had not been raised at trial, could not excuse or justify that violation.¹¹⁸ The US Supreme Court has held that while the International Court's decisions were entitled to 'respectful consideration', they were not binding.¹¹⁹ This was so even though the US President in ¹¹³ See e.g. Article I, Section 10 of the US Constitution; US v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. 299 US 304 (1936); 8 AD, p. 48; and Zachevning v. Miller 389 US 429 (1968). See also generally, Whiteman, Digest, vol. 14, pp. 13–17, and Rousseau, Droit International Public, pp. 138–213 and 264–8.

¹¹⁴ See e.g. the proposed reservations to four human rights treaties in 1978, US Ratification of the Human Rights Treaties (ed. R. B. Lillich), Charlottesville, 1981, pp. 83–103.

¹¹⁵ See e.g. Missouri v. Holland 252 US 416 (1920); 1 AD, p. 4.

¹¹⁶ See especially, Attorney-General for Canada v. Attorney-General for Ontario [1937] AC 326; 8 AD, p. 41.

¹¹⁷ Bernier, Federalism, pp. 162–3, and A. Looper, 'Federal State Clauses in Multilateral Instruments', 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 162.

¹¹⁸ The LaGrand case, ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 104 and the Avena case, ICJ Reports, 2004, p. 12; 134 ILR, p. 120.

¹¹⁹ Medellin v. Dretke 118 S.Ct. 1352 (2005) and Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon 126 S.Ct. 2669 (2006); 134 ILR, p. 719.

a memorandum dated 28 February 2005 had declared that the US would fulfil its obligations under the Avena decision by having states' courts give effect to it.¹²⁰ The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, however, held that neither the Avena decision of the ICJ nor the President's memorandum constituted binding federal law pre-empting Texas law, so that Medellin (the applicant) would not be provided with the review called for by the International Court and by the President.¹²¹

In Australia, the issue has turned on the interpretation of the constitutional grant of federal power to make laws 'with respect to . . . external affairs'.¹²² Two recent cases have analysed this, in the light particularly of the established principle that the Federal Government could under this provision legislate on matters, not otherwise explicitly assigned to it, which possessed an intrinsic international aspect.¹²³

In *Koowarta v. Bjelke-Petersen*¹²⁴ in 1982, the Australian High Court, in dealing with an action against the Premier of Queensland for breach of the Racial Discrimination Act 1975 (which incorporated parts of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination adopted in 1965), held that the relevant legislation was valid with respect to the 'external affairs' provision under section 51(29) of the Constitution. In other words, the 'external affairs' power extended to permit the implementation of an international agreement, despite the fact that the subject-matter concerned was otherwise outside federal power. It was felt that if Australia accepted a treaty obligation with respect to an aspect of its own internal legal order, the subject of the obligation thus became an 'external affair' and legislation dealing with this fell within section 51(29), and was thereby valid constitutionally.¹²⁵ It was not necessary that a treaty obligation be assumed: the fact that the norm of non-discrimination was established in customary international law was itself sufficient in the view of Stephen J to treat the issue of racial discrimination as part of external affairs.¹²⁶

In Commonwealth of Australia v. Tasmania,¹²⁷ the issue concerned the construction of a dam in an area placed on the World Heritage List established under the 1972 UNESCO Convention for the Protection of the World Cultural and Natural Heritage, to which Australia was a party. The Federal Government in 1983 wished to stop the scheme by reference inter alia to the 'external affairs' power as interpreted in Koowarta, since it possessed no specific legislative power over the environment. The majority of the Court held that the 'external affairs' power extended to the ¹²⁰ 44 ILM, 2005, p. 964.

¹²¹ Medellin v. Dretke, Application No. AP-75,207 (Tex. Crim. App. 15 November 2006). Note that the US Supreme Court held that a writ of certiorari to consider the effect of the International Court's decision had been 'improvidently granted' prior to the Texas appeal: see 44 ILM, 2005, p. 965. However, the Supreme Court did grant certiorari on 30 April 2007 (after the Texas decision) to consider two questions: '1. Did the President of the United States act within his constitutional and statutory foreign affairs authority when he determined that the states must comply with the United States' treaty obligation to give effect to the Avena judgment in the cases of the 51 Mexican nationals named in the judgment? [and] 2. Are state courts bound by the Constitution to honor the undisputed international obligation of the United States, under treaties duly ratified by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, to give effect to the Avena judgment in the cases that the judgment addressed?' See now Medellin v. Texas, 128 S.Ct. 1346 and above, p. 101.

¹²² See e.g. L. R. Zines, The High Court and the Constitution, Sydney, 1981, and A. Byrnes and H. Charlesworth, 'Federalism and the International Legal Order: Recent Developments in Australia', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 622.

¹²³ R v. Burgess, ex parte Henry 55 CLR 608 (1936); 8 AD, p. 54. ¹²⁴ 68 ILR, p. 181.

¹²⁵ Ibid., pp. 223-4 (Stephen J), p. 235 (Mason J) and p. 255 (Brennan J). ¹²⁶ Ibid., pp. 223-4.

¹²⁷ Ibid., p. 266. The case similarly came before the High Court.

implementation of treaty obligations. It was not necessary that the subject-matter of the treaty be inherently international.

The effect of these cases seen, of course, in the context of the Australian Constitution, is to reduce the problems faced by federal states of implementing international obligations in the face of local jurisdiction.

The difficulties faced by federal states have also become evident with regard to issues of state responsibility.¹²⁸ As a matter of international law, states are responsible for their actions, including those of subordinate organs irrespective of domestic constitutional arrangements.¹²⁹ The International Court in the Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur case stated that it was a well-established rule of customary international law that 'the conduct of any organ of a State must be regarded as an act of that State'¹³⁰ and this applies to component units of a federal state. As the Court noted in its Order of 3 March 1999 on provisional measures in the LaGrand case, 'the international responsibility of a State is engaged by the action of the competent organs and authorities acting in that State, whatever they may be'. In particular, the US was under an obligation to transmit the Order to the Governor of the State of Arizona, while the Governor was under an obligation to act in conformity with the international undertakings of the US.¹³¹ Similarly, the Court noted in the Immunity from Legal Process of a Special Rapporteur case that the government of Malaysia was under an obligation to communicate the Court's Advisory Opinion to the Malaysian courts in order that Malaysia's international obligations be given effect.¹³²

Thus, international responsibility of the state may co-exist with an internal lack of capacity to remedy the particular international wrong. In such circumstances, the central government is under a duty to seek to persuade the component unit to correct the violation of international law,¹³³ while the latter is, it seems, under an international obligation to act in accordance with the international obligations of the state.

Federal practice in regulating disputes between component units is often of considerable value in international law. This operates particularly in cases of boundary problems, where similar issues arise.¹³⁴ Conversely, international practice may often be relevant in the resolution of conflicts between component units.¹³⁵

¹²⁸ See e.g. R. Higgins, 'The Concept of "the State": Variable Geometry and Dualist Perceptions', in The International Legal System in Quest of Equity and Universality (ed. L. Boisson de Chazournes and V. Gowlland-Debas), The Hague, 2001, p. 547.

¹²⁹ Article 4(1) of the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, 2001, provides that: 'The conduct of any State organ shall be considered an act of that State under international law, whether the organ exercises legislative, executive, judicial or any other functions, whatever position it holds in the organisation of the State, and whatever its character as an organ of the central government or of a territorial unit of the State.' See also J. Crawford, The International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 94 ff.

¹³⁰ ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 62, 87; 121 ILR, p. 367.

¹³¹ ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 9, 16; 118 ILR, p. 37. See also e.g. the Pellat case, 5 RIAA, p. 534 (1929).

¹³² ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 62, 88; 121 ILR, p. 367.

¹³³ Such issues arise from time to time with regard to human rights matters before international or regional human rights bodies: see e.g. Toonen v. Australia, Human Rights Committee, Communication No. 488/1992, 112 ILR, p. 328, and Tyrer v. UK, 2 European Human Rights Reports 1. See also Matthews v. UK, 28 European Human Rights Reports 361, and RMD v. Switzerland, ibid., 224.

¹³⁴ See e.g. E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-Al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, pp. 208, 216, and A. O. Cukwurah, The Settlement of Boundary Disputes in International Law, Manchester, 1967.

¹³⁵ See also below, chapters 12 and 13.

SUI GENERIS TERRITORIAL ENTITIES

Mandated and Trust Territories¹³⁶

After the end of the First World War and the collapse of the Axis and Russian empires, the Allies established a system for dealing with the colonies of the defeated powers that did not involve annexation. These territories would be governed according to the principle that ‘the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilisation’. The way in which this principle would be put into effect would be to entrust the tutelage of such people to ‘advanced nations who by reason of their resources, their experience or their geographical position’ could undertake the responsibility. The arrangement would be exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the League.¹³⁷

Upon the conclusion of the Second World War and the demise of the League, the mandate system was transmuted into the United Nations trusteeship system under Chapters XII and XIII of the UN Charter.¹³⁸ The strategic trust territory of the Pacific, taken from Japan, the mandatory power, was placed in a special category subject to Security Council rather than Trusteeship Council supervision for security reasons,¹³⁹ while South Africa refused to place its mandated territory under the system. Quite who held sovereignty in such territories was the subject of extensive debates over many decades.¹⁴⁰

As far as the trust territory of the Pacific was concerned, the US signed a Covenant with the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands and Compacts of Free Association with the Federated States of Micronesia and with the Republic of the Marshall Islands. Upon their entry into force in autumn 1986, it was determined that the trusteeship had been terminated. This procedure providing for political union with the US was accepted by the Trusteeship Council as a legitimate exercise of self-determination.¹⁴¹ However, the proposed Compact of Free Association with the Republic of Palau (the final part of the former trust territory) did not enter into force as a result of disagreement over the transit of nuclear-powered or armed vessels and ¹³⁶ See generally H. Duncan Hall, Mandates, Dependencies and Trusteeships, London, 1948; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 598–911 and vol. XIII, pp. 679 ff.; C. E. Toussaint, The Trusteeship System of the United Nations, New York, 1957; Verzijl, International Law, vol. II, pp. 545–73; Q. Wright, Mandates Under the League of Nations, New York, 1930; J. Dugard, The South West Africa/Namibia Dispute, Berkeley, 1973; and S. Slonim, South West Africa and the United Nations, Leiden, 1973. See also Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 295 and 308, and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 565 ff.

¹³⁷ See article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations. See also the International Status of South West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 132; 17 ILR, p. 47; the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 28–9; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 18–19; Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 256; 97 ILR, pp. 1, 23; and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, para. 212.

¹³⁸ See e.g. Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 240, 257; 97 ILR, pp. 1, 24. See also the discussion by Judge Shahabuddeen in his Separate Opinion, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 276 ff.; 97 ILR, p. 43. Note that the Court in this case stated that the arrangements whereby Nauru was to be administered under the trusteeship agreement by the governments of the UK, Australia and New Zealand together as ‘the administering authority’ did not constitute that authority an international legal person separate from the three states so designated: ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 258; 97 ILR, p. 25. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, para. 212.

¹³⁹ See O. McHenry, Micronesia: Trust Betrayed, New York, 1975; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 769–839; S. A. de Smith, Micro-States and Micronesia, New York, 1970; DUSPIL, 1973, pp. 59–67; ibid., 1974, pp. 54–64; ibid., 1975, pp. 94–104; ibid., 1976, pp. 56–61; ibid., 1977, pp. 71–98 and ibid., 1978, pp. 204–31.

¹⁴⁰ See in particular Judge McNair, International Status of South West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 150 and the Court’s view, ibid., p. 132; 17 ILR, pp. 47, 49.

¹⁴¹ See Security Council resolution 683 (1990).

aircraft through Palauan waters and airspace and, therefore, the US continued to act as administering authority under the trusteeship agreement.¹⁴² These difficulties were eventually resolved.¹⁴³

South West Africa was administered after the end of the First World War as a mandate by South Africa, which refused after the Second World War to place the territory under the trusteeship system. Following this, the International Court of Justice in 1950 in its Advisory Opinion on the *International Status of South West Africa*¹⁴⁴ stated that, while there was no legal obligation imposed by the United Nations Charter to transfer a mandated territory into a trust territory, South Africa was still bound by the terms of the mandate agreement and the Covenant of the League of Nations, and the obligations that it had assumed at that time. The Court emphasised that South Africa alone did not have the capacity to modify the international status of the territory. This competence rested with South Africa acting with the consent of the United Nations, as successor to the League of Nations. Logically flowing from this decision was the ability of the United Nations to hear petitioners from the territory in consequence of South Africa's refusal to heed United Nations decisions and in pursuance of League of Nations practices.¹⁴⁵

In 1962 the ICJ heard the case brought by Ethiopia and Liberia, the two African members of the League, that South Africa was in breach of the terms of the mandate and had thus violated international law. The Court initially affirmed that it had jurisdiction to hear the merits of the dispute.¹⁴⁶ However, by the Second Phase of the case, the Court (its composition having slightly altered in the meanwhile) decided that Ethiopia and Liberia did not have any legal interest in the subject-matter of the claim (the existence and supervision of the mandate over South West Africa) and accordingly their contentions were rejected.¹⁴⁷ Having thus declared on the lack of standing of the two African appellants, the Court did not discuss any of the substantive questions which stood before it.

This judgment aroused a great deal of feeling, particularly in the Developing Countries, and occasioned a shift in emphasis in dealing with the problem of the territory in question.¹⁴⁸

The General Assembly resolved in October 1966 that since South Africa had failed to fulfil its obligations, the mandate was therefore terminated. South West Africa (or Namibia as it was to be called) was to come under the direct responsibility of the United Nations.¹⁴⁹ Accordingly, a Council was established to oversee the territory and a High Commissioner appointed.¹⁵⁰ The Security Council in a number of resolutions upheld the action of the Assembly and called upon South Africa to withdraw its administration from the territory. It also requested other states to refrain from dealing with the South African government in so far as Namibia was concerned.¹⁵¹

The Security Council ultimately turned to the International Court and requested an Advisory Opinion as to the Legal Consequences for States of the Continued Presence of South Africa in ¹⁴² See 'Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law', 81 AJIL, 1987, pp. 405–8. See also Bank of Hawaii v. Balos 701 F.Supp. 744 (1988).

¹⁴³ See Security Council resolution 956 (1994). ¹⁴⁴ ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 128, 143–4; 17 ILR, pp. 47, 57–60.

¹⁴⁵ ICJ Reports, 1955, p. 68; 22 ILR, p. 651; and ICJ Reports, 1956, p. 23; 23 ILR, p. 38.

¹⁴⁶ ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 141 and 143. ¹⁴⁷ ICJ Reports, 1966, p. 6; 37 ILR, p. 243.

¹⁴⁸ See e.g. Dugard, South West Africa/Namibia, p. 378. ¹⁴⁹ Resolution 2145 (XXI).

¹⁵⁰ See General Assembly resolutions 2145 (XXI) and 2248 (XXII).

¹⁵¹ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 263 (1969), 269 (1969) and 276 (1970).

Namibia.¹⁵² The Court concluded that South Africa's presence in Namibia was indeed illegal in view of the series of events culminating in the United Nations resolutions on the grounds of a material breach of a treaty (the mandate agreement) by South Africa, and further that 'a binding determination made by a competent organ of the United Nations to the effect that a situation is illegal cannot remain without consequence'. South Africa was obligated to withdraw its administration from the territory, and other states members of the United Nations were obliged to recognise the illegality and the invalidity of its acts with regard to that territory and aid the United Nations in its efforts concerning the problem.¹⁵³

The opinion was approved by the Security Council in resolution 301 (1971), which also reaffirmed the national unity and territorial integrity of Namibia. In 1978 South Africa announced its acceptance of proposals negotiated by the five Western contact powers (UK, USA, France, Canada and West Germany) for Namibian independence involving a UN supervised election and peacekeeping force.¹⁵⁴ After some difficulties,¹⁵⁵ Namibia finally obtained its independence on 23 April 1990.¹⁵⁶

Germany 1945

With the defeat of Germany on 5 June 1945, the Allied Powers assumed 'supreme authority' with respect to that country, while expressly disclaiming any intention of annexation.¹⁵⁷ Germany was divided into four occupation zones with four-power control over Berlin. The Control Council established by the Allies acted on behalf of Germany and in such capacity entered into binding legal arrangements. The state of Germany continued, however, and the situation, as has been observed, was akin to legal representation or agency of necessity.¹⁵⁸ Under the 1952 Treaty between the three Western powers and the Federal Republic of Germany, full sovereign powers were granted to the latter subject to retained powers concerning the making of a peace treaty, and in 1972 the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic, established in 1954 by the Soviet Union in its zone, recognised each other as sovereign states.¹⁵⁹

However, following a series of dramatic events during 1989 in Central and Eastern Europe, deriving in essence from the withdrawal of Soviet control, the drive for a reunified Germany in 1990 became un-stoppable.¹⁶⁰ A State Treaty on German Economic, Monetary and Social Union was signed by the Finance Ministers of the two German states on 18 May and this took effect on ¹⁵² ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3. ¹⁵³ ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 52–8.

¹⁵⁴ 17 ILM, 1978, pp. 762–9, and DUSPIL, 1978, pp. 38–54. See Security Council resolution 435 (1978). See also Africa Research Bulletin, April 1978, p. 4829 and July 1978, p. 4935.

¹⁵⁵ See S/14459; S/14460/Rev.1; S/14461; and S/14462. ¹⁵⁶ See 28 ILM, 1989, p. 944.

¹⁵⁷ See Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 325–6, and R. W. Piotrowicz, 'The Status of Germany in International Law', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 609. See also Crawford, Creation of States, p. 523.

¹⁵⁸ Brownlie's Principles, p. 205. See also Whiteman, Digest, p. 333, and I. D. Hendry and M. C. Wood, The Legal Status of Berlin, Cambridge, 1987.

¹⁵⁹ 12 AD, p. 16. Note also Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon 94 ILR, p. 135. Both states became members of the UN the following year. See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 523–6, and F. A. Mann, Studies in International Law, Oxford, 1973, pp. 634–59 and 660–706.

¹⁶⁰ See e.g. J. Frowein, 'The Reunification of Germany', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 152; Schrike, 'L'Unification Allemande', p. 47; Czaplinski, 'Quelques Aspects', p. 89; and R. W. Piotrowicz and S. Blay, The Unification of Germany in International and Domestic Law, Amsterdam, 1997.

1 July.¹⁶¹ A State Treaty on Unification was signed on 31 August, providing for unification on 3 October by the accession to the Federal Republic of Germany of the Länder of the German Democratic Republic under article 23 of the Basic Law of the Federal Republic, with Berlin as the capital.¹⁶² The external obstacle to unity was removed by the signing on 12 September of the Treaty on the Final Settlement with Respect to Germany, between the two German states and the four wartime allies (UK, USA, USSR and France).¹⁶³ Under this treaty, a reunified Germany agreed to accept the current Oder–Neisse border with Poland and to limit its armed forces to 370,000 persons, while pledging not to acquire atomic, chemical or biological weapons. The Agreement on the Settlement of Certain Matters Relating to Berlin between the Federal Republic and the three Western powers on 25 September 1990 provided for the relinquishment of Allied rights with regard to Berlin.¹⁶⁴

Condominium

In this instance two or more states equally exercise sovereignty with respect to a territory and its inhabitants. There are arguments as to the relationship between the states concerned, the identity of the sovereign for the purposes of the territory and the nature of the competences involved.¹⁶⁵ In the case of the New Hebrides, a series of Anglo–French agreements established a region of joint influence, with each power retaining sovereignty over its nationals and neither exercising separate authority over the area.¹⁶⁶ A Protocol listed the functions of the condominiumal government and vested the power to issue joint regulations respecting them in a British and a French High Commissioner. This power was delegated to resident commissioners who dealt with their respective nationals. Three governmental systems accordingly co-existed, with something of a legal vacuum with regard to land tenure and the civil transactions of the indigenous population.¹⁶⁷ The process leading to the independence of the territory also reflected its unique status as a condominium.¹⁶⁸ It was noted that the usual independence Bill would not have been appropriate, since the New Hebrides was not a British colony. Its legal status as an Anglo–French condominium had been established by international agreement and could only be terminated in the same fashion. The nature of the condominium was such that it assumed that the two metropolitan powers would always act together and unilateral action was not provided for in the basic constitutional documents.¹⁶⁹ The territory became independent on 30 July 1980 as the state of Vanuatu. The entity involved prior to independence grew out of an international treaty and established an administrative ¹⁶¹ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37466 (1990). See also 29 ILM, 1990, p. 1108.

¹⁶² Keesing's, p. 37661. See also 30 ILM, 1991, pp. 457 and 498. ¹⁶³ See 29 ILM, 1990, p. 1186.

¹⁶⁴ See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 445. See also the Exchange of Notes of the same date concerning the presence of allied troops in Berlin, ibid., p. 450.

¹⁶⁵ See O'Connell, International Law, pp. 327–8; A. Coret, Le Condominium, Paris, 1960; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 565; and V. P. Bantz, 'The International Legal Status of Condominia', 12 Florida Journal of International Law, 1998, p. 77. See also J. H. Samuels, 'Condominium Arrangements in International Practice: Reviving an Abandoned Concept of Boundary Dispute Resolution', 29 Michigan Journal of International Law, 2007–8, p. 727.

¹⁶⁶ See e.g. 99 BFSP, p. 229 and 114 BFSP, p. 212. ¹⁶⁷ O'Connell, International Law, p. 328.

¹⁶⁸ Lord Trefgarne, the government spokesman, moving the second reading of the New Hebrides Bill in the House of Lords, 404 HL Deb., cols. 1091–2, 4 February 1980.

¹⁶⁹ See Mr Luce, Foreign Office Minister, 980 HC Deb., col. 682, 8 March 1980 and 985 HC Deb., col. 1250, 3 June 1980. See also D. P. O'Connell, 'The Condominium of the New Hebrides', 43 BYIL, p. 71.

entity arguably distinct from its metropolitan governments but more likely operating on the basis of a form of joint agency with a range of delegated powers.¹⁷⁰

The Central American Court of Justice in 1917¹⁷¹ held that a condominium existed with respect to the Gulf of Fonseca providing for rights of co-ownership of the three coastal states of Nicaragua, El Salvador and Honduras. The issue was raised in the El Salvador/Honduras case before the International Court of Justice.¹⁷² The Court noted that a condominium arrangement being ‘a structured system for the joint exercise of sovereign governmental powers over a territory’ was normally created by agreement between the states concerned, although it could be created as a juridical consequence of a succession of states (as in the Gulf of Fonseca situation itself), being one of the ways in which territorial sovereignty could pass from one state to another. The Court concluded that the waters of the Gulf of Fonseca beyond the three-mile territorial sea were historic waters and subject to a joint sovereignty of the three coastal states. It based its decision, apart from the 1917 judgment, upon the historic character of the Gulf waters, the consistent claims of the three coastal states and the absence of protest from other states.¹⁷³

International Administration of Territories

In such cases a particular territory is placed under a form of international regime, but the conditions under which this has been done have varied widely, from autonomous areas within states to relatively independent entities.¹⁷⁴ The UN is able to assume the administration of territories in specific circumstances. The trusteeship system was founded upon the supervisory role of the UN,¹⁷⁵ while in the case of South West Africa, the General Assembly supported by the Security Council ended South Africa’s mandate and asserted its competence to administer the territory pending independence.¹⁷⁶ Beyond this, UN organs exercising their powers may assume a variety of administrative functions over particular territories where issues of international concern have arisen. Attempts were made to create such a regime for Jerusalem under the General Assembly partition resolution for Palestine in 1947 as a ‘corpus separatum under a special ¹⁷⁰ See also the joint Saudi Arabian–Kuwaiti administered Neutral Zone based on the treaty of 2 December 1922, 133 BFSP, 1930 Part II, pp. 726–7. See e.g. The Middle East (ed. P. Mansfield), 4th edn, London, 1973, p. 187. Both states enjoyed an equal right of undivided sovereignty over the whole area. However, on 7 July 1965, both states signed an agreement to partition the neutral zone, although the territory apparently retained its condominium status for exploration of resources purposes: see 4 ILM, 1965, p. 1134, and H. M. Alba-harna, The Legal Status of the Arabian Gulf States, 2nd rev. edn, Beirut, 1975, pp. 264–77. See also F. Ali Taha, ‘Some Legal Aspects of the Anglo-Egyptian Condominium over the Sudan: 1899–1954’, 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 337.

¹⁷¹ 11 AJIL, 1917, p. 674.

¹⁷² ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 597 ff.; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 513 ff. El Salvador and Nicaragua were parties to the 1917 decision but differed over the condominium solution. Honduras was not a party to that case and opposed the condominium idea.

¹⁷³ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 601; 97 ILR, p. 517.

¹⁷⁴ See e.g. B. Knoll, The Legal Status of Territories Subject to Administration by International Organisations, Cambridge, 2008; R. Wilde, International Territorial Administration, Cambridge, 2008; R. Wilde, International Territorial Administration, Oxford, 2008; M. Ydit, Internationalised Territories, Leiden, 1961; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 501 ff.; M. Benzing, ‘International Administration of Territories’, Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2010; M. N. Shaw, ‘Territorial Administration by Non-Territorial Sovereigns’, in The Allocation of Authority in International Law (ed. T. Broude and Y. Shany), Oxford, 2008, p. 369; and Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 413–48.

¹⁷⁵ See further above, p. 176. ¹⁷⁶ See above, p. 177.

international regime ... administered by the United Nations', but this never materialised for a number of reasons.¹⁷⁷ Further, the Security Council in 1947 adopted a Permanent Statute for the Free Territory of Trieste, under which the Council was designated as the supreme administrative and legislative authority of the territory.¹⁷⁸

More recently, the UN has become more involved in important administrative functions, authority being derived from a mixture of international agreements, domestic consent and the powers of the Security Council under Chapter VII to adopt binding decisions concerning international peace and security, as the case may be. For example, the 1991 Paris Peace Agreements between the four Cambodian factions authorised the UN to establish civil administrative functions in that country pending elections and the adoption of a new constitution. This was accomplished through the UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC), to which were delegated 'all powers necessary to ensure the implementation' of the peace settlement and which also exercised competence in areas such as foreign affairs, defence, finance and so forth.¹⁷⁹

Annex 10 of the General Framework Agreement for Peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina (the Dayton Agreement)¹⁸⁰ established the post of High Representative with extensive powers with regard to the civilian implementation of the peace agreement and with the final authority to interpret the civilian aspects of the settlement.¹⁸¹ This was endorsed and confirmed by the Security Council in binding resolution 1031 (1995). The relatively modest powers of the High Representative under Annex 10 were subsequently enlarged in practice by the Peace Implementation Council, a body with fifty-five members established to review progress regarding the peace settlement, in the decisions it took at the Bonn Summit of December 1997 (the Bonn Conclusions).¹⁸² These provided, for example, for measures to be taken against persons found by the High Representative to be in violation of legal commitments made under the Peace Agreement. This has included removal from public office, the competence to impose interim legislation where Bosnia's institutions had failed to do so¹⁸³ and 'other measures to ensure ¹⁷⁷ Resolution 18(II). See e.g. E. Lauterpacht, Jerusalem and the Holy Places, London, 1968, and Ydit, Internationalised Territories, pp. 273–314.

¹⁷⁸ See Security Council resolution 16 (1947). Like the Jerusalem idea, this never came into being. See also the experiences of the League of Nations with regard to the Saar and Danzig, Ydit, Internationalised Territories, chapter 3.

¹⁷⁹ See Article 6 and Annex I of the Paris Peace Settlement. See also C. Stahn, 'International Territorial Administration in the Former Yugoslavia: Origins, Developments and Challenges Ahead', ZaöRV, 2001, p. 107. UNTAC lasted from March 1992 to September 1993 and involved some 22,000 military and civilian personnel: see www.un.org/en/peacekeeping/missions/past/untac.htm. Note also e.g. the operations of the UN Transition Group in Namibia which, in the process leading to Namibian independence, exercised a degree of administrative power: see Report of the UN Secretary-General, A/45/1 (1991), and the UN Transitional Administration for Eastern Slavonia (UNTAES), which facilitated the transfer of the territory from Serb to Croat rule over a two-year period: see Security Council resolution 1037 (1996).

¹⁸⁰ Initialled at Dayton, Ohio, and signed in Paris, 1995.

¹⁸¹ The final authority with regard to the military implementation of the agreement remains the commander of SFOR: see article 12 of the Agreement on the Military Aspects of the Dayton Peace Agreement. Note also the establishment of the War Crimes Chamber, the majority of whose members are from other states: see below, chapter 8/7, p. 312, and the Commission for Displaced Persons and Refugees: see Annexes 6 and 7 of the Peace Agreement.

¹⁸² See e.g. the documentation available at www.ohr.int/?page_id=1220. See also Security Council resolutions 1144 (1997), 1256 (1999) and 1423 (2002).

¹⁸³ www.ohr.int/?cat=350. The competence of the High Representative to adopt binding decisions with regard to interim measures when the parties are unable to reach agreement remains in force until the Presidency or Council of Ministers has adopted a decision consistent with the Peace Agreement on the issue concerned.

implementation of the Peace Agreement throughout Bosnia and Herzegovina and its Entities, as well as the smooth running of the common institutions'.¹⁸⁴ The High Representative has taken a wide-ranging number of decisions, from imposing the Law on Citizenship of Bosnia and Herzegovina in December 1997¹⁸⁵ and imposing the Law on the Flag of Bosnia and Herzegovina in February 1998¹⁸⁶ to enacting the Law on Changes and Amendments to the Election Law in January 2006 to mark the ongoing process of transferring High Representative powers to the domestic authorities in the light of the improving situation.¹⁸⁷ This unusual structure with regard to an independent state arises, therefore, from a mix of the consent of the parties and binding Chapter VII activity by the Security Council.

In resolution 1244 (1999), the Security Council authorised the Secretary-General to establish an interim international civil presence in Kosovo (UNMIK),¹⁸⁸ following the withdrawal of Yugoslav forces from that part of the country consequent upon NATO action. Under this resolution, UNMIK performed a wide range of administrative functions, including health and education, banking and finance, post and telecommunications, and law and order. It was tasked inter alia to promote the establishment of substantial autonomy and self-government in Kosovo, to co-ordinate humanitarian and disaster relief, support the reconstruction of key infrastructure, maintain civil law and order, promote human rights and assure the return of refugees. Administrative structures were established and elections held. The first regulation adopted by the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General appointed under resolution 1244 vested all legislative and executive authority in Kosovo in UNMIK as exercised by the Special Representative.¹⁸⁹ This regulation also established that the law in the territory was that in existence in so far as this did not conflict with the international standards referred to in section 2 of the regulation, the fulfilment of the mandate given to UNMIK under resolution 1244, or the present or any other regulation issued by UNMIK. A Constitutional Framework for Provisional Self-Government was promulgated by the Special Representative in May 2001.¹⁹⁰ This comprehensive administrative competence was founded upon the reaffirmation of Yugoslavia's sovereignty and territorial integrity (and thus continuing territorial title over the province) and the requirement for 'substantial autonomy and meaningful self-administration for Kosovo'.¹⁹¹ Accordingly, this arrangement illustrated a complete division between title to the territory and the exercise of power and control over ¹⁸⁴ Paragraph XI of the Bonn Conclusions. See also Security Council resolutions 1247 (1999), 1395 (2000), 1357 (2001), 1396 (2002) and 1491 (2003).

¹⁸⁵ www.ohr.int/?month&year=1997&cat=318. ¹⁸⁶ www.ohr.int/?p=67196. ¹⁸⁷ www.ohr.int/?p=65011.

¹⁸⁸ See Stahn, 'International Territorial Administration', p. 111; T. Garcia, 'La Mission d'Administration Intérimaire des Nations Unies au Kosovo', RGDIP, 2000, p. 61; and M. Ruffert, 'The Administration of Kosovo and East Timor by the International Community', 50 ICLQ, 2001, p. 613. See also Kosovo and the International Community: A Legal Assessment (ed. C. Tomuschat), The Hague, 2002; B. Knoll, 'From Benchmarking to Final Status? Kosovo and the Problem of an International Administration's Open-Ended Mandate', 16 European Journal of International Law, 2005, p. 637; Kosovo: KFOR and Reconstruction, House of Commons Research Paper 99/66, 1999; A. Yannis, 'The UN as Government in Kosovo', 10 Global Governance, 2004, p. 67; International Crisis Group (ICG), Kosovo: Towards Final Status, January 2005; ICG, Kosovo: The Challenge of Transition, February 2006; ICG, Kosovo: No Good Alternatives to the Ahtisaari Plan, 14 May 2007; ICG, Kosovo Countdown: A Blueprint for Transition, 6 December 2007; and M. Weller, Contested Statehood: Kosovo's Struggle for Independence, Oxford, 2009. Resolution 1244 also authorised an international military presence.

¹⁸⁹ Regulation 1 (1999). This was backdated to the date of adoption of resolution 1244.

¹⁹⁰ See UNMIK Regulation 9 (2001). ¹⁹¹ Resolution 1244 (1999).

it. It flowed from a binding Security Council resolution, which referred to Yugoslavia's consent to the essential principles therein contained.¹⁹²

The United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) was established by Security Council resolution 1272 (1999) acting under Chapter VII. It was 'endowed with overall responsibility for the administration of East Timor' and 'empowered to exercise all legislative and executive authority, including the administration of justice'.¹⁹³ Its widespread mandate included, in addition to public administration, humanitarian responsibilities and a military component and it was authorised to take all necessary measures to fulfil its mandate. UNTAET's mandate was extended to 20 May 2002, the date of East Timor's independence as the new state of Timor-Leste.¹⁹⁴ It was thereafter succeeded by the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET).¹⁹⁵

Taiwan¹⁹⁶

This territory was ceded by China to Japan in 1895 by the treaty of Shimonoseki and remained in the latter's hands until 1945. Japan undertook on surrender not to retain sovereignty over Taiwan and this was reaffirmed under the Peace Treaty, 1951 between the Allied Powers (but not the USSR and China) and Japan, under which all rights to the island were renounced without specifying any recipient. After the Chinese Civil War, the Communist forces took over the mainland while the Nationalist regime installed itself on Taiwan (Formosa) and the Pescadores. Both the US and the UK took the view at that stage that sovereignty over Taiwan was uncertain or undetermined.¹⁹⁷ The key point affecting status has been that both governments have claimed to represent the whole of China. No claim of separate statehood for Taiwan has been made and in such a case it is difficult to maintain that such an unsought status exists. Total lack of recognition of Taiwan as a separate independent state merely reinforces this point. In 1979 the US recognised the People's Republic of China as the sole and legitimate government of China.¹⁹⁸ Accordingly, Taiwan would appear to be a non-state territorial entity which is capable of acting independently

¹⁹² See S/1999/649 and Annex 2 to the resolution. Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008: see below, p. 185 and above, p. 182.

¹⁹³ East Timor, a Portuguese non-self-governing territory, was occupied by Indonesia in 1974. These two states agreed with the UN on 5 May 1999 to a process of popular consultation in the territory over its future. The inhabitants expressed a clear wish for a transitional process of UN authority leading to independence. Following the outbreak of violence, a multinational force was sent to East Timor pursuant to resolution 1264 (1999): see also the Report of the Secretary-General, S/1999/1024; www.un.org/en/peacekeeping/missions/past/etimor/etimor.htm.

¹⁹⁴ See resolutions 1388 (2001) and 1392 (2002). ¹⁹⁵ See resolution 1410 (2002).

¹⁹⁶ See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 198 ff.; China and the Question of Taiwan (ed. H. Chiu), New York, 1979; W. M. Reisman, 'Who Owns Taiwan?', 81 Yale Law Journal, p. 599; F. P. Morello, The International Legal Status of Formosa, The Hague, 1966; V. H. Li, De-Recognising Taiwan, Washington, DC, 1977; and L. C. Chiu, 'The International Legal Status of the Republic of China', 8 Chinese Yearbook of International Law and Affairs, 1990, p. 1. See also The International Status of Taiwan in the New World Order (ed. J. M. Henckaerts), London, 1996; Let Taiwan be Taiwan (ed. M. J. Cohen and E. Teng), Washington, 1990; and J. I. Charney and J. R. V. Prescott, 'Resolving Cross-Strait Relations Between China and Taiwan', 94 AJIL, 2000, p. 453.

¹⁹⁷ See Whiteman, Digest, vol. III, pp. 538, 564 and 565.

¹⁹⁸ See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 209 ff. Note that the 1972 USA-China communiqué accepted that Taiwan was part of China, 11 ILM, pp. 443, 445. As to the 1979 changes, see 73 AJIL, p. 227. See also 833 HC Deb., col. 32, 13 March 1972, for the new British approach, i.e. that it recognised the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal Government of China and acknowledged the position of that government that Taiwan was a province of China, and see e.g. UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 537. See also Reel v. Holder [1981] 1 WLR 1226.

on the international scene, but is most probably de jure part of China. It is interesting to note that when in early 1990 Taiwan sought accession to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), it did so by requesting entry for the ‘customs territory’ of ‘Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu’, thus avoiding an assertion of statehood.¹⁹⁹ The accession of ‘Chinese Taipei’ to the World Trade Organization was approved by the Ministerial Conference in November 2001.²⁰⁰

The ‘Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus’ (TRNC)²⁰¹

In 1974, following a coup in Cyprus backed by the military regime in Greece, Turkish forces invaded the island. The Security Council in resolution 353 (1974) called upon all states to respect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus and demanded an immediate end to foreign military intervention in the island that was contrary to such respect. On 13 February 1975 the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus was proclaimed in the area occupied by Turkish forces. A resolution adopted at the same meeting of the Council of Ministers and the Legislative Assembly of the Autonomous Turkish Cypriot Administration at which the proclamation was made, emphasised the determination ‘to oppose resolutely all attempts against the independence of Cyprus and its partition or union with any other state’ and resolved to establish a separate administration until such time as the 1960 Cyprus Constitution was amended to provide for a federal republic.²⁰²

On 15 November 1983, the Turkish Cypriots proclaimed their independence as the ‘Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus’.²⁰³ This was declared illegal by the Security Council in resolution 541 (1983) and its withdrawal called for. All states were requested not to recognise the ‘purported state’ or assist it in any way. This was reiterated in Security Council resolution 550 (1984). The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe decided that it continued to regard the government of the Republic of Cyprus as the sole legitimate government of Cyprus and called for respect for the independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus.²⁰⁴ The European Court of Human Rights in its judgment of 10 May 2001 in Cyprus v. Turkey concluded that, ‘it is evident from international practice . . . that the international community does not recognise the “TRNC” as a state under international law’ and declared that ‘the Republic of Cyprus has remained the sole legitimate government of Cyprus’.²⁰⁵ In the light of this and the very heavy dependence of the territory upon ¹⁹⁹ See Keesing’s Record of World Events, p. 37671 (1990). This failed, however, to prevent a vigorous protest by China: ibid. Note also the Agreements Concerning Cross-Straits Activities between unofficial organisations established in China and Taiwan in order to reach functional, non-political agreements, 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1217. A degree of evolution in Taiwan’s approach was evident in the Additional Articles of the Constitution adopted in 1997.

²⁰⁰ See www.wto.org/english/news_e/pres01_e/pr253_e.htm. Taiwan became an observer to the World Health Assembly of the World Health Organization in 2009 under the name of ‘Chinese Taipei’, <https://www.brookings.edu/opinions/taiwan-in-the-world-health-assembly-a-victory-with-limits/>. As to Rhodesia (1965–79) and the Bantustans, see above, pp. 163 and 160.

²⁰¹ See Z. M. Necatigil, The Cyprus Question and the Turkish Position in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford 1993; G. White, The World Today, April 1981, p. 135; and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 143 ff.

²⁰² Resolution No. 2 in Supplement IV, Official Gazette of the TFSC, cited in Nadjatigil, Cyprus Conflict, p. 123.

²⁰³ See The Times, 16 November 1983, p. 12, and 21(4) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 17.

²⁰⁴ Resolution (83)13 adopted on 24 November 1983.

²⁰⁵ Application No. 25781/94; 120 ILR, p. 10. See Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, No. 310, 1995; 103 ILR, p. 622; and Loizidou v. Turkey (Merits), Reports 1996-VI, p. 2216; 108 ILR, p. 443. See also to the same effect, Autocephalous Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg 917 F.2d 278 (1990); 108 ILR, p. 488; and Caglar v. Billingham [1996] STC (SCD) 150; 108 ILR, p. 510.

Turkey, it cannot be regarded as a sovereign state, but remains as a de facto administered entity within the recognised confines of the Republic of Cyprus and dependent upon Turkish assistance.²⁰⁶

The Saharan Arab Democratic Republic²⁰⁷

In February 1976, the Polisario liberation movement conducting a war to free the Western Saharan territory from Moroccan control declared the independent sovereign Saharan Arab Democratic Republic (SADR).²⁰⁸ Over the succeeding years, many states recognised the new entity, including a majority of Organisation of African Unity members. In February 1982, the OAU Secretary-General sought to seat a delegation from SADR on that basis, but this provoked a boycott by some nineteen states and a major crisis. However, in November 1984 the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the OAU did agree to seat a delegation from SADR, despite Morocco's threat of withdrawal from the organisation.²⁰⁹ This, therefore, can be taken as OAU recognition of statehood and, as such, of evidential significance. However, although in view of the reduced importance of the effectiveness of control criterion in such self-determination situations a credible argument can now be made regarding SADR's statehood, the issue is still controversial in view of the continuing hostilities and what appears to be effective Moroccan control. It is to be noted that the legal counsel to the UN gave an opinion in 2002 to the effect that Western Sahara continued as a non-self-governing territory and that this status was unaffected by the transfer of administrative authority to Morocco and Mauritania in 1975. The view was also taken that exploration and exploitation activities undertaken in disregard of the interests and wishes of the people of Western Sahara would violate international law.²¹⁰ The Council of the European Union approved a trade agreement with Morocco in 2010, being a development of a 2000 Association Agreement, which was challenged by Polisario on the basis that Morocco had been applying the 2000 agreement to Western Sahara. The General Court of the EU issued its judgment in December 2015, recognising the standing of Polisario to challenge the decision and granting the partial annulment of the EU Council decision approving the 2010 agreement in so far as Western Sahara was concerned.²¹¹

Kosovo

Following a period of UN administration authorised by Security Council resolution 1244 (1999),²¹² the Yugoslav (later Serbian) province of Kosovo declared independence on ²⁰⁶ See also Foreign Affairs Committee, Third Report, Session 1986–7, Cyprus: HCP 23 (1986–7).

²⁰⁷ See Shaw, Title, chapter 3. See also M. Dawidowicz, 'Trading Fish or Human Rights in Western Sahara? Self-Determination, Non-Recognition and the EC-Morocco Fisheries Agreement', in Statehood and Self-Determination: Reconciling Tradition and Modernity in International Law (ed. D. French), Cambridge, 2013, p. 250.

²⁰⁸ Africa Research Bulletin, June 1976, p. 4047 and July 1976, pp. 4078 and 4081.

²⁰⁹ See Keesing's Contemporary Archives, pp. 33324–45.

²¹⁰ S/2002/161. The UK has stated that it regards 'the sovereignty of Western Sahara as undetermined pending United Nations efforts to find a solution to the dispute over the territory', UKMIL, 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 720. UN-sponsored discussions continue, see e.g. Security Council resolution 2152 (2014) and General Assembly resolution 70/98 (2015).

²¹¹ <http://curia.europa.eu/juris/document/document.jsf?text&tdocid=172870&pageIndex=0&doclang=fr&mode=req&dirfto cc=first&part=1&cid=233544>. However, the European Court of Justice in its decision of 21 December 2016, quashed the decision of the General Court and denied legal standing to Polisario, <http://curia.europa.eu/juris/document/document.jsf?text&tdocid=186489&pageIndex=0&doclang=EN&mode=lst&dir=ftocc=first&part=1&cid=397652>.

²¹² See above, p. 182.

17 February 2008. This was preceded by the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement formulated by Martti Ahtisaari which had in March 2007 called for independence for Kosovo with international supervision.²¹³ This was rejected by Serbia. The international community was divided as to the question of recognition of Kosovo's independence. It was recognised swiftly by the US, the UK, Germany and the majority of EU states, Japan and others. Russia and Serbia, on the other hand, made it clear that they opposed recognition, as did Spain and Greece. Accordingly, in the current circumstances, while many countries recognise Kosovo, many do not and entry into the UN is not possible until, for example, Russia is prepared to lift its opposition in view of its veto power.²¹⁴ The International Court of Justice in its advisory opinion on the Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence in Respect of Kosovo, although faced with wide-ranging arguments as to that entity and the criteria of statehood, confined itself to a narrow interpretation of the issue and found that the declaration of independence was not itself contrary to international law.²¹⁵

At the moment of writing, Kosovo is recognised as a state by 113 states;²¹⁶ however, this excludes some key members of the international community so that the question as to the status of Kosovo as a sovereign state is still, for the moment, open.

Palestine²¹⁷

The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) was permitted by the Security Council from 1972 to participate in its debates with the same rights of participation as conferred upon a member state not a member of the Council, although this was controversial.²¹⁸ In 1974, the General Assembly invited the PLO to participate as an observer.²¹⁹ In December 1988, the General Assembly decided that the designation 'Palestine' should be used in place of the designation 'Palestine Liberation Organization' in the United Nations system.²²⁰

The position of the PLO, however, began to evolve considerably with the Israel–PLO Declaration of Principles on Interim Self-Government Arrangements signed in Washington on 13 September 1993.²²¹ By virtue of this Declaration, the PLO team in the Jordanian–Palestinian delegation to the Middle East Peace Conference was accepted as representing the Palestinian people. It was agreed to establish a Palestinian Interim Self-Government Authority as an elected ²¹³ See S/2007/168 and S/2007/168/Add.1.

²¹⁴ See e.g. 'Kosovo's First Month', International Crisis Group Europe Briefing No. 47, 18 March 2008, p. 3.

²¹⁵ ICJ Reports, 2010, p. 403. See also The Law and Politics of the Kosovo Advisory Opinion (ed. M. Milanovic and M. Wood), Oxford, 2015.

²¹⁶ www.mfa-ks.net/?page=2,224.

²¹⁷ See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 442 ff; J. Quigley, The Statehood of Palestine, Cambridge, 2010; R. Barnidge, Self-determination, Statehood and the Law of Negotiation: The Case of Palestine, Oxford, 2016; and J. Vidmar, 'Palestine and the Conceptual Problem of Implicit Statehood', 12 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2013, p. 19.

²¹⁸ See below, p. 195. ²¹⁹ Resolution 3237 (XXIX). ²²⁰ Resolution 43/177.

²²¹ 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1525. Note that letters of mutual recognition and commitment to the peace process were exchanged between the Prime Minister of Israel and the Chairman of the PLO on 9 September 1993. See e.g. K. Calvo-Goller, 'L'Accord du 13 septembre 1993 entre L'Israël et l'OLP: le régime d'autonomie prévu par la déclaration Israël/OLP', AFDI, 1993, p. 435. See also New Political Entities in Public and Private International Law (ed. A. Shapira and M. Tabor), The Hague, 1999; E. Benvenisti, 'The Status of the Palestinian Authority', in Arab–Israeli Accords: Legal Perspectives (ed. E. Cotrain and C. Mallat), The Hague, 1996, p. 47; and Benvenisti, 'The Israeli–Palestinian Declaration of Principles: A Framework for Future Settlement', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 542; and P. Malanczuk, 'Some Basic Aspects of the Agreements Between Israel and the PLO from the Perspective of International Law', 7 EJIL, 1996, p. 485.

Council for the Palestinian people in the West Bank and Gaza (occupied by Israel since 1967) for a transitional period of up to five years leading to a permanent solution. Its jurisdiction was to cover the territory of the West Bank and Gaza, save for issues to be negotiated in the permanent status negotiations. Upon the entry into force of the Declaration, a transfer of authority was to commence from the Israel military government and its civil administration. The Cairo Agreement of 4 May 1994²²² provided for the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Jericho and the Gaza Strip and transfer of authority to a separately established Palestinian Authority. This Authority, distinct from the PLO it should be emphasised, was to have certain specified legislative, executive and judicial powers. The process continued with a transfer of further powers and responsibilities in a Protocol of 27 August 1995 and with the Interim Agreement on the West Bank and Gaza of 28 September 1995, under which an additional range of powers and responsibilities was transferred to the Palestinian Authority pending the election of the Council and arrangements were made for Israeli withdrawal from a number of cities and villages on the West Bank.²²³ An accord concerning Hebron followed in 1997²²⁴ and the Wye River agreement in 1998, both marking further Israeli redeployments, while the Sharm el Sheikh memorandum and a later Protocol of 1999 concerned safe-passage arrangements between the Palestinian Authority areas in Gaza and the West Bank.²²⁵ The increase in the territorial and jurisdictional competence of the Palestinian Authority established as a consequence of these arrangements raised the question of legal personality. While Palestinian statehood was clearly not accepted by the international community, the Palestinian Authority could be regarded as possessing some form of limited international personality.²²⁶ Such personality, however, derived from the agreements between Israel and the PLO and existed separately from the personality of the PLO as a national liberation movement, which relied upon the recognition of third parties.²²⁷ Since neither side has to date denounced the Oslo Accords and succeeding instruments, they remain in effect.

However, on 22 January 2009, the Palestinian Authority purported to accept the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court,²²⁸ such jurisdiction being limited under the Court's Statute to states.²²⁹ After extensive argument, the Prosecutor of the Court made a decision on 3 April 2012

²²² 33 ILM, 1994, p. 622.

²²³ See e.g. M. Benchikh, 'L'Accord Intérimaire Israélo-Palestinien sur la Cisjordanie et la bande de Gaza du 28 Septembre 1995', AFDI, 1995, p. 7, and The Arab-Israeli Accords: Legal Perspectives (ed. E. Cotran and C. Mallat), The Hague, 1996.

²²⁴ See e.g. A. Bockel, 'L'Accord d'Hebron (17 janvier 1997) et la Tentative de Relance du Processus de Paix Israélo-Palestinien', AFDI, 1997, p. 184.

²²⁵ See A. Bockel, 'L'Issue du Processus de Paix Israélo-Palestinien en Vue?', AFDI, 1999, p. 165.

²²⁶ See e.g. K. Reece Thomas, 'Non-Recognition, Personality and Capacity: The Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian Authority in English Law', 29 Anglo-American Law Review, 2000, p. 228; New Political Entities in Public and Private International Law With Special Reference to the Palestinian Entity (ed. A. Shapiro and M. Tabory), The Hague, 1999; and C. Wasserstein Fassberg, 'Israel and the Palestinian Authority', 28 Israel Law Review, 1994, p. 319.

²²⁷ See e.g. M. Tabory, 'The Legal Personality of the Palestinian Autonomy', in Shapira and Tabory, New Political Entities, p. 139. See below, p. 196.

²²⁸ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/palestine>.

²²⁹ See article 12 of the Statute. See also e.g. M. N. Shaw, 'The Article 12(3) Declaration of the Palestinian Authority, the International Criminal Court and International Law', 9 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2011, p. 301; Y. Ronen, 'ICC Jurisdiction over Acts Committed in the Gaza Strip', 8 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2010, p. 3; Y. Shany, 'In Defence of Functional Interpretation of Article 12(3) of the Rome Statute', 8 Journal of refusing the request on the basis that he did not possess the necessary competence.²³⁰ On 23 September 2011, the Palestinian Authority applied to become a member of the United Nations,²³¹ but this did not succeed due to deep divisions (and the existence of the veto power) in the Security Council, whose approval is required for membership.²³² In November 2012, the General Assembly voted to accord 'Palestine' the status of non-member observer state status.²³³ On 1 January 2015, the President of the Palestine Authority (in the name of 'Palestine') issued a declaration accepting the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court with regard to alleged crimes committed since 13 June 2014. On the following day Palestine acceded to the Rome Statute by depositing its instrument of accession with the UN Secretary-General and the Statute of the Court was deemed to enter into force on 1 April 2015.²³⁴ On 16 January 2016, the Prosecutor opened a preliminary examination of the situation in Palestine.²³⁵ A number of states recognise Palestine as an independent state²³⁶ and Palestine has joined a number of international organisations and become a party to a number of international treaties.²³⁷

However, the matter remains controversial due to the divisions within the international community and the continuing application of the Oslo Accords (in the absence of the denunciation of the agreements by the parties) as well as the efforts to seek a peace agreement founded upon the acceptance of two states (Israel and Palestine) within the boundaries of mandated Palestine.

Various Secessionist Claimants

A number of secessionist claims from recognised independent states exist where such claimants in practice exercise some degree of effective control over all or part of the territory claimed. The former territory of British Somaliland, being the northern part of the new state of Somalia after its independence in 1960, asserted its own independence on 17 May 1991.²³⁸ A constitution was adopted in 2001, but the Organisation of African Unity refused to support any action that International Criminal Justice, 2010, p. 329; A. Pellet, 'The Palestinian Declaration and the Jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court', 8 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2010, p. 981; J. Quigley, 'The Palestine Declaration to the International Criminal Court: The Statehood Issue', 35 Rutgers Law Record, 2009, p. 1; and R. Ash, 'Is Palestine a "State"? A Response to Professor John Quigley's Article "The Palestine Declaration to the International Criminal Court: The Statehood Issue"', 36 Rutgers Law Record, 2009, p. 186. See further as to the International Criminal Court, chapter 7.

²³⁰ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/palestine>. ²³¹ A/66/371-S/2011/592. ²³² See S/2011/705.

²³³ Resolution 67/19. See also the UN Book of Permanent Missions (March 2013 edition), p. 314.

²³⁴ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/palestine>. See also ICC-ASP, The State of Palestine accedes to the Rome Statute, ICC-ASP-20150107-PR1082, 7 January 2015 and ICC-ASP, Official Records of the Resumed Thirteenth Session, The Hague, 24–25 June 2015, para. 16 and Annexes I and II.

²³⁵ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/Pages/item.aspx?name=pr1083>. See also Report on Preliminary Examination Activities, 2015, pp. 11 ff.

²³⁶ <http://palestineun.org/about-palestine/diplomatic-relations/>.

²³⁷ For example, the General Conference of UNESCO accepted Palestine as a member on 31 October 2011, www.unesco.org/new/en/media-services/single-view/news/general_conference_admits_palestine_as_unesco_member_state/#.UhlU8rzFaul. In April 2014, Palestine presented letters for accession to fifteen international conventions, <http://www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=47490#.V6SOXJMrJjR>. See also L. Trigeaud, 'L'Influence des Reconnaissances d'Etat sur la Formation des Engagements Conventionnels', 119 RGDIP, 2015, p. 571.

²³⁸ See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 412 ff., and Somalia: A Country Study (ed. H. C. Metz), 4th edn, Washington, 1993. See generally P. Kolsto, 'The Sustainability and Future of Unrecognized Quasi-States', 43 Journal of Peace Research, 2006, p. 723.

would affect the unity and sovereignty of Somalia.²³⁹ ‘Somaliland’ is unrecognised by any state or international organisation, although a number of dealings with the authorities of that entity have taken place.²⁴⁰ Following an armed conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan in the early 1990s, Armenian forces captured and occupied the area of Nagorno-Karabakh (and seven surrounding districts) from Azerbaijan. Nagorno-Karabakh, an area with a majority ethnic Armenian population, declared its independence from Azerbaijan as the ‘Nagorno-Karabakh Republic’ (‘NKR’). However, this has not been recognised by any state (including Armenia) and the UN Security Council adopted resolutions 822, 853, 874 and 884 reaffirming the sovereign and territorial integrity of Azerbaijan and calling for withdrawal from the occupied territories of Azerbaijan.²⁴¹ The issue of the status of the ‘NKR’ came before the European Court of Human Rights in the context of individual applications. In Chiragov v. Armenia, the leading case, the court in its judgment,²⁴² reflecting the similar cases concerning northern Cyprus,²⁴³ concluded that Armenia ‘has had a significant and decisive influence over the “NKR” and that the two entities are highly integrated in virtually all important matters and that this situation persists to this day. In other words, the “NKR” and its administration survives by virtue of the military, political, financial and other support given to it by Armenia which, consequently, exercises effective control over Nagorno-Karabakh and the surrounding territories, including the district of Lachin. The matters complained of therefore come within the jurisdiction of Armenia for the purposes of Article 1 of the Convention.

The former USSR republic of Moldova became independent on 23 June 1990 as the USSR dissolved. On 2 September 1990 the ‘Moldavian Republic of Transdniestria’ was proclaimed as an independent state in an area of Moldova bordering Ukraine. This entity has been able to maintain itself as a result of Russian assistance. However, it has not been recognised by any state.²⁴⁴ Similarly, the areas of South Ossetia and Abkhazia in Georgia have established separate de facto governments respectively with Russian support.²⁴⁵ Russia and a very few states have recognised them,²⁴⁶ but in the light of effective ²³⁹ See Report of the UN Secretary-General on the Situation in Somalia, S/2001/963, paras. 16 ff. (2001).

²⁴⁰ See e.g. the provision of assistance to the authorities of the area by the UK and the visit to the UK and meetings with UK government officials by the ‘president of Somaliland’ in July 2006: see FCO Press Release, 16 August 2006. See also Secretary of State for the Home Department v. CC and CF [2012] EWHC 2837 (Admin); UKMIL, 76 BYIL, 2005, p. 715; UKMIL, 81 BYIL, 2010, p. 503; and UKMIL, 83 BYIL, 2012, pp. 360–1.

²⁴¹ See e.g. the Reports of the International Crisis Group on Nagorno-Karabakh of 14 September 2005, 11 October 2005, 14 November 2007 and 4 July 2016. See also resolution 1416 of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly, 2005.

²⁴² European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 16 June 2015, paras. 168 ff. at para. 186. ²⁴³ See above, p. 184.

²⁴⁴ See the Reports of the International Crisis Group on Moldova of 12 August 2003, 17 June 2004 and 17 August 2006. See also Ilascu v. Moldova and Russia, European Court of Human Rights, judgment of 8 July 2004, pp. 8–40.

²⁴⁵ See the Reports of the International Crisis Group on South Ossetia of 26 November 2004, 19 April 2005 and 7 June 2007, and the Reports on Abkhazia of 15 September 2006 and 18 January 2007.

²⁴⁶ Russia recognised Abkhazia and South Ossetia as independent states on 26 August 2008: International Crisis Group, Europa Report No. 202, Abkhazia: Deepening Dependence, 2010, p. 1. In April 2009, Russia signed a five-year agreement with South Ossetia to take formal control of its frontiers with Georgia proper, as well as those of Abkhazia. In 2014, Russia and Abkhazia signed a ‘strategic partnership’ agreement: www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-18175394. In 2015, Russia signed an ‘alliance and integration agreement’ with South Ossetia that abolished border checkpoints: www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-18269210. Nicaragua, Venezuela and Nauru recognised South Ossetia and Abkhazia in 2008–9: <http://in.reuters.com/article/idINIndia-44730620091215>. Vanuatu apparently recognised South Ossetia and Abkhazia in 2011 and then withdrew this recognition: www.radioaustralia.net.au/int

Russian control and the paucity of international recognition, there can be no question of independent statehood.²⁴⁷

Associations of States

There are a number of ways in which states have become formally associated with one another. Such associations do not constitute states but have a certain effect upon international law. Confederations, for example, are probably the closest form of co-operation and they generally involve several countries acting together by virtue of an international agreement, with some kind of central institutions with limited functions.²⁴⁸ This is to be contrasted with federations. A federal unit is a state with strong centralised organs and usually a fairly widespread bureaucracy with extensive powers over the citizens of the state, even though the powers of the state are divided between the different units.²⁴⁹ However, a state may comprise component units with extensive powers.²⁵⁰

There are in addition certain 'associated states' which by virtue of their smallness and lack of development have a close relationship with another state. One instance is the connection between the Cook Islands and New Zealand, where internal self-government is allied to external dependence.²⁵¹ Another example was the group of islands which constituted the Associated States of the West Indies. These were tied to the United Kingdom by the terms of the West Indies Act 1967, which provided for the latter to exercise control with regard to foreign and defence issues. Nevertheless, such states were able to and did attain their independence.²⁵²

The status of such entities in an association relationship with a state will depend upon the constitutional nature of the arrangement and may in certain circumstances involve international personality distinct from the metropolitan state depending also upon international acceptance. It must, however, be noted that such status is one of the methods accepted by the UN of exercising ernational/radio/program/pacific-beat/vanuatu-dumps-recognition-of-abkhazia-and-south-ossetia/1289460. See also A. Nußberger, 'South Ossetia' and 'Abkhazia', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2013. Note the statement by the US Department of State on 17 March 2015 emphasising that South Ossetia and Abkhazia remained integral parts of Georgia and declaring that the US did not recognise the legitimacy of the 'treaty' between Russia and the 'de facto leaders' of the breakaway regions of South Ossetia and Abkhazia: www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2015/03/239383.htm. The UK has taken the same position as to the status of these territories: see e.g. Foreign and Commonwealth Minister's statement, 568 HC Deb., cols. 46W–47W, 8 October 2013.

²⁴⁷ As to the secession of Crimea and its subsequent annexation by Russia, see chapter 9, p. 389.

²⁴⁸ Note, for example, the Preliminary Agreement Concerning the Establishment of a Confederation between the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republic of Croatia, 1994, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 605. This Agreement 'anticipated' the creation of a Confederation, but provides that its 'establishment shall not change the international identity or legal personality of Croatia or of the Federation'. The Agreement provided for co-operation between the parties in a variety of areas and for Croatia to grant the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina free access to the Adriatic through its territory. This Confederation did not come about.

²⁴⁹ See Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 479 ff., and above, p. 171. See also with regard to the proposed arrangement between Gambia and Senegal, 21 ILM, 1982, pp. 44–7.

²⁵⁰ See e.g. the Dayton Peace Agreement 1995, Annex 4 laying down the constitution of Bosnia and Herzegovina as an independent state consisting of two Entities, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and the Republika Srpska. The boundary between the two Entities was laid down in Annex 2.

²⁵¹ Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 625 ff. and ibid. as regards Puerto Rico and Niue. See also as to the Cook Islands, M. N. Shaw, 'The Article 12(3) Declaration of the Palestinian Authority, the International Criminal Court and International Law', http://papers.ssrn.com/sol3/papers.cfm?abstract_id=1782668 at p. 36 ff.

²⁵² See e.g. J. E. S. Fawcett, Annual Survey of Commonwealth Law, London, 1967, pp. 709–11.

the right to self-determination.²⁵³ Provided that an acceptable level of powers, including those dealing with domestic affairs, remain with the associated state, and that the latter may without undue difficulty revoke the arrangement, some degree of personality would appear desirable and acceptable.

The Commonwealth of Nations (the former British Commonwealth) is perhaps the most well known of the loose associations which group together sovereign states on the basis usually of common interests and historical ties. Its members are all fully independent states who co-operate through the assistance of the Commonwealth Secretariat and periodic conferences of Heads of Government. Regular meetings of particular ministers also take place. The Commonwealth does not constitute a legally binding relationship, but operates as a useful forum for discussions. Relations between Commonwealth members display certain special characteristics: for example, ambassadors are usually referred to as High Commissioners. It would appear unlikely in the circumstances that it possesses separate international personality.²⁵⁴ However, the more that the Commonwealth develops distinctive institutions and establishes common policies with the capacity to take binding decisions, the more the argument may be made for international legal personality.

Following the dissolution of the Soviet Union and the coming to independence of the constituent Republics, with the Russian Federation being deemed the continuation of the Soviet Union, it was decided to establish the Commonwealth of Independent States.²⁵⁵ Originally formed by Russia, Belarus and Ukraine on 8 December 1991, it was enlarged on 21 December 1991 to include eleven former Republics of the USSR. Georgia joined the CIS on 8 October 1993. Thus all the former Soviet Republics, excluding the three Baltic states, are now members of that organisation.²⁵⁶ The agreement establishing the CIS provided for respect for human rights and other principles and called for co-ordination between the member states. The Charter of the CIS was adopted on 22 June 1993 as a binding international treaty²⁵⁷ and laid down a series of principles ranging from respect for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, self-determination of peoples, prohibition of the use or threat of force and settlement of disputes by peaceful means. It was noted that the CIS was neither a state nor 'supranational' (article 1) and a number of common co-ordinating institutions were established. In particular, the Council of Heads of State is the 'highest body of the Commonwealth' and it may 'take decisions on the principal issues relating to the activity of the member states in the field of their mutual interests' (article 21), while the Council of the Heads of Government has the function of co-ordinating co-operation among executive organs of member states (article 22). Both Councils may take decisions on the basis of consensus (article 23). A Council of Foreign Ministers was also established together with a Co-ordination and Consultative Committee, as a permanent executive and co-ordinating ²⁵³ See, with regard to the successors of the trust territory of the Pacific, above, p. 176.

²⁵⁴ See J. E. S. Fawcett, The British Commonwealth in International Law, London, 1963; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 256; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 346–56; Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 476–544; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 214–64; and Sale, The Modern Commonwealth, 1983. See also, as regards the French Community, Whiteman, Digest, pp. 544–82; and O'Connell, International Law, pp. 356–9.

²⁵⁵ See e.g. J. Lippott, 'The Commonwealth of Independent States as an Economic and Legal Community', 39 German YIL, 1996, p. 334.

²⁵⁶ See 31 ILM, 1992, pp. 138 and 147, and 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1298. ²⁵⁷ See 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1279.

body of the Commonwealth.²⁵⁸ The CIS has adopted in addition a Treaty on Economic Union²⁵⁹ and a Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms.²⁶⁰ The increasing development of the CIS as a directing international institution suggests its possession of international legal personality.

The European Union²⁶¹ is an association, of twenty-eight states,²⁶² which has established a variety of common institutions and which has the competence to adopt not only legal acts binding upon member states but also acts having direct effect within domestic legal systems. The Union consists essentially of the European Community (itself an amalgam of the European Coal and Steel Community, EURATOM and the European Economic Community) and two additional pillars, viz. the Common Foreign and Security Policy, and Justice and Home Affairs. Only the European Coal and Steel Community Treaty provided explicitly for international legal personality (article 6), but the case-law of the European Court of Justice demonstrates its belief that the other two communities also possess such personality.²⁶³ It is also established that Community law has superiority over domestic law. The European Court of Justice early in the history of the Community declared that the Community constituted ‘a new legal order of international law’.²⁶⁴ In the circumstances, it seems hard to deny that the Community possesses international legal personality, but unlikely that the co-operative processes involved in the additional two pillars are so endowed.²⁶⁵ The European Community has the power to conclude and negotiate agreements in line with its external powers, to become a member of an international organisation and to have delegations in non-member countries. However, the Treaty on European Union contained no provision on the legal personality of the Union. The Union does not have institutionalised treaty-making powers, but is able to conclude agreements through the Council of the European Union or by asserting its position on the international stage, especially in connection with the Common Foreign and Security Policy. However, article 55 of the Treaty of ²⁵⁸ Note also the creation of the Council of Defence Ministers, the Council of Frontier Troops Chief Commanders, an Economic Court, a Commission on Human Rights, an Organ of Branch Co-operation and an Interparliamentary Assembly (articles 30–35).

²⁵⁹ 24 September 1993, 34 ILM, 1995, p. 1298.

²⁶⁰ 26 May 1995, see Council of Europe Information Sheet No. 36, 1995, p. 195.

²⁶¹ Established as such by article A, Title I of the Treaty on European Union (Maastricht) signed in February 1992 and in force as from 1 January 1993. See also the Treaty of Amsterdam, 1997, the Treaty of Nice, 2001 and the Treaty of Lisbon, 2007. The latter entered into force on 1 December 2009. See above, chapter 4, p. 136.

²⁶² On 23 June 2016 the UK held a referendum in which the majority voted to leave the EU. On 29 March 2017, the UK made the required notification under article 50 of the Treaty on European Union providing a two-year notice to leave the EU: see www.gov.uk/government/publications/prime-ministers-letter-to-donald-tusk-triggering-article-50 and www.consilium.europa.eu/en/press/press-releases/2017/03/29-euco-50-statement-uk-notification/.

²⁶³ See e.g. Costa v. ENEL [1964] ECR 585, 593; Commission v. Council [1971] ECR 263, 274; Kramer [1976] ECR 1279, 1308; and Protection of Nuclear Materials [1978] ECR 2151, 2179. See also A. Peters, ‘The Position of International Law Within the European Community Legal Order’, 40 German YIL, 1997, p. 9; D. Chalmers, G. Davies and G. Monti, European Union Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2014; D. Chalmers and A. Tomkins, European Union Public Law, Cambridge, 2007; S. Weatherill, Cases and Materials on EU Law, 12th edn, Oxford, 2016; P. Craig and G. de Burca, EU Law: Text, Cases and Materials, 6th edn, Oxford, 2015; Steiner and Woods EU Law (ed. L. Woods and P. Watson), Oxford, 2014; The Oxford Handbook on European Law (ed. A. Arnulf and D. Chalmers), Oxford, 2015; S. Weatherill, Law and Values in the European Union, Oxford, 2016; and R. Schütze, Foreign Affairs and the EU Constitution, Cambridge, 2014.

²⁶⁴ Van Gend en Loos v. Nederlandse Administratie des Belastingen [1963] ECR 1.

²⁶⁵ See e.g. the Second Legal Adviser of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 660. But see also Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 20. Note also the European Court of Justice’s Opinion No. 1/94, Community Competence to Conclude Certain International Agreements [1994] ECR I-5276; 108 ILR, p. 225.

Lisbon, 2007 provided for the insertion into the Treaty on European Union of a new article 46A, which expressly asserts that the European Union has legal personality.²⁶⁶

Conclusions

Whether or not the entities discussed above constitute international persons or indeed states or merely part of some other international person is a matter for careful consideration in the light of the circumstances of the case, in particular the claims made by the entity in question, the facts on the ground, especially with regard to third-party control and the degree of administrative effectiveness manifested, and the reaction of other international persons. The importance here of recognition, acquiescence and estoppel is self-evident. Acceptance of some international personality need not be objective so as to bind non-consenting states nor unlimited as to time and content factors. These elements will be considered below. It should, however, be noted here that the international community itself also has needs and interests that bear upon this question as to international status. This is particularly so with regard to matters of responsibility and the protection of persons via the rules governing the recourse to and conduct of armed conflicts.²⁶⁷

SPECIAL CASES

The Sovereign Order of Malta

This Order, established during the Crusades as a military and medical association, ruled Rhodes from 1309 to 1522 and was given Malta by treaty with Charles V in 1530 as a fief of the Kingdom of Sicily. This sovereignty was lost in 1798, and in 1834 the Order established its headquarters in Rome as a humanitarian organisation.²⁶⁸ The Order already had international personality at the time of its taking control of Malta and even when it had to leave the island it continued to exchange diplomatic legations with most European countries. The Italian Court of Cassation in 1935 recognised the international personality of the Order, noting that ‘the modern theory of the subjects of international law recognises a number of collective units whose composition is independent of the nationality of their constituent members and whose scope transcends by virtue of their universal character the territorial confines of any single state’.²⁶⁹ This is predicated upon the functional needs of the entity as accepted by third parties. It is to be noted, for example, that the Order maintains diplomatic relations with or is recognised by over eighty states and has observer status in the UN General Assembly.²⁷⁰ It is ²⁶⁶ See now article 47 of the Consolidated Version of the Treaty on European Union [2016] OJ C202.

²⁶⁷ As to the specific regime established in the Antarctica Treaty, 1959, see below, p. 399. See also below, p. 470, with regard to the International Seabed Authority under the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982.

²⁶⁸ Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 329, note 7; O’Connell, International Law, pp. 85–6; and Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, pp. 584–7. See also Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 231 ff., and B. J. Theutenberg, The Holy See, the Order of Malta and International Law, Skara, 2003.

²⁶⁹ Nanni v. Pace and the Sovereign Order of Malta 8 AD, p. 2. See also Scarfö v. Sovereign Order of Malta 24 ILR, p. 1; Sovereign Order of Malta v. Soc. An. Commerciale 22 ILR, p. 1; and Cassese, International Law, pp. 132–3.

²⁷⁰ Crawford, Creation of States, p. 231.

not a state and it is questionable whether it has general international personality beyond those states and organisations expressly recognising it.²⁷¹

The Holy See and the Vatican City²⁷²

In 1870, the conquest of the Papal states by Italian forces ended their existence as sovereign states. The question therefore arose as to the status in international law of the Holy See, deprived, as it then was, of normal territorial sovereignty. In 1929 the Lateran Treaty was signed with Italy which recognised the state of the Vatican City and ‘the sovereignty of the Holy See in the field of international relations as an attribute that pertains to the very nature of the Holy See, in conformity with its traditions and with the demands of its mission in the world’.²⁷³ The question thus interrelates with the problem of the status today of the Vatican City. The latter has no permanent population apart from Church functionaries and exists only to support the work of the Holy See. Italy carries out a substantial number of administrative functions with regard to the City. Some writers accordingly have concluded that it cannot be regarded as a state.²⁷⁴ Nevertheless, it is a party to many international treaties and is a member of the Universal Postal Union and the International Telecommunications Union. It would appear that by virtue of recognition and acquiescence in the context of its claims, it does exist as a state. The Vatican City is closely linked with the Holy See and they are essentially part of the same construct.

The Holy See, the central organisational authority of the Catholic Church, continued after 1870 to engage in diplomatic relations and enter into international agreements and concordats.²⁷⁵ Accordingly its status as an international person was accepted by such partners. In its joint eleventh and twelfth report submitted to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in 1993,²⁷⁶ the Holy See reminded the Committee of its ‘exceptional nature within the community of nations; as a sovereign subject of international law, it has a mission of an essentially religious and moral order, universal in scope, which is based on minimal territorial dimensions guaranteeing a basis of autonomy for the pastoral ministry of the Sovereign Pontiff’.²⁷⁷ Crawford has concluded that the Holy See is both an international legal person in its own right and the government of a state (the Vatican City).²⁷⁸

²⁷¹ Ibid., p. 233.

²⁷² See Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 325; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 221 ff.; J. Duursma, Fragmentation and the International Relations of Microstates: Self-determination and Statehood, Cambridge, 1996, pp. 374 ff.; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 353–77; Le Saint-Siège dans les Relations Internationales (ed. J. P. D’Onorio), Aix-en-Provence, 1989; R. Graham, Vatican Diplomacy: A Study of Church and State on the International Plane, Princeton, 1959; and J. R. Morss, ‘The International Legal Status of the Vatican/Holy See Complex’, 26 EJIL, 2015, p. 927.

²⁷³ 130 BFSP, p. 791. See also O’Connell, International Law, p. 289, and Re Marcinkus, Mennini and De Strobel 87 ILR, p. 48.

²⁷⁴ See M. Mendelson, ‘The Diminutive States in the United Nations’, 21 ICLQ, 1972, p. 609.

²⁷⁵ See e.g. the Fundamental Agreement between the Holy See and the State of Israel of 30 December 1993, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 153.

²⁷⁶ CERD/C/226/Add. 6 (15 February 1993).

²⁷⁷ See also the decision of the Philippines Supreme Court (en banc) in The Holy See v. Starbright Sales Enterprises Inc. 102 ILR, p. 163.

²⁷⁸ Crawford, Creation of States, p. 230. The International Committee of the Red Cross also appears on the basis of state practice, particularly its participation in international agreements, to be an international legal person to a limited extent: see Cassese, International Law, pp. 133–4. The US has recognised the Holy See as a foreign government: see O’Bryan v. Holy See, 556 F.3d 361 (6th Cir. 2009).

Insurgents and Belligerents

International law has recognised that such entities may in certain circumstances, primarily dependent upon the de facto administration of specific territory, enter into valid arrangements.²⁷⁹ In addition they will be bound by the rules of international law with respect to the conduct of hostilities and may in due course be recognised as governments. The traditional law is in process of modification as a result of the right to self-determination, and other legal principles such as territorial integrity, sovereign equality and non-intervention in addition to recognition will need to be taken into account.²⁸⁰

National Liberation Movements (NLMs)

The question of whether or not NLMs constitute subjects of international law and, if so, to what extent, is bound up with the development of the law relating to non-self-governing territories and the principle of self-determination. What is noticeable is not only the increasing status of NLMs during the decolonisation period, but also the fact that in many cases the international community turned to bodies other than the NLMs in controversial situations.

The UN trusteeship system permitted the hearing of individual petitioners and this was extended to all colonial territories. In 1977, the General Assembly Fourth Committee voted to permit representatives of certain NLMs from Portugal's African territories to participate in its work dealing with such territories.²⁸¹ The General Assembly endorsed the concept of observer status for liberation movements recognised by the Organisation of African Unity in resolution 2918 (XVII). In resolution 3247 (XXIX), the Assembly accepted that NLMs recognised by the OAU or the Arab League could participate in Assembly sessions, in conferences arranged under the auspices of the Assembly and in meetings of the UN specialised agencies and the various Assembly organs.²⁸²

The inclusion of the regional recognition requirement was intended both to require a minimum level of effectiveness with regard to the organisation concerned before UN acceptance and to exclude in practice secessionist movements. The Economic and Social Committee of the UN has also adopted a similar approach and under its procedural rules it may invite any NLM recognised by or in accordance with General Assembly resolutions to take part in relevant debates without a vote.²⁸³

²⁷⁹ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 165; Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 494–5; and T. C. Chen, Recognition, London, 1951. See also Cassese, International Law, pp. 124 ff.; S. C. Neff, 'The Prerogatives of Violence – In Search of the Conceptual Foundations of Belligerents' Rights', 38 German YIL, 1995, p. 41, and Neff, The Rights and Duties of Neutrals, Manchester, 2000, pp. 200 ff. See further chapter 20.

²⁸⁰ See below, p. 198.

²⁸¹ See M. N. Shaw, 'The International Status of National Liberation Movements', 5 Liverpool Law Review, 1983, p. 19, and R. Ranjeva, 'Peoples and National Liberation Movements', in International Law: Achievements and Prospects (ed. M. Bedjaoui), Paris, 1991, p. 101. See also Cassese, International Law, pp. 140 ff., and H. Wilson, International Law and the Use of Force by National Liberation Movements, Oxford, 1988.

²⁸² While the leader of the PAIGC was not permitted to speak at the Assembly in 1973, the leader of the PLO was able to address the body in 1974: see A/C.4/SR.1978 p. 23 and resolution 3237 (XXIX).

²⁸³ ECOSOC resolution 1949 (LVII), 8 May 1975, rule 73. See also, as regards the Human Rights Commission, CHR/Res.19 (XXIX). The General Assembly and ECOSOC have also called upon the specialised agencies and other UN-related organisations to assist the peoples and NLMs of colonial territories: see e.g. Assembly resolutions 33/41 and 35/29.

The UN Security Council also permitted the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to participate in its debates with the same rights of participation as conferred upon a member state not a member of the Security Council, although this did raise serious constitutional questions.²⁸⁴ Thus the possibility of observer status in the UN and related organs for NLMs appears to have been affirmatively settled in international practice. The question of international personality, however, is more complex and more significant, and recourse must be made to state practice.²⁸⁵ Whether extensive state recognition of a liberation movement is of itself sufficient to confer such status is still a controversial issue.

As far as Namibia was concerned, the territory was regarded as having an international status²⁸⁶ and there existed an NLM recognised as the authentic representative of the people²⁸⁷ but it was, theoretically, administered by the UN Council for Namibia. This body was established in 1967 by the General Assembly in order to administer the territory and to prepare it for independence; it was disbanded in 1990. There were thirty-one UN member states on the Council, which was responsible to the General Assembly.²⁸⁸ The Council sought to represent Namibian interests in international organisations and in conferences, and issued travel and identity documents to Namibians which were recognised by most states.²⁸⁹ In 1974, the Council issued Decree No. 1 which sought to forbid the exploitation under South African auspices of the territory's resources, but little was in practice achieved by this Decree, which was not drafted in the clearest possible manner.²⁹⁰ The status of the Council was unclear, but it was clearly recognised as having a role within the UN context and may thus have possessed some form of qualified personality. It was, of course, distinct from SWAPO, the recognised NLM.

International Public Companies

This type of entity, which may be known by a variety of names, for example multinational public enterprises or international bodies corporate, is characterised in general by an international agreement providing for co-operation between governmental and private enterprises.²⁹¹ One writer, for example, defined such entities as corporations which have not been constituted by the exclusive application of one national law; whose members and directors represent several national sovereignties; whose legal personality is not based, or at any rate not entirely, on the decision of a national authority or the application of a national law; whose operations, finally, are governed, at least partially, by rules that do not stem from a single or even from several national laws.²⁹²

²⁸⁴ See Yearbook of the UN, 1972, p. 70 and 1978, p. 297; S/PV 1859 (1975); S/PV 1870 (1976); UN Chronicle, April 1982, p. 16, and DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 73–5. See also Shaw, 'International Status'. See further above, p. 186.

²⁸⁵ See the UN Headquarters Agreement case, ICJ Reports, 1988, p. 12; 82 ILR, p. 225.

²⁸⁶ The Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3.

²⁸⁷ Assembly resolution 3295 (XXIX), recognising the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) as the authentic representative of the Namibian people.

²⁸⁸ The UK did not recognise the Council: see 408 HL Deb., col. 758, 23 April 1980.

²⁸⁹ See e.g. J. F. Engers, 'The UN Travel and Identity Documents for Namibia', 65 AJIL, 1971, p. 571.

²⁹⁰ See Decolonisation, No. 9, December 1977.

²⁹¹ See e.g. D. Fligler, Multinational Public Corporations, Washington, DC, 1967 and D. A. Ijalaye, The Extension of Corporate Personality in International Law, Leiden, 1978, pp. 57–146. See also P. Muchlinski, Multinational Enterprises and the Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2007.

²⁹² Cited in Ijalaye, Corporate Personality, p. 69.

Such enterprises may vary widely in constitutional nature and in competences. Examples of such companies would include INTELSAT, established in 1973 as an intergovernmental structure for a global commercial telecommunications satellite system; Eurofima, established in 1955 by fourteen European states in order to lease equipment to the railway administrations of those states; and the Bank of International Settlement, created in 1930 by virtue of a treaty between five states, and the host country, Switzerland. The personality question will depend upon the differences between municipal and international personality. If the entity is given a range of powers and is distanced sufficiently from municipal law, an international person may be involved, but it will require careful consideration of the circumstances.

Transnational Corporations

Another possible candidate for international personality is the transnational or multinational enterprise. Various definitions exist of this important phenomenon in international relations.²⁹³ They in essence constitute private business organisations comprising several legal entities linked together by parent corporations and are distinguished by size and multinational spread. In the years following the Barcelona Traction case,²⁹⁴ an increasing amount of practice has been evident on the international plane dealing with such corporations. What has been sought is a set of guidelines governing the major elements of the international conduct of these entities.²⁹⁵ Progress has been slow and several crucial issues remain to be resolved, including the legal effect, if any, of such guidelines.²⁹⁶ The question of the international personality of transnational ²⁹³ See e.g. K. Hamdani and L. Ruffing, United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations: Corporate Conduct and the Public Interest, London, 2015; J. Wouters and A.-L. Chané, 'Multinational Corporations in International Law', in Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. M. Noortmann, A. Reinisch and C. Ryngaert), Oxford, 2015, p. 225; C. W. Jenks, in Transnational Law in a Changing Society (ed. W. Friedman, L. Henkin and O. Lissitzyn), New York, 1972, p. 70; H. Baade, in Legal Problems of a Code of Conduct for Multinational Enterprises (ed. N. Horn), Boston, 1980; J. Charney, 'Transnational Corporations and Developing Public International Law', Duke Law Journal, 1983, p. 748; F. Rigaux, 'Transnational Corporations', in Bedjaoui, International Law: Achievements and Prospects, p. 121; and Henkin et al., International Law: Cases and Materials, p. 368. See also Muchlinski, Multinational Enterprises; C. M. Vazquez, 'Direct vs Indirect Obligations of Corporations under International Law', 43 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 2005, p. 927; F. Johns, 'The Invisibility of the Transnational Corporation: An Analysis of International Law and Legal Theory', 19 Melbourne University Law Review, 1993–4, p. 893; D. Eshanov, 'The Role of Multinational Corporations from the Neoinstitutionalist and International Law Perspectives', 16 New York University Environmental Law Journal, 2008, p. 110; and S. R. Ratner, 'Corporations and Human Rights: A Theory of Legal Responsibility', 111 Yale Law Journal, 2001, p. 443.

²⁹⁴ ICJ Reports, 1970, pp. 3, 46–7; 46 ILR, pp. 178, 220–1.

²⁹⁵ See e.g. OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, 75 US Dept State Bull., p. 83 (1976), and ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, 17 ILM, pp. 423–30. See also Baade, Legal Problems, pp. 416–40. Note the OECD Principles of Corporate Governance, 1998 and the ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, 2000. See also the Draft Norms on Responsibilities for Transnational Corporations and Other Business Enterprises with Regard to Human Rights produced by the UN Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights' Sessional Working Group on the working methods and activities of transnational corporations, E/CN.4/Sub.2/2002/13, August 2002, and Human Rights Standards and the Responsibilities of Transnational Corporations (ed. M. Addo), The Hague, 1999.

²⁹⁶ See the Draft Code of Conduct produced by the UN Commission on Transnational Corporations, 22 ILM, pp. 177–206; 23 ILM, p. 627 and ibid., p. 602 (Secretariat report on outstanding issues); E/1990/94 (1990); and the World Bank Guidelines on the Treatment of Foreign Direct Investment, 31 ILM, 1992, p. 1366. The Commission ceased work in 1993. The Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights adopted 'Norms on the Responsibilities of Transnational Corporations and Other Business Enterprises with Regard to Human Rights' in 2003: see E/CN.4/Sub.2/2003/12/Rev.2. Note the Andean Group commission decision 292 on a uniform code on corporations remains an open one.²⁹⁷ However, on 6 July 2011, the UN Human Rights Council adopted the Guiding Principles on ‘Business and Human Rights: Implementing the United Nations “Protect, Respect and Remedy” Framework’.²⁹⁸ These Principles do not create international legal obligations as such. They emphasise the duty of states to respect, protect and fulfil the human rights of individuals and in particular to protect against human rights abuse within their territory and/or jurisdiction by third parties, including business enterprises. States must ensure that those affected by abuses taking place within their territory and/or jurisdiction must have access to an effective remedy. The Principles declare that business enterprises should respect human rights, avoid infringing on the rights of others and should address adverse human rights impacts with which they are involved. The reference to human rights here refers to internationally recognised human rights. It is provided that the responsibility to respect human rights is a global standard of expected conduct for business enterprises. The realm is that of ‘soft law’, of expectations, of anticipation, not of binding international (as opposed to national) legal regulation. This responsibility to respect human rights requires that business enterprises avoid causing or contributing to adverse human rights impacts through their own activities and to seek to prevent or mitigate adverse human rights impacts that are directly linked to their operations, products or services by their business relationships.²⁹⁹

THE RIGHT OF ALL PEOPLES TO SELF-DETERMINATION³⁰⁰

The Establishment of the Legal Right

This principle, which traces its origin to the concepts of nationality and democracy as evolved primarily in Europe, first appeared in major form after the First World War. Despite President Andean multinational enterprises, 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1295, and the Eastern and Southern African states charter on a regime of multinational industrial enterprises, ibid., p. 696. See also the previous footnote.

²⁹⁷ The Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, p. 126 notes that the transnational corporation, while an established feature of international life, ‘has not yet achieved independent status in international law’.

²⁹⁸ Resolution 17/4. For the Guiding Principles, see A/HRC/17/31. See also J. Ruggie, Just Business Multinational Corporations and Human Rights, New York, 2013. See also UNHCR, The Corporate Responsibility to Protect Human Rights: An Interpretive Guide, New York, 2012.

²⁹⁹ See Guiding Principle 13. The UN Human Rights Council established a Working Group on on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises in 2011, A/HRC/17/4. See www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/Business/Pages/WGHRandtransnationalcorporationsandotherbusiness.aspx.

³⁰⁰ See in general e.g. A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995; K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002; U. O. Umozurike, Self-Determination in International Law, Hamden, 1972; A. Rigo-Sureda, The Evolution of the Right of Self-Determination, Leiden, 1973; M. Pomerance, Self-Determination in Law and Practice, Leiden, 1982; Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 59–144; A. E. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; D. Raic, Statehood and the Law of Self-Determination, The Hague, 2002; Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 107 ff., and Crawford, ‘The General Assembly, the International Court and Self-Determination’, in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (ed. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 585; Rousseau, Droit International Public, vol. II, pp. 17–35; Tunkin, Theory, pp. 60–9; and Tomuschat, Modern Law of Self-Determination, New York, 1993. See also M. Koskenniemi, ‘National Self-Determination Today: Problems of Legal Theory and Practice’, 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 241; W. Ofuatye-Kodjoe, ‘Self Determination’, in United Nations Legal Order (ed. O. Schachter and C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. I, p. 349; A. B. Lorca, ‘Petitioning the International: A “Pre-History” of Self-determination’, 25 EJIL, 2014, p. 497; A. Coleman, Resolving Claims to Self-Determination, London, 2015; M. Sterio, The Right to Self-Determination under International Law, London, 2013; J. Summers, Peoples and International Law, Leiden, 2014; Statehood and Self-Determination: Reconciling Tradition and Modernity in International Law (ed. D. French) Cambridge, 2013; and The Theory of Self-Determination (ed. F. R. Tesón), Cambridge, 2016.

Wilson's efforts, it was not included in the League of Nations Covenant and it was clearly not regarded as a legal principle.³⁰¹ However, its influence can be detected in the various provisions for minority protection³⁰² and in the establishment of the mandates system based as it was upon the sacred trust concept. In the ten years before the Second World War, there was relatively little practice regarding self-determination in international law. A number of treaties concluded by the USSR in this period noted the principle,³⁰³ but in the Aaland Islands case it was clearly accepted by both the International Commission of Jurists and the Committee of Rapporteurs dealing with the situation that the principle of self-determination was not a legal rule of international law, but purely a political concept.³⁰⁴ The situation, which concerned the Swedish inhabitants of an island alleged to be part of Finland, was resolved by the League's recognition of Finnish sovereignty coupled with minority guarantees.

The Second World War stimulated further consideration of the idea and the principle was included in the UN Charter. Article 1(2) noted as one of the organisation's purposes the development of friendly relations among nations based upon respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination, and article 55 reiterated the phraseology. It is disputed whether the reference to the principle in these very general terms was sufficient to entail its recognition as a binding right, but the majority view is against this. Not every statement of a political aim in the Charter can be regarded as automatically creative of legal obligations. On the other hand, its inclusion in the Charter, particularly within the context of the statement of purposes of the UN, provided the opportunity for the subsequent interpretation of the principle both in terms of its legal effect and consequences and with regard to its definition. It is also to be noted that Chapters XI and XII of the Charter deal with non-self-governing and trust territories and may be seen as relevant within the context of the development and definition of the right to self-determination, although the term is not expressly used.³⁰⁵

Practice since 1945 within the UN, both generally as regards the elucidation and standing of the principle and more particularly as regards its perceived application in specific instances, can be seen as having ultimately established the legal standing of the right in international law. This may be achieved either by treaty or by custom or indeed, more controversially, by virtue of constituting a general principle of law. All these routes are relevant, as will be seen. The UN Charter is a multilateral treaty which can be interpreted by subsequent practice, while the range of state and organisation practice evident within the UN system can lead to the ³⁰¹ See A. Cobban, The Nation-State and National Self-Determination, London, 1969; D. H. Miller, The Drafting of the Covenant, New York, 1928, vol. II, pp. 12–13; S. Wambaugh, Plebiscites since the World War, Washington, 1933, vol. I, p. 42; and Pomerance, Self-Determination.

³⁰² See e.g. I. Claude, National Minorities, Cambridge, 1955, and J. Lador-Lederer, International Group Protection, Leiden, 1968.

³⁰³ See e.g. the Baltic States' treaties, Martens, Recueil Général de Traités, 3rd Series, XI, pp. 864, 877 and 888, and Cobban, Nation-State, pp. 187–218. See also Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, p. 56.

³⁰⁴ LNOJ Supp. No. 3, 1920, pp. 5–6 and Doc. B7/21/68/106[VII], pp. 22–3. See also J. Barros, The Aaland Islands Question, New Haven, 1968, and Verzijl, International Law, pp. 328–32.

³⁰⁵ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, p. 312; N. Bentwich and A. Martin, Commentary on the Charter of the UN, New York, 1950, p. 7; D. Nincic, The Problem of Sovereignty in the Charter and the Practice of States, The Hague, 1970, p. 221; H. Kelsen, Law of the United Nations, London, 1950, pp. 51–3; and H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, The Hague, 1950, pp. 147–9. See also Judge Tanaka, South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 288–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451–2.

formation of customary law. The amount of material dealing with self-determination in the UN testifies to the importance of the concept and some of the more significant of this material will be briefly noted.

Resolution 1514 (XV), the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, adopted in 1960 by eighty-nine votes to none, with nine abstentions, stressed that:

all peoples have the right to self-determination; by virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.

Inadequacy of political, social, economic or educational preparedness was not to serve as a protest for delaying independence, while attempts aimed at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country were deemed incompatible with the UN Charter. The Colonial Declaration set the terms for the self-determination debate in its emphasis upon the colonial context and its opposition to secession, and has been regarded by some as constituting a binding interpretation of the Charter.³⁰⁶ The Declaration was reinforced by the establishment of a Special Committee on Decolonisation, which now deals with all dependent territories and has proved extremely active, and by the fact that virtually all UN resolutions dealing with self-determination expressly refer to it. Indeed, the International Court has specifically referred to the Colonial Declaration as an 'important stage' in the development of international law regarding non-self-governing territories and as the 'basis for the process of decolonisation'.³⁰⁷

In 1966, the General Assembly adopted the International Covenants on Human Rights. Both these Covenants have an identical first article, declaring inter alia that '[a]ll peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status', while states parties to the instruments 'shall promote the realisation of the right of self-determination and shall respect that right in conformity with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations'. The Covenants came into force in 1976 and thus constitute binding provisions as between the parties, but in addition they also may be regarded as authoritative interpretations of several human rights provisions in the Charter, including self-determination. The 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations can be regarded as constituting an authoritative interpretation of the seven Charter provisions it expounds. The Declaration states inter alia that 'by virtue of the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations, all people have the right freely to determine . . . their political status' while all states are under the duty to respect this right in accordance with the Charter. The Declaration was specifically intended to act as an elucidation of certain important Charter provisions and was indeed adopted without opposition by the General Assembly.³⁰⁸

³⁰⁶ See e.g. O. Asamoah, The Legal Significance of the Declarations of the General Assembly of the United Nations, The Hague, 1966, pp. 177–85, and Shaw, Title, chapter 2.

³⁰⁷ The Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31 and 32; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 49.

³⁰⁸ Adopted in resolution 2625 (XXV) without a vote. See e.g. R. Rosenstock, 'The Declaration of Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations', 65 AJIL, 1971, pp. 16, 111 and 115.

In addition to this general, abstract approach, the UN organs have dealt with self-determination in a series of specific resolutions with regard to particular situations and this practice may be adduced as reinforcing the conclusions that the principle has become a right in international law by virtue of a process of Charter interpretation. Numerous resolutions have been adopted in the General Assembly and also the Security Council.³⁰⁹ It is also possible that a rule of customary law has been created since practice in the UN system is still state practice, but the identification of the opinio juris element is not easy and will depend upon careful assessment and judgment.

Judicial discussion of the principle of self-determination has been relatively rare and centres on the *Namibia*³¹⁰ and *Western Sahara*³¹¹ advisory opinions by the International Court. In the former case, the Court emphasised that 'the subsequent development of international law in regard to non-self-governing territories as enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations made the principle of self-determination applicable to all of them'.³¹² The Western Sahara case reaffirmed this point.³¹³ This case arose out of the decolonisation of that territory, controlled by Spain as the colonial power but subject to irredentist claims by Morocco and Mauritania. The Court was asked for an opinion with regard to the legal ties between the territory at that time and Morocco and the Mauritanian entity. The Court stressed that the request for an opinion arose out of the consideration by the General Assembly of the decolonisation of Western Sahara and that the right of the people of the territory to self-determination constituted a basic assumption of the questions put to the Court.³¹⁴ After analysing the Charter provisions and Assembly resolutions noted above, the Court concluded that the ties which had existed between the claimants and the territory during the relevant period of the 1880s were not such as to affect the application of resolution 1514 (XV), the Colonial Declaration, in the decolonisation of the territory and in particular the right to self-determination. In other words, it is clear that the Court regarded the principle of self-determination as a legal one in the context of such territories.

The Court moved one step further in the East Timor (Portugal v. Australia) case³¹⁵ when it declared that 'Portugal's assertion that the right of peoples to self-determination, as it evolved from the Charter and from United Nations practice, has an erga omnes character, is irreproachable.' The Court emphasised that the right of peoples to self-determination was 'one of the essential principles of contemporary international law'.³¹⁶ However, in that case, the Court, while noting that for both Portugal and Australia, East Timor (under Indonesian military occupation since the invasion of 1975) constituted a non-self-governing territory and pointing out that the people of East Timor had the right to self-determination, held that the absence of Indonesia from the litigation meant that the Court was unable to exercise its ³⁰⁹ See e.g. Assembly resolutions 1755 (XVII); 2138 (XXI); 2151 (XXI); 2379 (XXIII); 2383 (XXIII) and Security Council resolutions 183 (1963); 301 (1971); 377 (1975); and 384 (1975).

³¹⁰ ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 3.

³¹¹ ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 30. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Western Sahara Case', 49 BYIL, p. 119.

³¹² ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 21. ³¹³ ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 31; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 48.

³¹⁴ ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 68; 59 ILR, p. 85. See in particular the views of Judge Dillard that 'a norm of international law has emerged applicable to the decolonisation of those non-self-governing territories which are under the aegis of the United Nations', ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 121–2; 59 ILR, p. 138. See also Judge Petren, ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 110; 59 ILR, p. 127.

³¹⁵ ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226. ³¹⁶ Ibid.

jurisdiction.³¹⁷ These propositions were all reaffirmed by the International Court in the Construction of a Wall advisory opinion³¹⁸ and in the Kosovo advisory opinion.³¹⁹

The issue of self-determination came before the Supreme Court of Canada in Reference Re Secession of Quebec in 1998 in the form of three questions posed. The second question asked whether there existed in international law a right to self-determination which would give Quebec the right unilaterally to secede.³²⁰ The Court declared that the principle of self-determination ‘has acquired a status beyond “convention” and is considered a general principle of international law’.³²¹

The Definition of Self-Determination

If the principle exists as a legal one, and it is believed that such is the case, the question arises then of its scope and application. As noted above, UN formulations of the principle from the 1960 Colonial Declaration to the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law and the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights stress that it is the right of ‘all peoples’. If this is so, then all peoples would become thereby to some extent subjects of international law as the direct repositories of international rights, and if the definition of ‘people’ used was the normal political–sociological one,³²² a major rearrangement of international law perceptions would have been created. In fact, that has not occurred and an international law concept of what constitutes a people for these purposes has been evolved, so that the ‘self’ in question must be determined within the accepted colonial territorial framework. Attempts to broaden this have not been successful and the UN has always strenuously opposed any attempt at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and territorial integrity of a country.³²³ The UN has based its policy on the proposition that ‘the territory of a colony or other non-self-governing territory has under the Charter a status separate and distinct from the territory of the state administering it’ and that such status was to exist until the people of that territory had exercised the right to self-determination.³²⁴ Self-determination has also been used in conjunction with the principle of territorial integrity so as to protect the territorial framework of the colonial period in the ³¹⁷ ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 105–6. The reason related to the principle that the Court is unable to exercise jurisdiction over a state without the consent of that state. The Court took the view that Portugal’s claims against Australia could not be decided upon without an examination of the position of Indonesia, which had not consented to the jurisdiction of the Court. See further below, chapter 18, p. 819.

³¹⁸ ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 171–2; 129 ILR, pp. 37, 89–91.

³¹⁹ ICJ Reports, 2010, pp. 403, 436. See also G. Zyberi, ‘Self-Determination Through the Lens of the International Court of Justice’, 56 Netherlands International Law Review, 2009, p. 429 and I. Urrutia, ‘Territorial Integrity and Self-Determination: The Approach of the International Court of Justice in the Advisory Opinion on Kosovo’, 16 Revista d’Estudis Autònoms i Federals, 2012, p. 107.

³²⁰ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385; 115 ILR, p. 536. The first question concerned the existence or not in Canadian constitutional law of a right to secede, and the third question asked whether in the event of a conflict constitutional or international law would have priority. See further below, chapter 9, p. 388, on the question of secession and self-determination.

³²¹ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 434–5.

³²² See e.g. Cobban, Nation-State, p. 107, and K. Deutsche, Nationalism and Social Communications, New York, 1952. See also the Greco-Bulgarian Communities case, PCIJ, Series B, No. 17; 5 AD, p. 4.

³²³ See e.g. the Colonial Declaration 1960; the 1970 Declaration on Principles and article III [3] of the OAU Charter.

³²⁴ 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law. Note also that resolution 1541 (XV) declared that there is an obligation to transmit information regarding a territory ‘which is geographically separate and is distinct ethnically and/or culturally from the country administering it’.

decolonisation process and to prevent a rule permitting secession from independent states from arising.³²⁵ The Canadian Supreme Court noted in the Quebec case that ‘international law expects that the right to self-determination will be exercised by peoples within the framework of existing sovereign states and consistently with the maintenance of the territorial integrity of those states’.³²⁶ It clearly applies within the context, however, of decolonisation of the European empires and thus provides the peoples of such territories with a degree of international personality. Self-determination as a concept is capable of developing further so as to include the right to secession from existing states, but that has not as yet convincingly happened. There is an argument, however, that seeks to build upon a savings clause in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations in order to justify an exception to the principle of territorial integrity and self-determination in this context. The clause in question states that nothing in the section on self-determination shall be construed as authorising or encouraging the dismembering or impairing of the territorial integrity of states conducting themselves in compliance with the principle of self-determination ‘and thus possessed of a government representing the whole people belonging to the territory without distinction as to race, creed or colour’.³²⁷ However, whether this apparent affirmation of the principle of territorial integrity and internal self-determination, can be seen a contrario as offering legitimacy to secession from an independent state in exceptional circumstances is highly controversial and indeed very doubtful.

The Canadian Supreme Court in the Quebec case emphasised that a right to external self-determination (i.e. a claim to a right to unilateral secession) ‘arises in only the most extreme of cases and, even then, under carefully defined circumstances’.³²⁸ The issue was raised in the Kosovo case. The Court in its advisory opinion noted that:

Whether, outside the context of non-self-governing territories and peoples subject to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation, the international law of self-determination confers upon part of the population of an existing State a right to separate from that State is, however, a subject on which radically different views were expressed by those taking part in the proceedings and expressing a position on the question. Similar differences existed regarding whether international law provides for a right of ‘remedial secession’ and, if so, in what circumstances.³²⁹

The Court did not take the matter further as it felt that it was not necessary to decide on such matters for the purposes of the case.³³⁰ Nevertheless, it would be extraordinary for such a foundational principle as territorial integrity to be subject to a critical exception by way of an a contrario argument and not by way of positive affirmation. Furthermore, there is no international practice demonstrating the unequivocal acceptance of the so-called right of remedial secession, whether in general terms or with regard to specific situations.

³²⁵ See e.g. T. M. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990, pp. 153 ff., and Franck, ‘Fairness in the International Legal and Institutional System’, 240 HR, 1993 III, pp. 13, 127–49; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 11; and Shaw, Title, chapters 3 and 4. See also below, chapter 9, p. 388.

³²⁶ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 436; 115 ILR, p. 536. ³²⁷ See Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 118 ff.

³²⁸ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385 at pp. 437–8. Cassese concludes that ‘Extreme and unremitting persecution and the lack of any reasonable prospect for peaceful challenge may make secession legitimate’, ibid., p. 120. See also R. Rosenstock, ‘The Declaration on Principles of International Law’, 65 AJIL, 1971, pp. 713, 732.

³²⁹ ICJ Reports, 2010, pp. 403, 438. ³³⁰ Ibid.

To summarise: the principle of self-determination provides that the people of the colonially defined territorial unit in question may freely determine their own political status. Such determination may result in independence, integration with a neighbouring state, free association with an independent state or any other political status freely decided upon by the people concerned.³³¹ Self-determination also has a role within the context of creation of statehood, preserving the sovereignty and independence of states, in providing criteria for the resolution of disputes, and in the area of the permanent sovereignty of states over natural resources.³³²

INDIVIDUALS³³³

The question of the status in international law of individuals is closely bound up with the rise in the international protection of human rights and, increasingly, with regard to investment protection. This section will be confined to some general comments about the former. The object theory in this regard maintains that individuals constitute only the subject-matter of intended legal regulation as such. Only states, and possibly international organisations, are subjects of the law.³³⁴ This has been a theory of limited value. The essence of international law has always been its ultimate concern for the human being and this was clearly manifest in the Natural Law origins of classical international law.³³⁵ The growth of positivist theories, particularly in the nineteenth century, obscured this and emphasised the centrality and even exclusivity of the state in this regard. Nevertheless, modern practice does demonstrate that individuals have become increasingly recognised as participants and subjects of international law. This has occurred primarily but not exclusively through human rights law.

The link between the state and the individual for international law purposes has historically been the concept of nationality. This was and remains crucial, particularly in the spheres of jurisdiction and the international protection of the individual by the state. It is often noted that the claim of an individual against a foreign state, for example, becomes subsumed under that of his national state.³³⁶ Each state has the capacity to determine who are to be its nationals and this ³³² See the East Timor case, ICJ Reports, 1995, pp. 90, 102; 105 ILR, p. 226, where Portugal claimed inter alia that Australia's agreement with Indonesia dealing with the exploration and exploitation of the continental shelf in the 'Timor Gap' violated the right of the people of East Timor to self-determination.

³³¹ Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 33 and 68. See also Judge Dillard, ibid., p. 122; 59 ILR, pp. 30, 50, 85, 138. See Assembly resolution 1541 (XV) and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law.

³³³ See e.g. A. Clapham, 'The Role of the Individual and International Law', 21 EJIL, 2010, p. 25; K. Parlett, The Individual in the International Legal System, Cambridge, 2011; Oppenheim's International Law, chapter 8; Higgins, Problems and Process, pp. 48–55; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 106–12; C. Norgaard, Position of the Individual in International Law, Leiden, 1962; Cassese, International Law, pp. 142 ff.; Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 709; R. Müllerson, 'Human Rights and the Individual as a Subject of International Law: A Soviet View', 1 EJIL, 1990, p. 33; P. M. Dupuy, 'L'individu et le Droit International', 32 Archives de Philosophie du Droit, 1987, p. 119; H. Lauterpacht, Human Rights in International Law, London, 1951, and International Law: Collected Papers, vol. II, p. 487; and The Individual's Duties to the Community and the Limitations on Human Rights and Freedoms under Article 29 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, study prepared by Daes, 1983, E/CN.4/Sub.2/432/Rev.2. See also below, chapter 6.

³³⁴ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 106–7.

³³⁵ See e.g. Grotius, De Jure Praedae Commentarius, 1604, cited in Daes, Individual's Duties, p. 44; and Lauterpacht, Human Rights, pp. 9, 70 and 74.

³³⁶ See the Panevezys-Saldutiskis case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 76; 9 AD, p. 308. See also the Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions case (Jurisdiction), PCIJ, Series A, No. 2 (1924); 2 AD, p. 27. See also below, chapter 13, p. 613.

is to be recognised by other states in so far as it is consistent with international law, although in order for other states to accept this nationality there has to be a genuine connection between the state and the individual in question.³³⁷

Individuals as a general rule lack standing to assert violations of international treaties in the absence of a protest by the state of nationality,³³⁸ although states may agree to confer particular rights on individuals which will be enforceable under international law, independently of municipal law. Under article 304(b) of the Treaty of Versailles, 1919, for example, nationals of the Allied and Associated Powers could bring cases against Germany before the Mixed Arbitral Tribunal in their own names for compensation, while the Treaty of 1907 between five Central American states establishing the Central American Court of Justice provided for individuals to bring cases directly before the Court.³³⁹

This proposition was reiterated in the Danzig Railway Officials case³⁴⁰ by the Permanent Court of International Justice, which emphasised that under international law treaties did not as such create direct rights and obligations for private individuals, although particular treaties could provide for the adoption of individual rights and obligations enforceable by the national courts where this was the intention of the contracting parties. Under the provisions concerned with minority protection in the 1919 Peace Treaties, it was possible for individuals to apply directly to an international court in particular instances. Similarly the Tribunal created under the Upper Silesia Convention of 1922 decided that it was competent to hear cases by the nationals of a state against that state.³⁴¹

Since then a wide range of other treaties have provided for individuals to have rights directly and have enabled individuals to have direct access to international courts and tribunals. One may mention as examples the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950; the European Communities treaties, 1957; the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, 1969; the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966; the International Convention for the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965; and the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes, 1965.

However, the question of the legal personality of individuals under international law extends to questions of direct criminal responsibility also. It is now established that international law proscribes certain heinous conduct in a manner that imports direct individual criminal responsibility. This is dealt with in chapter 7.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

International organisations have played a crucial role in the sphere of international personality. Since the nineteenth century a growing number of such organisations have appeared and thus raised the issue of international legal personality. In principle it is now well established that international organisations may indeed possess objective international legal personality.³⁴²

³³⁷ See the Nottebohm case, ICJ Reports, 1955, pp. 4, 22–3; 22 ILR, p. 349.

³³⁸ See e.g. US v. Noriega 746 F.Supp. 1506, 1533 (1990); 99 ILR, pp. 143, 175.

³³⁹ See Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, p. 39. ³⁴⁰ PCIJ, Series B, No. 15 (1928); 4 AD, p. 287.

³⁴¹ See e.g. Steiner and Gross v. Polish State 4 AD, p. 291.

³⁴² See the Reparation for Injuries case, ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 174; 16 AD, p. 318. See also the Interpretation of the Agreement of 25 March 1951 between the WHO and Egypt case, ICJ Reports, 1980, pp. 73, 89–90; 62 ILR, pp. 450, 473–4. See as to non-governmental organisations: A.-K. Lindblom, Non-Governmental Organisations in

Whether that will be so in any particular instance will depend upon the particular circumstances of that case. Whether an organisation possesses personality in international law will hinge upon its constitutional status, its actual powers and practice. Significant factors in this context will include the capacity to enter into relations with states and other organisations and conclude treaties with them, and the status it has been given under municipal law. Such elements are known in international law as the indicia of personality. International organisations will be dealt with in chapter 22.

THE ACQUISITION, NATURE AND CONSEQUENCES OF LEGAL PERSONALITY – SOME CONCLUSIONS

The above survey of existing and possible subjects of international law demonstrates both the range of interaction upon the international scene by entities of all types and the pressures upon international law to come to terms with the contemporary structure of international relations. The International Court clearly recognised the multiplicity of models of personality in stressing that ‘the subjects of law in any legal system are not necessarily identical in their nature or in the extent of their rights’.³⁴³ There are, however, two basic categories – objective and qualified personality. In the former case, the entity is subject to a wide range of international rights and duties and it will be entitled to be accepted as an international person by any other international person with which it is conducting relations. In other words, it will operate erga omnes. The creation of objective international personality will of necessity be harder to achieve and will require the action in essence of the international community as a whole or a substantial element of it. The Court noted in the Reparation case that:

fifty states, representing the vast majority of the members of the international community, have the power, in conformity with international law, to bring into being an entity possessing objective international personality and not merely personality recognised by them alone, together with capacity to bring international claims.³⁴⁴

The attainment of qualified personality, on the other hand, binding only the consenting subject, may arise more easily and it is clear that in this respect at least theory ought to recognise existing practice. Any legal person may accept that another entity possesses personality in relation to itself and that determination will operate only in personam.

States are the original and major subjects of international law. Their personality derives from the very nature and structure of the international system. Statehood will arise as a result of the factual satisfaction of the stipulated legal criteria. The constitutive theory of recognition is not really acceptable, although recognition, of course, contributes valuable evidence of adherence to International Law, Cambridge, 2005; NGOs in International Law (ed. P.-M. Dupuy and L. Vierucci), Cheltenham, 2008; and M. Noortmann, ‘Non-Governmental Organisations: Recognition, Roles, Rights and Responsibilities’, in Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. M. Noortmann, A. Reinisch and C. Ryngaert), Oxford, 2015, p. 205.

³⁴³ ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 178; 16 AD, p. 321.

³⁴⁴ ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 185; 16 AD, p. 330. H. Lauterpacht wrote that, ‘[I]n each particular case the question whether . . . a body is a subject of international law must be answered in a pragmatic manner by reference to actual experience and to the reason of the law as distinguished from a preconceived notion as to who can be subjects of international law’, International Law and Human Rights, p. 12.

the required criteria. All states, by virtue of the principle of sovereign equality, will enjoy the same degree of international legal personality. It has been argued that some international organisations, rather than being derivative subjects of international law, will as sovereign or self-governing legal communities possess an inherent personality directly from the system and will thus constitute general and even objective subjects of international law. Non-sovereign persons, including non-governmental organisations and individuals, would be derived subjects possessing only such international powers as conferred exceptionally upon them by the necessary subjects of international law.³⁴⁵ This view may be questioned, but it is true that the importance of practice via the larger international organisations cannot be underestimated.

Similarly the role of the Holy See (particularly prior to 1929) as well as the UN experience demonstrates that the derivative denomination is unsatisfactory. The significance of this relates to their ability to extend their international rights and duties on the basis of both constituent instruments and subsequent practice and to their capacity to affect the creation of further international persons and to play a role in the norm-creating process.

Recognition, acquiescence and estoppel are important principles in the context of international personality, not only with regard to states and international organisations but throughout the range of subjects. They will affect not only the creation of new subjects but also the definition of their nature and rights and duties.

Personality may be acquired by a combination of treaty provisions and recognition or acquiescence by other international persons. For instance, the International Committee of the Red Cross, a private non-governmental organisation subject to Swiss law, was granted special functions under the 1949 Geneva Red Cross Conventions and has been accepted as being able to enter into international agreements under international law with international persons, such as with the EEC under the World Food Programme.³⁴⁶ Another possible method of acquiring international personality is by subjecting an agreement between a recognised international person and a private party directly to the rules of international law. This would have the effect of rendering the latter an international person in the context of the arrangement in question so as to enable it to invoke in the field of international law the rights it derives from that arrangement.³⁴⁷ While this currently may not be entirely acceptable to Developing Countries, this is probably because of a perception of the relevant rules of international law which may very well alter.³⁴⁸ Personality may also be acquired by virtue of being directly subjected to international duties. This would apply to individuals in specific cases such as war crimes, piracy and genocide, and might in the future constitute the method by which transnational corporations may be accepted as international persons.

Community needs with regard to the necessity to preserve international stability and life may well be of relevance in certain exceptional circumstances. In the case of non-state territorial entities that are not totally dominated by a state, there would appear to be a community need to ensure that at least the rules relating to the resort to force and the laws of war operate. Not to ³⁴⁵ See e.g. F. Seyfersted, 'International Personality of Intergovernmental Organisations', 4 IJIL, 1964, p. 19.

³⁴⁶ See e.g. Whiteman, Digest, vol. I, p. 48, and Yearbook of the ILC, 1981, vol. II, p. 12.

³⁴⁷ See in particular the Texaco v. Libya case, 53 IIR, pp. 389, 457–62.

³⁴⁸ Note the intriguing suggestion raised in the study prepared for the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, that an agreement between autonomous public entities (not being subjects of international law) might create an international person: UNJYB, 1971, pp. 215–18. The study was very cautious about this possibility.

accept some form of qualified personality in this area might be to free such entities from having to comply with such rules and that clearly would affect community requirements.³⁴⁹ The determining point here, it is suggested, must be the degree of effective control maintained by the entity in its territorial confines. However, even so, recognition may overcome this hurdle, as the recognition of Byelorussia and the Ukraine as non-sovereign state entities prior to the demise of the Soviet Union and the emergence of these entities as the independent states of Belarus and Ukraine demonstrated.³⁵⁰

All these entities may be easily contained within the category of qualified personality, possessing a limited range of rights and duties valid as against those accepting their personality. There are no pre-set rules governing the extent of rights and duties of international persons. This will depend upon the type of entity concerned, its claims and expectations, functions and attitude adopted by the international community. The exception here would be states which enter upon life with an equal range of rights and obligations. Those entities with objective personality will, it is suggested, benefit from a more elastic perception of the extent of their rights and duties in the form of a wider interpretation of implied powers through practice. However, in the case of qualified subjects implied powers will be more difficult to demonstrate and accept and the range of their rights and duties will be much more limited. The presumption, thus, will operate the other way.

The precise catalogue of rights and duties is accordingly impossible to list in advance; it will vary from case to case. The capacity to function on the international scene in legal proceedings of some description will not be too uncommon, while the power to make treaties will be less widespread. As to this the International Law Commission noted that 'agreements concluded between entities other than states or than international organisations seem too heterogeneous a group to constitute a general category, and the relevant body of international practice is as yet too exiguous for the characteristics of such a general category to be inferred from it'.³⁵¹ The extent to which subjects may be internationally responsible is also unclear, although in general such an entity will possess responsibility to the extent of its rights and duties; but many problem areas remain. Similarly controversial is the norm-creating role of such diverse entities, but the practice of all international persons is certainly relevant material upon which to draw in an elucidation of the rules and principles of international law, particularly in the context of the entity in question.

International personality thus centres, not so much upon the capacity of the entity as such to possess international rights and duties, as upon the actual attribution of rights and/or duties on the international plane as determined by a variety of factors ranging from claims made to prescribed functions. Procedural capacity with regard to enforcement is important but not essential,³⁵² but in the case of non-individual entities the claimant will have to be in 'such ³⁴⁹ See the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 56, 134 and 149; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 46, 124, 139. See also Security Council resolutions 326 (1973), 328 (1973), 403 (1977), 406 (1977), 411 (1977) and 424 (1978) in which the Council condemned Rhodesian attacks against neighbouring states and recognised that the entity was subject to the norms relating to the use of force.

³⁵⁰ See e.g. UKMIL, 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 340. Byelorussia and the Ukraine were separate members of the UN and parties to a number of conventions: ibid.

³⁵¹ Yearbook of the ILC, 1981, vol. II, pp. 125–6.

³⁵² See e.g. Norgaard, Position of the Individual, p. 35. See also the Peter Pázmány University case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 61 (1933); 7 AD, p. 490.

a position that it possesses, in regard to its members, rights which it is entitled to ask them to respect'.³⁵³ This, noted the International Court, expressed 'the essential test where a group, whether composed of states, of tribes or of individuals, is claimed to be a legal entity distinct from its members'.³⁵⁴

A wide variety of non-subjects exist and contribute to the evolution of the international system. Participation and personality are two concepts, but the general role played in the development of international relations and international law by individuals and entities of various kinds that are not international legal subjects as such cannot be ignored. The structure of participation in international law is a pyramid, with states at the top and descending levels of other persons and entities with lesser rights and obligations, and with the base constituted by those of no recognised personality as such in the system but interested in, contributing to and affected by the rules, principles and structures of international law. What, however, is clear is that international law is in the process of evolving towards a more inclusive and flexible position with regard to personality and participation.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995

J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006

R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994

Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. M. Noortmann, A. Reinisch and C. Ryngaert), Oxford, 2015

R. Portmann, Legal Personality in International Law, Cambridge, 2010

³⁵³ Reparation for Injuries case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 174, 178; 16 AD, pp. 318, 321.

³⁵⁴ Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 63; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 80.

6

The International Protection of Human Rights

THE NATURE OF HUMAN RIGHTS¹

The preamble to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted on 10 December 1948 emphasises that ‘recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world’. While there is widespread acceptance of the importance of human rights in the international structure, there is considerable confusion as to their precise nature and role in international law.² The question of what is meant by a ‘right’ is itself controversial and the subject of intense jurisprudential debate.³ Some ‘rights’, for example, are intended as immediately enforceable binding commitments, others merely as specifying a possible future pattern of behaviour.⁴ The problem of enforcement and sanctions with regard to human rights in international law is another issue which can affect the characterisation of the phenomenon. There are writers who regard the high incidence of non-compliance with human rights norms as evidence of state practice that argues against the existence of a structure of human rights principles in ¹ See e.g. H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950; The Oxford Handbook of International Human Rights Law (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2013; D. Shelton, Remedies in International Human Rights Law, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2015; International Human Rights Law (ed. D. Moeckli, S. Shah and S. Sivakumaran), 2nd edn, Oxford, 2014; O. de Schutter, International Human Rights Law, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2014; I. Bantekas and L. Oette, International Human Rights Law and Practice, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2016; J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, 2nd edn, London, 2010; P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, p. 723; M. S. McDougal, H. Lasswell and L. C. Chen, Human Rights and World Public Order, New Haven, 1980; Human Rights in International Law (ed. T. Meron), Oxford, 2 vols., 1984; Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004; D. R. Forsythe, Human Rights in International Relations, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2006; R. Higgins, Problems and Process, Oxford, 1994, chapter 6; Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century (ed. L. Henkin and L. Hargrove), Washington, 1994; T. Meron, The Humanization of International Law, The Hague, 2006; C. Tomuschat, Human Rights, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2014; and H. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008.

² See e.g. M. Moskowitz, The Policies and Dynamics of Human Rights, London, 1968, pp. 98–9, and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 63–8.

³ See e.g. W. N. Hohfeld, ‘Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied to Judicial Reasoning’, 23 Yale Law Journal, 1913, p. 16, and R. Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously, London, 1977. See also J. Shestack, ‘The Jurisprudence of Human Rights’, in Meron, Human Rights in International Law, vol. I, p. 69, and M. Cranston, What Are Human Rights?, London, 1973.

⁴ Compare, for example, article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966 with article 2 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966.

international law.⁵ Although sight must not be lost of violations of human rights laws, such an approach is not only academically incorrect but also profoundly negative.⁶ The concept of human rights is closely allied with ethics and morality. Those rights that reflect the values of a community will be those with the most chance of successful implementation. Positive rights may be taken to include those rights enshrined within a legal system, whether or not reflective of moral considerations, whereas a moral right is not necessarily enforceable by law. One may easily discover positive rights. Deducing or inferring moral rights is another matter entirely and will depend upon the perception of the person seeking the existence of a particular right.⁷

Rights may be seen as emanating from various sources, whether religion or the nature of man or the nature of society. The Natural Law view, as expressed in the traditional formulations of that approach or by virtue of the natural rights movement, is that certain rights exist as a result of a higher law than positive or man-made law. Such a higher law constitutes a universal and absolute set of principles governing all human beings in time and space. The natural rights approach of the seventeenth century, associated primarily with John Locke, founded the existence of such inalienable rights as the rights to life, liberty and property upon a social contract marking the end of the difficult conditions of the state of nature. This theory enabled recourse to be had to a superior type of law and thus was able to provide a powerful method of restraining arbitrary power.⁸ Although this approach fell out of favour in the nineteenth century due to the problems of its non-empirical and diffuse methodology, it proved of immense value in the last century in the establishment of human rights within the international community as universal principles. Positivism as a theory emphasised the authority of the state and as such left little place for rights in the legal system other than specific rights emanating from the constitutional structure of that system,⁹ while the Marxist doctrine, although based upon the existence of certain immutable historical laws governing the development of society, nevertheless denied the existence of rights outside the framework of the legal order.¹⁰ Modern rights theories cover a wide range of approaches, and this clearly emphasises the need to come to terms with the requirements of an evolving legal system that cannot be totally comprehended in terms of that system itself.¹¹

Of particular interest is the work of the policy-oriented movement that seeks to identify, characterise and order a wide variety of relevant factors in the process of human rights creation

⁵ See e.g. J. S. Watson, 'Legal Theory, Efficacy and Validity in the Development of Human Rights Norms in International Law', University of Illinois Law Forum, 1979, p. 609; Watson, 'Autointerpretation, Competence and the Continuing Validity of Article 2(7) of the UN Charter', 71 AJIL, 1977, p. 60, and Watson, Theory and Reality in the International Protection of Human Rights, Ardsley, 1999.

⁶ See e.g. R. Higgins, 'Reality and Hope and International Human Rights: A Critique', 9 Hofstra Law Review, 1981, p. 1485.

⁷ See M. Cranston, 'What are Human Rights?', in W. Laqueur and B. Rubin, Human Rights Reader, Michigan, 1979, pp. 17, 19.

⁸ See e.g. Lauterpacht, International Law; R. Tuck, Natural Rights Theories, Cambridge, 1979; J. Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights, Oxford, 1980; and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 68–71. See also Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapter 2, and above, chapter 1.

⁹ See e.g. D. Lloyd, Introduction to Jurisprudence, 4th edn, London, 1979, chapter 4. See also H. Hart, The Concept of Law, Oxford, 1961; McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 73–5, and above, chapters 1 and 2.

¹⁰ See e.g. Lloyd, Jurisprudence, chapter 10, and McDougal et al., Human Rights, pp. 76–9.

¹¹ See e.g. J. Rawls, A Theory of Justice, Oxford, 1971; E. Cahn, The Sense of Injustice, Bloomington, 1949; R. Nozick, Anarchy, State and Utopia, Oxford, 1974; and Dworkin, Taking Rights Seriously. See also S. Davidson, Human Rights, Buckingham, 1993, chapter 3.

and equipment. Eight interdependent values are noted (viz. demands relating to respect, power, enlightenment, well-being, health, skill, affection and rectitude) and various environmental influences stressed. Human dignity is seen as the key concept in relation to these values and to the ultimate goal of a world community in which a democratic distribution of values is sought.¹²

All these theories emphasise the complexity of the nature of the concept of human rights in the context of general legal and political processes, but also the importance and centrality of such notions. The broad issues are similarly raised within the framework of international law.

IDEOLOGICAL APPROACHES TO HUMAN RIGHTS IN INTERNATIONAL LAW

The view adopted by the Western world with regard to international human rights law in general terms has tended to emphasise the basic civil and political rights of individuals, that is to say those rights that take the form of claims limiting the power of government over the governed. Such rights would include due process, freedom of expression, assembly and religion, and political participation in the process of government. The consent of the governed is seen as crucial in this process.¹³ The approach of the Soviet Union was to note the importance of basic rights and freedoms for international peace and security, but to emphasise the role of the state. Indeed, the source of human rights principles was seen as the state. Tunkin wrote that the content of the principle of respect for human rights in international law focused upon the duties of the state and not upon the individual, who was not the subject of international law and to whom rights were not granted by the human rights treaties.¹⁴ The supremacy or centrality of the state was the key in this approach and the stress was upon economic and social matters and the importance of the traditional civil and political rights minimised. However, a new approach to the question of international human rights began to emerge by the end of the 1980s, reflecting the changes taking place politically.¹⁵ In particular, the USSR began to take a different approach with regard to human rights treaties.¹⁶

The general approach of the Developing Countries has combined elements of both the previous perceptions.¹⁷ Concern with the equality and sovereignty of states, together with a recognition of ¹² See McDougal et al., Human Rights, especially pp. 82–93. See also Examining Critical Perspectives on Human Rights (ed. R. Dickinson, E. Katselli, C. Murray and O. W. Pedersen), Cambridge, 2014.

¹³ See e.g. R. Hauser, 'A First World View', in Human Rights and American Foreign Policy (ed. D. P. Kommers and G. Loescher), Notre Dame, 1979, p. 85.

¹⁴ G. Tunkin, Theory of International Law, London, 1974, pp. 81–3. See also K. Tedin, 'The Development of the Soviet Attitude Towards Implementing Human Rights under the UN Charter', 5 HRJ, 1972, p. 399; R. N. Dean, 'Beyond Helsinki: The Soviet View of Human Rights in International Law', 21 Va. JIL, 1980, p. 55; P. Reddaway, 'Theory and Practice of Human Rights in the Soviet Union', in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 115; and Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapter 3.

¹⁵ See e.g. V. Vereshchetin and R. Müllerson, 'International Law in an Interdependent World', 28 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1990, pp. 291, 300.

¹⁶ Ibid. Note that on 10 February 1989, the USSR recognised the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice with regard to six human rights treaties, including the Genocide Convention, 1948; the Racial Discrimination Convention, 1965; the Convention on Discrimination against Women, 1979; and the Torture Convention, 1984.

¹⁷ See e.g. R. Emerson, 'The Fate of Human Rights in the Third World', 27 World Politics, 1975, p. 201; G. Mower, 'Human Rights in Black Africa', 9 HRJ, 1976, p. 33; R. Zvobgo, 'A Third World View', in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 90; and M. Nawaz, 'The Concept of Human Rights in Islamic Law', in Symposium on International Law of Human Rights, 11 Howard Law Journal, 1965, p. 257.

the importance of social and economic rights, has characterised the ‘Third World’ view. Such countries, in fact constituting a wide range of nations with differing interests and needs, and at different stages of development, have been much influenced by decolonisation and the struggle to obtain it and by the phenomenon of apartheid in South Africa. In addition, economic problems have played a large role in focusing their attention upon general developmental issues. Accordingly, the traditional civil and political rights have tended to lose their priority in the concerns Developing Countries.¹⁸ Of particular interest is the tension between the universalism of human rights and the relativism of cultural traditions. This has led to arguments by some adherents of the latter tendency that human rights can only be approached within the context of particular cultural or religious traditions, thus criticising the view that human rights are universal or transcultural. The danger, of course, is that states violating human rights that they have accepted by becoming parties to human rights treaties, as well as being bound by relevant customary international law, might seek to justify their actions by pleading cultural differences.¹⁹

THE DEVELOPMENT OF INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS LAW²⁰

In the nineteenth century, the positivist doctrines of state sovereignty and domestic jurisdiction reigned supreme. Virtually all matters that today would be classified as human rights issues were at that stage universally regarded as within the internal sphere of national jurisdiction. The major exceptions to this were related to piracy jure gentium and slavery. In the latter case a number of treaties were entered into to bring about its abolition.²¹ Concern also with the treatment of sick and wounded soldiers and with prisoners of war developed as from 1864 in terms of international instruments,²² while states were required to observe certain minimum standards in the treatment of aliens.²³ In addition, certain agreements of a general welfare nature were beginning to be adopted by the turn of the century.²⁴ The nineteenth century also appeared to accept a right of humanitarian intervention, although its range and extent were unclear.²⁵

An important change occurred with the establishment of the League of Nations in 1919.²⁶ Article 22 of the Covenant of the League set up the mandates system for peoples in ex-enemy colonies ‘not yet able to stand by themselves in the strenuous conditions of the modern world’.

¹⁸ See generally T. Van Boven, ‘Some Remarks on Special Problems Relating to Human Rights in Developing Countries’, 3 Revue des Droits de l’Homme, 1970, p. 383. See further below, p. 283, on the Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples’ Rights.

¹⁹ See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 517 ff.; E. Brems, Human Rights: Universality and Diversity, The Hague, 2001; and A. D. Renteln, International Human Rights: Universalism versus Relativism, Newbury Park, 1990.

²⁰ See e.g. The International Protection of Human Rights (ed. E. Luard), London, 1967; Sohn and Buergenthal, International Protection; Lauterpacht, International Law; M. Moscovitz, International Concern with Human Rights, London, 1968; and M. Ganji, The International Protection of Human Rights, London, 1962.

²¹ See e.g. C. Greenidge, Slavery, London, 1958, and V. Nanda and M. C. Bassiouni, ‘Slavery and the Slave Trade: Steps towards Eradication’, 12 Santa Clara Law Review, 1972, p. 424. See also ST/SOA/4.

²² See generally G. Best, War and Law Since 1945, Oxford, 1994, and Studies and Essays on International Humanitarian Law and Red Cross Principles (ed. C. Swinarski), The Hague, 1984.

²³ See below, chapter 13.

²⁴ E.g. regarding the Prohibition of Night Work for Women in Industrial Employment and regarding the Prohibition of the Use of White Phosphorus in the Manufacture of Matches.

²⁵ See below, chapter 19, p. 880. ²⁶ See below, chapter 21.

The mandatory power was obliged to guarantee freedom of conscience and religion and a Permanent Mandates Commission was created to examine the reports the mandatory authorities had undertaken to make. The arrangement was termed 'a sacred trust of civilisation'. Article 23 of the Covenant provided for just treatment of the native populations of the territories in question.²⁷ The 1919 peace agreements with Eastern European and Balkan states included provisions relating to the protection of minorities,²⁸ providing essentially for equality of treatment and opportunities for collective activity.²⁹ These provisions were supervised by the League of Nations, to whom there was a right of petition.³⁰

Part XIII of the Treaty of Versailles provided for the creation of the International Labour Organization, among the purposes of which were the promotion of better standards of working conditions and support for the right of association. The impact of the Second World War upon the development of human rights law was immense as the horrors of the war and the need for an adequate international system to maintain international peace and protect human rights became apparent to all. In addition, the rise of non-governmental organisations, particularly in the sphere of human rights, has had an immense effect.³¹ While the post-Second World War world witnessed the rise of intergovernmental committees and organs and courts to deal with human rights violations, whether by public debate, states' reports, comments, inter-state or individual petition procedures, recent years have seen the interposition of domestic amnesty laws and this has given rise to the question of the acceptability of impunity.³² Further developments have included the establishments of truth and reconciliation commissions³³ and various other alternative justice systems such as the Rwandan Gacaca court system,³⁴ while the extent to which participants in the international legal system apart from states have become involved both in the ²⁷ See above, chapter 5, p. 176.

²⁸ See generally P. Thornberry, 'Is There a Phoenix in the Ashes? – International Law and Minority Rights', 15 Texas International Law Journal, 1980, p. 421; C. A. Macartney, National States and National Minorities, London, 1934; and I. Claude, National Minorities: An International Problem, Cambridge, 1955. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Definition of Minorities in International Law', in Protection of Minorities and Human Rights (ed. Y. Dinstein and M. Tabory), Dordrecht, 1992, p. 1.

²⁹ See e.g. the Minority Schools in Albania case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 64, 1935, p. 17.

³⁰ See Thornberry, 'Phoenix', pp. 433–54, and M. Jones, 'National Minorities: A Case Study in International Protection', 14 Law and Contemporary Problems, 1949, pp. 599, 610–24. See further below, p. 226.

³¹ See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1420 ff., and C. Chinkin, 'The Role of Non-Governmental Organisations in Standard Setting, Monitoring and Implementation of Human Rights', in The Changing World of International Law in the 21st Century (ed. J. J. Norton, M. Andendas and M. Footer), The Hague, 1998. See also L. Hodson, NGOs and the Struggle for Human Rights in Europe, Oxford, 2011.

³² See e.g. J. Gavron, 'Amnesties in the Light of Developments in International Law and the Establishment of the International Criminal Court', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 91. See also C. Jenkins, 'Amnesty for Gross Violations of Human Rights: A Better Way of Dealing with the Past?', in Comparative Law in a Global Perspective (ed. I. Edge), London, 2000, p. 345, and J. Dugard, 'Dealing with Crimes of a Past Regime: Is Amnesty Still an Option?', 16 Leiden JIL, 2000, p. 1. Note the Final Report of the Special Rapporteur on the Right to Restitution, Compensation and Rehabilitation for Victims of Gross Violations of Human Rights, E/CN.4/2000/62, January 2000, and Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru, the Barrios Altos case, where the Inter-American Court of Human Rights held that Peruvian amnesty laws were incompatible with the Inter-American Convention and thus void of any legal effect, judgment of 14 March 2001, 41 ILM, 2002, p. 93. Peru accepted this and altered its legislation, ibid.

³³ See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1344 ff.; the Promotion of National Unity and Reconciliation Act of South Africa 1995; R. G. Teitel, Transitional Justice, Oxford, 2001, and J. Dugard, 'Possible Conflicts of Jurisdiction with Truth Commissions', in The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court: A Commentary (ed. A. Cassese, P. Gaeta and J. R. W. D. Jones), Oxford, 2002.

³⁴ See e.g. Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 1319 ff. See also below, chapter 7, p. 295.

process of formulating and seeking the implementation of human rights and in being the subjects of human rights concern and regulation is marked.³⁵

SOME BASIC PRINCIPLES

Domestic Jurisdiction³⁶

The basic rule of international law providing that states have no right to encroach upon the preserve of other states' internal affairs is a consequence of the equality and sovereignty of states and is mirrored in article 2(7) of the UN Charter. It has, however, been subject to a process of reinterpretation in the human rights field³⁷ as this and the two succeeding chapters will make apparent, so that states may no longer plead this rule as a bar to international concern and consideration of internal human rights situations.³⁸ It is, of course, obvious that where a state accepts the right of individual petition under an international procedure, it cannot thereafter claim that the exercise of such a right constitutes interference with its domestic affairs.³⁹

The Exhaustion of Domestic or Local Remedies Rule⁴⁰

This rule flows from the above principle. It is a method of permitting states to solve their own internal problems in accordance with their own constitutional procedures before accepted international mechanisms can be invoked, and is well established in general international law.⁴¹ However, where such internal remedies are non-existent or unduly and unreasonably prolonged or unlikely to bring effective relief, the resort to international measures will not be required.⁴² The existence of such a remedy must be certain not only in theory but also in ³⁵ See e.g. Non-State Actors and Human Rights (ed. Philip Alston), Oxford, 2005; A. Clapham, Human Rights Obligations of Non-State Actors, Oxford, 2006; Participants in the International Legal System (ed. J. d'Aspremont), London, 2011, Part IV and Non-State Actors in International Law (ed. M. Nortmann, A. Reinisch and C. Ryngaert), London, 2015. See also International Law Association, Committee on Non-State Actors, Reports of 2008, 2010, 2012, 2014 and Draft Final Report 2016, www.ila-hq.org/en/committees/index.cfm/cid/1023.

³⁶ See e.g. R. Higgins, The Development of International Law Through the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963; M. Rajan, United Nations and Domestic Jurisdiction, 2nd edn, London, 1961; and A. Cançado Trindade, 'The Domestic Jurisdiction of States in the Practice of the United Nations and Regional Organisations', 25 ICLQ, 1976, p. 715.

³⁷ Note that the question of the extent and content of domestic jurisdiction is a matter for international law: see Nationality Decrees in Tunis and Morocco cases, PCIJ, Series B, No. 4, 1923; 2 AD, p. 349. See also below, chapter 11.

³⁸ See also the resolution of the Institut de Droit International, 1989, H/Inf (90) 1, p. 131.

³⁹ See e.g. Miha v. Equatorial Guinea, CCPR/C/51/D/414/1990, 10 August 1994, Human Rights Committee, para. 63.

⁴⁰ See e.g. A. Cançado Trindade, The Application of the Rule of Exhaustion of Local Remedies in International Law, Cambridge, 1983; C. Law, The Local Remedies Rule in International Law, Geneva, 1961; C. F. Amerasinghe, Local Remedies in International Law, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2004; and K. Wellens, Remedies Against International Organisations, Cambridge, 2002. See also C. F. Amerasinghe, 'The Rule of Exhaustion of Local Remedies and the International Protection of Human Rights', 17 Indian Yearbook of International Affairs, 1974, p. 3. and below, chapter 13, p. 620.

⁴¹ See e.g. the Ambatielos case, 23 ILR, p. 306; the Finnish Ships case, 3 RIAA, p. 1479; 7 AD, p. 231; and the Interhandel case, ICJ Reports, 1959, pp. 26–7; 27 ILR, pp. 475, 490.

⁴² See e.g. the Robert E. Brown case, 6 RIAA, p. 120; 2 AD, p. 66. See also the Salem case, 2 RIAA, p. 1161; 6 AD, p. 188; the Nielsen case, 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 413; 28 ILR, p. 210; and the Second Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 186. See also the cases cited in the succeeding footnotes.

practice.⁴³ A provision regarding the need to exhaust domestic remedies before the various international mechanisms may be resorted to appears in all the international and regional human rights instruments⁴⁴ and has been the subject of much consideration by the Human Rights Committee under the Optional Protocol procedure of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights,⁴⁵ and within the European Convention⁴⁶ and Inter-American Convention human rights systems.⁴⁷

Priorities of Rights

Certain rights may not be derogated from in the various human rights instruments even in times of war or other public emergency threatening the nation. In the case of the European Convention⁴⁸ these are the rights to life (except in cases resulting from lawful acts of war), the prohibition on torture and slavery, and non-retroactivity of criminal offences.⁴⁹ In the case of the Inter-American Convention,⁵⁰ the following rights are non-derogable: the rights to juridical personality, life and humane treatment, freedom from slavery, freedom from ex post facto laws, freedom of conscience and religion, rights of the family, to a name, of the child, nationality and participation in government.⁵¹ By article 4 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the rights to life and recognition as a person before the law, the freedoms of thought, conscience and religion and the prohibition on torture, slavery, retroactivity of criminal ⁴³ See e.g. Johnston v. Ireland, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 112 (1986); 89 ILR, p. 154, and Open Door and Dublin Well Woman v. Ireland, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 246 (1992).

⁴⁴ See e.g. article 41(c), Civil and Political Rights Covenant and article 2, Optional Protocol; article 11(3), Racial Discrimination Convention; article 26, European Convention; article 50, Inter-American Convention, and article 50, Banjul Charter. See also ECOSOC resolution 1503 and UNESCO decision 104 EX/3.3, 1978, para. 14(IX).

⁴⁵ See e.g. S. Joseph and M. Castan, The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2013, chapter 6; the Weinberger case, Reports of the Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, p. 114 and A/44/40, p. 142; and the Sara case, A/49/40, annex X, Section C, para. 8.3. States are required to provide evidence that there would be a reasonable prospect that available remedies would be effective, Torres Ramirez v. Uruguay, Selected Decisions under the Optional Protocol, CCPR/C/OP/1, 1985, p. 3. See also e.g. Baboeram-Adhin v. Suriname, A/40/40, p. 187; 94 ILR, p. 377; Muhonen v. Finland, A/40/40, p. 164; 94 ILR, p. 389; Solórzano v. Venezuela, A/41/40, p. 134; 94 ILR, p. 400; Holland v. Ireland 115 ILR, p. 277; and Faurisson v. France 115 ILR, p. 355. See also, with regard to the UN Convention against Torture, AE v. Switzerland, CAT/C/14/D/24/1995.

⁴⁶ See, as to the position under the European Convention on Human Rights, e.g. the Nielsen case, 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 413; the Second Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 2 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 186; the Donnelly case, 16 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 212; Kjeldsen v. Denmark, 15 Yearbook of the ECHR, p. 428; 58 ILR, p. 117; Drozd and Janousek v. France and Spain 64 DR 97 (1989); and Akdivar v. Turkey 23 EHRR, 1997, p. 143. See also W. Schabas, The European Convention on Human Rights: A Commentary, Oxford, 2015, p. 764; Jacobs, White and Ovey: The European Convention on Human Rights (ed. B. Rainey, E. Wicks and C. Ovey), 6th edn, Oxford, 2014, p. 34; Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick: Law of the European Convention on Human Rights (ed. D. J. Harris, M. O'Boyle, E. P. Bates and C. M. Buckley), 3rd edn, Oxford, 2014, p. 47. The rule of exhaustion of domestic remedies applies also in inter-state cases: see Cyprus v. Turkey 2 DR 125 at 137–8 (first and second applications) and 13 DR 85, 150–3 (third application), although not with regard to legislative measures nor with regard to administrative actions in certain circumstances: see e.g. the Greek case, 12 European Yearbook of Human Rights, p. 196.

⁴⁷ See e.g. article 46(1)a of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, 1969 and article 37 of the Regulations of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. See also Exceptions to the Exhaustion of Domestic Remedies in Cases of Indigency, Advisory Opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1990, 12 HRLJ, 1991, p. 20, and Annual Report of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights 1993, Washington, 1994, pp. 148, 185 and 266.

⁴⁸ Article 15. See generally, R. Higgins, 'Derogations Under Human Rights Treaties', 48 BYIL, 1976–7, p. 281.

⁴⁹ Articles 2, 3, 4(1) and 7. ⁵⁰ Article 27. ⁵¹ Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 23.

legislation and imprisonment on grounds solely of inability to fulfil a contractual obligation are non-derogable.⁵²

Such non-derogable rights clearly are regarded as possessing a special place in the hierarchy of rights.⁵³ In addition, it must be noted, many rights are subject to a limitation or clawback clause, whereby the absolute right provided for will not operate in certain situations.⁵⁴ Those rights therefore that are not so limited may be regarded as of particular value.⁵⁵

Customary International Law and Human Rights

In addition to the many international and regional treaty provisions concerning human rights to be noted in this chapter,⁵⁶ certain human rights may now be regarded as having entered into the category of customary international law in the light of state practice. These would certainly include the prohibition of torture, genocide and slavery and the principle of non-discrimination.⁵⁷ In addition, human rights established under treaty may constitute obligations erga omnes for the states parties.⁵⁸

THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM – GENERAL⁵⁹

There are a number of human rights provisions in the Charter.⁶⁰ Article 1 includes in the purposes of the organisation the promotion and encouragement of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. Article 13(1) notes that the General Assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations regarding the realisation of human rights for all, while article 55 provides that the United Nations shall promote universal respect for and observance of human rights. In a significant provision, article 56 states that:

all members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in cooperation with the organisation for the achievement of the purposes set forth in article 55.⁶¹

⁵² Articles 6, 7, 8(1) and (2), 11, 15, 16 and 18. Note that the Banjul Charter contains no specific derogations clause.

⁵³ The fact that a right may not be derogated from may constitute evidence that the right concerned is part of jus cogens.

⁵⁴ See e.g. articles 8–11 of the European Convention, articles 12–14, 15–16 and 21–22 of the Inter-American Convention and articles 12, 18, 19, 21 and 22 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant. See also Higgins, 'Derogations'.

⁵⁵ See e.g. the due process rights.

⁵⁶ Note that questions relating to the interpretation of and reservations to human rights treaties will be noted below in chapter 15, pp. 706 and 693, while the issue of succession to human rights treaties will be noted below in chapter 16, p. 743. Individual criminal responsibility is covered in chapter 7 and international humanitarian law in chapter 20.

⁵⁷ See e.g. Third US Restatement of Foreign Relations Law, St Paul, 1987, vol. II, pp. 161 ff. and Filartiga v. Pena-Irala 630 F.2d 876; 77 ILR, p. 169. See also T. Meron, Human Rights and Humanitarian Norms as Customary Law, Oxford, 1989 and the articles published in the Special Issue on Customary International Human Rights Law, 25 Georgia Journal of International and Comparative Law, 1995–6.

⁵⁸ See below, chapter 13, p. 611. ⁵⁹ See chapter 21 and particularly the references in footnote 1.

⁶⁰ Largely as a result of lobbying by non-governmental organisations at the San Francisco Conference: see J. Humphrey, 'The United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights', in Luard, International Protection, chapter 3.

⁶¹ Under article 62, the Economic and Social Council has the power to make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for and observance of human rights.

The League of Nations mandate system was replaced by the trusteeship system in 1945, one of the basic objectives of which was, by article 76, the encouragement of respect for human rights, while, with regard to non-self-governing territories, the administering powers under article 73 of the Charter recognised the principle that the interests of the inhabitants were paramount, and accepted as a sacred trust the obligation to promote the well-being of the inhabitants. It can thus be seen that the Charter provisions on human rights were very general and vague. No enforcement procedures were laid down. Some have argued that the term ‘pledge’ in article 56 had the effect of converting the enumerated purposes of article 55 into legal obligations,⁶² but this has been disputed.⁶³ Certainly, as of 1946, this would have been a difficult proposition to sustain, particularly in view of the hortatory language used in the provisions and the fact that the respect for human rights stipulation does not identify precise legal rights.⁶⁴ However, in the Namibia case of 1971, the Court noted that under the UN Charter:

the former Mandatory had pledged itself to observe and respect, in a territory having international status, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race. To establish instead and to enforce, distinctions, exclusions, restrictions and limitations, exclusively based on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin which constitute a denial of fundamental human rights is a flagrant violation of the purposes and principles of the Charter.⁶⁵

It may be that this provision can only be understood in the light of the special, international status of that territory, but in the light of extensive practice since the 1940s in the general area of non-discrimination and human rights, the broader interpretation is to be preferred.

The Charter does contain a domestic jurisdiction provision. Article 2(7) provides that:

nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorise the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state but as noted later⁶⁶ this has over the years been flexibly interpreted, so that human rights issues are no longer recognised as being solely within the domestic jurisdiction of states.

The elucidation, development and protection of human rights through the UN has proved to be a seminal event. A range of declarations and treaties has emerged, coupled with the establishment of a variety of advisory services and implementation and enforcement mechanisms. Large numbers of studies and reports of various kinds have appeared, while the whole process has been accompanied by extensive debate and consideration in a variety of UN organs and committees.

⁶² See e.g. Lauterpacht, International Law, pp. 47–9; Q. Wright, ‘National Courts and Human Rights – the Fujii case’, 45 AJIL, 1951, p. 73; and B. Sloan, ‘Human Rights, the United Nations and International Law’, 20 Nordisk Tidsskrift for International Ret, 1950, pp. 30–1. See also Judge Tanaka, South West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 288–9; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451–2.

⁶³ See M. O. Hudson, ‘Integrity of International Instruments’, 42 AJIL, 1948, pp. 105–8 and Yearbook of the ILC, 1949, p. 178. See also H. Kelsen, The Law of the United Nations, London, 1950, p. 29.

⁶⁴ See D. Driscoll, ‘The Development of Human Rights in International Law’, in Laqueur and Rubin, Human Rights Reader, pp. 41, 43.

⁶⁵ ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 57; 49 ILR, pp. 3, 47. See also E. Schwelb, ‘The International Court of Justice and the Human Rights Clauses of the Charter’, 66 AJIL, 1972, p. 337; and O. Schachter, ‘The Charter and the Constitution’, 4 Vanderbilt Law Review, 1951, p. 443.

⁶⁶ See below, p. 485.

Notwithstanding a certain degree of cynicism, it can be concluded that the acceptance of the centrality of human rights concerns within the international community has been due in no small measure to the unceasing consideration of human rights issues within the framework of the United Nations.

The cornerstone of UN activity has been without doubt the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the UN General Assembly on 10 December 1948.⁶⁷ The Declaration was approved without a dissenting vote (the Byelorussian SSR, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukrainian SSR, USSR, Yugoslavia and Saudi Arabia abstained). It was intended not as a legally binding document as such but, as its preamble proclaims, 'a common standard of achievement for all peoples and nations'. Its thirty articles cover a wide range of rights, from liberty and security of the person (article 3), equality before the law (article 7), effective remedies (article 8), due process (articles 9 and 10), prohibitions on torture (article 5) and arbitrary interference with privacy (article 12) to rights protecting freedom of movement (article 13), asylum (article 14), expression (article 19), conscience and religion (article 18) and assembly (article 20). One should also note that included in the Declaration are social and economic rights such as the right to work and equal pay (article 23), the right to social security (article 25) and the right to education (article 26).

Although clearly not a legally enforceable instrument as such, the question arises as to whether the Declaration has subsequently become binding either by way of custom⁶⁸ or general principles of law, or indeed by virtue of interpretation of the UN Charter itself by subsequent practice.⁶⁹ The Declaration has had a marked influence upon the constitutions of many states and upon the formulation of subsequent human rights treaties and resolutions.⁷⁰ It is also to be noted that in 1968, the Proclamation of Tehran at the conclusion of the UN-sponsored International Conference on Human Rights stressed that the Declaration constituted 'an obligation for members of the international community'.⁷¹ The Declaration has also been referred to in many cases,⁷²

⁶⁷ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, p. 1001; M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1965, vol. V, p. 237; J. Humphrey, 'The Universal Declaration on Human Rights', in Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration (ed. B. S. Ramcharan), New York, 1979, p. 21; J. Kunz, 'The United Nations Declaration of Human Rights', 43 AJIL, 1949, p. 316; E. Schwelb, 'The Influence of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on International and National Law', PASIL, 1959, p. 217; A. Verdoodt, Naissance et Signification de la Déclaration Universelle de Droits de l'Homme, Paris, 1964; The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: A Commentary (ed. A. Eide, G. Alfredsson, G. Melander, L. A. Rehof and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1992; The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: A Common Standard of Achievement (ed. G. Alfredsson and A. Eide), The Hague, 1999; and P. R. Ghandi, 'The Universal Declaration of Human Rights at 50 Years', 41 German YIL, 1998, p. 206.

⁶⁸ Note that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in a document issued in January 1991 on 'Human Rights in Foreign Policy' took the view that, although the Declaration was 'not in itself legally binding, much of its content can now be said to form part of customary international law', UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 592.

⁶⁹ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 1002.

⁷⁰ See e.g. Schwelb, 'Influence'; J. Humphrey, 'The International Bill of Rights: Scope and Implementation', 17 William and Mary Law Review, 1975, p. 527; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1002–5; Judge Tanaka, South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 6, 288 and 293; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 451, 454, and the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950, below, p. 255.

⁷¹ 23 GAOR, A/Conf. 32/41. See also the non-governmental Montreal Statement, 9 Review of the International Commission of Jurists, 1968, p. 94.

⁷² See e.g. In re Flesche 16 AD, pp. 266, 269; The State (Duggan) v. Tapley 18 ILR, pp. 336, 342; Robinson v. Secretary-General of the UN 19 ILR, pp. 494, 496; Extradition of Greek National case, 22 ILR, pp. 520, 524; and Beth El Mission v. Minister of Social Welfare 47 ILR, pp. 205, 207. See also Corfu Channel case, ICJ Reports, 1949, pp. 4, 22; 16 AD, pp. 155, 158; and Filaritiga v. Pena-Irala 630 F.2d 876 (1980).

and its importance within the context of United Nations human rights law should not be disregarded.⁷³ The intention had been that the Declaration would be followed immediately by a binding universal convention on human rights, but this process took considerably longer than anticipated. In the meantime, a number of important international conventions dealing with selective human rights issues were adopted, including the Genocide Convention⁷⁴ and the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.⁷⁵

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted in 1993, emphasised that all human rights were universal, indivisible and interdependent and interrelated. The protection of human rights was seen as a priority objective of the UN and the interrelationship of democracy, development and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms underlined. Additional facilities for the UN Centre for Human Rights were called for as well as the establishment of a UN High Commissioner for Human Rights. The Declaration made particular reference inter alia to the problems of racial discrimination, minorities, indigenous peoples, migrant workers, the rights of women, the rights of the child, freedom from torture, the rights of disabled persons and human rights education.⁷⁶ The post of UN High Commissioner for Human Rights was indeed established several months later⁷⁷ and filled in April 1994. In General Assembly resolution 48/141, it is provided that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights would be the UN official with principal responsibility for UN human rights activities.⁷⁸

In late 2013, the UN Secretary-General, partly in reaction to the deemed systemic failure to prevent human rights abuses towards the end of the Sri Lankan civil war, launched the Human Rights Upfront Initiative⁷⁹ with the aim to ensure that the UN system takes early and effective action, as mandated by the Charter and UN resolutions, to prevent or respond to large-scale violations of human rights or international humanitarian law, by realising a cultural change within the UN system, so that human rights and the protection of civilians were seen as a system-wide core responsibility.⁸⁰

⁷³ The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted on 25 June 1993 at the UN Conference on Human Rights referred to the Declaration as the 'source of inspiration' and the 'basis for the United Nations in making advances in standard setting as contained in the existing international human rights instruments', 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1661, 1663. The private International Law Association adopted a resolution in 1994 in which it noted that 'the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is universally regarded as an authoritative elaboration of the human rights provisions of the United Nations Charter' and that 'many if not all of the rights elaborated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights are widely recognised as constituting rules of customary international law', Report of the Sixty-sixth Conference, Buenos Aires, 1994, p. 29.

⁷⁴ See below, chapter 7, p. 316. ⁷⁵ See below, p. 236. ⁷⁶ See 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1661 ff.

⁷⁷ See General Assembly resolution 48/141, 20 December 1993. See also A. Clapham, 'Creating the High Commissioner for Human Rights: The Outside Story', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 556.

⁷⁸ The High Commissioner is responsible for promoting and protecting the effective enjoyment by all of all civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights, providing through the UN Centre for Human Rights and other appropriate institutions, advisory services and other assistance including education and engaging in dialogue with all governments with a view to securing respect for human rights. The High Commissioner may also make recommendations to competent bodies of the UN system with a view to improving the promotion and protection of all human rights: see the first Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, 1995, A/49/36, p. 2.

⁷⁹ <https://undg.org/home/guidance-policies/country-programming-principles/human-rights/rights-up-front-initiative/>.

⁸⁰ Six main areas of concern were identified as part of this initiative: 'Action 1: Integrating human rights into the lifeblood of the UN so all staff understand their own and the Organization's human rights obligations. Action 2: Providing Member States with candid information with respect to peoples at risk of, or subject to, serious violations of human rights or humanitarian law. Action 3: Ensuring coherent strategies of action on the ground and leveraging the UN System's capacities to respond in a concerted manner. Action 4: Clarifying and streamlining procedures at Headquarters to enhance communication with the field and facilitate early, coordinated action. Action 5:

The Protection of the Collective Rights of Groups and Individuals⁸¹

International law since 1945 has focused primarily upon the protection of individual human rights, as can be seen from the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In recent years, however, more attention has been given to various expressions of the concept of collective rights, although it is often difficult to maintain a strict differentiation between individual and collective rights. Some rights are purely individual, such as the right to life or freedom of expression; others are individual rights that are necessarily expressed collectively, such as freedom of assembly or the right to manifest one's own religion. Some rights are purely collective, such as the right to self-determination or the physical protection of the group as such through the prohibition of genocide; others constitute collective manifestations of individual rights, such as the right of persons belonging to minorities to enjoy their own culture and practise their own religion or use their own language. In addition, the question of the balancing of the legitimate rights of the state, groups and individuals is in practice crucial and sometimes not sufficiently considered. States, groups and individuals have legitimate rights and interests that should not be ignored. All within a state have an interest in ensuring the efficient functioning of that state in a manner consistent with respect for the rights of groups and individuals, while the balancing of the rights of groups and individuals may itself prove difficult and complex.

PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION

Apart from the overwhelming requirement of protection from physical attack upon their very existence as a group,⁸² groups need protection from discriminatory treatment as such.⁸³ The norm of non-discrimination thus constitutes a principle relevant both to groups and to individual members of groups.

The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁸⁴ was signed in 1965 and entered into force in 1969. It builds on the non-discrimination provisions in the UN Charter. Racial discrimination is defined as:

any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.

Strengthening the UN's human rights capacity, particularly through better coordination of its human rights entities. Action 6: Developing a common UN system for information management on serious violations of human rights and humanitarian law.' See <https://undg.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/09/Rights-up-Front-May-2014.pdf>.

⁸¹ See e.g. D. Sanders, 'Collective Rights', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 368, and N. Lerner, Group Rights and Discrimination in International Law, 2nd edn, The Hague, 2003.

⁸² As to the prohibition of genocide, see below chapter 7, p. 316.

⁸³ See e.g. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 12; W. Vandenhoe, Non-discrimination and Equality in the View of the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies, Antwerp, 2005; Joseph and Castan, International Covenant, chapter 23; A. Bayefsky, 'The Principle of Equality or Non-discrimination in International Law', 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 1; J. Greenberg, 'Race, Sex and Religious Discrimination', in Meron, Human Rights in International Law, p. 307; W. McKean, Equality and Discrimination under International Law, Oxford, 1983; and T. Meron, Human Rights Law-Making in the United Nations, Oxford, 1986, chapters 1–3.

⁸⁴ See e.g. N. Lerner, The UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 2nd edn, Dordrecht, 1980.

States parties undertake to prohibit racial discrimination and guarantee equality for all in the enjoyment of a series of rights and to assure to all within their jurisdiction effective protection and remedies regarding such human rights.⁸⁵ It is also fair to conclude that in addition to the existence of this Convention, the prohibition of discrimination on racial grounds is contrary to customary international law.⁸⁶ This conclusion may be reached on the basis inter alia of articles 55 and 56 of the UN Charter, articles 2 and 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights,⁸⁷ regional instruments on human rights protection⁸⁸ and general state practice. Discrimination on other grounds, such as religion⁸⁹ and gender,⁹⁰ may also be contrary to customary international law. The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights provides in article 2(1) that all states parties undertake to respect and ensure to all individuals within their territories and within their jurisdictions the rights recognised in the Covenant 'without distinction of any kind such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status'.⁹¹ Article 26 stipulates that all persons are equal before the law and thus, 'the law shall prohibit any discrimination and guarantee to all persons equal and effective protection against discrimination on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status'.⁹² The UN

⁸⁵ See further below, p. 236, with regard to the establishment of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Note also the Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 1973.

⁸⁶ See e.g. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Tanaka in the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 293; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 455.

⁸⁷ See below, p. 238. ⁸⁸ See below, pp. 255 ff.

⁸⁹ See e.g. the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, 1981, General Assembly resolution 36/55 and the appointment of a Special Rapporteur to examine situations inconsistent with the Declaration by the UN Commission on Human Rights, resolution 1986/20 of 10 March 1986. See also Odio Benito, Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, New York, 1989, and Report on the Implementation of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, E/CN.4/1995/91, 1994. In 2000, the Commission on Human Rights changed the mandate title to 'Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief': see ECOSOC decision 2000/261 and General Assembly resolution 55/97. The UN Human Rights Committee has produced a General Comment on article 18 concerning freedom of thought, conscience and religion: see General Comment 22, 1993, HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1994, and Joseph and Castan, International Covenant, chapter 17. Note also S. Neff, 'An Evolving International Legal Norm of Religious Freedom: Problems and Prospects', 7 California Western International Law Journal, 1975, p. 543; A. Krishnaswami, Study of Discrimination in the Matter of Religious Rights and Practices, New York, 1960, E/CN.4/Sub.2/200/Rev.1; N. Lerner, 'Towards a Draft Declaration against Religious Intolerance and Discrimination', 11 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1981, p. 82; B. Tahzib, Freedom of Religion or Belief: Ensuring Effective International Legal Protection, Dordrecht, 1995; B. Dickson, 'The United Nations and Freedom of Religion', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 327; and The Changing Nature of Religious Rights under International Law (ed. M. Evans, P. Petkoff and J. Rivers), Oxford, 2015.

⁹⁰ See the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women 1979, below, p. 244. Article 1 of the Convention provides that discrimination against women means any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality with men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field. See e.g. McKean, Equality, chapter 10; Bayefsky, 'Equality'; and Meron, Human Rights Law-Making, chapter 2. See also J. Morsink, 'Women's Rights in the Universal Declaration', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 229; R. Cook, 'Women's International Human Rights Law', 15 HRQ, 1993, p. 230; Human Rights of Women (ed. R. Cook), Philadelphia, 1994; and M. A. Freeman and A. S. Fraser, 'Women's Human Rights', in Herkin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 103. Note also the UN General Assembly Declaration on Elimination of Violence against Women, 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1049. See also the London Declaration of International Law Principles on Internally Displaced Persons adopted by the International Law Association, Report of the Sixty-Ninth Conference, London, 2000, p. 794.

⁹¹ See also, for example, article 2(2) and 3 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, 1966. See M. C. Craven, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Oxford, 1995, chapter 4, and see further below, p. 234.

⁹² Note that this provision constitutes an autonomous or free-standing principle, whereas article 2(1) of that Covenant and article 2 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 14 of the European Convention on Human Rights and article 2(1) of the Convention on the Rights of the Child prohibit discrimination in the context of specific rights

Human Rights Committee established under this Covenant⁹³ has noted in its General Comment 18 on Non-Discrimination⁹⁴ that non-discrimination ‘constitutes a basic and general principle relating to the protection of human rights’. The Committee, while adopting the definition of the term ‘discrimination’ as used in the Racial Discrimination and Women’s Discrimination Conventions, concludes that it should be understood to imply any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons, on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms.

The principle of non-discrimination requires the establishment of equality in fact as well as formal equality in law. As the Permanent Court of International Justice noted in the Minority Schools in Albania case,⁹⁵ ‘equality in law precludes discrimination of any kind; whereas equality in fact may involve the necessity of different treatment in order to attain a result which establishes an equilibrium between different situations’.⁹⁶ The appropriate test of acceptable differentiation in such circumstances will centre upon what is just or reasonable⁹⁷ or objectively and reasonably justified.⁹⁸ The application of equality in fact may also require the introduction of affirmative action measures in order to diminish or eliminate conditions perpetuating discrimination. Such measures would need to be specifically targeted and neither absolute nor of infinite duration.⁹⁹

THE PRINCIPLE OF SELF-DETERMINATION AS A HUMAN RIGHT¹⁰⁰

The right to self-determination has already been examined in so far as it relates to the context of decolonisation.¹⁰¹ The question arises whether this right, which has been widely proclaimed, has and freedoms laid down in the instrument in question: see Bayefsky, ‘Equality’, pp. 3–4, and the Human Rights Committee’s General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 12.

⁹³ See further below, p. 238. ⁹⁴ Adopted on 9 November 1989, CCPR/C/Rev.1/Add.1.

⁹⁵ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 64, p. 19 (1935); 8 AD, pp. 386, 389–90.

⁹⁶ See also the Human Rights Committee’s General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 8.

⁹⁷ See Judge Tanaka’s Dissenting Opinion in the South-West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, pp. 3, 306; 37 ILR, pp. 243, 464.

⁹⁸ See e.g. the Belgian Linguistics case, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, No. 6, 1986, para. 10; 45 ILR, pp. 114, 165. See also the Amendments to the Naturalisation Provisions of the Constitution of Costa Rica case, Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 1984, para. 56; 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 172, and the Human Rights Committee’s General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 13, which notes that ‘not every differentiation of treatment will constitute discrimination, if the criteria for such differentiation are reasonable and objective and if the aim is to achieve a purpose which is legitimate under the Covenant’.

⁹⁹ See the Human Rights Committee’s General Comment on Non-Discrimination, paragraph 10. See also article 1(4) of the Racial Discrimination Convention, article 4(1) of the Women’s Discrimination Convention and article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

¹⁰⁰ See e.g. A. Buchanan, Justice, Legitimacy and Self-Determination, Oxford, 2004; J. Summers, Peoples and International Law, The Hague, 2007; K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002; T. D. Musgrave, Self-Determination and National Minorities, Oxford, 1997; W. Ofuataey-Kodjoe, ‘Self Determination’, in United Nations Legal Order (ed. O. Schachter and C. C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. I, p. 349; J. Fisch, The Right of Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 2015; A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995; Modern Law of Self-Determination (ed. C. Tomuschat), Dordrecht, 1993; Higgins, Problems and Process, chapter 7; T. Franck, The Power of Legitimacy Among Nations, Oxford, 1990, pp. 153 ff.; Franck, ‘Fairness in the International and Institutional System’, 240 HR, 1993 III, pp. 13, 125 ff.; The Rights of Peoples (ed. J. Crawford), Oxford, 1988; Peoples and Minorities in International Law (ed. C. Brölmann, R. Lefeber and M. Zieck), Dordrecht, 1993; and P. Thornberry, ‘Self-Determination, Minorities, Human Rights: A Review of International Instruments’, 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 867. See also M. Koskenniemi, ‘National Self-Determination Today: Problems of Legal Theory and Practice’, 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 241; G. Simpson, ‘The Diffusion of Sovereignty: Self-Determination in the Post-Colonial Age’, 32 Stanford Journal of International Law, 1996, p. 255; and R. McCorquodale, ‘Self-Determination: A Human Rights Approach’, 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 857.

¹⁰¹ See above, chapter 5, p. 198.

an application beyond the colonial context. Article 1 of both International Covenants on Human Rights provides that 'all peoples have the right to self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development', while the Helsinki Final Act of 1975¹⁰² refers to 'the principle of equal rights and self-determination . . . all peoples have the right, in full freedom, to determine, when and as they wish, their internal and external political status, without external interference, and to pursue as they wish their political, economic, social and cultural development'. Article 20 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, 1981¹⁰³ stipulates that 'all peoples shall have the right to existence. They shall have the unquestionable and inalienable right to self-determination. They shall freely determine their political status and shall pursue their economic and social development according to the policy they have chosen.' The 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations¹⁰⁴ referred to the colonial situation and noted that subjection of peoples to alien subjugation, domination and exploitation constituted a violation of the principle. A number of UN resolutions have discussed the relevance of self-determination also to situations of alien occupation where the use of force has been involved.¹⁰⁵ The International Law Commission in 1988 expressed its view that the principle of self-determination was of universal application,¹⁰⁶ while the practice of the UN Human Rights Committee has been of particular significance.

Before this is briefly noted, reference must be made to the crucial importance of the principle of territorial integrity.¹⁰⁷ This norm protects the territorial framework of independent states and is part of the overall concept of the sovereignty of states. In terms of the concept of the freezing of territorial boundaries as at the moment of independence (save by mutual consent), the norm is referred to as uti possidetis juris.¹⁰⁸ This posits that boundaries established and existing at the moment of independence cannot be altered unless the relevant parties consent to change. It is supported by international instruments¹⁰⁹ and by judicial pronouncement. In the Burkina Faso/Mali case,¹¹⁰ the Chamber of the International Court of Justice emphasised that uti possidetis constituted a general principle, whose purpose was to prevent the independence and stability of new states from being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers. This essential requirement of stability had induced newly independent states to consent to the respecting of colonial borders 'and to take account of it in the interpretation of the principle of self-determination of peoples'. The Arbitration Commission of the European Conference on Yugoslavia emphasised in Opinion No. 2¹¹¹ that 'it is well established that, whatever the ¹⁰² See further below, p. 273. ¹⁰³ See further below, p. 283. ¹⁰⁴ General Assembly resolution 2625 (XXV).

¹⁰⁵ See, for an examination of state practice, e.g. Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 90–9.

¹⁰⁶ Yearbook of the ILC, 1988, vol. II, Part 2, p. 64.

¹⁰⁷ General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV) 1960 (the Colonial Declaration) underlines that 'any attempt at the partial or total disruption of the national unity and the territorial integrity of a country is incompatible with the purposes and principles of the Charter of the UN', while resolution 2625 (XXV) 1970 (the Declaration on Principles of International Law Concerning Friendly Relations) emphasises that 'nothing in the foregoing paragraphs shall be construed as authorising or encouraging any action which would dismember or impair, totally or in part, the territorial integrity or political unity of sovereign or independent states'. See further below, chapter 9, p. 363.

¹⁰⁸ See further below, chapter 9, p. 391.

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. General Assembly resolutions 1514 (XV) and 1541 (XV) and Organisation of African Unity resolution 16 (I) 1964.

¹¹⁰ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 566–7; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 470–1.

¹¹¹ 92 ILR, pp. 167, 168. See further above, chapter 5, p. 198.

circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise’.

The principle of self-determination, therefore, applies beyond the colonial context, within the territorial framework of independent states. It cannot be utilised as a legal tool for the dismantling of sovereign states.¹¹² Its use, however, as a crucial principle of collective human rights¹¹³ has been analysed by the Human Rights Committee in interpreting article 1 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant.¹¹⁴ In its General Comment on Self-Determination adopted in 1984,¹¹⁵ the Committee emphasised that the realisation of the right was ‘an essential condition for the effective guarantee and observance of individual human rights’. Nevertheless, the principle is seen as a collective one and not one that individuals could seek to enforce through the individual petition procedures provided in the First Optional Protocol to the Covenant.¹¹⁶ The Committee takes the view, as Professor Higgins¹¹⁷ noted,¹¹⁸ that ‘external self-determination requires a state to take action in its foreign policy consistent with the attainment of self-determination in the remaining areas of colonial or racist occupation. But internal self-determination is directed to their own peoples.’ In the context of the significance of the principle of self-determination within independent states, the Committee has encouraged states parties to provide in their reports details about participation in social and political structures,¹¹⁹ and in engaging in dialogue with representatives of states parties, questions are regularly posed as to how political institutions operate and how the people of the state concerned participate in the governance of their state.¹²⁰ This necessarily links in with consideration of other articles of the Covenant concerning, for example, freedom of expression (article 19), freedom of assembly (article 21), freedom of association (article 22) and the right to take part in the conduct of public affairs and to vote (article 25). The right of self-determination, therefore, provides the overall framework for the consideration of the principles relating to democratic governance.¹²¹ The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination adopted General Recommendation 21 in 1996 in which it similarly divided self-determination into an external and an internal aspect and noted that the latter referred to the ‘right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs at any ¹¹² See above, chapter 5, p. 202 and below, chapter 9, p. 387.

¹¹³ Note Brownlie’s view that the principle of self-determination has a core of reasonable certainty and this consists in ‘the right of a community which has a distinct character to have this character reflected in the institutions of government under which it lives’: ‘The Rights of Peoples in International Law’, in Crawford, Rights of Peoples, pp. 1, 5.

¹¹⁴ See in particular D. McGoldrick, The Human Rights Committee, Oxford, 1994, chapter 5; Cassese, Self-Determination, pp. 59 ff.; and M. Nowak, UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, CCPR Commentary, 2nd edn, Kehl, 2005, part 1.

¹¹⁵ General Comment 12.

¹¹⁶ See the Kitok case, Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/43/40, pp. 221, 228; 96 ILR, pp. 637, 645; the Lubicon Lake Band case, A/45/40, vol. II, pp. 1, 27; 96 ILR, pp. 667, 702; EP v. Colombia, A/45/40, vol. II, pp. 184, 187; and RL v. Canada, A/47/40, pp. 358, 365; 96 ILR, p. 706. However, in Mahuika et al. v. New Zealand, the Committee took the view that the provisions of article 1 may be relevant in the interpretation of other rights protected by the Covenant, in particular article 27 on the rights of persons belonging to minorities, A/56/40, vol. II, annex X, A. See also Diergaardt et al. v. Namibia, A/55/40, vol. II, annex IX, sect. M, para. 10.3.

¹¹⁷ A member of the Committee from 1985 to 1995.

¹¹⁸ Higgins, ‘Postmodern Tribalism and the Right to Secession’, in Brölmann et al., Peoples and Minorities in International Law, p. 31.

¹¹⁹ See e.g. the report of Colombia, CCPR/C/64/Add.3, pp. 9 ff., 1991.

¹²⁰ See e.g. with regard to Canada, A/46/40, p. 12. See also A/45/40, pp. 120–1, with regard to Zaire.

¹²¹ See T. Franck, ‘The Emerging Right to Democratic Governance’, 86 AJLL, 1992, p. 46. See also P. Thornberry, ‘The Democratic or Internal Aspect of Self-Determination’, in Tomuschat, Modern Law of Self-Determination, p. 101.

level'.¹²² The Canadian Supreme Court has noted that self-determination 'is normally fulfilled through internal self-determination – a people's pursuit of its political, economic, social and cultural development within the framework of an existing state'.¹²³

THE PROTECTION OF MINORITIES¹²⁴

Various attempts were made in the post-First World War settlements, following the collapse of the German, Ottoman, Russian and Austro-Hungarian Empires and the rise of a number of independent nation-based states in Eastern and Central Europe, to protect those groups to whom sovereignty and statehood could not be granted.¹²⁵ Persons belonging to racial, religious or linguistic minorities were to be given the same treatment and the same civil and political rights and security as other nationals in the state in question. Such provisions constituted obligations of international concern and could not be altered without the assent of a majority of the League of Nations Council. The Council was to take action in the event of any infraction of minorities' obligations. There also existed a petition procedure by minorities to the League, although they had no standing as such before the Council or the Permanent Court of International Justice.¹²⁶ However, the schemes of protection did not work well, ultimately for a variety of reasons ranging from the sensitivities of newly independent states to international supervision of minority issues to overt exploitation of minority issues by Nazi Germany in order to subvert neighbouring countries. After the Second World War, the focus shifted to the international protection of universal individual human rights, although several instruments dealing with specific situations

¹²² A/51/18. ¹²³ The Quebec Secession case (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 437–8; 115 ILR, p. 536.

¹²⁴ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 972 ff.; Nowak, UN Covenant, pp. 480 ff.; M. Weller, Universal Minority Rights: A Commentary on the Jurisprudence of International Courts and Treaty Bodies, Oxford, 2007; Political Participation of Minorities: A Commentary on International Standards and Practice (ed. M. Weller and K. Nobbs), Oxford, 2010; Special Issue on Minority Rights in International Law, 13 International Community Law Review, 2011; R. Higgins, 'Minority Rights: Discrepancies and Divergencies Between the International Covenant and the Council of Europe System', in Liber Amicorum for Henry Schermers, Dordrecht, 1994, p. 193; Shaw, 'Definition of Minorities'; P. Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, Oxford, 1991; and Thornberry, 'Phoenix', and 'Self-Determination', p. 867; G. Alfredsson, 'Minority Rights and a New World Order', in Broadening the Frontiers of Human Rights: Essays in Honour of A. Eide (ed. D. Gomien), Oslo, 1993; Brölmann et al., Peoples and Minorities in International Law; The Protection of Ethnic and Linguistic Minorities in Europe (ed. J. Packer and K. Myntti), Turku, 1993; Documents on Autonomy and Minority Rights (ed. H. Hannum), Dordrecht, 1993; N. Rodley, 'Conceptual Problems in the Protection of Minorities: International Legal Developments', 17 HRQ, 1995, p. 48; H. W. Wei, A Dialogical Concept of Minority Rights, The Hague, 2016; J. Rehman, The Weakness in the International Protection of Minority Rights, The Hague, 2000; and International Human Rights Law, chapters 13 and 14; Musgrave, Self-Determination, and Minority and Group Rights in the New Millennium (ed. D. Fottrell and B. Bowring), The Hague, 1999. See also the Capotorti Study on the Rights of Persons Belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev.1, 1979.

¹²⁵ The minorities regime of the League consisted of five special minorities treaties binding Poland, the Serbo-Croat-Slovene state, Romania, Greece and Czechoslovakia; special minorities clauses in the treaties of peace with Austria, Bulgaria, Hungary and Turkey; five general declarations made on admission to the League by Albania, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia and Iraq; a special declaration by Finland regarding the Aaland Islands; and treaties relating to Danzig, Upper Silesia and Memel: see generally Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, pp. 38 ff.

¹²⁶ In the early 1930s several hundred petitions were received but this dropped to virtually nil by 1939: see Thornberry, International Law and Minorities, pp. 434–6, and the Capotorti Report on the Rights of Persons belonging to Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities, 1979, E/CN.4/Sub.2/384/Rev.1, pp. 20–2. See also Macartney, National States, pp. 370 ff.; J. Stone, International Guarantees of Minority Rights, London, 1932; and Richard, Le Droit de Petition, Paris, 1932.

incorporated provisions concerning the protection of minorities,¹²⁷ and in 1947 the Sub-Commission on the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities was established.¹²⁸ It was not, however, until the adoption of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1966 that the question of minority rights came back onto the international agenda. Article 27 of this Covenant provides that ‘in those states in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities shall not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practise their own religion, or to use their own language’.

This modest and rather negative provision as formulated centres upon ‘persons belonging’ to minorities rather than upon minorities as such and does not define the concept of minorities.¹²⁹ Nevertheless, the UN Human Rights Committee has taken the opportunity to consider the issue in discussing states’ reports, individual petitions and in a General Comment. In commenting upon states’ reports made pursuant to the International Covenant, the Committee has made clear, for example, that the rights under article 27 apply to all members of minorities within a state party’s territory and not just nationals,¹³⁰ and it has expressed concern with regard to the treatment of minorities within particular states.¹³¹

In the Lovelace case,¹³² the Committee decided that there had been a violation of article 27 with regard to an Indian woman who, by having married a non-Indian, had lost her rights by Canadian law to reside on the Tobique Reserve, something which she wished to do upon the collapse of her marriage. The Committee noted that statutory restrictions affecting the right to residence on a reserve of a person belonging to the minority concerned had to have both a reasonable and objective justification and be consistent with the other provisions of the Covenant read as a whole. This had not been the case. There was no place outside the reserve where her right to access to her native culture and language could be conducted in community with other members of the minority in question.¹³³

¹²⁷ See e.g. Annex IV of the Treaty of Peace with Italy, 1947; the Indian–Pakistan Treaty, 1950, and article 7 of the Austrian State Treaty, 1955. See also the provisions in the documents concerning the independence of Cyprus, Cmnd 1093, 1960.

¹²⁸ See further below, p. 232.

¹²⁹ Attempts to define minorities have invariably focused upon the numerically inferior numbers of minorities and their non-dominant position, the existence of certain objective features differentiating them from the majority population (e.g. ethnic, religious or linguistic) coupled with the subjective wish of the minority concerned to preserve those characteristics. See e.g. Shaw, ‘Definition of Minorities’, and the Capotorti Report, p. 96. See also Council of Europe Assembly Recommendation 1255 (1955), H/Inf (95) 3, p. 88. Note that the Human Rights Committee in the Ballantyne case held that English-speaking citizens in Quebec did not constitute a minority since the term ‘minority’ applied to the whole state and not a part of it, 14 HRLJ, 1993, pp. 171, 176.

¹³⁰ See e.g. comments upon Norway’s third periodic report, A/49/40, p. 23 and Japan’s third periodic report, ibid., p. 25. See also Joseph and Castan, International Covenant, chapter 24.

¹³¹ See e.g. with regard to the third periodic report of Romania, A/49/40, p. 29 and that of Mexico, ibid., p. 35, and the fourth periodic report of Russia, CCPR/C/79/Add.54, p. 5 and that of Ukraine, CCPR/C/79/Add.52, p. 4. Note also the criticism of the Democratic Republic of the Congo for its marginalisation, discrimination and, at times, persecution of some of the country’s minorities, including pygmies, see CCPR/C/SR.2358, 2006, and of the situation in Kosovo, CCPR/C/SR.2394, 2006.

¹³² I Selected Decisions of the Human Rights Committee, 1985, p. 83; 68 ILR, p. 17.

¹³³ See also the Kitok case, A/43/40, p. 221; 96 ILR, p. 637, where the Committee took the view with regard to a petition by a member of the Sami community in Sweden that where the regulation of economic activity was an essential element in the culture of an economic community, its application to an individual could fall within article 27. It was emphasised that a restriction upon an individual member of a minority must be shown to have a reasonable and objective justification and to be necessary for the continued viability and welfare of the minority as a whole. In the

The Committee adopted a General Comment on article 27 in 1994 after much discussion and hesitation due to fears that such a comment might be perceived to constitute an encouragement to secession.¹³⁴ The General Comment pointed to the distinction between the rights of persons belonging to minorities on the one hand, and the right to self-determination and the right to equality and non-discrimination on the other. It was emphasised that the rights under article 27 did not prejudice the sovereignty and territorial integrity of states, although certain minority rights, in particular those pertaining to indigenous communities, might consist of a way of life closely associated with territory and the use of its resources, such as fishing, hunting and the right to live in reserves protected by law. The Committee, in an important part of the General Comment, underlined that persons belonging to a minority need not be nationals or permanent residents of the state concerned so that migrant workers or even visitors might be protected under article 27. Whether an ethnic, religious or linguistic minority exists was an objective question, not dependent upon a decision of the state party. Although article 27 is negatively formulated, the Committee pointed out that positive measures of protection were required not only against the acts of the state party itself, but also against the acts of other persons within the state party. Positive measures may also be necessary to protect the identity of the minority concerned and legitimate differentiation was permitted so long as it was based on reasonable and objective criteria.

The UN General Assembly adopted a Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities in December 1992.¹³⁵ Article 1 provides that states 'shall protect the existence and the national or ethnic, cultural, religious and linguistic identity of minorities within their respective territories' and shall adopt appropriate legislative and other measures to achieve these ends. The Declaration states that persons belonging to minorities have the right to enjoy their own culture, practise and profess their own religion and to use their own language in private and in public without hindrance. Such persons also have the right to participate effectively in cultural, social, economic and public life. The UN Sub-Commission has been considering the question of minorities for many years and in 1994 agreed to establish a five-person inter-sessional working group¹³⁶ to examine peaceful and constructive solutions to situations involving minorities and, in particular, to review the practical application of the Declaration, to provide recommendations to inter alia the Sub-Commission and the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights to protect minorities where there is a risk of violence and generally to promote dialogue between minority groups in society and between those groups and governments. In 2005, the Commission on Human Rights appointed an Independent Expert on Minorities (termed Special Rapporteur as from 2011) with the mandate to promote the implementation of the Declaration; to identify best practices and possibilities for technical Lubicon Lake Band case, A/45/40, vol. II, p. 1; 96 ILR, p. 667, the Committee upheld the complaint that the Canadian Government, in allowing the Provincial Government of Alberta to expropriate the Band's territory for the benefit of private corporate interests, violated article 27. It was held that the rights protected under article 27 included the right of persons in community with others to engage in economic and social activities which were part of the culture of the community to which they belonged. However, measures with only a limited impact on the way of life and livelihood of persons belonging to a minority would not necessarily violate article 27. See also Länsmann cases against Finland, 511/92 and 671/95, 115 ILR, p. 300, and Report of the Human Rights Committee 2005, volume II, A/60/40, pp. 90 ff.

¹³⁴ General Comment No. 23, HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, p. 38.

¹³⁵ Resolution 47/135. See e.g. The UN Minority Rights Declaration (ed. A. Phillips and A. Rosas), London, 1993.

¹³⁶ E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/56. This was authorised by the Commission on Human Rights on 3 March 1995: see resolution 1995/24. See also E/CN.4/Sub.2/1995/51.

co-operation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights at the request of Governments; and to co-operate closely with existing relevant UN bodies, while taking into account the views of non-governmental organisations and applying a gender perspective.¹³⁷

The issue of minority rights has also been taken up recently particularly by European states, primarily as a consequence of the demise of the Soviet Union and its empire in Eastern Europe and the reintegration of Eastern and Central European states within the political system of Western Europe. The specific response to questions of minority rights within the Council of Europe and the Conference (as from 1995 Organization) on Security and Co-operation in Europe are addressed below.¹³⁸

As has been noted, the UN Human Rights Committee has pointed to the special position of indigenous peoples as minorities with a particular relationship to their traditional territory. It has been accepted that such communities form a specific category of minorities with special needs.¹³⁹ The International Labour Organization adopted Convention No. 107 on Indigenous and Tribal Populations in 1957, an instrument with a predominantly assimilationist approach to the question of indigenous peoples. It was partially revised in Convention No. 169 on Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries, 1989. The change in terminology from 'populations' to 'peoples' is instructive¹⁴⁰ and the latter Convention focuses far more upon the protection of the social, cultural, religious and spiritual values and practices of indigenous peoples. Unlike the prevailing approach to the definition of minorities generally, which intermingles objective and subjective criteria, this Convention stipulates in article 1(2) that 'self-identification as indigenous or tribal shall be regarded as a fundamental criterion' for determining the groups to which the Convention applies. The Sub-Commission recommended that a study of discrimination against indigenous populations should be made and this was completed in 1984.¹⁴¹ A definition of indigenous populations was suggested and various suggestions made as to future action. In 1982, the Sub-Commission established a Working Group on Indigenous Populations¹⁴² and a Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples was finally adopted in 2007.¹⁴³

¹³⁷ Resolution 2005/79. See also resolution 25/5, 2014. Attention has, for example, been drawn to the rights of women facing multiple forms of discrimination, exclusion and violence, such as women from minority communities, Press Release of 7 March 2006, and to problems faced by the Roma in Hungary, Press Release of 4 July 2006.

¹³⁸ See below, pp. 269 and 273.

¹³⁹ See e.g. M. Åhrén, Indigenous Peoples' Status in the International Legal System, Oxford, 2016; P. Thornberry, Indigenous Peoples and Human Rights, Manchester, 2002; S. Marquardt, 'International Law and Indigenous Peoples', 3 International Journal on Group Rights, 1995, p. 47; J. Berger and P. Hunt, 'Towards the International Protection of Indigenous Peoples' Rights', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 405; C. Tennant, 'Indigenous Peoples, International Institutions, and the International Legal Literature from 1945–1993', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 1; E. Stamatopoulou, 'Indigenous Peoples and the United Nations: Human Rights as a Developing Dynamic', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 58; Crawford, Rights of Peoples; R. Barsh, 'Indigenous Peoples: An Emerging Object of International Law', 80 AJIL, 1986, p. 369; J. Anaya, Indigenous Peoples in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2004; and G. Bennett, Aboriginal Rights in International Law, London, 1978. See also Justice Pending: Indigenous Peoples and Other Good Causes (ed. G. Alfredsson and M. Stavropoulou), The Hague, 2002. Note in particular the cases of Delgamuukw v. British Columbia (1998) 153 DLR (4th) 193; 115 ILR, p. 446, Canadian Supreme Court, and Mabo v. State of Queensland (No. 1) (1988) 83 ALR 14; 112 ILR, p. 412 and (No. 2) (1992) 107 ALR 1; 112 ILR, p. 457. See also The Richtersveld Community case, 24 March 2003, Supreme Court of South Africa, 127 ILR, p. 507.

¹⁴⁰ But note that the Convention provides that the use of the term 'peoples' is not to be construed as having any implication as regards the rights that may attach to the term under international law (article 1(3)).

¹⁴¹ The Martinez Cobo Report, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1986/7 and Add. 1–4. ¹⁴² See E/CN.4/Sub.2/1982/33.

¹⁴³ A Draft Declaration was adopted in 1994: see resolution 1994/45, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1994/56, p. 103. See also R. T. Coulter, 'The Draft UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples: What Is It? What Does It Mean?', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 123.

The Declaration notes that indigenous peoples have the right to the full enjoyment, as a collective or as individuals, of all human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognised in the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international human rights law (article 1). They have the right to self-determination (article 3) and, in exercising their right to self-determination, have the right to autonomy or self-government in matters relating to their internal and local affairs, as well as ways and means for financing their autonomous functions (article 4). They further have the right to maintain and strengthen their distinctive political, economic, social and cultural characteristics, as well as their legal systems, while retaining the right to participate fully in the life of the state (article 5), the right to a nationality (article 6) and the collective right to live in freedom and security as distinct peoples free from any act of genocide or violence (article 7(2)). They also have the right not to be subjected to forced assimilation or destruction of their culture, while states are to provide effective mechanisms for prevention of, and redress for, inter alia any action which has the aim or effect of depriving them of their integrity as distinct peoples, or of their cultural values or ethnic identities (article 8). The Declaration also lists their rights to practise their cultural traditions, and to education, access to media and health practices, together with a range of rights concerning their distinctive relationship to the land (articles 9–37). The United Nations, its bodies (including the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues) and specialised agencies (including at the country level), and states are called upon to promote respect for and full application of the Declaration (article 42). A special rapporteur on indigenous peoples was appointed in 2001 and a Voluntary Fund for Indigenous Populations established in 1985.¹⁴⁴ A Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues was set up in 2000¹⁴⁵ and UN Development Group Guidelines on Indigenous Peoples' Issues were produced in 2008.¹⁴⁶ An expert mechanism, consisting of five independent experts, on the rights of indigenous peoples was called for in Human Rights Council resolution 6/36, 2007, in order to provide the Council with thematic expertise.

The question of an American Declaration on Indigenous Peoples has also been under discussion within the Organization of American States.¹⁴⁷ The Inter-American Court of Human Rights discussed the issue of the rights of indigenous peoples to ancestral lands and resources in The Mayagna (Sumo) Awas Tingni Community v. Nicaragua in 2001.¹⁴⁸ The Court emphasised the communitarian tradition regarding a communal form of collective property of the land and consequential close ties of indigenous people with that land,¹⁴⁹ and noted that the customary law of such people had especially to be taken into account so that 'possession of the land should ¹⁴⁴ See General Assembly resolution 40/131.

¹⁴⁵ See ECOSOC resolution 2000/22. Note that 1993 was designated International Year of the World's Indigenous Peoples, see E/CN.4/1994/AC.4/TN.4/2, while the International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples was declared by the General Assembly on 10 December 1994. See also the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination's General Recommendation 23 on Indigenous Peoples, 1997, A/52/18, annex V.

¹⁴⁶ www.ohchr.org/EN/Issues/IPeoples/Pages/IndigenousPeoplesIndex.aspx.

¹⁴⁷ See the Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples adopted in 1995, OEA/Ser.L/V/II/90; Doc. 9, rev. 1. For further discussions on the Draft Declaration, see e.g. GT/DADIN/doc.1/99 rev.2, 2000; Report of the Rapporteur of the Working Group, GT/DADIN/doc.83/02, 2002 and OEA/Ser.K/XVI, GT/DADIN/doc.301/07, 2007. See also, for example, resolutions AG/RES.1780 (XXI-0/01), 2001 and AG/RES. 2073 (XXXV-0/05), 2007. See further <http://www.oas.org/en/iachr/indigenous/>.

¹⁴⁸ Series C, No. 79. ¹⁴⁹ Ibid., para. 149.

suffice for indigenous communities lacking real title'.¹⁵⁰ In Sawhoyamaya Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, the Court emphasised that the close ties of members of the indigenous communities with their traditional lands and the natural resources associated with their culture had to be secured under article 21 of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights concerning the right to the use and enjoyment of property. The Court, in interpreting this provision, also took account of Convention No. 169 of the ILO, which required inter alia respect for the special importance for the cultural and spiritual values of the communities concerned of their relationship with their lands. The collective nature of property ownership was also noted.¹⁵¹

THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM – IMPLEMENTATION¹⁵²

The United Nations system has successfully generated a wide-ranging series of international instruments dealing with the establishment of standards and norms in the human rights field.¹⁵³ The question of implementation will now be briefly addressed.

Political Bodies

The General Assembly has power under article 13 of the Charter to initiate studies and make recommendations regarding inter alia human rights. Human rights items on its agenda may originate in Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) reports or decisions taken by the Assembly at earlier sessions to consider particular matters, or are proposed for inclusion by the UN organs, the Secretary-General or member states. Most items on human rights go to the Assembly's Third ¹⁵⁰ Ibid., para. 151. Nicaragua was held to be obliged to create 'an effective mechanism for delimitation, demarcation and titling of the property of indigenous communities, in accordance with their customary law, values, customs and mores', ibid., para. 164. See also the cases of the Moiwana Community v. Suriname, Judgment of 15 June 2005, Series C, No. 124 and the Indigenous Community Yakye Axa v. Paraguay, Judgment of 17 June 2005, Series C, No. 125.

¹⁵¹ In addition, the Court found a violation of the right to recognition as a person before the law under article 3 of the Convention as there had been no registration or official documentation for the existence of several members of the indigenous community. The Court ordered the state to adopt all legislative, administrative and other measures to guarantee the members of the community ownership rights over their traditional lands, Judgment of 29 March 2006, Series C, No. 146, paras. 17 ff., 187 ff. and 210 ff. See also Fernández Ortega et al. v. Mexico, Judgment of 15 May 2011, Series C, No 215 and Rio Negro Massacres v. Guatemala, Judgment of 4 September 2012. See also the work of the Commission in this area, www.oas.org/en/iachr/indigenos/decisions/iachr.asp.

¹⁵² See The Future of UN Human Rights Treaty Monitoring (ed. P. Alston and J. Crawford), Cambridge, 2000; Human Rights: International Protection, Monitoring and Enforcement (ed. J. Symonides), Aldershot, 2003; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapters 3–6; Tomuschat, Human Rights, chapters 6–8; United Nations Action in the Field of Human Rights, New York, 1994; The United Nations and Human Rights (ed. P. Alston), Oxford, 1992; Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004; Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration; and UN Law/Fundamental Rights (ed. A. Cassese), Alphen aan den Rijn, 1979. See also Lauterpacht, International Law, chapter 11; De Schutter, International Human Rights Law, chapters 9 and 10; and A. A. Cançado Trindade, 'Co-existence and Co-ordination of Mechanisms of International Protection of Human Rights', 202 HR, 1987, p. 9. See also the United Nations Human Rights Treaty System, Fact Sheet 30/Rev. 1, UN Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights, 2012.

¹⁵³ See also e.g. the Slavery Convention, 1926 and Protocol, 1953; the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery, 1956; the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and of the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others, 1949; the Convention on the Status of Refugees, 1951 and Protocol, 1967; the Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, 1954 and the Convention on the Reduction of Statelessness 1961.

Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee), but others may be referred to other committees such as the Sixth Committee (Legal) or the First Committee (Political and Security) or the Special Political Committee. The Assembly has also established subsidiary organs under Rule 161, several of which deal with human rights issues, such as the Special Committee on Decolonisation, the UN Council for Namibia, the Special Committee against Apartheid, the Special Committee to Investigate Israeli Practices in the Occupied Territories and the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestine People.¹⁵⁴ ECOSOC may, under article 62 of the Charter, make recommendations on human rights, draft conventions for the Assembly and call international conferences on human rights matters. It consists of fifty-four members of the UN elected by the General Assembly and hears annually the reports of a wide range of bodies including the UN High Commissioner for Refugees,¹⁵⁵ the UN Children's Fund, the UN Conference on Trade and Development, the UN Environment Programme and the World Food Council. Of its subsidiary bodies, the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Status of Women have the most direct connection with human rights issues.¹⁵⁶ The Commission on Human Rights¹⁵⁷ was established in 1946 as a subsidiary organ of ECOSOC with extensive terms of reference, including making studies, preparing recommendations and drafting international instruments on human rights.¹⁵⁸ In 1967, having previously taken the view that it had no power to hear complaints about human rights violations, ECOSOC resolution 1235 (XLII) authorised the Commission and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to examine information relevant to gross violations of human rights contained in communications, and to study such situations as revealed a consistent pattern of violations with a view to making recommendations to ECOSOC.¹⁵⁹ This constituted the public debate function of the Commission relating to specific situations. The situations in question referred at first primarily to Southern Africa. The Commission also set up an ad hoc working group of experts on South Africa and then working groups on a variety of topics¹⁶⁰ and appointed special rapporteurs to deal with situations in specific countries.¹⁶¹

¹⁵⁴ See UN Action, chapter 1. Note also the relevant roles of the other organs of the UN, the Security Council, Trusteeship Council, International Court and Secretariat, ibid.

¹⁵⁵ See as to refugees, J. C. Hathaway and M. Foster, The Law of Refugee Status, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2014 and G. S. Goodwin-Gill and J. McAdam, The Refugee in International Law, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2007.

¹⁵⁶ UN Action, pp. 13 ff. See also Assembly resolutions 1991B (XVIII) and 2847 (XXVI).

¹⁵⁷ See e.g. N. Rodley and D. Weissbrodt, 'United Nations Non-Treaty Procedures for Dealing with Human Rights Violations', in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 65; Lauterpacht, International Law, chapter 11; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, chapter 9; and T. Buergenthal and J. V. Torney, International Human Rights and International Education, Washington, DC, 1976, pp. 75 ff. See also UN Action, p. 20, and H. Tolley, 'The Concealed Crack in the Citadel', 6 HRQ, 1984, p. 420. A Commission on the Status of Women was also created: see UN Action, p. 15, and below, p. 244.

¹⁵⁸ Originally consisting of forty-three representatives of member states of the UN selected by ECOSOC on the basis of equitable geographic distribution, ECOSOC resolutions 6 (I), 1946; 9 (II), 1946; 845 (XXXII), 1961; 1147 (XLI), 1966; and 1979/36, 1979, that number was increased to fifty-three by resolution 1990/48 in May 1990.

¹⁵⁹ See e.g. Report of the First Session of the Commission, E/259, para. 22. See also Tolley, 'Concealed Crack', pp. 421 ff., and ECOSOC resolution 728F.

¹⁶⁰ E.g. on Chile: Situations revealing a Consistent Pattern of Gross Violations of Human Rights; Disappearances; the Right to Development and Structural Adjustment Programmes and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

¹⁶¹ Afghanistan, Cuba, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Guatemala, Iran, Sudan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo and Iraq. Special Rapporteurs were also appointed to deal with particular thematic concerns such as summary executions, torture, mercenaries, religious intolerance and the sale of children. In an attempt to provide some co-ordination, the first meeting of special rapporteurs and other mechanisms of the special procedures of the Commission took place in 1994, see E/CN.4/1995/5.

A series of informal working groups were created to prepare drafts of international instruments, such as the Declaration on Religious Intolerance, the Convention against Torture and instruments on minority rights and the rights of the child.¹⁶² The Commission also established a Group of Three pursuant to article IX of the Apartheid Convention to consider states' reports under that Convention. In 1970 a new procedure for dealing with human rights complaints was introduced in ECOSOC resolution 1503 (XLVIII).¹⁶³ By virtue of this resolution as modified in 2000,¹⁶⁴ the Sub-Commission appointed annually a Working Group on Communications to meet to consider communications received and to pass on to the Sub-Commission those that appeared to reveal 'a consistent pattern of gross and reliably attested violations of human rights'.¹⁶⁵ The procedure, which was confidential until the final stage, did not fulfil initial high expectations. The confidentiality requirement and the highly political nature of the Commission itself combined to frustrate hopes that had been raised.¹⁶⁶

Despite good work in the field of standard-setting and in drawing attention to abuses of human rights, albeit on rather less than a universalist basis, the Commission began to attract an increasing level of criticism, mainly concerning political selectivity and the failure to review objectively the situation in particular countries.¹⁶⁷ As a result, the Human Rights Council was created to replace the Commission by General Assembly resolution 60/251 on 3 April 2006.

The Council was established with a higher status in the UN hierarchy as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly with forty-seven members,¹⁶⁸ elected by a majority of members of the Assembly for three years for up to two consecutive terms. The Commission's special procedures function was retained and a new universal periodic review mechanism established by which the human rights record of all countries would be examined. This was intended as a partial response ¹⁶² See e.g. UN Action, pp. 20–3.

¹⁶³ See e.g. P. Alston, 'The Commission on Human Rights', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 126, 145 ff., and M. Bossuyt, 'The Development of Special Procedures of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights', 6 HRLJ, 1985, p. 179.

¹⁶⁴ ECOSOC resolution 2000/3.

¹⁶⁵ See also Sub-Committee resolution 1 (XXIV), 1971. These were examined by the Working Group on Situations of the Sub-Commission which then determined whether or not to refer particular situations to the Commission. Those so transmitted were examined in two separate closed meetings by the Commission, which then decided whether or not to take further action, such as appointing an independent expert or discussing the matter under the resolution 1235 public procedure.

¹⁶⁶ See e.g. T. Van Boven, 'Human Rights Fora at the United Nations', in International Human Rights Law and Practice (ed. J. C. Tuttle), Philadelphia, 1978, p. 83; H. Möller, 'Petitioning the United Nations', 1 Universal Human Rights, 1979, p. 57; N. Rodley, 'Monitoring Human Rights by the UN System and Non-governmental Organisations', in Kommers and Loescher, Human Rights and American Foreign Policy, p. 157; and Tolley, 'Concealed Crack', pp. 429 ff. Note that the Commission chairman began the practice of announcing the names of the countries subject to complaints under resolution 1503, although no further details were disclosed: see e.g. E/CN.4/1984/77, p. 151, naming Albania, Argentina, Benin, Haiti, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan, Paraguay, the Philippines, Turkey and Uruguay.

¹⁶⁷ See e.g. the Amnesty International Report, 'Meeting the Challenge', AI Index, IOR 40/008/2005. See also www.un.org/secureworld/report3.pdf, at para. 283. See also the Secretary-General's Report, 'In Larger Freedom: Towards Development, Security and Human Rights for All', A/59/2005, at para. 182. It was noted that the Commission had been 'undermined by the politicisation of its sessions and the selectivity of its work', A/59/2005/Add.1, para. 2.

¹⁶⁸ Distributed regionally with thirteen seats for the African group; thirteen seats for the Asian group; six seats for the Eastern European group; eight seats for the Latin American and Caribbean group; and seven seats for the Western European and Other group. See e.g. R. Freedman, The United Nations Human Rights Council: A Critique and Early Assessment, London, 2015.

to the criticisms of the Commission's selectivity.¹⁶⁹ The Council adopted resolution 5/1 on 18 June 2007 entitled 'United Nations Human Rights Council: Institution-Building', which ranged over a wide area and established the details of the universal periodic review mechanism. The principles laid down for this mechanism include the universality of human rights, universal coverage and equal treatment of all states and the conduct of the review in an objective, transparent, non-selective, constructive, non-confrontational and non-politicised manner. This resolution also laid down details for the conduct and review of the special procedures, provided for the creation of the Human Rights Council Advisory Committee, composed of eighteen experts serving in their personal capacity, intended to function as a think-tank for the Council and work at its direction, and provided for the establishment of a confidential complaints procedure based upon the mechanism created by ECOSOC resolution 1503 (1970).¹⁷⁰ The spectre of politicisation has not, however, vanished.

Expert Bodies Established by UN Organs

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights¹⁷¹

The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights was adopted in 1966 and entered into force in 1976. Article 2 provides that each state party undertakes to take steps to the maximum of its available resources 'with a view to achieving progressively the full realisation of the rights recognised in the present Covenant'. In other words, an evolving programme is envisaged depending upon the goodwill and resources of states rather than an immediate binding legal obligation with regard to the rights in question. The rights included range from self-determination (article 1), the right to work (articles 6 and 7), the right to social security (article 9), adequate standard of living (article 11) and education (article 13) to the right to take part in cultural life and enjoy the benefits of scientific progress and its applications (article 15).

Under the Covenant itself, states parties were obliged to send periodic reports to ECOSOC.¹⁷² In 1978, a Sessional Working Group was set up, consisting of fifteen members elected by ECOSOC

¹⁶⁹ See e.g. F. J. Hampson, 'An Overview of the Reform of the UN Human Rights Machinery', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 7.

¹⁷⁰ The Council also adopted at its first session in June 2006 the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearances and the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. A Code of Conduct for Special Procedures Mandate-holders was adopted at the fifth session of the Council. See generally on the Council, www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRC/Pages/HRCIndex.aspx. The Advisory Committee replaced the Sub-Commission on the Promotion and Protection of Human Rights, initially entitled the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, established by the Commission in 1947. See resolutions E/259, 1947; E/1371, 1949; and 17 (XXXVII), 1981; and A. Eide, 'The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 211.

¹⁷¹ See e.g. B. Saul and D. Kinley, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Commentary, Cases and Materials, Oxford, 2014; M. Ssenyonjo, Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2016; B. Saul, The International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: Travaux Préparatoires, Oxford, 2016; Craven, Covenant; and Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 6. See also M. Odello and F. Seatzu, The UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights: The Law, Process and Practice, London, 2012 and Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in International Law (ed. E. Riedel, G. Giacca and C. Golay), Oxford, 2014.

¹⁷² See articles 16–22 of the Covenant, and UN Chronicle, July 1982, pp. 68–70. See generally on implementation B. S. Ramcharan, 'Implementing the International Covenants on Human Rights', in Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration, p. 159; P. Alston, 'Out of the Abyss: The Challenge Confronting the New UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 9 HRQ, 1987, p. 332; P. Alston and G. Quinn, 'The Nature and from amongst states parties for three-year renewable terms. The Group met annually and reported to the Council. It was not a success, however, and in 1985 it was decided to establish a new committee of eighteen members, this time composed of independent experts.¹⁷³ Accordingly in 1987 the new Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights commenced operation.¹⁷⁴ But it is to be especially noted that unlike, for example, the Racial Discrimination Committee, the Human Rights Committee and the Torture Committee, the Economic Committee is not autonomous and it is responsible not to the states parties but to a main organ of the United Nations.

The implementation of this Covenant faces particular difficulties in view of the perceived vagueness of many of the principles contained therein, the relative lack of legal texts and judicial decisions, and the ambivalence of many states in dealing with economic, social and cultural rights. In addition, problems of obtaining relevant and precise information have loomed large, not least in the light of the fact that comparatively few non-governmental organisations focus upon this area.¹⁷⁵

The Committee initially met annually in Geneva for three-week sessions, though it now meets twice per year. Its primary task lies in examining states' reports, drawing upon a list of questions prepared by its pre-sessional working group. The problem of overdue reports from states parties applies here as it does with regard to other human rights implementation committees. The Economic Rights Committee adopted a decision at its sixth session, whereby it established a procedure allowing for the consideration of the situation of particular states where those states had not produced reports for a long time, thus creating a rather valuable means of exerting pressure upon recalcitrant states parties.¹⁷⁶ Additional information may also be requested from states parties where this is felt necessary.¹⁷⁷ The Committee also prepares 'General Comments', the second of which on international technical assistance measures was adopted at its fourth session in 1990.¹⁷⁸ The third general comment, adopted in 1991, is of particular interest and underlines that although the Covenant itself appears promotional and aspirational, nevertheless certain obligations of immediate effect are imposed upon states parties. These include the non-discrimination provisions and the undertaking to take steps which should be taken within a reasonably short time after the Covenant has entered into force for the state concerned and which should be 'deliberate, concrete and targeted as clearly as possible towards meeting the obligations recognised in the Covenant'. The Committee also emphasised that international co-operation for development, and thus for the realisation of economic, social and cultural rights, was an obligation for all states.¹⁷⁹ The Committee also holds general discussions on particular

Scope of States Parties' Obligations under the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 9 HRQ, 1987, p. 156; P. Alston, 'The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 473; B. Simma, 'The Implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', in The Implementation of Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ed. F. Matscher), Kehl am Rhein, 1991, p. 75, and S. Leckie, 'The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', in Alston and Crawford, Future, chapter 6.

¹⁷³ See ECOSOC resolution 1985/17.

¹⁷⁴ See P. Alston and B. Simma, 'First Session of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 81 AJIL, 1987, p. 747, and 'Second Session of the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights', 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 603. See generally www.ohchr.org/en/hrbodies/cescr/pages/cescrindex.aspx.

¹⁷⁵ See Alston, 'The Economic Rights Committee', p. 474. ¹⁷⁶ See e.g. E/C.12/1994/20, p. 18. ¹⁷⁷ Ibid., pp. 16–18.

¹⁷⁸ See HRI/GEN/Rev.1, p. 45.

¹⁷⁹ Ibid., p. 48. Further general comments have discussed the right to adequate housing (General Comment 4, 1991); the rights of persons with disabilities (General Comment 5, 1994); the economic, social and cultural rights of older persons (General Comments 6, 1995); equal treatment of economic, social and cultural rights (General Comment 16, rights in the form of a ‘day of general discussion’.¹⁸⁰ In December 2008, the Optional Protocol to the Covenant was adopted by the UN General Assembly, under which the Committee was enabled to hear individual petitions, and was provided with an inter-state complaints competence with regard to states accepting this procedure.¹⁸¹ Although the Committee was not as such established by treaty, it is now regarded as one of the (currently) ten UN human rights treaty bodies.

Expert Bodies Established under Particular Treaties¹⁸²

A number of expert committees have been established under particular treaties. They are not subsidiary organs of the UN, but autonomous, although in practice they are closely connected with it, being serviced, for example, by the UN Secretariat through the UN Centre for Human Rights in Geneva.¹⁸³ These committees are termed ‘UN Treaty Organs’.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination¹⁸⁴

Under Part II of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965, a Committee of eighteen experts was established consisting of persons serving in their personal capacity and elected by the states parties to the Convention.¹⁸⁵ States parties undertook to submit reports every two years regarding measures adopted to give effect to the provisions of the Convention to the Committee, which itself would report annually through the UN Secretary-General to the General Assembly. The Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations based on the examination of the reports and information received from the states 2005); and the right to work and social security (General Comments 18, 2005 and 19, 2006). General Comment 21 (2009) discussed the right of everyone to take part in cultural rights.

¹⁸⁰ At the ninth session, for example, in the autumn of 1993, the Committee discussed the right to health, E/1994/23, p. 56, while at the tenth session in May 1994 the role of social safety-nets as a means of protecting economic, social and cultural rights was discussed: see E/1995/22, p. 70. In 2010, the Committee discussed the right to sexual and reproductive health, E/C.12/2010/SR.49 and 50. See also generally C. Dommen, ‘Building from a Solid Basis: The Fourth Session of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights’, 8 NQHR, 1990, p. 199, and C. Dommen and M. C. Craven, ‘Making Way for Substance: The Fifth Session of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights’, 9 NQHR, 1991, p. 93.

¹⁸¹ A/63/435. The Optional Protocol came into force on 5 May 2013.

¹⁸² See e.g. Alston and Crawford, Future, and S. Lewis-Anthony and M. Scheinin, ‘Treaty-Based Procedures for Making Human Rights Complaints Within the UN System’, in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 43. See also M. O’Flaherty, Human Rights and the UN: Practice Before the Treaty Bodies, 2nd edn, The Hague, 2002.

¹⁸³ This link with the Secretariat has been termed ambiguous, particularly in the light of the difficulties in performing the two functions carried out by the Secretariat (Charter-based political activities and expert activities): see e.g. T. Opsahl, ‘The Human Rights Committee’, in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 367, 388.

¹⁸⁴ See e.g. P. Thornberry, The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, Oxford, 2016; M. Banton, ‘Decision-Taking in the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination’, in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 55; K. J. Partsch, ‘The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination’, in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 339; T. Meron, Human Rights Law-Making in the United Nations, Oxford, 1986, chapter 1; K. Das, ‘The International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination’, in The International Dimension of Human Rights (ed. K. Vasak and P. Alston), Paris, 1982, p. 307; Lerner, UN Convention and ‘Curbing Racial Discrimination – Fifteen Years CERD’, 13 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1983, p. 170; M. R. Burrowes, ‘Implementing the UN Racial Convention – Some Procedural Aspects’, 7 Australian YIL, p. 236; and T. Buergenthal, ‘Implementing the UN Racial Convention’, 12 Texas International Law Journal, 1977, p. 187.

¹⁸⁵ Rules of Procedure have been adopted, see CERD/C/35/Rev. 3 (1986), and are revised from time to time: see, for example, A/48/18, p. 137.

parties, which are reported to the General Assembly together with any comments from states parties.¹⁸⁶ The Committee is also able to operate early warning measures and urgent procedures. Early warning measures are directed at preventing existing problems from escalating into conflicts, while urgent procedures are to respond to problems requiring immediate attention to prevent or limit the scale or number of serious violations of the Convention. Decisions, statements or resolutions may be adopted. Such action has been taken in relation to more than twenty states parties. The Committee has, for example, conducted field visits in connection with the procedure and has drawn the attention of the Secretary-General, the Security Council or other relevant bodies to relevant issues.¹⁸⁷

The Committee has also established a procedure to deal with states whose reports are most overdue. Under this procedure, the Committee proceeds to examine the situation in the state party concerned on the basis of the last report submitted.¹⁸⁸ In the absence of an initial report, the Committee considers all information submitted by the state party to other organs of the United Nations or, in the absence of such material, reports and information prepared by organs of the United Nations. In practice the Committee also considers relevant information from other sources, including from non-governmental organisations, whether it is an initial or a periodic report that is seriously overdue.¹⁸⁹

Under article 11, one state party may bring a complaint against another state party and the Committee will seek to resolve the complaint. Should the matter not be so settled, either party may refer it back to the Committee and by article 12 an ad hoc Conciliation Commission may be established, which will report back to the Committee with any recommendation thought proper for the amicable solution of the dispute.¹⁹⁰ In addition to hearing states' reports and inter-state complaints, the Committee may also hear individual petitions under the article 14 procedure. This, however, is subject to the state complained of having made a declaration recognising the competence of the Committee to receive and consider such communications. If such a declaration has not been notified by a state, therefore, the Committee has no authority to hear a petition against the state.¹⁹¹ Under this procedure, consideration of communications is confidential and the Committee may be assisted by a five-person working group making recommendations to the full Committee. The Committee began hearing individual communications in 1984 and a number of important cases have been completed.¹⁹²

¹⁸⁶ Articles 8 and 9 of the Convention.

¹⁸⁷ A/48/18, paras. 496–506. For example, in 1993, the Committee, concerned at events in the former Yugoslavia, sought additional information on the implementation of the Convention as a matter of urgency: see e.g. CERD/C/248/Add.1 (Federal Republic of Yugoslavia); CERD/C/249/Add.1 (Croatia); and CERD/C/247/Add.1 (Bosnia and Herzegovina). See also CERD/C/65/DEC.1 (Darfur, 2004); CERD/C/66/DAR/Dec.2 (Darfur, 2005); CERD/C/DEC/1 (USA, 2006); and CERD/C/DEC/SUR/5 (Suriname, 2006). Revised Guidelines were adopted in 2007, see A/62/18, Annexes, Chapter III. See also A/69/18, paras. 14 ff.

¹⁸⁸ See e.g. A/48/18, p. 20. At its forty-ninth session, the Committee further decided that states parties whose initial reports were excessively overdue by five years or more would also be scheduled for a review of implementation of the provisions of the Convention. See also A/69/18, paras. 46 ff.

¹⁸⁹ See e.g. A/57/18, p. 99. ¹⁹⁰ Article 13.

¹⁹¹ The provision entered into force on 31 December 1982 upon the tenth declaration.

¹⁹² See e.g. the Report of the Committee for its forty-eighth session, A/48/18, 1994, pp. 105 and 130, and for the sixtieth and sixty-first sessions, A/57/18, p. 128. Note, for example, the case of Durmic v. Serbia and Montenegro concerning discrimination against Roma in Serbia, CERD/C/68/D/29/2003, 2006.

The Committee regularly meets twice a year and has interpreted articles of the Convention, discussed reports submitted to it, adopted decisions¹⁹³ and general recommendations,¹⁹⁴ obtained further information from states parties and co-operated closely with the International Labour Organization and UNESCO. Many states have enacted legislation as a consequence of the work of the Committee and its record of impartiality is very good.¹⁹⁵ The Committee also receives copies of petitions and reports sent to UN bodies dealing with trust and non-self-governing territories in the general area of Convention matters and may make comments upon them.¹⁹⁶ The general article 9 reporting system appears to work well, with large numbers of reports submitted and examined, but some states have proved tardy in fulfilling their obligations.¹⁹⁷ The Committee has published guidelines for states parties as to the structure of their reports.¹⁹⁸

The Committee, in order to speed up consideration of states' reports, has instituted the practice of appointing country rapporteurs, whose function it is to prepare analyses of reports of states parties.¹⁹⁹ The Committee has also called for additional technical assistance to be provided by the UN to help in the reporting process, while it has expressed serious concern that financial difficulties are beginning to affect its functioning.²⁰⁰

The Human Rights Committee²⁰¹

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights was adopted in 1966 and entered into force in 1976.²⁰² By article 2, all states parties undertake to respect and to ensure to all individuals within their territory and subject to their jurisdiction the rights recognised in the Covenant. These rights are clearly intended as binding obligations. They include the right of peoples to self-determination (article 1), the right to life (article 6), prohibitions on torture and slavery (articles 7 and 8), the right to liberty and security of the person (article 9), due ¹⁹³ For example, the decision adopted on 19 March 1993 requesting the governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) and Croatia to submit further information concerning implementation of the Convention: see A/48/18, p. 112.

¹⁹⁴ See, for example, General Recommendation XII (42) encouraging successor states to declare that 'they continue to be bound' by the obligations of the Convention if predecessor states were parties to it; General Recommendation XIV (42) concerning non-discrimination, A/48/18, pp. 113 ff. and General Recommendation XXIX concerning discrimination based upon descent, A/57/18, p. 111.

¹⁹⁵ See e.g. Lerner, UN Convention. ¹⁹⁶ Article 15. See e.g. A/48/18, p. 107.

¹⁹⁷ See e.g. A/38/18, pp. 14–24. Note, for example, that by late 1983 fifteen reminders had been sent to Swaziland requesting it to submit its fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh overdue periodic reports, ibid., p. 21. See also A/44/18, pp. 10–16 and A/69/18, paras. 46 ff.

¹⁹⁸ See CERD/C/70/Rev.1, 6 December 1983. ¹⁹⁹ See e.g. A/44/18, 1990, p. 7 and A/48/18, 1994, p. 149.

²⁰⁰ A/44/18, p. 91.

²⁰¹ See e.g. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 5; Joseph and Castan, International Covenant; Nowak, UN Covenant; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 844 ff.; McGoldrick, Human Rights Committee; Opsahl, 'Human Rights Committee', p. 367; D. Fischer, 'Reporting under the Convention on Civil and Political Rights: The First Five Years of the Human Rights Committee', 76 AJIL, 1982, p. 142; Ramcharan, 'Implementing the International Covenants'; E. Schwelb, 'The International Measures of Implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and of the Optional Protocol', 12 Texas International Law Review, 1977, p. 141; M. Nowak, 'The Effectiveness of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights – Stock-taking after the First Eleven Sessions of the UN Human Rights Committee', 2 HRLJ, 1981, p. 168 and 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 199. See also M. Bossuyt, Guide to the Travaux Préparatoires of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, The Hague, 1987; and P. R. Ghandhi, 'The Human Rights Committee and the Right of Individual Communication', 57 BYIL, 1986, p. 201. See also generally www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CCPR/Pages/CCPRIndex.aspx.

²⁰² See Rehman, International Human Rights Law, p. 83.

process (article 14), freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 18), freedom of association (article 22), and the rights of persons belonging to minorities to enjoy their own culture (article 27).

A Human Rights Committee was established under Part IV of the Covenant. It consists of eighteen independent and expert members, elected by the states parties to the Covenant for four-year terms, with consideration given to the need for equitable geographical distribution and representation of the different forms of civilisation and of the principal legal systems.²⁰³ The Committee meets three times a year (in Geneva and New York) and operates by way of consensus.²⁰⁴ The Covenant is primarily implemented by means of a reporting system, whereby states parties provide information on the measures adopted to give effect to the rights recognised in the Covenant. Initial reports are made within one year of the entry into force of the Covenant for the state in question and general guidelines have been issued.²⁰⁵ The Committee has decided that subsequent reports would be required every five years,²⁰⁶ and the first of the second periodic reports became due in 1983. The reports are discussed by the Committee with representatives of the state concerned (following upon the precedent established by the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination).²⁰⁷ Information may be received from many sources including from named non-governmental organisations.²⁰⁸ The Committee may also seek additional information from the state concerned. For example, in October 1992, the Committee adopted a decision requesting the governments of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina to submit a short report concerning measures to prevent inter alia ethnic cleansing and arbitrary killings.²⁰⁹ Such reports were forthcoming and were discussed with the state representatives concerned and comments adopted. The Committee thereafter adopted an amendment to its rules of procedure permitting it to call for reports at any time deemed appropriate.²¹⁰ The Committee has also noted that the peoples within a territory of a former state party to the Covenant remain entitled to the guarantees of the Covenant.²¹¹ Where states parties have failed to report over several reporting cycles, or request ²⁰³ See articles 28–32 of the Covenant.

²⁰⁴ See e.g. Nowak, 'Effectiveness', p. 169, 1981 3 HRLJ, 1982, p. 209 and 1984, p. 202. See also A/36/40, annex VII, Introduction; CCPR/C/21/Rev.1 and A/44/40, p. 173.

²⁰⁵ See article 40 and CCPR/C/5. Supplementary reports may be requested: see Rule 70(2) of the provisional rules of procedure, CCPR/C/3/Rev.1. See now the Rules of Procedure 2012, CCPR/C/3/Rev.10.

²⁰⁶ See CCPR/C/18; CCPR/C/19 and CCPR/C/19/Rev.1. See also CCPR/C/20 regarding guidelines. Several states have been lax about producing reports, e.g. Zaire and the Dominican Republic, while the initial report of Guinea was so short as to be held by the Committee as not providing sufficient information: see Nowak, 'Effectiveness', 1984, p. 200.

²⁰⁷ See Buergethal, 'Implementing', pp. 199–201, and Fischer, 'Reporting', p. 145. Note that in 2009, the Committee adopted a new reporting procedure whereby it would send states parties a list of issues prior to reporting and consider their written replies in lieu of a periodic report. The state party's answer would constitute the report for the purposes of article 40 of the Covenant: see CCPR/C/99/4, 2010 and for a recent example, CCPR/C/ARG/QPR/5, 2014, concerning Argentina.

²⁰⁸ Such documents may now be officially distributed, rather than being informally made available to Committee members individually: see McGoldrick, Human Rights Committee, p. liii.

²⁰⁹ CCPR/C/SR/1178/Add.1.

²¹⁰ New Rule 66(2), see CCPR/C/SR/1205/Add.1. In the case of an exceptional situation when the Committee is not in session, a request may be made through the Chairperson, acting in consultation with the members of the Committee: ibid. See also S. Joseph, 'New Procedures Concerning the Human Rights Committee's Examination of State Reports', 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 5.

²¹¹ See, with regard to former Yugoslavia, CCPR/C/SR.1178/Add.1, pp. 2–3 and CCPR/C/79/Add.14–16. See, with regard to the successor states of the USSR, CCPR/C/79/Add.38 (Azerbaijan). See also I. Boerefijn, 'Towards a Strong System of Supervision', 17 HRQ, 1995, p. 766.

a postponement of their scheduled appearance before the Committee at short notice, the Committee may continue to examine the situation in the particular state on the basis of material available to it.²¹²

Under article 40(4), the Committee is empowered to make such 'general comments as it may deem appropriate'. After some discussion, a consensus was adopted in 1980, which permitted such comments provided that they promoted co-operation between states in the implementation of the Covenant, summarised the experience of the Committee in examining states' reports and drew the attention of states parties to matters relating to the improvement of the reporting procedure and the implementation of the Covenant. The aim of the Committee was to engage in a constructive dialogue with each reporting state, and the comments would be non-country-specific.²¹³ However, in 1992, the Committee decided that at the end of the consideration of each state party's report, specific comments would be adopted referring to the country in question and such comments would express both the satisfaction and the concerns of the Committee as appropriate.²¹⁴ These specific comments are in a common format and refer to 'positive aspects' of the report and 'principal subjects for concern', as well as 'suggestions and recommendations'.²¹⁵ The Committee has also adopted the practice, where a due report has not been forthcoming, of considering the measures taken by the state party in question to give effect to rights in the Covenant in the absence of a report but in the presence of representatives of the state and of adopting provisional concluding observations.²¹⁶

The Committee has also adopted a variety of General Comments.²¹⁷ These comments are generally non-controversial.²¹⁸ For example in April 1989, the Committee adopted a General Comment on the rights of the child, as the process of adopting the Convention on the Rights of the Child neared its climax. It noted the importance of economic, social and cultural measures, such as the need to reduce infant mortality and prevent exploitation. Freedom of expression was referred to, as was the requirement that children be protected against discrimination on grounds such as race, sex, religion, national or social origin, property or birth. Responsibility for guaranteeing the necessary protection lies, it was stressed, with the family, society and the ²¹² See e.g. A/56/40, vol. I, p. 25. ²¹³ CCPR/C/18. ²¹⁴ See A/47/40, p. 4.

²¹⁵ See, for example, the comments concerning Colombia in September 1992, CCPR/C/79/Add.2; Guinea in April 1993, CCPR/C/79/Add.20; Norway in November 1993, CCPR/C/79/Add.27; Morocco in November 1994, CCPR/C/79/Add.44; the Russian Federation in July 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.54; Estonia in November 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.59; and the United Kingdom in July 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.55 and, relating to Hong Kong, in November 1995, CCPR/C/79/Add.57. Note that in September 1995, Mexico responded to the Committee's Concluding Comments upon its report by issuing Observations, CCPR/C/108.

²¹⁶ See Rule 70 of its Rules of Procedure 2012. The procedures are described, for example, in the 2005–6 Report of the Committee, A/61/40, paras. 49 ff. (2006).

²¹⁷ See e.g. T. Opsahl, 'The General Comments of the Human Rights Committee', in Festschrift für Karl Josef Partsch zum 75. Berlin, 1989, p. 273.

²¹⁸ Note, however, that in a comment on article 6 (the right to life), the Committee emphasised its view that 'the designing, testing, manufacture, possession and development of nuclear weapons are among the greatest threats to the right to life', and that the 'production, testing, possession and deployment and use of nuclear weapons should be prohibited and recognised as crimes against humanity', CCPR/C/21/Add.4, 14 November 1984. The International Court of Justice gave an Advisory Opinion on 8 July 1996 at the request of the General Assembly of the UN concerning the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, in which it was noted that the right not to be arbitrarily deprived of one's life applied also in hostilities. Whether a particular loss of life was arbitrary within the terms of article 6 would depend on the situation and would be decided by reference to the law applicable in armed conflict and not deduced from the terms of the Covenant itself: ICJ Reports, 1996, para. 25; 110 ILR, pp. 163, 190. Note that the Committee is currently considering a new comment on the right to life, www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CCPR/Pages/GC36-Article6Righttolife.aspx.

state, although it is primarily incumbent upon the family. Special attention needed to be paid to the right of every child to acquire a nationality.²¹⁹

In November 1989, an important General Comment was adopted on non-discrimination. Discrimination was to be understood to imply for the purposes of the Covenant:

any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons, on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms.²²⁰

Identical treatment in every instance was not, however, demanded. The death sentence could not, under article 6(5) of the Covenant, be imposed on persons under the age of eighteen or upon pregnant women. It was also noted that the principle of equality sometimes requires states parties to take affirmative action in order to diminish or eliminate conditions which cause or help to perpetuate discrimination prohibited by the Covenant. In addition, it was pointed out that not every differentiation constituted discrimination, if the criteria for such differentiation were reasonable and objective and if the aim was to achieve a purpose which was legitimate under the Covenant.²²¹

Important General Comments on Minorities²²² and Reservations²²³ were adopted in 1994. In 1997, the Committee noted in General Comment 26 that the rights in the Covenant belonged to the people living in the territory of the state party concerned and that international law did not permit a state which had ratified or acceded or succeeded to the Covenant to denounce it or withdraw from it,²²⁴ while in General Comment 28 the Committee pointed out that the rights which persons belonging to minorities enjoyed under article 27 of the Covenant in respect of their language, culture and religion did not authorise any state, group or person to violate the right to the equal enjoyment by women of any Covenant rights, including the right to equal protection of the law.²²⁵

Under article 41 of the Covenant, states parties may recognise the competence of the Committee to hear inter-state complaints. Both the complainant and the object state must have made such declarations. The Committee will seek to resolve the issue and, if it is not successful, it may under article 42 appoint, with the consent of the parties, an ad hoc Conciliation Commission.²²⁶

The powers of the Human Rights Committee were extended by Optional Protocol I to the Civil and Political Rights Covenant with regard to ratifying states to include the competence to receive and consider individual communications alleging violations of the Covenant by a state party to ²¹⁹ A/44/40, pp. 173–5. ²²⁰ CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.1, p. 3. ²²¹ Ibid., p. 4. See also above, p. 221.

²²² HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1995. See further above, p. 226. ²²³ CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.6. See further below, p. 693.

²²⁴ A/53/40, annex VII.

²²⁵ CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.10, 2000. General Comment 29 adopted in 2001 dealt with the question of non-derogable provisions, see CCPR/C/21/Rev.1/Add.11. Note also General Comments 32 concerning the right to equality before courts and tribunals and to a fair trial, CCPR/C/GC/32, 2007; 34 concerning freedom of opinion and expression, CCPR/C/GC/34, 2011; and 35 concerning the liberty and security of person, CCPR/C/GC/35, 2014.

²²⁶ The inter-state procedure has not been used to date.

the Protocol.²²⁷ The individual must have exhausted all available domestic remedies (unless unreasonably prolonged) and the same matter must not be in the process of examination under another international procedure.²²⁸ The procedure under the Optional Protocol is divided into several stages. The gathering of basic information is done by the Secretary-General and laid before the Working Group on Communications of the Committee, which recommends whether, for example, further information is required from the applicant or the relevant state party and whether the communication should be declared inadmissible. The procedure before the Committee itself is divided into an admissibility and a merits stage. Interim decisions may be made by the Committee and ultimately a ‘final view’ communicated to the parties.²²⁹

An increasing workload, however, began to cause difficulties as the number of parties to the Optional Protocol increased.²³⁰ In order to deal with the growth in applications, the Committee decided at its thirty-fifth session to appoint a Special Rapporteur to process new communications as they were received (i.e. between sessions of the Committee), and this included requesting the state or individual concerned to provide additional written information or observations relevant to the question of the admissibility of the communication.²³¹ The Committee has also authorised its five-member Working Group on Communications to adopt a decision declaring a communication admissible, providing there is unanimity.²³² The Committee may also adopt interim measures of protection under Rule 92 of its Rules of Procedure 2005. This has been used primarily in connection with cases submitted by or on behalf of persons sentenced to death and awaiting execution.²³³ Such a request was made, for example, to Trinidad and Tobago in the Ashby case pending examination of the communication, but to no avail. After the individual was executed, the Committee adopted a decision expressing its indignation at the failure of the state party to comply with the request for interim measures and deciding to continue consideration of the case.²³⁴ Where the state concerned has disregarded the Committee’s decisions under Rule 92, the Committee has found that the state party has violated its obligations under the Optional Protocol.²³⁵

The Committee, however, is not a court with the power of binding decision on the merits of cases. Indeed, in instances of non-compliance with its final views, the Optional Protocol does not ²²⁷ Signed in 1966 and in force as from 23 March 1976. See e.g. H. Steiner, ‘Individual Claims in a World of Massive Violations: What Role for the Human Rights Committee?’, in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 15; P. R. Ghandi, The Human Rights Committee and the Right of Individual Communication: Law and Practice, Aldershot, 1998; A. de Zayas, H. Möller and T. Opsahl, ‘Application of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights under the Optional Protocol by the Human Rights Committee’, 28 German YL, 1985, p. 9; and Selected Decisions of the Human Rights Committee under the Optional Protocol, New York, vol. I, 1985 and vol. II, 1990. Two states (Jamaica and Trinidad and Tobago) have denounced the Protocol.

²²⁸ Article 5, Optional Protocol.

²²⁹ See Nowak, ‘Effectiveness’, 1980, pp. 153 ff., and 1981 Report of Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, pp. 85–91.

²³⁰ By mid-2006, some 1,490 communications had been registered. Of these, 547 had been the subject of a final view (of which 429 concluded that a violation had occurred), 449 were declared inadmissible and 218 were discontinued or withdrawn, leaving 276 yet to be concluded: Report of the Committee for 2005–6, A/61/40, para. 89 (2006). Note the Special Rapporteur may also deal with requests for interim measures, see CCPR/C/110/3, 2014.

²³¹ A/44/40, pp. 139–40. See also Rule 95(3) of the Rules of Procedure, 2012.

²³² Rules 95(1) and 97 of the Rules of Procedure, 2012.

²³³ See, in particular, Canepa v. Canada, A/52/40, vol. II, annex VI, sect. K. See also Ruzmetov v. Uzbekistan, A/61/40, vol. II, p. 31 (2006) and Boucherf v. Algeria, ibid., p. 312.

²³⁴ A/49/40, pp. 70–1. ²³⁵ See Piandiong et al. v. The Philippines, A/54/40, para. 420(b).

provide for an enforcement mechanism, nor indeed for sanctions, although follow-up techniques are being developed in order to address such problems.²³⁶

A variety of interesting decisions have so far been rendered. The first group of cases concerned complaints against Uruguay, in which the Committee found violations by that state of rights recognised in the Covenant.²³⁷ In the Lovelace case,²³⁸ the Committee found Canada in breach of article 27 of the Covenant protecting the rights of minorities since its law provided that an Indian woman, whose marriage to a non-Indian had broken down, was not permitted to return to her home on an Indian reservation. In the Mauritian Women case²³⁹ a breach of Covenant rights was upheld where the foreign husbands of Mauritian women were liable to deportation whereas the foreign wives of Mauritian men would not have been.

The Committee has also held that the Covenant's obligations cover the decisions of diplomatic authorities of a state party regarding citizens living abroad.²⁴⁰ In the Robinson case,²⁴¹ the Committee considered whether a state was under an obligation itself to make provision for effective representation by counsel in a case concerning a capital offence, in circumstances where the counsel appointed by the author of the communication declines to appear. The Committee emphasised that it was axiomatic that legal assistance be available in capital cases and decided that the absence of counsel constituted unfair trial.

The Committee has dealt with the death penalty issue in several cases²⁴² and has noted, for example, that such a sentence may only be imposed in accordance with due process rights.²⁴³ The Committee has also taken the view that where the extradition of a person facing the death penalty may expose the person to violation of due process rights in the receiving state, the extraditing state may be in violation of the Covenant.²⁴⁴ The Committee has also noted that execution by gas asphyxiation would violate the prohibition in article 7 of cruel and inhuman treatment.²⁴⁵ The issue faced in the Vuolanne case²⁴⁶ was whether the procedural safeguards in article 9(4) of the Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, whereby a person deprived of his liberty is to be allowed recourse to the courts, applied to military disciplinary detention. The Committee was very clear that it did. One issue of growing importance concerns the question of the extraterritorial application of human rights treaties, that is whether a state party to a particular human rights treaty is obliged to apply it outside its own territory where it is acting abroad either by way of its state agents or organs or because it is in control of an area beyond its border.

²³⁶ Note that in October 1990, the Committee appointed a Special Rapporteur to follow up cases, CCPR/C/SR.1002, p. 8. See Rule 101 of the Rules of Procedure 2012. In 1994, the Committee decided that every form of publicity would be given to follow-up activities, including separate sections in annual reports, the issuing of annual press communiqués and the institution of such practices in a new rule of procedure (Rule 99) emphasising that follow-up activities were not confidential: A/49/40, pp. 84–6. See also A/56/40, vol. I, p. 131.

²³⁷ These cases are reported in 1 HRLJ, 1980, pp. 209 ff. See, for other cases, 2 HRLJ, 1981, pp. 130 ff.; ibid., pp. 340 ff.; 3 HRLJ, 1982, p. 188; 4 HRLJ, 1983, pp. 185 ff.; and 5 HRLJ, 1984, pp. 191 ff. See also Annual Reports of the Human Rights Committee, 1981 to date.

²³⁸ 1981 Report of the Human Rights Committee, A/36/40, p. 166. ²³⁹ ibid., p. 134.

²⁴⁰ See e.g. the Waksman case, 1 HRLJ, 1980, p. 220, and the Lichtensztejn case, 5 HRLJ, 1984, p. 207.

²⁴¹ A/44/40, p. 241 (1989).

²⁴² See e.g. Thompson v. St Vincent and the Grenadines, A/56/40, vol. II, annex X, sect. H, para. 8.2.

²⁴³ See e.g. the Berry, Hamilton, Grant, Currie and Champagne cases against Jamaica, A/49/40, vol. II, pp. 20, 37, 50, 73 and 136.

²⁴⁴ See the Ng case, concerning extradition from Canada to the US. The Committee found that there was no evidence of such a risk, A/49/40, vol. II, p. 189.

²⁴⁵ Ibid. ²⁴⁶ Ibid., p. 249.

The Committee has consistently taken the view that the Covenant does apply in such circumstances, whether it be with regard to state agents acting abroad²⁴⁷ or with regard to the obligations of Israel within the occupied territories.²⁴⁸

It is already apparent that the Committee has proved a success and is performing a very important role in the field of human rights protection.²⁴⁹

The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women

The Commission on the Status of Women was established in 1946 as one of the functional commissions of ECOSOC and has played a role both in standard-setting and in the elaboration of further relevant instruments.²⁵⁰ The Committee on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women was established under article 22 of the 1979 Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.²⁵¹ This Convention is implemented by means of states' reports. It is composed of twenty-three experts serving in individual capacities for four-year terms. It held its first regular session in October 1982 and it reports annually to the UN General Assembly through ECOSOC.²⁵² The Committee has provided guidelines to states parties on reporting, whereby initial reports are intended to be detailed and comprehensive with subsequent reports being of an updating nature.²⁵³ Since 1990, subsequent reports are examined first by a pre-sessional working group. Following discussion of a report, the Committee provides concluding comments. The Committee, in addition to hearing states' reports, may make suggestions and general recommendations, ²⁴⁷ See e.g. López Burgos v. Uruguay, case no. 52/79, 68 ILR, p. 29, or Lilian Celiberti de Casariego v. Uruguay, case no. 56/79, 68 ILR, p. 41, concerning the activities of Uruguayan agents in Brazil and Argentina respectively.

²⁴⁸ See e.g. CCPR/C/79/Add.93, para. 10 and CCPR/CO/78/1SR, para. 11 (concluding observations on Israel's reports). This approach was affirmed by the International Court of Justice in the Construction of a Wall case, ICJ Reports, 2004, pp. 136, 178–9; 129, ILR, pp. 37, 97–8.

²⁴⁹ The second optional protocol aimed at the abolition of the death penalty was adopted in 1990, while the desirability of a third optional protocol to the Covenant, concerning the right to a fair trial and a remedy, was considered by the Commission on Human Rights: see E/CN.4/Sub.2.1994/24, Sub-Commission resolution 1994/35 and Commission resolution 1994/107.

²⁵⁰ See ECOSOC resolutions 1/5 (1946), 2/11 (1946) and 48 (IV) (1947). See also L. Reanda, 'The Commission on the Status of Women', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 265. The mandate of the Commission was revised by ECOSOC resolutions 1987/22 and 1996/6. There is also an individual petition procedure by which complaints are considered by a Working Group on Communications which then reports to the Commission. The Commission in turn reports to ECOSOC.

²⁵¹ This came into force in 1981. See Women's Human Rights: CEDAW in International, Regional and National Law (ed. A. Hellum and H. S. Aasen), Cambridge, 2015; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 15; R. Jacobson, 'The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 444; A. Byrnes, 'The "Other" Human Rights Body: The Work of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women', 14 Yale Journal of International Law, 1989, p. 1; R. Cook, 'Women's International Human Rights Law', 15 HRQ, 1993, p. 230; Human Rights of Women (ed. R. Cook), Philadelphia, 1994; M. Freeman and A. Fraser, 'Women's Human Rights', in Herlin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 103; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, pp. 175 and 541; J. Morsink, 'Women's Rights in the Universal Declaration', 13 HRQ, 1991, p. 229; H. Charlesworth and C. Chinkin, The Boundaries of International Law: A Feminist Analysis, Manchester, 2000; and M. Bustelo, 'The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women at the Crossroads', in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 79. See also www.ohchr.org/en/hrbodies/cedaw/pages/cedawindex.aspx.

²⁵² See articles 17–21 of the Convention and the first Report of the Committee, A/38/45.

²⁵³ See CEDAW/C/7Rev.3. In 2014, the Committee introduced on a pilot basis a simplified reporting procedure for the submission of overdue periodic reports provided using an updated common core document, www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CEDAW/Pages/ReportingProcedures.aspx and HRI/MC/2006/3 and Corr. 1.

which are included in the report.²⁵⁴ General Recommendation No. 5 called upon states parties to make more use of ‘temporary special measures such as positive action, preferential treatment or quota systems to advance women’s integration into education, the economy, politics and employment’, while General Recommendation No. 8 provided that states parties should take further measures to ensure to women, on equal terms with men and without discrimination, the opportunity to represent their government at the international level.²⁵⁵ General Recommendation No. 12 called upon states parties to include in their reports information on measures taken to deal with violence against women, while General Recommendation No. 14 called for measures to be taken to eradicate the practice of female circumcision. General Recommendation No. 19 (1992) dealt at some length with the problem of violence against women in general and specific terms, and General Recommendation No. 21 is concerned with equality in marriage and family relations.²⁵⁶ In 1999, the Committee adopted a General Recommendation No. 24 on women and health. General Recommendation No. 25 was adopted in 2004 and concerned temporary special measures.²⁵⁷

As from 1997, the Committee meets for two sessions a year.²⁵⁸ An Optional Protocol adopted in 1999 and in force as from December 2000 allows for the right of individual petition provided a number of conditions are met, including the requirement for the exhaustion of domestic remedies. In addition, the Protocol creates an inquiry procedure enabling the Committee to initiate inquiries into situations of grave or systematic violations of women’s rights where it has received reliable information of grave or systematic violations by a state party of rights established in the Convention.²⁵⁹ In recent years, the importance of women’s rights has received greater recognition. The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted in 1993 emphasised that the human rights of women should be brought into the mainstream of UN system-wide activity and that women’s rights should be regularly and systematically addressed throughout the UN bodies and mechanisms.²⁶⁰ In addition, the General Assembly adopted a Declaration on ²⁵⁴ Article 21. Since 1997 the process of adopting a general recommendation is preceded by an open dialogue between the Committee, non-governmental organisations and others regarding the topic of the general recommendation and a discussion of a draft prepared by a Committee member.

²⁵⁵ A/43/38 (1988). ²⁵⁶ HRI/GEN/1/Rev.1, 1994, pp. 72 ff.

²⁵⁷ HRI/GEN/1/Rev.7, 2004, p. 282. General Recommendation 28 concerned the core obligations under the Convention, CEDAW/C/GC/28, 2010; General Recommendation 29 dealt with the economic consequences of marriage, family relations and dissolution, CEDAW/C/GC/29, 2013; General Recommendation 32 concerns gender-related dimensions of refugee status, asylum, nationality and statelessness of women, CEDAW/C/GC/32, 2014; and General Recommendation 33 dealt with women’s access to justice, CEDAW/C/GC/33, 2015.

²⁵⁸ Although the Committee met exceptionally for three sessions during 2002 to deal with backlog reports. However, see General Assembly resolution 60/230 concerning the extension of meeting time in 2005 and 2006.

²⁵⁹ Article 8 of the Optional Protocol. See, for example, for an earlier view, R. Cook, ‘The Elimination of Sexual Apartheid: Prospects for the Fourth World Conference on Women’, ASIL Issue Papers on World Conferences, Washington, 1995, pp. 48 ff.

²⁶⁰ See Part II, Section 3, 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1678. See also the Beijing Conference 1995; Cook, ‘Elimination of Sexual Apartheid’; the Beijing plus 5 process, see General Assembly resolution 55/71. In 2000, the General Assembly adopted resolution S-23/3 containing a Political Declaration and a statement on further actions and initiatives to implement the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action. Note that at the fifth meeting of Chairpersons of Human Rights Treaty Bodies in 1994 it was agreed that the enjoyment of the human rights of women by each treaty body within the competence of its mandate should be closely monitored. Each of the treaty bodies took steps to examine its guidelines with this in mind, HRI/MC/1995/2. See also the Report of the Expert Group Meeting on the Development of Guidelines for the Integration of Gender Perspectives into Human Rights Activities and Programmes, E/CN.4/1996/105, 1995. This called inter alia for the use of gender-inclusive language in human rights instruments and standards, the identification, collection and use of gender-disaggregated data, gender-sensitive interpretation of human rights the Elimination of Violence against Women in February 1994,²⁶¹ and a Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and Consequences was appointed in 1994.²⁶² The Committee on the Rights of the Child has also discussed the issue of the 'girl-child' and the question of child prostitution.²⁶³

The Committee against Torture²⁶⁴

The prohibition of torture is contained in a wide variety of human rights²⁶⁵ and humanitarian law treaties,²⁶⁶ and has become part of customary international law. Indeed it is now established as a norm of jus cogens.²⁶⁷ Issues concerning torture have come before a number of human rights organs, such as the Human Rights Committee,²⁶⁸ the European Court of Human Rights²⁶⁹ and the International Criminal Tribunal on the Former Yugoslavia.²⁷⁰

The Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was signed on 10 December 1984 and entered into force in 1987. It built particularly upon the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons from being subjected to Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment adopted by the General Assembly in 1975.²⁷¹ Other relevant instruments preceding the Convention were the Standard Minimum mechanisms and education and the promotion of a system-wide co-ordination and collaboration on the human rights of women within the UN.

²⁶¹ Resolution 48/104, see 33 ILM, 1994, p. 1049. Note also the adoption of the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women in June 1994, ibid., p. 1534; and the March 2002 Joint Declaration by the Special Rapporteur on women's rights of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, the Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, its Causes and its Consequences of the UN Commission on Human Rights, and the Special Rapporteur on the Rights of Women in Africa of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights which called for the elimination of violence and discrimination against women: see www.cidh.org/declaration.women.htm.

²⁶² See E/CN.4/2003/75. ²⁶³ See further below, p. 249.

²⁶⁴ See e.g. M. Nowak and E. McArthur, The UN Convention Against Torture: A Commentary, Oxford, 2008; A. Byrnes, 'The Committee Against Torture', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 509; R. Bank, 'Country-Oriented Procedures under the Convention against Torture: Towards a New Dynamism', in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 145; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 22; N. Rodley and M. Pollard, The Treatment of Prisoners under International Law, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2009; A. Boulesbaa, The UN Convention on Torture and Prospects for Enforcement, The Hague, 1999; M. Evans, 'Getting to Grips with Torture', 51 ICLQ, 2002, p. 365; J. Burgers and H. Danelius, The United Nations Convention against Torture, Boston, 1988; Meron, Human Rights in International Law, pp. 126–30, 165–6, 511–15; Z. Haquani, 'La Convention des Nations Unies Contre la Torture', 90 RGDIP, 1986, p. 127; N. Lerner, 'The UN Convention on Torture', 16 Israel Yearbook on Human Rights, 1986, p. 126; and R. St J. Macdonald, 'International Prohibitions against Torture and other Forms of Similar Treatment or Punishment', in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1987, p. 385. See also generally www.ohchr.org/en/hrbodies/cat/pages/catindex.aspx.

²⁶⁵ See e.g. article 5 of the Universal Declaration; article 7 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant; article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights; article 5 of the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights; article 5 of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights; the UN Convention against Torture, 1984; the European Convention on the Prevention of Torture, 1987; and the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture, 1985.

²⁶⁶ See e.g. the four Geneva Red Cross Conventions, 1949 and the two Additional Protocols of 1977.

²⁶⁷ See Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ Reports, 2012, para. 99. See also Ex parte Pinochet (No. 3) [2000] 1 AC 147, 198; 119 ILR, p. 135; the Furundžija case, 121 ILR, pp. 213, 260–2; and Al-Adsani v. UK, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 61; 123 ILR, pp. 24, 41–2.

²⁶⁸ See e.g. Vuolanne v. Finland, 265/87, 96 ILR, p. 649, and generally Joseph and Castan, International Covenant, chapter 9.

²⁶⁹ See e.g. Selmouni v. France, Judgment of 28 July 1999.

²⁷⁰ See e.g. the Delalić case, IT-96-21, Judgment of 16 November 1998.

²⁷¹ General Assembly resolution 3452 (XXX).

Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners, 1955, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officers, 1979 (article 5) and the Principles of Medical Ethics, 1982 (Principles 1 and 2).²⁷²

Torture is defined in article 1 of the Convention against Torture to mean:

[a]ny act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or the acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.

The states parties to the Convention are under duties inter alia to take measures to prevent such activities in territories under their jurisdiction (article 2), not to return a person to a country where he may be subjected to torture (article 3), to make torture a criminal offence and establish jurisdiction over it (articles 4 and 5),²⁷³ to prosecute or extradite persons charged with torture (article 7) and to provide a remedy for persons tortured (article 14).

The Committee against Torture was established under Part II of the Convention against Torture, 1984 and commenced work in 1987. It consists of ten independent experts. In an interesting comment on the proliferation of international human rights committees and the dangers of inconsistencies developing, article 17(2) provides that, in nominating experts, states parties should 'bear in mind the usefulness of nominating persons who are also members of the Human Rights Committee'.

The Committee receives states' reports (article 19), has an inter-state complaint competence (article 21) and may hear individual communications (article 22). In both the latter cases, it is necessary that the state or states concerned should have made a declaration accepting the competence of the Committee.²⁷⁴ Article 20 of the Convention provides that if the Committee receives 'reliable evidence' that torture is being systematically practised in the territory of a state party, it may invite the state in question to co-operate in examining the evidence. The Committee may designate one or more of its members to make a confidential inquiry. In doing so, it shall seek the co-operation of the state concerned and, with the latter's agreement, such an inquiry may include a visit to its territory. The Committee will transmit the findings of the inquiry to the state, together with appropriate comments or suggestions. The proceedings up to this point are to be confidential, but the Committee may, after consulting the state, decide to include a summary account of the results in its annual report. This additional, if cautiously phrased, power may provide the Committee with a significant role.²⁷⁵ It should be noted that states parties have the ability to 'opt out' of this procedure if they so wish at the time of signature or ratification, or accession.²⁷⁶

²⁷² Note also the Principles on the Protection of Persons under Detention or Imprisonment adopted by the General Assembly in 1989. See generally Human Rights: A Compilation of International Instruments, United Nations, New York, vol. I (First Part), 1993, Section H.

²⁷³ See, as far as the UK is concerned, sections 134 and 135 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

²⁷⁴ See e.g. the Committee's report of Spring 2002, A/57/44, p. 82.

²⁷⁵ Note e.g. the report of the Committee on Sri Lanka in this context, A/57/44, p. 59 (2002). See also E. Zoller, 'Second Session of the UN Commission against Torture', 7 NQHR, 1989, p. 250.

²⁷⁶ Article 28(1). See e.g. A/57/44, p. 81.

The conduct of the reporting procedure bears much resemblance to the practice of the UN Human Rights Committee.²⁷⁷ Guidelines have been issued for states parties and the discussions with state representatives are held with a view to establishing a constructive dialogue. Many problems facing other treaty bodies also appear with regard to the Committee against Torture, for example, overdue reports and problems relating to implementation of the Convention generally. The Committee may also make comments on states' reports in the form of concluding observations²⁷⁸ and may issue general comments.²⁷⁹ Interim measures of protection may also be granted under Rule 108(1) and this is monitored by the rapporteurs for new complaints and interim measures.²⁸⁰

The first three cases before the Committee under article 22 were admissibility decisions concerning Argentinian legislation exempting junior military officers from liability for acts of torture committed during the 1976–83 period and its compatibility with the Torture Convention.²⁸¹ In May 2002, the Committee revised its rules of procedure and established the function of a Rapporteur for follow-up of decisions on complaints submitted under article 22.²⁸² The Committee has held that where substantial grounds exist for believing that the applicant would be in danger of being subjected to torture, the expulsion or return of the applicant by the state party concerned to the state in which he might be tortured would constitute a violation of article 3 of the Convention.²⁸³ The Committee has also emphasised that the risk of torture must be assessed on grounds that go beyond mere theory or suspicion. The risk need not be highly probable, but it must be personal and present. While the Committee does give considerable weight to findings of fact made by the organs of the state party concerned, it is not bound by these and has the power of free assessment of the facts arising in the circumstances of each case. It has been particularly underlined that the prohibition enshrined in article 3 of the Convention was an absolute one.²⁸⁴ It has also been noted that where complaints of torture are made during court proceedings, it is desirable that they be elucidated by means of independent proceedings.²⁸⁵ A complaint must be submitted by the alleged victim, or by a close relative or a duly authorised representative, and must first be declared admissible. Requirements include that the matter must not be before another tribunal, that domestic remedies have been exhausted and that the complaint must reach a 'basic level of substantiation'.²⁸⁶

²⁷⁷ As at 1 June 2012, the Committee had received a total of 332 reports and had examined 310; there were 291 overdue periodic reports and 29 overdue initial reports: see A/67/44, p. 7 (2012).

²⁷⁸ See e.g. A/61/44, pp. 6 ff. (2006).

²⁷⁹ To date only one has been issued on the implementation of article 3 concerning deportation to states where there is substantial reason to fear torture: see A/53/44, annex IX.

²⁸⁰ Ibid., pp. 82–3. See also A/57/44, p. 219.

²⁸¹ OR, MM and MS v. Argentina, communications nos. 1–3/1988. Decisions of 23 November 1989. See 5 Interights Bulletin, 1990, p. 12. The Committee noted that there existed a general rule of international law obliging all states to take effective measures to prevent and punish acts of torture. However, the Convention took effect only from its date of entry (26 June 1987) and could not be applied retroactively to cover the enactment of legislation prior to that date. Therefore, the communications were inadmissible. The Committee stated that Argentina was morally bound to provide a remedy to the victims of torture. However, where the effect of the violations continues after the date that the Convention comes into force for the state concerned and where those effects constitute a breach of the Convention, then the matter can be considered: see e.g. AA v. Azerbaijan, A/61/44, pp. 255, 259 (2006). Note also Belgium v. Senegal, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 422, 457–8.

²⁸² See e.g. A/61/44, p. 86 (2006). ²⁸³ Khan v. Canada, CAT/C/13/D/15/1994.

²⁸⁴ See Dadar v. Canada, A/61/44, pp. 233 ff. (2006). ²⁸⁵ Parot v. Spain, CAT/C/14/D/6/1990.

²⁸⁶ RT v. Switzerland, A/61/44, pp. 249, 253 (2006). See also article 22 of the Convention and Rule 107(b) of the Rules of Procedure.

An Optional Protocol to the Convention to enable the Committee through a new Subcommittee on Prevention to conduct regular visits to places of detention and make recommendations to states parties was adopted by the General Assembly in December 2002 and came into force in 2006. Under the Protocol, states parties must establish a 'national preventive mechanism' for the prevention of torture at the domestic level. Visits by the Subcommittee and the national preventive mechanism to any place under the state party's jurisdiction and control where persons are, or may be, deprived of their liberty must be permitted by the state concerned.²⁸⁷

The Committee on the Rights of the Child²⁸⁸

The Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the General Assembly on 20 November 1989.²⁸⁹ It provides that in all actions concerning children, the best interests of the child shall be a primary consideration. A variety of rights are stipulated, including the inherent right to life (article 6); the right to a name and to acquire a nationality (article 7); the right to freedom of expression (article 13); the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14); the right not to be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with privacy, family, home or correspondence; and the right to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health (article 24).

States parties agree to take all appropriate measures to protect the child from all forms of physical and mental violence (article 19) and from economic exploitation (article 32) and the illicit use of drugs (article 33), and there are specific provisions relating to refugees and disabled children. In addition, states parties agree to respect the rules of international humanitarian law applicable to armed conflicts relevant to children (article 38). This provision was one response to the use of children in the Iran–Iraq war.

Article 43 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child provides for the establishment of a Committee. This Committee, which was elected in 1991, is composed of eighteen independent experts and has the competence to hear states' reports (article 44). The Committee itself submits reports every two years to the General Assembly through ECOSOC. The Committee can recommend to the General Assembly that the Secretary-General be requested to undertake on its behalf ²⁸⁷ See General Assembly resolution 57/199. Note that in 1985, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights appointed a Special Rapporteur on Torture to examine questions relevant to torture and to seek and receive credible and reliable information on such questions and to respond to that information without delay: resolution 1985/33. The work of the rapporteur includes the sending of urgent appeals and an increasing number of country visits. He is directed to co-operate closely with the Committee against Torture, see e.g. E. Zoller, '46th Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights', 8(2) NQHR, 1990, pp. 140, 166.

²⁸⁸ See e.g. Litigating the Rights of the Child: The UN Convention on the Rights of the Child in Domestic and International Jurisprudence (ed. T. Liefarrd and J. E. Doek), Heidelberg, 2014; The Rights of the Child in a Changing World: 25 Years after the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (ed. O.C. Jančič), Heidelberg, 2015; T. Buck, International Child Law, 3rd edn, Abingdon, 2014; G. Lansdown, 'The Reporting Procedures under the Convention on the Rights of the Child', in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 113; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 16; Revisiting Children's Rights: 10 Years of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (ed. D. Fottrell), The Hague, 2000; D. M. Santos Pais, 'The Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Work of the Committee', 26 Israel Law Review, 1992, p. 16, and Santos Pais, 'Rights of Children and the Family', in Herkin and Hargrove, Human Rights: An Agenda for the Next Century, p. 183. See also G. Van Bueren, The International Law on the Rights of the Child, Dordrecht, 1995, and The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (ed. S. Detrick), Dordrecht, 1992. See generally www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CRC/Pages/CRCIndex.aspx.

²⁸⁹ The Convention came into force on 2 September 1990. Note also the Declaration on the Rights of the Child adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 1386 (XIV), 1959 and the proclamation of 1979 as the International Year of the Child in resolution 31/169.

studies on specific issues relating to the rights of the child, an innovation in the functions of such treaty bodies, and it can make suggestions and general recommendations (article 45). The Committee (like the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights) sets aside time for general discussions on particular topics in accordance with Rule 79 of its rules of procedure.²⁹⁰

As part of the general reporting process, the Committee adopted an urgent action procedure at its second session. Provided that the state concerned has ratified the Convention, that the situation is serious and there is a risk of further violations, the Committee may send a communication to the state 'in a spirit of dialogue' and may request the provision of additional information or suggest a visit.²⁹¹ At its fourth session, the Committee established a working group to study ways and means whereby the urgent action procedure could be pursued effectively.²⁹² The Committee has produced a set of guidelines concerning states' reports²⁹³ and a pre-sessional working group considers these reports and draws up a list of issues needing further clarification which is sent to the state concerned.²⁹⁴ As is the case with other reporting mechanisms, the state whose report is being considered by the Committee is invited to send representatives to the appropriate meetings. After the process is completed, the Committee issues Concluding Observations in which both the positive aspects of the report considered and the problems identified are noted, together with suggestions and recommendations.²⁹⁵ Various follow-up measures to the consideration of reports exist, but usually they consist of the request for the provision of further information.²⁹⁶ The Committee also issues General Comments.²⁹⁷ An Optional Protocol on a Communications Procedure was adopted in 2011, providing for the Committee to hear petitions by individuals or groups of individuals alleging a breach of the Convention or its two earlier protocols and inter-state complaints and an inquiry mechanism was created for grave or systematic violations.²⁹⁸

²⁹⁰ CRC/C/4/Rev.4, 2015. For example, at its second session in 1992, the Committee discussed the question of children in armed conflicts, A/49/41, pp. 94 ff. This led to a recommendation to the General Assembly to request the Secretary-General to undertake a special study on the means to protect children in armed conflicts: see CRC/C/SR.72, p. 2 and resolution 48/157 which in turn led to the adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict, General Assembly resolution 54/263, 25 May 2000, which entered into force on 12 February 2002. Note that the question of the protection of children in armed conflicts was referred to in the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993, Part II, B, 4: see 32 ILM, 1993, p. 1680. See also G. Van Bueren, 'The International Legal Protection of Children in Armed Conflicts', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 809, and M. Haggold, Child Soldiers in International Law, Manchester, 2005. At its fourth session, the problem of the economic exploitation of children was discussed, A/49/41, pp. 99 ff.; at its eighth session, a discussion on the 'girl-child' was held, CRC/C/38, p. 47. This led to the adoption of the Optional Protocol on the Question of the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography: see General Assembly resolution 54/263 of 25 May 2000 which entered into force on 18 January 2002. In 2016, the topic chosen was children's rights and the environment, www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CRC/Pages/Discussion2016.aspx.

²⁹¹ See CRC/C/SR.42, p. 2 and A/49/41, pp. 69–71. ²⁹² Ibid. ²⁹³ See CRC/C/5. ²⁹⁴ See e.g. CRC/C/121, 2002.

²⁹⁵ See e.g. A/49/41, pp. 20 ff.; CRC/C/38, pp. 10 ff.; and CRC/C/43, pp. 10 ff. See also CRC/C/121, 2002, pp. 8 ff.

²⁹⁶ See e.g. CRC/C/27/Rev.3, 1995 detailing such measures up to mid-1995.

²⁹⁷ Ibid., p. 159 (on 'The role of national human rights institutions in promoting and protecting children's rights'). In 2007, the Committee adopted General Comment No. 10 on the rights of children in juvenile justice and in 2014 a joint general recommendation/general comment 31 of the Committee with CEDAW was adopted on harmful practices, CRC/C/GC/14, http://tbinternet.ohchr.org/_layouts/treatybodyexternal/TBSearch.aspx?Lang=en&TreatyID=5&DocTypeID=11.

²⁹⁸ This came into force in April 2014. The first decision concerned the determination of age within proceedings to grant special protection to a child deprived of his family environment, but was declared inadmissible, CRC/C/69/D/1/2014.

The Committee on the Protection of Migrant Workers²⁹⁹

The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families was adopted by the General Assembly and opened for signature in December 1990 and came into force on 1 April 2003. The Convention defines a migrant worker as ‘a person who is to be engaged, is engaged, or has been engaged in a remunerated activity in a state of which he or she is not a national’ (article 2). This includes, for example, frontier and seasonal workers, workers on offshore installations and specified-employment workers, but excludes employees of international organisations or official state employees abroad, refugees, stateless persons, students and workers on offshore installations who have not been admitted to take up residence and engage in a remunerated activity in the state of employment (article 3).

Migrant workers are entitled to equality of treatment with nationals in areas such as matters before courts and tribunals (article 18), terms of employment (article 25), freedom to join trades unions (article 26), medical treatment (article 28), access to education for their children (article 30) and respect for cultural identity (article 31). Migrant workers are protected from collective expulsion (article 22). Further provisions deal with additional rights for migrant workers and members of their families in a documented or regular situation (Part IV).

The Convention provided for the creation of a Committee of fourteen independent experts (Part VII). States parties are required to provide reports on measures taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention (article 73). An inter-state complaints procedure is provided for in article 76, on the condition that the states concerned have made a declaration expressly recognising the competence of the Committee to hear such complaints, while under article 77 an individual complaints procedure can be used with regard to states that have made a declaration recognising the competence of the Committee in this regard.³⁰⁰

The Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities³⁰¹

The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities was adopted in December 2006 and came into force on 3 May 2008. The Convention provides for the prohibition of discrimination against persons with disability and for equality of opportunity and accessibility. States parties are to undertake immediate, effective and appropriate measures to raise awareness and combat prejudices and harmful practices (articles 5–9). A twelve-person Committee is provided for to examine states’ reports on measures taken to give effect to the obligations under the Convention

²⁹⁹ See e.g. Migration and Human Rights: The United Nations Convention on Migrant Workers’ Rights (ed. P. de Guchteneire, A. Pecoud and R. Cholewinski), Cambridge, 2009; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 19; K. Samson, ‘Human Rights Co-ordination within the UN System’, in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, pp. 620, 641 ff.; S. Hune and J. Niessen, ‘Ratifying the UN Migrant Workers Convention: Current Difficulties and Prospects’, 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 393, and Hune and Niessen, ‘The First UN Convention on Migrant Workers’, 9 NQHR, 1991, p. 133. See generally www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CMW/Pages/CMWIndex.aspx.

³⁰⁰ See e.g. the Reports of the Committee for 2006–7, A/62/48 (2007) and 2014–15, A/70/48. The article 77 procedure is not yet in force.

³⁰¹ See e.g. The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (ed. V. Della Fina, R. Cera and G. Palmisano), Heidelberg, 2016; E. Flynn, From Rhetoric to Action: Implementing the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, Cambridge, 2013; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 17; and A. Lawson, ‘The United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities’, 34 Syracuse Journal of International Law and Commerce, 2007, p. 563. See also generally www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CRPD/Pages/CRPDIndex.aspx. This convention is the first human rights treaty to be ratified by a regional integration organisation, the European Union, ibid.

(articles 34–36). States parties to the Optional Protocol, which also came into force on 3 May 2008, recognise the competence of the Committee to hear individual communications alleging a violation of the Convention against them. Further, where the Committee receives reliable information indicating grave or systematic violations by a state party of Convention rights, the Committee may invite the state to co-operate in the examination of the information and submit observations. The Committee may proceed to conduct an inquiry confidentially. A state party may, however, on signature or ratification of the Optional Protocol, declare that it does not accept the inquiry competence of the Committee.

The Committee on Enforced Disappearances³⁰²

The Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance was adopted in December 2006 and entered into force on 23 December 2010. It requires states parties to make enforced disappearance, defined as the deprivation of liberty by agents of the state or persons acting with the support or acquiescence of the state coupled with the refusal to acknowledge the deprivation of liberty or concealment of the fate of the person in question (article 2), a criminal law offence (article 4). It is stated to be a crime against humanity (article 5). A ten-person Committee on Enforced Disappearances is provided for to examine states' reports on measures taken to give effect to the obligations under the Convention (article 29), to hear inter-state complaints (article 32) and to hear individual communications (article 31). The Committee may also, upon receiving a request for urgent action, transmit a request to the state party concerned to take interim measures to locate and protect the person in question (article 30). Where the Committee receives reliable information indicating a serious violation, it may seek, in consultation with the state party concerned, to organise a visit (article 33). Further, where the Committee receives information appearing to contain well-founded indications that enforced disappearance is being practised on a widespread or systematic basis in the territory under the jurisdiction of a state party, it may, after seeking information from the state, urgently bring the matter to the attention of the General Assembly through the Secretary-General (article 34).

Conclusions

Most international human rights conventions obligate states parties to take certain measures with regard to the provisions contained therein, whether by domestic legislation or otherwise.³⁰³ In addition, all nine of the treaty bodies (plus the Committee on Economic, ³⁰² See M. L. Vermeulen, Enforced Disappearance: Determining State Responsibility under the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, Intersentia, 2012; T. Scovazzi and G. Citroni, The Struggle against Enforced Disappearance and the 2007 United Nations Convention, The Hague, 2007; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 23; and S. McCrory, 'The International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 545. See also the report of its first two sessions, A/67/56, and its 2014–15 report, A/70/56. See generally www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/CED/Pages/CEDIndex.aspx.

³⁰³ See e.g. article 2 of the Civil and Political Rights Covenant, 1966; article 1 of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1950; articles 1 and 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights, 1969; article 5 of the Genocide Convention, 1948; article 4 of the Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, 1973 and article 3 of the Slavery Convention, 1926.

Social and Cultural Rights) discussed above require states parties to make periodic reports.³⁰⁴ Nine have the competence to consider individual communications,³⁰⁵ seven may consider inter-state complaints,³⁰⁶ while six have the competence to inquire into allegations of grave or systematic violations.³⁰⁷

The proliferation of committees raises problems concerned both with resources and with consistency.³⁰⁸ The question of resources is a serious and ongoing difficulty. The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 1993 emphasised the necessity for a substantial increase in the resources for the human rights programme of the UN and particularly called for sufficient funding to be made available to the UN Centre for Human Rights, which inter alia provides the administrative support for the human rights organs and committees discussed in this chapter.³⁰⁹ The various human rights committees themselves have pointed to the resource problem.³¹⁰ The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee against Torture changed their financing system so that, since January 1994, they have been financed under the regular budget of the United Nations.³¹¹ The Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights sought additional resources from the Economic and Social Council.³¹² Nevertheless, the fact remains that human rights activity within the UN system is seriously underfunded.

The question of consistency in view of the increasing number of human rights bodies within the UN system has been partially addressed by the establishment of an annual system of meetings between the chairpersons of the treaty bodies.³¹³ Issues of concern have been discussed, ranging from the need to encourage states to ratify all human rights treaties, concern about reservations made to human rights treaties,³¹⁴ attempts to establish that successor states are automatically bound by obligations under international human rights treaties from the date of independence irrespective of confirmation,³¹⁵ the formulation of new norms and instruments and the promotion of human rights education, to consideration of the ³⁰⁴ See also article 7 of the Apartheid Convention, 1973. Several conventions provide for the communication of information to the UN Secretary-General: see e.g. article 33 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, 1954 and articles 35 and 36 of the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951.

³⁰⁵ Although neither the Optional Protocol on Communications of the Convention on the Rights of the Child nor article 77 of the Migrant Workers Convention is yet in force.

³⁰⁶ The Human Rights Committee, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, the Committee on Migrant Workers, the Committee against Torture, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on Enforced Disappearances and the Committee on the Rights of the Child (although this provision is not yet in force).

³⁰⁷ The Committee against Torture, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the Committee on Enforced Disappearance, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child (although this provision is not yet in force). Note the competence to visit under the Convention on Enforced Disappearance.

³⁰⁸ See e.g. E. Tistounet, 'The Problem of Overlapping among Different Treaty Bodies', in Alston and Crawford, Future, p. 383.

³⁰⁹ See Part II, Section A of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, 32 ILM, 1993, pp. 1674–5.

³¹⁰ See e.g. the Human Rights Committee, A/49/44, and the Committee against Torture, A/50/44. See also the Report of the Secretary-General to the sixth meeting of chairpersons of treaty bodies, HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 13.

³¹¹ See General Assembly resolution 47/111 and HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 14. ³¹² Ibid., p. 15.

³¹³ See General Assembly resolution 49/178, 1994, which endorsed the recommendation of the chairpersons that the meetings be held annually. The first meeting of the chairpersons of treaty bodies was held in 1984, A/39/484 and the second in 1988, A/44/98. See also e.g. A/62/224 (2007). Note also that the first inter-committee meeting of the human rights treaty bodies took place in September 2002, HRI/ICM/2002/3. A working group on the harmonisation of working methods of the treaty bodies has been established: see e.g. HRI/MC/2006/3 and HRI/MC/2007/2.

³¹⁴ See further below, chapter 15, p. 699. ³¹⁵ See further below, chapter 16, p. 743.

continuing problem of overdue reports³¹⁶ and the role of non-governmental organisations.³¹⁷ The development of early warning and preventive procedures by the committees is to be particularly noted.³¹⁸ The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, for example, under its urgent procedures may, since 1994, review the human rights situation in states parties that give rise for especial concern,³¹⁹ while the Human Rights Committee is able to request states parties to submit special urgent reports.³²⁰

A continuing process of seeking to strengthen the human rights treaty bodies is underway.³²¹

It is also to be noted that particular UN Specialised Agencies have human rights mechanisms, especially the International Labour Organization³²² and UNESCO (the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization).³²³

³¹⁶ For example, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have established procedures enabling them to examine the situation in the state concerned: see above, pp. 236 and 324. Other Committees have sought to hold meetings with the officials of the states concerned in order to encourage submission of overdue reports, HRI/MC/1995/2, p. 7.

³¹⁷ See e.g. HRI/MC/1995.

³¹⁸ The role of the treaty bodies in seeking to prevent human rights violations has been emphasised: see e.g. A/47/628, para. 44.

³¹⁹ See above, p. 236.

³²⁰ See above, p. 238. See also above, p. 249, with regard to the procedures of the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

³²¹ The UN Secretary-General in his report entitled 'In Larger Freedom' emphasised the need for streamlining procedures and called for the implementation of harmonised guidelines on reporting, A/59/2005 and A/59/2005/Add.3. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights proposed at one stage for a unified standing treaty body: Concept Paper on the Proposal for a Unified Standing Treaty Body, HRI/MC/2006/2, 2006. However, this was not accepted. In June 2012, the High Commissioner produced a report on the strengthening of the treaty body system: N. Pillay, Strengthening the United Nations Human Rights Treaty Body System, Office for the UN High Commissioner of Human Rights, A/66/860, 2012. In 2012, an intergovernmental process was launched to strengthen and enhance the effective functioning of the treaty body system and the Ambassadors of Iceland and Indonesia appointed as Co-facilitators by the President of the General Assembly: see www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/HRTD/Pages/TBStrengthening.aspx. Note also General Assembly resolution 68/268 (2014) and the first biennial report by the UN Secretary General on the status of the treaty body system, A/71/118, 2016.

³²² See e.g. Weissbrodt, Fitzpatrick and Newman, International Human Rights, chapter 16; L. Betten, 'At its 75th Anniversary, the International Labour Organization Prepares Itself for an Active Future', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 425; L. Swepston, 'Human Rights Complaints Procedures of the International Labour Organisation', in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 89; V. Leary, 'Lessons from the Experience of the International Labour Organization', in Alston, United Nations and Human Rights, p. 580; C. W. Jenks, 'Human Rights, Social Justice and Peace', in The International Protection of Human Rights (ed. A. Schou and A. Eide), Stockholm, 1968, p. 227, and Social Justice in the Law of Nations, Oxford, 1970; E. A. Landy, The Effectiveness of International Supervision: Thirty Years of ILO Experience, New York, 1966, and 'The Implementation Procedures of the International Labour Organization', 20 Santa Clara Law Review, 1980, p. 633; N. Valticos, 'The Role of the ILO: Present Action and Future Perspectives', in Ramcharan, Human Rights: Thirty Years After the Universal Declaration, p. 211, Le Droit International du Travail, Paris, 1980, and 'The International Labour Organization', in The International Dimensions of Human Rights (ed. K. Vasak and P. Alston), Paris, 1982, vol. I, p. 363; F. Wolf, 'ILO Experience in Implementation of Human Rights', 10 Journal of International Law and Economics, 1975, p. 599; J. M. Servais, 'ILO Standards on Freedom of Association and Their Implementation', 123 International Labour Review, 1984, p. 765; and Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights, p. 282. See also H. K. Nielsen, 'The Concept of Discrimination in ILO Convention No. 111', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 827. See generally www.ilo.org/global/lang-en/index.htm.

³²³ See e.g. S. Marks, 'The Complaints Procedure of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization', in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 107; D. Weissbrodt and R. Farley, 'The UNESCO Human Rights Procedure: An Evaluation', 16 HRQ, 1994, p. 391; P. Alston, 'UNESCO's Procedures for Dealing with Human Rights Violations', 20 Santa Clara Law Review, 1980, p. 665; H. S. Saba, 'UNESCO and Human Rights', in Vasak and Alston, International Dimensions of Human Rights, vol. II, p. 401; Robertson and Merrills, Human Rights, p. 288, and UN Action, pp. 308 and 321. See generally <http://en.unesco.org/>.

THE REGIONAL PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Europe³²⁴

The European Convention on Human Rights³²⁵

The European Convention on Human Rights functions under the auspices of the Council of Europe, which was founded in 1949 as a European organisation for encouraging and developing intergovernmental and interparliamentary co-operation. Its aim as laid down in article 1 of the Statute is to achieve a greater unity between member states for the purpose of safeguarding and realising the ideals and principles which are their common heritage and facilitating their economic and social progress. The principles of the Council of Europe as established in article 3 of the Statute include pluralist democracy, respect for human rights and the rule of law. Its principal organs are the Committee of Ministers, consisting of the Foreign Ministers of member states, and a Parliamentary Assembly, consisting of delegations of members of national parliaments, together with a Secretary-General and supporting secretariat. There are currently forty-seven members.³²⁶ In 1999, the Council of Europe established the office of the Commissioner for Human Rights within the General Secretariat to promote education and awareness in the field of human rights.³²⁷ The Commissioner may also issue opinions³²⁸ and make recommendations³²⁹ and undertake visits.³³⁰

The European Convention on Human Rights was signed on 4 November 1950 and entered into force in September 1953.³³¹ Together with the fourteen Protocols currently in force, it covers ³²⁴ See generally Monitoring Human Rights in Europe (ed. A. Bloed, L. Leicht, M. Nowak and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1993; Human Rights Monitoring Mechanisms of the Council of Europe (ed. G. de Beco), London, 2011; and Human Rights Law in Europe (ed. K. Dzehtsiarou, T. Konstadinides; T. Lock and N. O'Meara), London, 2014.

³²⁵ See e.g. W. Schabas, The European Convention on Human Rights: A Commentary, Oxford, 2015; Jacobs, White and Ovey: The European Convention on Human Rights (ed. B. Rainey, E. Wicks and C. Ovey), 6th edn, Oxford, 2014; J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, 2nd edn, London, 2010; Harris, O'Boyle and Warbrick: Law of the European Convention on Human Rights (ed. D. J. Harris, M. O'Boyle, E. P. Bates and C. M. Buckley), 3rd edn, Oxford, 2014; M. W. Janis, R. S. Kay and A. W. Bradley, European Human Rights Law: Text and Materials, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008; S. Greer, The European Convention on Human Rights: Achievements, Problems and Prospects, Cambridge, 2006; F. Sudre, Droit Européen et International des Droits de l'Homme, 11th edn, Paris, 2012; La Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme (ed. P. Imbert, E. Decaux and L. Pettiti), 2nd edn, Paris, 1999; P. Leach, Taking a Case to the European Court of Human Rights, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005; K. Reid, A Practitioner's Guide to the European Convention on Human Rights, 4th edn, London, 2011; P. Van Dijk, G. J. H. Van Hoof, A. Van Rijn and L. Zwaak, Theory and Practice of the European Convention on Human Rights, 4th edn, Antwerp, 2006; D. Xenos, The Positive Obligations of the State under the European Convention on Human Rights, London, 2011; E. Lambert, Les Effets des Arrêts de la Cour Européenne des Droits de l'Homme, Brussels, 1999; and K. Starmer, European Human Rights Law, London, 1999. See also J. G. Merrills, The Development of International Law by the European Court of Human Rights, 2nd edn, Manchester, 1993; and A. Drzemczewski, The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law, Oxford, 1983. See generally <http://echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=home>.

³²⁶ See M. Bond, The Council of Europe, London, 2013 and see generally www.coe.int/en/web/portal/home.

³²⁷ Committee of Ministers resolution (99) 50. The Commissioner cannot consider individual petitions and exercises functions other than those of the supervisory bodies of Council of Europe human rights instruments. No general reporting system exists in this framework. See www.coe.int/en/web/commissioner.

³²⁸ See e.g. CommDH(2002)7, Opinion 1/2002 on certain aspects of the United Kingdom 2001 derogation from article 5(1) of the European Convention on Human Rights.

³²⁹ See e.g. Recommendations CommDH/Rec(2001)1 concerning the rights of aliens wishing to enter a Council of Europe member state and the enforcement of expulsion orders, and CommDH/Rec(2002)1 concerning certain rights that must be guaranteed during the arrest and detention of persons following 'cleansing' operations in the Chechen Republic of the Russian Federation.

³³⁰ See e.g. the visit to Russia including Chechnya, Press Release 072a (2003).

³³¹ All forty-seven member states of the Council of Europe have ratified the Convention.

a wide variety of primarily civil and political rights.³³² The preamble notes that the European states are like-minded and have a common heritage of political tradition, ideals, freedoms and the rule of law. The rights covered in the Convention itself include the right to life (article 2), prohibition of torture and slavery (articles 3 and 4), right to liberty and security of person (article 5), right to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law (article 6), prohibition of retroactive criminal legislation (article 7), right to respect for private and family life (article 8), freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 9), freedom of expression (article 10), freedom of assembly and association (article 11), the right to marry and found a family (article 12), the right to an effective remedy before a national authority if one of the Convention rights or freedoms is violated (article 13) and a non-discrimination provision regarding the enjoyment of rights and freedoms under the Convention (article 14). In addition, several protocols have been added to the substantive rights protected under the Convention. Protocol No. 1 protects the rights of property, education and free elections by secret ballots, Protocol No. 4 prohibits imprisonment for civil debt and protects inter alia the rights of free movement and choice of residence and the right to enter one's own country, Protocol No. 6 provides for the abolition of the death penalty, while Protocol No. 7 provides inter alia that an alien lawfully resident in a state shall not be expelled therefrom except in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with the law, that a person convicted of a criminal offence shall have the right to have that conviction or sentence reviewed by a higher tribunal and that no one may be tried or punished again in criminal proceedings for an offence for which he has already been finally acquitted or convicted. Protocol No. 12 prohibits discrimination, while Protocol No. 13 abolishes the death penalty. Like other international treaties, the European Convention imposes obligations upon states parties to respect a variety of provisions. In this instance the Convention has also been incorporated into the domestic legislation of all current states parties³³³ although the Convention does not provide as to how exactly the states parties are to implement internally the relevant obligations.³³⁴ It has been emphasised that:

unlike international treaties of the classic kind, the Convention comprises more than mere reciprocal engagements between contracting states. It creates, over and above a network of mutual and bilateral undertakings, objective obligations, which in the words of the preamble, benefit from a 'collective enforcement'.³³⁵

³³² Note that Protocol No. 15, which is not yet in force, introduces a reference to the principle of subsidiarity and the doctrine of the margin of appreciation. It also reduces from six to four months the time limit within which an application may be made to the Court following the date of a final domestic decision. Protocol No. 16, which is similarly not yet in force, will allow the highest courts and tribunals of a State Party to request the Court to give advisory opinions on questions of principle relating to the interpretation or application of the rights and freedoms defined in the Convention or the protocols thereto. Economic and social rights are covered in the European Social Charter, 1961. See below, p. 266.

³³³ The UK incorporated the Convention in the Human Rights Act 1998. See e.g. J. Polakiewicz and V. Jacob-Foltzer, 'The European Human Rights Convention in Domestic Law', 12 HRLJ, 1991, pp. 65 and 125.

³³⁴ See e.g. the Swedish Engine Drivers' Union case, Series A, vol. 20, 1976, p. 18; 58 ILR, pp. 19, 36. See also the Belgian Linguistics case, Series A, vol. 6, 1968, p. 35; 45 ILR, pp. 136, 165.

³³⁵ See article 1 and Ireland v. UK, Series A, vol. 25, 1978, pp. 90–1; 58 ILR, pp. 188, 290–1. See also Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, 1995, pp. 22–3; 103 ILR, p. 622.

In addition, a more teleological and flexible approach to the interpretation of the Convention has been adopted.³³⁶ The European Court of Human Rights has emphasised that the Convention is a living instrument to be interpreted in the light of present-day conditions and this approach applies not only to the substantive rights protected under the Convention, but also to those provisions which govern the operation of the Convention's enforcement machinery.³³⁷ In addition, the Court has noted that the object and purpose of the Convention as an instrument for the protection of individuals requires that its provisions be interpreted and applied so as to make its safeguards practical and effective.³³⁸ The Convention should also be interpreted as far as possible in harmony with other principles of international law.³³⁹ It has been emphasised that the Convention constitutes a 'constitutional instrument of European public order ("ordre public")'.³⁴⁰

The Convention applies, of course, within the territory of contracting states, but the issue of its extraterritorial application has been addressed. The Court has interpreted the concept of 'jurisdiction' under article 1 to include the possibility of application to extradition or expulsion of a person by a contracting state to the territory of a non-contracting state³⁴¹ and the situation where acts of the authorities of contracting states, whether performed within or outside national boundaries, produce effects outside their own territory.³⁴² Further, in a significant move, the Court in Loizidou v. Turkey emphasised that the responsibility of a contracting state may also arise when it exercises effective control or 'effective overall control' of an area outside its national territory, irrespective of the lawfulness of such control, whether by the state's own agents and officials or by the acts of a subordinate local administration.³⁴³ This was underlined in Banković v. Belgium, where the Court stated that its recognition of the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction by a contracting state was exceptional and that the Convention's notion of jurisdiction was essentially territorial.³⁴⁴ These principles were reaffirmed in Ilaşcu v. Moldova and Russia, where the Court, while emphasising that jurisdiction was primarily territorial, noted that in exceptional circumstances the state might not be responsible for Convention violations where it was prevented from exercising its authority in a part of its territory, whether as a result of military occupation by the armed forces of another state which effectively controls the territory

³³⁶ See e.g. the Tyrer case, Series A, vol. 26, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 339, and see also the Marckx case, Series A, vol. 31, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 561, although not to the extent of adding new rights or new jurisdictions thereby, see Johnston v. Ireland, Judgment of 18 December 1986 and Banković v. Belgium, Judgment of 12 December 2001, 123 ILR, p. 94. See also below, chapter 15, p. 710.

³³⁷ See Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, 1995, p. 23; 103 ILR, p. 622.

³³⁸ See Soering v. UK, Series A, vol. 161, 1989, p. 34; 98 ILR, p. 270; Artico v. Italy, Series A, vol. 37, p. 16; and Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, p. 23; 103 ILR, p. 622.

³³⁹ See Al-Adsani v. UK, Judgment of 21 November 2001, para. 60; 123 ILR, p. 41.

³⁴⁰ Loizidou v. Turkey, Series A, vol. 310, pp. 24 and 27; 103 ILR, p. 622.

³⁴¹ See e.g. Soering v. UK, Series A, vol. 161, 1989, pp. 35–6. See also M. Milanovic, Extraterritorial Application of Human Rights Treaties: Law, Principles, and Policy, Oxford, 2013.

³⁴² See e.g. Drozd and Janousek v. France and Spain, Series A, vol. 240, 1992, p. 29. See also Issa v. Turkey, Judgment of 30 May 2000, and Öcalan v. Turkey, Judgment of 14 December 2000.

³⁴³ Series A, vol. 310, p. 20; 103 ILR, p. 622. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 75 ff.; 120 ILR, p. 10.

³⁴⁴ Judgment of 12 December 2001, paras. 63, 67 and 71; 123 ILR, pp. 110, 111 and 113. The Court noted that 'the Convention is a multi-lateral treaty operating . . . in an essentially regional context and notably in the legal space (espace juridique) of the contracting states', ibid., para. 80. See also Issa v. Turkey, Judgment of 16 November 2004, paras. 65 ff., where the Court held that the degree of control exercised by Turkish troops during a large-scale incursion into northern Iraq did not amount to overall control, and Assanidze v. Georgia, Judgment of 8 April 2004.

concerned, acts of war or rebellion, or the acts of a foreign state supporting the installation of a separatist state within the territory of the state concerned.³⁴⁵ Further, a state's responsibility will be engaged where, as a consequence of military action, whether lawful or unlawful, it exercises in practice effective control of an area situated outside its national territory. Overall control of an area would suffice and the responsibility of the state would extend not only to the acts of its own soldiers and officials, but also to acts of the local administration which survives there by virtue of its military and other support.³⁴⁶

In Al-Skeini v. UK, building upon the Issa case,³⁴⁷ the Court declared that extraterritorial jurisdiction (which remained as exceptional) flowed not only from effective control over foreign territory³⁴⁸ but also from the activities of state officials and agents. It was noted that 'the use of force by a State's agents operating outside its territory may bring the individual thereby brought under the control of the State's authorities into the State's Article 1 jurisdiction' and that 'whenever the State through its agents exercises control and authority over an individual, and thus jurisdiction, the State is under an obligation under Article 1 to secure to that individual the rights and freedoms under Section 1 of the Convention that are relevant to the situation of that individual'.³⁴⁹ Accordingly, as the UK had assumed authority and responsibility for the maintenance of security in South East Iraq, its soldiers engaged in security operations in Basrah at the relevant time 'exercised authority and control over individuals killed in the course of such security operations, so as to establish a jurisdictional link between the deceased and the United Kingdom for the purposes of Article 1 of the Convention'.³⁵⁰ This approach has been reaffirmed in Hassan v. UK, which concerned earlier activities in Iraq.³⁵¹ The further point which arose in this case was the court's rejection of the government's argument that jurisdiction arising out of physical power and control did not apply in the active hostilities phase of an international armed conflict where the agents of the contracting state are operating in territory of which they are not the occupying power, and where the conduct of the state will instead be subject to the requirements of international humanitarian law. Instead, the court, relying upon the case-law of the International Court of Justice, held that the Convention and international humanitarian law could apply concurrently.³⁵²

Linked with the territorial jurisdictional issue is the question whether the Court has jurisdiction over the states in question (or jurisdiction ratione personae) in the light of the involvement of other states or international organisations. In Behrami v. France, the Court, in an application against a number of states with regard to activities undertaken as part of the international ³⁴⁵ Judgment of 8 July 2004 at paras. 312–13.

³⁴⁶ Ibid., paras. 314–19. Note that this did not absolve the legitimate state deprived of control from all responsibility, ibid., para. 331. See also Catan v. Moldova and Russia, Judgment of 19 October 2012.

³⁴⁷ Judgment of 16 November 2004. See also Pad v. Turkey, Judgment of 28 June 2007.

³⁴⁸ See also Medvedyev v. France, Judgment of 29 March 2010, with regard to France's control over a Cambodian vessel, and Al-Saadoon and Mufidhi v. United Kingdom, Judgment of 3 July 2009 with regard to UK control over a prison.

³⁴⁹ Judgment of 7 July 2011, paras. 136–7. See also Jaloud v. the Netherlands, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 20 November 2014, para. 139.

³⁵⁰ This was accepted and applied by the UK Supreme Court in Smith v. MOD [2013] UKSC 41. See also Al-Saadoon v. Secretary of State for Defence [2016] EWCA Civ 811.

³⁵¹ Judgment of 16 September 2014, paras. 74 ff.

³⁵² Ibid., para. 77. See also below, chapter 20, p. 903. In fact, the court interpreted article 5 on the right to liberty and security of the person as permitting detention (in addition to the grounds listed in the article itself) in the case of the taking of prisoners of war and the detention of civilians who pose a risk to security under the Third and Fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949: ibid., para. 104.

presence in Kosovo (whether military, KFOR, or civil, UNMIK), had to decide whether the acts in question were attributable or imputable to the states concerned such as to found jurisdiction or whether the acts were imputable rather to the UN. The Court concluded that KFOR was exercising lawfully delegated Chapter VII powers of the UN Security Council so that the impugned action was, in principle, 'attributable' to the UN and thus not to the states brought before the Court.³⁵³ In Jaloud v. the Netherlands, the argument was that the respondent state was not responsible as its troops on the ground (in Iraq) were effectively subordinate to either the UK or the US as the two occupying powers in Iraq at the time or the UK as the 'lead nation' with regard to south-east Iraq commanding the Dutch forces.³⁵⁴ The Court noted that 'the fact of executing a decision or an order given by an authority of a foreign state is not in itself sufficient to relieve a Contracting State of the obligations which it has taken upon itself under the Convention' and concluded that the Netherlands troops were not placed 'at the disposal' of any foreign power, whether it be Iraq or the United Kingdom or any other power, or that they were 'under the exclusive direction or control' of any other state. Accordingly, the Netherlands was responsible under article 1 of the Convention.

In Al-Jedda v. UK, the Court tackled the relationship between the Convention and binding resolutions of the UN Security Council in a situation where article 103 of the UN Charter states that obligations under the Charter have priority over obligations arising under any other international agreement. The Court declared that in interpreting its [Security Council] resolutions, there must be a presumption that the Security Council does not intend to impose any obligation on Member States to breach fundamental principles of human rights. In the event of any ambiguity in the terms of a Security Council Resolution, the Court must therefore choose the interpretation which is most in harmony with the requirements of the Convention and which avoids any conflict of obligations. In the light of the United Nations' important role in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights, it is to be expected that clear and explicit language would be used were the Security Council to intend States to take particular measures which would conflict with their obligations under international human rights law.³⁵⁵

The Convention System

With the coming into force of Protocol 11 on 1 November 1998, a single permanent and full-time Court was established, so that the former Court and Commission ceased to exist. The system and procedure since the coming into force of Protocol No. 14 will be briefly described. The Court consists of a number of judges equal to that of the contracting parties to the Convention. Judges are elected by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe for non-renewable nine-year terms.³⁵⁶ To consider cases before it, the Court may sit in single judges formation, in Committees of three judges, in Chambers of seven judges and in a Grand ³⁵³ Judgment of 2 May 2007, paras. 141 ff.; similarly with regard to those activities falling within the framework of the UNMIK, deemed to be a subsidiary organ of the Security Council, para. 143. But see Bosphorus Airways v. Ireland, Judgment of 30 June 2005. Cf. G. Gaja, Seventh Report on Responsibility of International Organizations, A/CN.4/610, 2009, at pp. 10–12. See also Kontic v. Ministry of Defence [2016] EWHC 2034 (QB) applying Behrami.

³⁵⁴ Judgment of 20 November 2014, para. 143. ³⁵⁵ Judgment of 7 July 2011, para. 102.

³⁵⁶ Articles 22 and 23. Note that there will no longer be a prohibition on two judges having the same nationality. The terms of office of the judges will end at the age of seventy.

Chamber of seventeen judges.³⁵⁷ The Rules of Court provide for the establishment of at least four Sections, the compositions of which are to be geographically and gender-balanced and reflective of the different legal systems among the contracting states.³⁵⁸ The Chambers of seven judges provided for in the amended Convention are constituted from the Sections, as are the Committees of three judges.³⁵⁹ The plenary Court is responsible for the election of the President and Vice-Presidents of the Court, the appointment of the Presidents of the Chambers, constituting Chambers and adopting rules of procedure.³⁶⁰

A single judge may declare inadmissible or strike out of the Court's list of cases an individual application, where such a decision can be taken without further examination on the basis of the material supplied by the applicant. This decision shall be final. Where the single judge does not declare an application inadmissible or strike it out, that judge shall forward it to a committee or to a Chamber for further examination.³⁶¹ A committee may, by a unanimous vote, declare an application inadmissible or strike it out of its list of cases, where such decision can be taken without further examination; or declare it admissible and render at the same time a judgment on the merits, if the underlying question in the case, concerning the interpretation or the application of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, is already the subject of well-established case-law of the Court.³⁶² Where neither of these applies, a Chamber shall decide on the admissibility and merits of individual applications submitted under Article 34. The decision on admissibility may be taken separately.³⁶³

In ascertaining whether an application is admissible, the President of the Section to which it has been assigned will appoint a judge as Judge Rapporteur to examine the application.³⁶⁴ Once an application is declared admissible, the Chamber may invite the parties to submit further evidence and written observations and a hearing on the merits may be held if the Chamber decides or one of the parties so requests.³⁶⁵ At this point the respondent government is usually contacted for written observations.³⁶⁶ Where a serious question affecting the interpretation of the Convention or its Protocols is raised in a case, or where the resolution of a question might lead to a result inconsistent with earlier case-law, the Chamber may, unless one of the parties to the case objects, relinquish jurisdiction in favour of the Grand Chamber.³⁶⁷ A pilot judgment

³⁵⁷ Article 26.

³⁵⁸ Rule 25, European Court of Human Rights, Rules of Court, January 2016. There are now five Sections.

³⁵⁹ Rules 26 and 27. ³⁶⁰ Article 25 and Rule 8. ³⁶¹ Article 27 and Rule 49. ³⁶² Article 28. ³⁶³ Article 29.

³⁶⁴ Rule 48. ³⁶⁵ Rule 59.

³⁶⁶ In the case of inter-state cases, the respondent government will be automatically contacted: see Rule 51.

³⁶⁷ Article 30. Note that the provision 'unless one of the parties objects' will be removed once Protocol No. 15 is in force. While there is no specific power in the Convention under which the Court may order interim measures of protection with binding effect, Rule 39 of the Rules of Court provides that the Chamber or, where appropriate, the President of the Section or a duty judge may, at the request of a party or of any other person concerned, or of its own motion, indicate to the parties any interim measure which it considers should be adopted in the interests of the parties or of the proper conduct of the proceedings before it. The Court in Mamatkulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, Judgment of 6 February 2003, referring to the practice of other international organs including the International Court of Justice and the Inter-American Court and Commission of Human Rights, held that article 34 of the Convention requires that applicants are entitled to exercise their right to individual application effectively, while article 3, relevant in the context of expulsion, also necessitated an effective examination of the issues in question. The Court noting that Rule 39 indications 'permit it to carry out an effective examination of the application and to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is effective', concluded that 'any state party to the Convention to which interim measures have been indicated in order to avoid irreparable harm being caused to the victim of an alleged violation must comply with those measures and refrain from any act or omission that will undermine the authority and effectiveness of the final judgment', paras. 107–10.

procedure has also been introduced which enables the Court to identify structural problems underlying repetitive cases and imposing an obligation on states to address those problems. Where several applications with a common cause have been received, the Court can select one or more for priority treatment under the pilot procedure. In a pilot judgment, the Court's task is not only to decide whether a violation of the European Convention on Human Rights occurred in the specific case but also to identify the systemic problem and to give the state in question clear indications of the type of remedial measures needed to resolve it.³⁶⁸

The Court may give advisory opinions, although in very restrictive circumstances.³⁶⁹ In all cases before a Chamber or the Grand Chamber, a contracting party, one of whose nationals is an applicant, shall have the right to submit written comments and to take part in hearings, while the President of the Court may, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, invite any contracting party which is not a party to the proceedings, or any person concerned who is not the applicant, to submit written comments or take part in hearings.³⁷⁰ Once an application has been declared admissible, the Court will pursue the examination of the case and place itself at the disposal of the parties with a view to securing a friendly settlement.³⁷¹ If a friendly settlement is reached, the Court will strike the case out of its list.³⁷² Hearings before the Court will be in public unless the Court in exceptional circumstances decides otherwise. The Court will be able to afford just satisfaction to the injured party if necessary, where a violation is found and the domestic law of the contracting party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made.³⁷³ Under article 43, within a period of three months from the date of the judgment of the Chamber, any party to the case may, in exceptional cases, request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber. A panel of five judges of the Grand Chamber will accept this request if the case raises a serious question affecting the interpretation or application of the Convention or Protocols, or a serious issue of general importance. If the panel does accept the request, the Grand Chamber will decide the case

³⁶⁸ See the initial case, Broniowski v. Poland, Judgment of 22 June 2004 and see now Rule 61 of the Rules of Court, 2016 (introduced in 2011). See e.g. Kurić v. Slovenia, Judgment of 26 June 2012.

³⁶⁹ Article 47. Only the Committee of Ministers can make such a request and advisory opinions cannot deal with any question relating to the content or scope of the rights and freedoms laid down in Section 1 of the Convention and its Protocols or with any question which the Court or Committee of Ministers might have to consider during proceedings instituted in accordance with the Convention. The first request for an advisory opinion concerned the co-existence of the Convention on Human Rights of the Commonwealth of Independent States and the European Convention on Human Rights, but on 2 June 2004 the Court concluded unanimously that the request did not come within its advisory competence. The first advisory opinion was given on 12 February 2008, where the Court unanimously concluded that it was not compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights for a list of candidates for election to the post of judge at the Court to be rejected on the sole ground that there was no woman included in the proposed list and called for exceptions to the principle that lists must contain a candidate of the under-represented sex to be defined as soon as possible. See now Protocol No. 16, which when it comes into force will allow for the 'highest courts and tribunals' of contracting states to seek an advisory opinion from the Grand Chamber, but only in the context of a case before such requesting court or tribunal. The government of the state of the requesting court or tribunal and the Commissioner of Human Rights would have the right to participate, while the court has expressed the view that it would, as a matter of course, invite the parties to the domestic proceedings before the requesting court or tribunal to take part in the procedure before the European Court: see Opinion of the Court of 6 May 2013, http://echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=basictexts&tc=#n13739062744461326038770_pointer. See also the Court's Practice Direction on Interim Measures, last amended in 2011, www.echr.coe.int/Documents/PD_interim_measures_ENG.pdf and the interim measures granted on 13 March 2014 in the Ukraine–Russia inter-state application calling on both Ukraine and Russia to refrain from taking any measures, in particular military actions, which might entail breaches of the rights of civilians under the European Convention on Human Rights, <http://hudoc.echr.coe.int/sites/eng-press/pages/search.aspx?i=003-4699472-5703982#%22itemid%22:%22003-4699472-5703982%22>}.
³⁷⁰ Article 36. ³⁷¹ Articles 38 and 39. Proceedings in the latter case will be confidential. ³⁷² Article 39.

³⁷³ Article 41.

by means of a judgment. Judgments of the Grand Chamber will be final, as will those of a Chamber where the parties declare that they will not request that the case be referred to the Grand Chamber, or three months after the date of judgment if reference to the Grand Chamber has not been requested, or when the panel of the Grand Chamber rejects the request to refer. The final judgment will be published³⁷⁴ and is binding upon the parties,³⁷⁵ and it will be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution.³⁷⁶

The Convention provides for the right of both inter-state and individual application. Under article 33, any contracting state may institute a case against another contracting state. To date applications have been lodged with the Commission by states involving seven situations.³⁷⁷ The first inter-state application to reach the Court was Ireland v. UK.³⁷⁸ Such applications are a means of bringing to the fore an alleged breach of the European public order, so that, for example, it is irrelevant whether the applicant state has been recognised by the respondent state.³⁷⁹ Article 34 provides for the right of individual petition to the Commission and this has proved to be a crucial provision.³⁸⁰ This right is now automatic.³⁸¹ The Convention system does not contemplate an actio popularis.³⁸² Individuals cannot raise abstract issues, but must be able to claim to be the victim of a violation of one or more of the Convention rights.³⁸³ However, the Court has emphasised that:

³⁷⁴ Article 44. ³⁷⁵ Article 46(1).

³⁷⁶ Article 46(2). If the Committee of Ministers considers that the supervision of the execution of a final judgment is hindered by a problem of interpretation of the judgment, it may refer the matter to the Court for a ruling on the question of interpretation. A referral decision requires a majority vote of two-thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the committee. If the Committee of Ministers considers that a High Contracting Party refuses to abide by a final judgment in a case to which it is a party, it may, after serving formal notice on that Party and by decision adopted by a majority vote of two-thirds of the representatives entitled to sit on the committee, refer to the Court the question whether that Party has failed to fulfil its obligation under paragraph 1. If the Court finds a violation of paragraph 1, it shall refer the case to the Committee of Ministers for consideration of the measures to be taken. If the Court finds no violation of article 46(1), it shall refer the case to the Committee of Ministers, which shall close its examination of the case: article 46(3)–(5).

³⁷⁷ Cyprus case (Greece v. UK), 1956 and 1957, two applications; Austria v. Italy, 1960; five applications against Greece, 1967–70; Ireland v. UK, 1971; Cyprus v. Turkey, 1974–94, four applications, and five applications against Turkey, 1982 brought by Denmark and four other states; application brought by Denmark against Turkey, 1997; Georgia v. Russia, three applications brought by Georgia, 2007 (admissibility decision of 30 June 2009), 2008, and 2009 (struck out).

³⁷⁸ Series A, vol. 25, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 188. Note also the Court's decision in Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001; 120 ILR, p. 10.

³⁷⁹ Cyprus v. Turkey (Third Application) 13 DR 85 (1978).

³⁸⁰ The total number of applications allocated to a judicial formation in 2015 was 40,650. As at 31 December 2013, there were a total of 10,000 applications pending before a judicial formation and 45,576 applications were disposed of judicially. All of these figures mark significant decreases on previous years: see http://echr.coe.int/Documents/Stat_s_analysis_2015_ENG.pdf.

³⁸¹ Note that the issue of reservations to former articles 25 and 46 (concerning the jurisdiction of the Court prior to Protocol XI) was discussed in the case-law. The Court noted that while temporal reservations could be valid, reservations beyond this were not: see Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, vol. 310, 1995; 103 ILR, p. 622. The Court, in dismissing the territorial limitations upon the Turkish declarations under articles 25 and 46, held that such declarations therefore took effect as valid declarations without such limitations: Series A, vol. 310 pp. 27–9. Turkey had argued that if the limitations were not upheld, the declarations themselves would fall. Not to adopt this approach would, the Court noted, have entailed a weakening of the Convention system for the protection of human rights, which constituted a European constitutional public order, and would run counter to the aim of greater unity in the maintenance and further realisation of human rights: ibid. See also the Commission Report in Chrysostomos v. Turkey 68 DR 216.

³⁸² See e.g. X v. Austria 7 DR 87 (1976) concerning legislation on abortion.

³⁸³ See e.g. Pine Valley v. Ireland, Series A, vol. 222, 1991; Johnston v. Ireland, Series A, vol. 112, 1986; Marckx v. Belgium, Series A, vol. 31, 1979; Campbell and Cosans v. UK, Series A, vol. 48, 1982; Eckle v. Federal Republic of Germany, Series A, vol. 51, 1982; and Vijayanathan and Pusparajah v. France, Series A, vol. 241-B, 1992.

an individual may, under certain conditions, claim to be the victim of a violation occasioned by the mere existence of secret measures or of legislation permitting secret measures, without having to allege that such measures were in fact applied to him.³⁸⁴

A near relative of the victim, for example, could also raise an issue where the violation alleged was personally prejudicial or where there existed a valid personal interest.³⁸⁵

The Court may only deal with a matter once all domestic remedies have been exhausted according to the generally accepted rules of international law and within a period of six months from the date on which the final decision was taken.³⁸⁶ Such remedies must be effective. Where there are no domestic remedies to exhaust, the act or decision complained against will itself normally be taken as the 'final decision' for the purposes of article 26.³⁸⁷ The need to exhaust domestic remedies applies also in the case of inter-state cases, as does the six-month rule.³⁸⁸ In addition, no petition may be dealt with which is anonymous or substantially the same as a matter already examined, and any petition which is incompatible with the Convention, manifestly ill-founded³⁸⁹ or an abuse of the right of petition is to be rendered inadmissible.³⁹⁰ Further, an application shall be declared inadmissible where the applicant has not suffered a significant disadvantage, unless respect for human rights as defined in the Convention and the Protocols thereto requires an examination of the application on the merits and provided that no case may be rejected on this ground which has not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal.³⁹¹

The Court, in an ever-increasing number of judgments,³⁹² has developed a jurisprudence of considerable importance.³⁹³ It has operated on the basis of a number of evolving principles. In particular, the Court will allow states a degree of leeway in a system composed of obligations of ³⁸⁴ The Klass case, Series A, vol. 28, 1979, pp. 17–18; 58 ILR, pp. 423, 442. See also e.g. the Marckx case, Series A, vol. 31, 1979, pp. 12–14; 58 ILR, pp. 561, 576; the Dudgeon case, Series A, vol. 45, 1982, p. 18; 67 ILR, pp. 395, 410; the Belgian Linguistics case, Series A, vol. 6, 1968; 45 ILR, p. 136; and Norris v. Ireland, Series A, No. 142, 1988; 89 ILR, p. 243.

³⁸⁵ See e.g. Application 100/55, X v. FRG, 1 Yearbook of the ECHR, 1955–7, p. 162 and Application 1478/62, Y v. Belgium, Yearbook of the ECHR, 1963, p. 590. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001; 120 ILR, p. 10.

³⁸⁶ Article 35. See Akdivar v. Turkey, Judgment of 16 September 1996. Note that the six-month time limit will be reduced to four months once Protocol No. 15 is in force. As to the meaning of domestic or local remedies in international law, see below, p. 620.

³⁸⁷ See e.g. X v. UK, 8 DR, pp. 211, 212–13 and Cyprus v. Turkey, Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1978, pp. 240–2. Where, however, there is a permanent state of affairs which is still continuing, the question of the six-month rule can only arise after the state of affairs has ceased to exist: see e.g. De Becker v. Belgium, 2 Yearbook of the European Convention on Human Rights, 1958, pp. 214, 244. The rule is strict and cannot be waived by the state concerned: see Walker v. UK, Judgment of 25 January 2000.

³⁸⁸ See Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 82 ff. Note that the Court suggested that the remedies provided by the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' had to be taken into account in this situation, ibid.

³⁸⁹ See e.g. Boyle and Rice v. UK, Series A, vol. 131, 1988. This does not apply to inter-state cases.

³⁹⁰ Article 35. See e.g. the Vagrancy case, Series A, vol. 12, 1971; 56 ILR, p. 351.

³⁹¹ Article 35(3)(b). See e.g. N. Vogiatzis, 'The Admissibility Criterion under Article 35(3)(b) ECHR: A "Significant Disadvantage" to Human Rights Protection?', 65 ICLQ, 2016, p. 185. The phrase 'and provided that no case may be rejected on this ground which has not been duly considered by a domestic tribunal' is to be deleted once Protocol No. 15 is in force.

³⁹² One judgment was delivered in its first year of operation in 1960; 6 in 1976; 17 in 1986; 126 in 1996; 844 in 2002; and 1,678 in 2012: see Analysis of Statistics 2012, http://echr.coe.int/Pages/home.aspx?p=reports&tc=#n1347956867932_pointer.

³⁹³ See e.g. P. Mahoney, 'Judicial Activism and Judicial Self-Restraint in the European Court of Human Rights: Two Sides of the Same Coin', 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 57.

contracting states and a European-level supervisory mechanism. The doctrine of ‘the margin of appreciation’ means that the Court will not interfere in certain domestic spheres while retaining a general overall supervision. For example, in Brannigan and McBride v. UK, the Court held that states benefit from a ‘wide margin of appreciation’ with regard to the process of determining the existence and scope of a public emergency permitting derogation from certain provisions of the Convention under article 15.³⁹⁴ This margin of appreciation will vary depending upon the content of the rights in question in substantive proceedings or on the balancing of rights in contention. It will be wider with regard to issues of personal morality,³⁹⁵ but narrower in other cases.³⁹⁶ The essential point is, as the Court noted in Z v. UK, that: ‘It is fundamental to the machinery of protection established by the Convention that the national systems themselves provide redress for breaches of its provision, the Court exercising its supervisory role subject to the principle of subsidiarity.’³⁹⁷ This also means that the Court is wary of undertaking fact-finding³⁹⁸ and similarly cautious about indicating which measures a state should take in order to comply with its obligations under the Convention.³⁹⁹

The Court has dealt with a number of critical issues. In Ireland v. UK,⁴⁰⁰ for example, the Court found that the five interrogation techniques used by the UK Forces in Northern Ireland amounted to a practice of inhuman and degrading treatment, contrary to article 3.⁴⁰¹ In McCann v. UK,⁴⁰² the Court narrowly held that the killing by members of the security forces of three members of an IRA unit suspected of involvement in a bombing mission in Gibraltar violated the right to life under article 2. In Golder v. UK,⁴⁰³ the Court inferred from article 6(1) a fundamental right of access to the courts, and the Court has emphasised the importance of fair trial mechanisms such as the principle of contempt of court.⁴⁰⁴ The Court has also developed a considerable jurisprudence in the field of due process⁴⁰⁵ that is having a significant impact upon domestic law, not least in the UK. A brief reference to some further examples will suffice. In the Marckx case,⁴⁰⁶ the Court emphasised that Belgian legislation discriminating against illegitimate children violated the Convention, while in the Young, James and Webster case⁴⁰⁷ it was held that railway workers dismissed for refusing to join a trade union in the UK were entitled to compensation. In the Brogan case,⁴⁰⁸ the Court felt that periods of detention under anti-terrorist legislation in the UK before appearance before a judge or other judicial officer of at least four days violated the ³⁹⁴ Series A, No. 258-B, 1994, para. 43. ³⁹⁵ See e.g. Handyside v. UK, Series A, vol. 24, 1981; 58 ILR, p. 150.

³⁹⁶ E.g. fair trial and due process questions: see e.g. The Sunday Times v. UK, Series A, vol. 30, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 491.

³⁹⁷ Judgment of 10 May 2001, para. 103. Note that once Protocol No. 15 is in force, the phrase ‘Affirming that the High Contracting Parties, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity, have the primary responsibility to secure the rights and freedoms defined in this Convention and the Protocols thereto, and that in doing so they enjoy a margin of appreciation, subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights established by this Convention’ will be inserted at the end of the preamble to the Convention.

³⁹⁸ See e.g. the Tanli case, Judgment of 10 April 2001.

³⁹⁹ The Vgt Verein gegen Tierfabriken case, Judgment of 28 June 2001, para. 78.

⁴⁰⁰ Series A, vol. 25, 1978; 58 ILR, p. 188.

⁴⁰¹ See also Cyprus v. Turkey, where the Court held that the discriminatory treatment of the Greek Cypriots in the Turkish occupied north of Cyprus amounted to degrading treatment, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 302–11; 120 ILR, p. 10.

⁴⁰² Series A, vol. 324, 1995. ⁴⁰³ Series A, vol. 18, 1975; 57 ILR, p. 200.

⁴⁰⁴ See e.g. Handyside v. UK, Series A, vol. 24, 1981; 58 ILR, p. 150; the Dudgeon case, Series A, vol. 45, 1982; 67 ILR, p. 395; and the Sunday Times case, Series A, vol. 30, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 491.

⁴⁰⁵ See e.g. S. Trechsel, ‘Liberty and Security of Person’, in Macdonald et al., European System, p. 277; P. Van Dijk, ‘Access to Court’, ibid., p. 345 and O. Jacot-Guillarmod, ‘Rights Related to Good Administration (Article 6)’, ibid., p. 381.

⁴⁰⁶ Series A, vol. 31, 1979; 58 ILR, p. 561. ⁴⁰⁷ Series A, vol. 44, 1981; 62 ILR, p. 359. ⁴⁰⁸ Series A, vol. 145, 1988.

Convention. This decision, however, prompted a notice of derogation under article 15 of the Convention by the UK government.⁴⁰⁹

In the important Soering case,⁴¹⁰ the Court unanimously held that the extradition of a German national from the UK to the United States, where the applicant feared he would be sentenced to death on a charge of capital murder and be subjected to the 'death row' phenomenon, would constitute a breach of article 3 of the Convention prohibiting torture and inhuman and degrading treatment and punishment. Further, the Court has held that the deportation to Iran of a woman who in the circumstances would have been at risk of punishment by stoning would violate article 3.⁴¹¹ The Court has also emphasised that national security considerations had no application where article 3 violations were in question.⁴¹²

The Court has approached its task in a generally evolving way. For example, it has deduced from a number of substantive provisions that circumstances may arise in which a state would have a positive obligation to conduct an inquiry or effective official investigation. This would arise, for instance, where individuals have been killed as a result of the use of force by agents of the state,⁴¹³ or while in custody,⁴¹⁴ or 'upon proof of an arguable claim that an individual, who was last seen in the custody of agents of the state, subsequently disappeared in a context which may be considered life-threatening'.⁴¹⁵ Similarly, the Court has held that the right to life under article 2 entails also the obligation upon states to take appropriate steps for the safeguarding of life within the jurisdiction.⁴¹⁶ Linked with these provisions is article 13 which requires the state party to provide a remedy, effective in law and in practice, which is able both to deal with the substance of the applicant's complaint and to provide an appropriate legal redress.⁴¹⁷ The jurisprudence of the Court with regard to article 13 demonstrates that in an increasing number of cases that provision is understood as requiring states to undertake an effective investigation into arguable claims of the violation of Convention rights. This has included claims of violations of articles 2, 3, 5 and 6.⁴¹⁸

Execution of Court decisions is the responsibility of the Committee of Ministers.⁴¹⁹ This is a political body, the executive organ of the Council of Europe,⁴²⁰ and consists of the Foreign Ministers, or their deputies, of all the member states.⁴²¹ The Committee of Ministers performs a variety of functions with regard to the protection of human rights. For example, in its Declaration on Compliance with Commitments Accepted by Member States of the Council of ⁴⁰⁹ For the text, see e.g. 7 NQHR, 1989, p. 255. See also Brannigan and McBride v. UK, Series A, vol. 258-B, 1993.

⁴¹⁰ Series A, vol. 161, 1989. See also Mamaikulov and Abdurasulovic v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 6 February 2003, paras. 66 ff., and El-Masri v. Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Judgment of 13 December 2012.

⁴¹¹ Jabari v. Turkey, Judgment of 11 July 2000. ⁴¹² Chahal v. UK, Judgment of 15 November 1996.

⁴¹³ See e.g. McCann v. UK, Series A, vol. 324, 1996. ⁴¹⁴ E.g. Tanli, Judgment of 10 April 2001, para. 152.

⁴¹⁵ Cyprus v. Turkey, Judgment of 10 May 2001, para. 132; 120 ILR, p. 10. ⁴¹⁶ LCB v. UK, Judgment of 9 June 1998.

⁴¹⁷ Soering v. UK, Judgment of 7 July 1989, at para. 120. See also Aksoy v. Turkey, Judgment of 18 December 1996, at para. 95, and Akdeniz v. Turkey, Judgment of 31 May 2005, at para. 138.

⁴¹⁸ E.g. Kaya v. Turkey, Judgment of 19 February 1998, at para. 107; Ilhan v. Turkey, Judgment of 27 June 2000, at para. 97; Kurt v. Turkey, Judgment of 25 May 1998, at para. 140; and Kudla v. Poland, Judgment of 26 October 2000, at paras. 146–9. The Court has noted that 'the requirements of Article 13 are broader than a Contracting State's obligation under Article 2 to conduct an effective investigation into the disappearance of a person last seen in the hands of the authorities': Akdeniz v. Turkey, Judgment of 31 May 2005, at para. 139, and Estamirov and Others v. Russia, Judgment of 12 October 2006, at para. 118.

⁴¹⁹ Article 46(2). See also above, footnote [369]. ⁴²⁰ Article 13 of the Statute of the Council of Europe.

⁴²¹ Article 14 of the Statute of the Council of Europe.

Europe, adopted on 10 November 1994, the Committee decided that it would consider the question of implementation of commitments concerning the situation of democracy, human rights and the rule of law in any member state which may be referred to it by member states, the Secretary-General or on the basis of a recommendation of the Parliamentary Assembly.

Where the Court has found a violation, the matter will be placed on the agenda of the Committee of Ministers and will stay there until the respondent government has confirmed that any sum awarded in just satisfaction under article 41 has been paid and/or any required individual measure has been taken and/or any general measures have been adopted preventing new similar violations or putting an end to continuing violation.⁴²² Information so provided by states is to be accessible to the public, unless the Committee decides otherwise in order to protect legitimate public or private interests.⁴²³

The European Social Charter⁴²⁴

The Charter⁴²⁵ consists of a statement of long-term objectives coupled with a list of more restricted rights. The Charter covers labour rights and trade union rights,⁴²⁶ the protection of specific groups such as children, women, disabled persons and migrant workers,⁴²⁷ social security rights,⁴²⁸ and protection of the family.⁴²⁹ In an attempt to deal with economic disparities within Europe, the Charter provides for a system whereby only ten of the forty-five paragraphs (including five 'key articles'⁴³⁰) need to be accepted upon ratification. The Charter⁴³¹ is implemented by the European Committee of Social Rights, consisting of fifteen independent experts ⁴²² Rules 3 and 4 of the Rules of Procedure of the Committee of Ministers. Note that where the Court finds a systemic defect in the national legal order, which has or is likely to produce a large number of applications, a remedy may be required of the state that would apply to the class of individuals in the same category: see Broniowski v. Poland, Judgment of 22 June 2004. See also V. Colandrea, 'On the Power of the European Court of Human Rights to Order Specific Non-monetary Measures', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 396.

⁴²³ Rule 5.

⁴²⁴ See e.g. D. J. Harris, The European Social Charter, 2nd edn, Charlottesville, 2000, 'A Fresh Impetus for the European Charter', 41 ICLQ, 1992, p. 659, and 'The System of Supervision of the European Social Charter – Problems and Options for the Future', in The Future of European Social Policy (ed. L. Betten), 2nd edn, Deventer, 1991, p. 1; 25 Years of the European Social Charter (ed. A. P. C. M. Jaspers and L. Betten), 1988; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, pp. 233 ff; H. Wiebringhaus, 'La Charte Sociale Européenne: 20 Ans Après la Conclusion du Traité', AFDI, 1982, p. 934; O. Kahn-Freund, 'The European Social Charter', in European Law and the Individual (ed. F. G. Jacobs), London, 1976, and 'La Charte Sociale Européenne et la Convention Européenne des Droits de l'Homme', 8 HRJ, 1975, p. 527; F. M. Van Asbeck, 'La Charte Sociale Européenne', in Mélanges Rolin, Paris, 1964, p. 427; and T. Novitz, 'Remedies for Violation of Social Rights Within the Council of Europe', in The Future of Remedies in Europe (ed. C. Kilpatrick, T. Novitz and P. Skidmore), London, 2000, p. 230. See also www.coe.int/en/web/turin-european-social-charter/home.

⁴²⁵ As at 21 March 2016, there were forty-three states parties to the Charter. ⁴²⁶ Articles 1–6, 9–10.

⁴²⁷ Articles 7–8, 15, 18–19. ⁴²⁸ Articles 11–14.

⁴²⁹ Articles 16–17. An Additional Protocol was signed in 1988 which added four more economic and social rights, guaranteeing: the rights to equal opportunities in employment without discrimination based on sex; information and consultation of workers within the undertaking; participation in the determination and improvement of working conditions; and social protection of elderly persons. The Protocol entered into force on 4 September 1992.

⁴³⁰ Out of the following seven rights: the right to work, organise, bargain collectively, social security, social and medical assistance, and the rights of the family to special protection, and of migrant workers and their families to protection and assistance: see article 20.

⁴³¹ As amended by the Turin Protocol 1991 and as revised in 1996. The revised Charter came into force in 1999 and gathered together the rights contained in the 1961 instrument as amended and the 1988 Protocol and added new rights, such as the right to protection against poverty and social exclusion, the right to housing, the right to protection in cases of termination of employment, and the right to protection against sexual harassment in the workplace.

ected for a six-year period, renewable once. States parties submit annual reports on some of the provisions of the Charter. These provisions have been divided since 2007 into four thematic groups, each group being the subject of an annual review.⁴³² These reports are examined by the Committee and its conclusions published. If a state does not implement a Committee decision, the Committee of Ministers addresses a recommendation to the state to the same effect. A system of Collective Complaints was established by an Additional Protocol adopted in 1995. This provides that international organisations of employers and trade unions, other international non-governmental organisations with consultative status with the Council of Europe placed on a list for this purpose by the Governmental Committee, and representative national organisations of employers and trade unions within the jurisdiction of the contracting party against which they have lodged a complaint may submit complaints alleging unsatisfactory application of the Charter.⁴³³ Contracting parties may also make a declaration recognising the right of any other representative national non-governmental organisation within their jurisdiction which has particular competence in the matters governed by the Charter to lodge complaints against them.⁴³⁴ Such complaints are lodged with the European Committee of Social Rights, which makes a decision on both admissibility and on the merits. Its decision is sent to the parties concerned and to the Committee of Ministers, which adopts a resolution on the matter.

The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman and Degrading Treatment or Punishment⁴³⁵

This innovative Convention was signed in 1987 and came into force on 1 February 1989.⁴³⁶ The purpose of the Convention is to enable the supervision of persons deprived of their liberty and, in particular, to prevent the torture or other ill-treatment of such persons.⁴³⁷ The Committee for the Prevention of Torture was established under the Convention,⁴³⁸ placing, as it has noted, a 'proactive non-judicial mechanism alongside the existing reactive judicial mechanisms of the European Commission and European Court of Human Rights'.⁴³⁹ The Committee is given a fact-

⁴³² These groups are employment, training and equal opportunities; health, social security and social protection; labour rights; and children, families and migrants respectively.

⁴³³ Article 1. ⁴³⁴ Article 2.

⁴³⁵ See e.g. M. Evans and R. Morgan, Combating Torture in Europe – The Work and Standards of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture, Strasbourg, 2001; J. Murdoch, 'The Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 220; M. Evans and R. Morgan, 'The European Torture Committee: Membership Issues', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 249; A. Cassese, 'A New Approach to Human Rights: The European Convention for the Prevention of Torture', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 128; and Cassese, 'Une Nouvelle Approche des Droits de l'Homme: La Convention Européenne pour la Prévention de la Torture', 93 RGDIP, 1989, p. 6; M. Evans and R. Morgan, 'The European Convention on the Prevention of Torture: Operational Practice', 41 ICLQ, 1992, p. 590; and C. Jenkins, 'An Appraisal of the Role and Work of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment', SOAS Working Paper No. 11, 1996. See also www.cpt.coe.int/en/.

⁴³⁶ All forty-seven members of the Council of Europe are parties. By Protocol No. 1 non-member states of the Council of Europe are allowed to accede to the Convention at the invitation of the Committee of Ministers, CPT/Inf (93) 17. This came into force in March 2002.

⁴³⁷ The Committee established under the Convention described its function in terms of strengthening 'the cordon sanitaire that separates acceptable and unacceptable treatment or behaviour': see First General Report, CPT (91) 3, para. 3.

⁴³⁸ See Resolution DH (89) 26 of the Committee of Ministers adopted on 19 September 1989 for the election of the members of the Committee. Note that under Protocol No. 2 to the Convention, the members of the Committee may be re-elected twice (rather than once as specified in article 5). The Protocol came into force in March 2002.

⁴³⁹ See Fifth General Report, CPT/Inf (95) 10, 1995, p. 3.

finding and reporting function. The Committee is empowered to carry out both visits of a periodic nature and ad hoc visits to places of detention in order to examine the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty with a view to strengthening, if necessary, the protection of such persons from torture and from inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Periodic visits are carried out to all contracting parties on a regular basis, while ad hoc visits are organised when they appear to the Committee to be required in the circumstances.⁴⁴⁰ Thus periodic visits are planned in advance.⁴⁴¹ The real innovation of the Convention, however, lies in the competence of the Committee to visit places of detention when the situation so warrants.⁴⁴² When the Committee is not in session, the Bureau (i.e. the President and Vice-President of the Committee)⁴⁴³ may in cases of urgency decide, on the Committee's behalf, on the carrying out of such an ad hoc visit.⁴⁴⁴ States parties agree to permit visits to any place within their jurisdiction where persons are deprived of their liberty by a public authority,⁴⁴⁵ although in exceptional circumstances, the competent authorities of the state concerned may make representations to the Committee against a visit at the time or place proposed on grounds of national defence, public safety, serious disorder, the medical condition of a person or because an urgent interrogation relating to a serious crime is in progress.⁴⁴⁶ The Committee may interview in private persons deprived of their liberty and may communicate freely with any person whom it believes can supply relevant information.⁴⁴⁷

After each visit, the Committee draws up a report for transmission to the party concerned. That report will remain confidential⁴⁴⁸ unless and until the state party concerned decides to make it public.⁴⁴⁹ Where a state refuses to co-operate or to improve matters in the light of recommendations made, the Committee may decide, after the state has had an opportunity to make known its views, by a two-thirds majority to issue a public statement.⁴⁵⁰ The Committee makes an annual general report on its activities to the Committee of Ministers, which is transmitted to the Parliamentary Assembly and made public.⁴⁵¹ The relationship between the approach taken by the Committee as revealed in its published reports and the practice under the European Human ⁴⁴⁰ See articles 1 and 7. See also the Rules of Procedure of the Committee, 1989, CPT/Inf (89) 2, especially Rules 29–35. The Rules have been amended on a number of occasions, the most recent being 12 March 1997. See also Seventeenth General Report, 2007, CPT/Inf (2007) 39, p. 14.

⁴⁴¹ Note that 206 periodic visits had been made as of July 2013: see www.cpt.coe.int/en/about.htm.

⁴⁴² As of July 2013, ad hoc visits had been made on 138 occasions: see www.cpt.coe.int/en/about.htm. See also Murdoch, 'Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', p. 227.

⁴⁴³ Rule 9 of the Rules of Procedure, 2008. ⁴⁴⁴ Ibid., Rule 30. ⁴⁴⁵ Article 2. ⁴⁴⁶ Article 9(1). ⁴⁴⁷ Article 8.

⁴⁴⁸ As does the information gathered by the Committee in relation to a visit and its consultations with the contracting state concerned: article 11(1).

⁴⁴⁹ See Rule 39. Most reports have been published together with the comments of contracting states upon them. The Fifth General Report of the Committee revealed that twenty-one of the thirty-seven visit reports had been published and that there was good reason to believe that most of the remaining sixteen would be published soon, CPT/Inf (95) 10, p. 6. See also 25th Annual General Report for 2015, showing that only a few reports had not been published, www.cpt.coe.int/en/annual/CPT-Report-2015.pdf at p. 58.

⁴⁵⁰ Article 10(2). See e.g. the public statements concerning police detention conditions in Turkey: CPT/Inf (93) 1, paras. 21 and 37. The situation concerning Chechnya, Russia, has also led to public statements being made in 2001, 2003 and 2007: see e.g. CPT/Inf (2002) 15, Appendix 6 and CPT/Inf (2007), Appendix 9. A public statement was made concerning Bulgaria in 2015: see www.cpt.coe.int/en/annual/CPT-Report-2015.pdf at p. 7.

⁴⁵¹ Article 12. This is subject to the rules of confidentiality in article 11. Note that the Committee reports also include general substantive sections for the general guidance of states: see, for a collection of these, The CPT Standards, CPT/Inf/E (2002) 1.

Rights Convention is particularly interesting and appears to demonstrate that the Committee has adopted a more flexible attitude to issues relating to detention and ill-treatment.⁴⁵²

The Council of Europe Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities⁴⁵³

The question of minorities is addressed in the European Convention on Human Rights only in terms of one possible ground of prohibited discrimination stipulated in article 14. However, the Council of Europe has been dealing with the issue of minorities in a more vigorous manner in more recent years. Resolution 192 (1988) of the Standing Conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe proposed the text of a European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, while Recommendation 1134 (1990) of the Parliamentary Assembly on the Rights of Minorities called for either a protocol to the European Convention or a special convention on this topic.⁴⁵⁴ The Committee of Ministers adopted on 22 June 1992 the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.⁴⁵⁵ Under this Charter, a variety of measures to promote the use of regional or minority languages is suggested, for example, in the fields of education, court proceedings, public services, media, cultural facilities, economic and social life, and transfrontier exchanges. Implementation is by periodic reports to the Secretary-General of the Council of Europe in a form prescribed by the Committee of Ministers.⁴⁵⁶ The Secretary-General also makes a two-yearly detailed report to the Parliamentary Assembly on the application of the Charter.⁴⁵⁷ The Committee of Ministers may invite any non-member state of the Council of Europe to accede to the Charter.⁴⁵⁸

The Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities was adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe on 10 November 1994 and opened for signature on 1 February 1995.⁴⁵⁹ The Framework Convention underlines the right to equality before the law of persons belonging to national minorities and prohibits discrimination based on belonging to a national minority. Contracting parties to the Framework Convention undertake to adopt, ⁴⁵² See e.g. Murdoch, 'Work of the Council of Europe's Torture Committee', pp. 238 ff.

⁴⁵³ See generally, Minorities, their Rights and the Monitoring of the European Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities (ed. T. H. Malloy and U. Caruso), The Hague, 2013; The Rights of Minorities: A Commentary on the European Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities (ed. M. Weller), Oxford, 2006; The European Convention for the Protection of National Minorities (ed. P. Lemmens, A. Alen, B. de Witte and A. Verstichel), 2008; P. Thornberry and M. Estebanez, The Council of Europe and Minorities, Strasbourg, 1994; and G. Pentasugglia, Minorities in International Law, Strasbourg, 2002. See also www.coe.int/en/web/minorities/home.

⁴⁵⁴ See also Recommendations 1177 (1992) and 1201 (1993).

⁴⁵⁵ It came into force in March 1998. See www.coe.int/t/dg4/education/minlang/.

⁴⁵⁶ Article 15. See e.g. the reports by Germany, MIN-LANG (2013) PR 02, by the UK, MIN-LANG (2013) PR 01 and by Poland, MIN-LANG (2015) PR 03. Such reports are examined by a committee of experts, composed of one member per contracting party, nominated by the party concerned, appointed for a period of six years and eligible for re-appointment (articles 16 and 17). Bodies or associations legally established in a party may draw the attention of the committee of experts to matters relating to the undertakings entered into by that party and, on the basis of states' reports, the committee will itself report to the Committee of Ministers. The committee of experts' report may be accompanied by the comments which the parties have been requested to make and may also contain the proposals of the committee of experts to the Committee of Ministers for the preparation of such recommendations of the latter body to one or more of the parties as may be required: see e.g. the Committee of Ministers Recommendations to the UK, CM/RecChL (2014) 3; and Germany, CM/RecChL (2014) 5.

⁴⁵⁷ Article 16. See the first biennial report in 2000, Doc. 8879, and the second in 2002, Doc. 9540. ⁴⁵⁸ Article 20.

⁴⁵⁹ The Convention came into force on 1 February 1998. See also the Explanatory Report to the Framework Convention for the Protection of National Minorities, 1995. An ad hoc Committee for the Protection of National Minorities (CAHMIN) was established. Note that in January 1996, it was decided to suspend the work of the Committee on the drafting of an Additional Protocol: see CAHMIN (95) 22 Addendum, 1996.

where necessary, adequate measures to promote in all areas of economic, social, political and cultural life, full and effective equality between persons belonging to a national minority and to the majority.⁴⁶⁰ The parties agree to promote the conditions necessary for persons belonging to minorities to develop their culture and to preserve the essential elements of their identity, namely their religion, language, traditions and cultural heritage.⁴⁶¹ The collective expression of individual human rights of persons belonging to national minorities is to be respected,⁴⁶² while in areas inhabited by such persons traditionally or in substantial numbers, the parties shall endeavour to ensure as far as possible the condition which would make it possible to use the minority languages in relations between those persons and the administrative authorities.⁴⁶³ By article 15, the parties agree to refrain from measures which alter the geographic proportions of the population in areas inhabited by persons belonging to national minorities.

The implementation of this Framework Convention is monitored by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe⁴⁶⁴ with the assistance of an advisory committee of experts⁴⁶⁵ and on the basis of periodic reports from contracting states.⁴⁶⁶ The Committee of Ministers adopted rules on monitoring arrangements in 1997⁴⁶⁷ and the Advisory Committee started operating in June 1998. The Committee examines state reports,⁴⁶⁸ which are made public by the Council of Europe upon receipt from the state party, and prepares an opinion on the measures taken by that party.⁴⁶⁹ The Committee may request additional information from a state party or other sources, including individuals and NGOs, but cannot deal with individual complaints. It may hold meetings with governments, and has to do so if the government concerned so requests, and may hold meetings with others than the governments concerned, during the course of country visits. Having received the opinion of the Advisory Committee, the Committee of Ministers will take the final decisions (called conclusions) concerning the adequacy of the measures taken by the state party. Where appropriate, it may also adopt recommendations in respect of the state party concerned. The conclusions and recommendations of the Committee of Ministers shall be made public upon their adoption, together with any comments the state party may have submitted in respect of the opinion delivered by the Advisory Committee. The opinion of the Advisory Committee is as a rule made public together with the conclusions of the Committee of Ministers. A first cycle of monitoring began in 1998 with thirty-four opinions adopted by the Advisory Committee and twenty-nine resolutions adopted by the Committee of Ministers. Such monitoring cycles take place every five years.

⁴⁶⁰ Article 4.

⁴⁶¹ Article 5. The parties also agree to refrain from assimilation policies and practices where this is against the will of persons belonging to national minorities.

⁴⁶² E.g. the freedoms of peaceful assembly, association, expression and thought, conscience and religion: article 7. See also articles 8 and 9.

⁴⁶³ Upon request and where such a request corresponds to a real need, article 10(2). Similarly, with regard to the display of traditional local names, street names and other topographical indications intended for the public in the minority language, article 11(3), and with regard to adequate opportunities for being taught the minority language or for receiving instruction in that language, article 14(2).

⁴⁶⁴ Article 24. Note that parties which are not members of the Council of Europe shall participate in the implementation mechanism according to modalities to be determined. Accordingly, the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia became a party to the Convention on 11 May 2001 and its first report became due on 1 September 2002.

⁴⁶⁵ Article 26. ⁴⁶⁶ Article 25. The first reports became due on 1 February 1999.

⁴⁶⁷ Resolution (97) 10 and see H(1998)005 rev.11.

⁴⁶⁸ Guidelines for such reports have been issued by the Committee: see e.g. ACFC/INF(2003)001 and ACFC/III(2013)001.

⁴⁶⁹ See, for a list of opinions available at the time of writing, www.coe.int/en/web/minorities/compilation-of-opinions.

While the range of rights accorded to members of minorities is clearly greater than that envisaged in UN instruments,⁴⁷⁰ its ambit is narrower in being confined to 'national minorities'. The Framework Convention itself provides no definition of that term since no consensus existed as to its meaning,⁴⁷¹ although Recommendation 1201 (1993) adopted by the Parliamentary Assembly and reaffirmed in Recommendation 1255 (1995) suggests that it refers to persons who: reside on the territory of the state concerned and are citizens of it; maintain long-standing, firm and lasting ties with that state; display distinctive ethnic, cultural, religious or linguistic characteristics; are sufficiently representative, although smaller in numbers than the rest of the population of that state or of a region of that state; and are motivated by a concern to preserve together that which constitutes their common identity, including their culture, their traditions, their religion or their language. The narrowing of regard to persons belonging to national minorities who are citizens of the state concerned is perhaps a matter of concern.⁴⁷² The issue of the protection of minority rights is the subject of continuing discussion as to both their nature and scope.⁴⁷³

The European Union⁴⁷⁴

The Treaty of Rome, 1957 established the European Economic Community and is not of itself a human rights treaty. However, the European Court of Justice has held that subsumed within Community law are certain relevant unwritten general principles of law, emanating from several sources.⁴⁷⁵ The Court noted in the Internationale Handelsgesellschaft case⁴⁷⁶ that 'respect for fundamental rights forms an integral part of the general principles of law protected by the Court ⁴⁷⁰ See above, p. 226.

⁴⁷¹ See the Explanatory Report to the Convention, which states that, 'It was decided to adopt a pragmatic approach, based on the recognition that at this stage, it is impossible to arrive at a definition capable of mustering general support of all Council of Europe member States', H(1995)010, para. 12. The European Court of Human Rights has also referred to the problem of defining national minorities: see Gorzelik v. Poland, Judgment of 20 December 2001, para. 62.

⁴⁷² See e.g. R. Higgins, 'Minority Rights Discrepancies and Divergencies Between the International Covenant and the Council of Europe System', in Liber Amicorum for Henry Schermers, The Hague, 1994.

⁴⁷³ See e.g. Parliamentary Assembly Recommendation Rec 1492 (2001) and the response of the Advisory Committee dated 14 September 2001. The Council of Europe has adopted measures with regard to other areas of human rights activities of some relevance to the above issues: see e.g. the European Charter of Local Self-Government, 1985; the European Convention on the Participation of Foreigners in Public Life at Local Level, 1992; the European Outline Convention on Transfrontier Co-operation between Territorial Communities or Authorities, 1980; the European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers, 1977; and the European Convention on the Exercise of Children's Rights, 1995.

⁴⁷⁴ See e.g. D. Chalmers, G. Davies and G. Monti, European Union Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2014; D. Chalmers and A. Tomkins, European Union Public Law, Cambridge, 2007; European Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (ed. D. Ehlers), Berlin, 2007; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, pp. 243 ff.; The European Union and Human Rights (ed. N. Neuwahl and A. Rosas), Dordrecht, 1995; The EU and Human Rights (ed. P. Alston), Oxford, 1999; L. Betten and N. Grief, EU Law and Human Rights, London, 1998; Steiner and Woods: EU Law (ed. L. Woods and P. Watson), Oxford, 2014; and The Oxford Handbook on European Law (ed. A. Arnall and D. Chalmers), Oxford, 2015; T. C. Hartley, The Foundations of European Community Law, 8th edn, Oxford, 2014; M. Mendelson, 'The European Court of Justice and Human Rights', 1 Yearbook of European Law, 1981, p. 126; and H. Schermers, 'The European Communities Bound by Fundamental Human Rights', 27 Common Market Law Review, 1990, p. 249.

⁴⁷⁵ See e.g. Stauder v. City of Ulm [1969] ECR 419; Internationale Handelsgesellschaft [1970] ECR 1125; Nold v. EC Commission [1974] ECR 491; Kirk [1984] ECR 2689; and Johnston v. Chief Constable of the RUC [1986] 3 CMLR 240. See also the Joint Declaration by the European Parliament, the Council and the Commission of 5 April 1979, Official Journal, 1977, C103/1; the Joint Declaration Against Racism and Xenophobia, 11 June 1986, Official Journal, 1986, C158/1 and the European Parliament's Declaration of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms, 1989, EC Bulletin, 4/1989.

⁴⁷⁶ [1970] ECR 1125, 1134.

of Justice',⁴⁷⁷ while in Nold v. Commission,⁴⁷⁸ the Court emphasised that measures incompatible with fundamental rights recognised and protected by the constitutions of member states could not be upheld. It was also held that international treaties for the protection of human rights on which member states have collaborated, or of which they are signatories, could supply guidelines which should be followed within the framework of Community law.⁴⁷⁹ The European Convention on Human Rights is clearly the prime example of this and it has been referred to on several occasions by the Court.⁴⁸⁰ It is intended that the EU will accede to the European Convention on Human Rights. The effect of this would be to subject the EU and its legal acts to the jurisdiction of the European Court of Human Rights.⁴⁸¹

The Treaty on European Union (the Maastricht Treaty), 1992 amended the Treaty of Rome and established the European Union, founded on the European Communities supplemented by the policies and forms of co-operation established under the 1992 Treaty. Article F(2) of Title I noted that the Union 'shall respect fundamental rights', as guaranteed by the European Convention on Human Rights and as they result from common constitutional traditions, 'as general principles of Community law'. Under article K.1 of Title VI, the member states agreed that asylum, immigration, drug, fraud, civil and criminal judicial co-operation, customs co-operation and certain forms of police co-operation would be regarded as 'matters of common interest', which under article K.2 would be dealt with in compliance with the European Convention on Human Rights and the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951. From the early 1990s, the European Communities began to include human rights references in their trade and aid policies, formalised in article 177(2), and from the mid-1990s, all trade and co-operation agreements contained provisions concerning respect for human rights.⁴⁸²

The Treaty of Amsterdam, which came into force on 1 May 1999, inserted a new article 6 into the Treaty on European Union (now the Consolidated Treaty on European Union since the coming into force of the Treaty of Lisbon in 2009), which stated that the European Union 'is founded on the principles of liberty, democracy, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the rule of law, principles which are common to the Member States', and provided that the Union 'shall respect fundamental rights as guaranteed by' the European Convention on Human Rights.⁴⁸³ Member states violating these principles in a 'serious and persistent' manner risk the suspension of certain of their rights deriving from the application of the Union Treaty.⁴⁸⁴

⁴⁷⁷ See also Re Accession of the European Community to the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms 108 ILR, p. 225, and Kremzow v. Austria [1997] ECR I-2629; 113 ILR, p. 264.

⁴⁷⁸ [1974] ECR 491, 507.

⁴⁷⁹ See e.g. Hauer v. Land Rheinland-Pfalz [1979] ECR 3727, and SPUC v. Grogan [1991] ECR I-4685.

⁴⁸⁰ See e.g. Rutili [1975] ECR 1219; Valsabbia v. Commission [1980] ECR 907; Kirk [1984] ECR 2689; Dow Chemical Ibérica v. Commission [1989] ECR 3165; ERT [1991] ECR I-2925; and X v. Commission [1992] ECR II-2195 and 16 HRLJ, 1995, p. 54.

⁴⁸¹ See article 6(2) of the Consolidated Treaty of European Union, OJ, 2012, C326/15 and article 59(2) of the European Convention on Human Rights. A draft accession agreement of the EU to the Convention was prepared, www.coe.int/t/dghl/standardsetting/hrpolicy/Accession/Meeting_reports/47_1\(2013\)008rev2_EN.pdf008rev2_EN.pdf), but the EU Court of Justice in Luxembourg rejected the draft agreement in December 2014 in Opinion 2/13, <http://curia.europa.eu/jcms/upload/docs/application/pdf/2014-12/cp140180en.pdf>.

⁴⁸² See e.g. E. Riedel and M. Will, 'Human Rights Clauses in External Agreements', in Alston, The EU and Human Rights, p. 723.

⁴⁸³ See the discussion by the European Court of Justice of these principles in the context of the European Arrest Warrant, C-303/05, Advocaten voor de Wereld, Judgment of 3 May 2007. See A. Hinarejos, 'Recent Human Rights Developments in the EU Courts', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 793.

⁴⁸⁴ Article 7 of the Consolidated Treaty.

In addition, candidate countries have to respect these principles to join the Union.⁴⁸⁵ The European Union adopted the Charter of Fundamental Rights in December 2000,⁴⁸⁶ although its status at that time was uncertain. However, Advocates-General of the European Court of Justice began referring to the Charter with great frequency as part of a shared set of values within the Union,⁴⁸⁷ as has the Court of First Instance⁴⁸⁸ and more recently the European Court of Justice.⁴⁸⁹ The Charter became binding with the coming into force of the Treaty of Lisbon in 2009.

The European Parliament is also active in consideration of human rights issues.⁴⁹⁰

The OSCE (Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe)⁴⁹¹

What was initially termed the 'Helsinki process', and which more formally was referred to as the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, developed out of the Final Act of the Helsinki meeting, which was signed on 1 August 1975 after two years of discussions by the representatives of the then thirty-five participating states.⁴⁹² The Final Act⁴⁹³ dealt primarily with questions of international security and state relations, and was seen as the method by which the post-war European territorial settlement would be finally accepted. In the Western view, the Final Act constituted a political statement and accordingly could not be regarded as a binding treaty. Nonetheless, the impact of the Final Act on developments in Europe has far exceeded the impact of most legally binding treaties.

The Final Act set out in 'Basket I' a list of ten fundamental principles dealing with relations between participating states, principle 7 of which refers to 'respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief'. 'Basket III' dealt with Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields and covered family reunification, free flow of information and cultural and educational co-operation.⁴⁹⁴

⁴⁸⁵ Article 49 of the Consolidated Treaty. See also the Copenhagen Criteria 1993, including stable institutions guaranteeing democracy, the rule of law, human rights and the protection of minorities: EC Bulletin 6-1993, I.13.

⁴⁸⁶ This provided for a wide range of rights including the principle of equality before the law (article 20) and the prohibition of discrimination (article 21).

⁴⁸⁷ See e.g. BECTU [2001] ECR I-4881 and Netherlands v. Parliament and Council [2001] ECR I-7079.

⁴⁸⁸ See e.g. Jégo-Quéré v. Commission [2002] ECR II-2365.

⁴⁸⁹ See e.g. European Parliament v. Council [2006] ECR I-5769 and C-411/04P, Salzgitter Mannesmann v. Commission, Judgment of 25 January 2007. See also The EU Charter of Fundamental Rights (ed. S. Peers, T. Herve, J. Kenner and A. Ward), Oxford, 2014 and A, B and C v. Staatssecretaris van Veiligheid en Justitie, C-148/13 to C-150/13, Judgment of 2 December 2014.

⁴⁹⁰ See e.g. the Annual Reports of the Parliament on Respect for Human Rights in the European Community, www.europarl.europa.eu/aboutparliament/en/20150201PVL00015/Human-rights.

⁴⁹¹ See, for example, Rehman, International Human Rights Law, pp. 267 ff.; A. Bloed, 'Monitoring the CSCE Human Dimension: In Search of its Effectiveness', in Monitoring Human Rights in Europe (ed. Bloed et al.), Dordrecht, 1993, p. 45; The CSCE (ed. A. Bloed), Dordrecht, 1993; Human Rights, International Law and the Helsinki Accord (ed. T. Buergenthal), Montclair, NJ, 1977; T. Buergenthal, 'The Helsinki Process: Birth of a Human Rights System', in Human Rights in the World Community (ed. R. Claude and B. Weston), 2nd edn, Philadelphia, 1992, p. 256; Essays on Human Rights in the Helsinki Process (ed. A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk), Dordrecht, 1985; A. Bloed and P. Van Dijk, The Human Dimension of the Helsinki Process, Dordrecht, 1991; D. McGoldrick, 'Human Rights Developments in the Helsinki Process', 39 ICLQ, 1990, p. 923; and McGoldrick, 'The Development of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe – From Process to Institution', in Legal Visions of the New Europe (ed. B. S. Jackson and D. McGoldrick), London, 1993, p. 135. See also www.osce.org/what/human-rights.

⁴⁹² I.e. all the states of Western and Eastern Europe, except Albania, plus the United States and Canada.

⁴⁹³ For the text, see, for example, 14 ILM, 1975, p. 1292.

⁴⁹⁴ 'Basket II' covered co-operation in the fields of economics, science, technology and the environment.

At the third 'follow-up' meeting at Vienna in January 1989, great progress regarding human rights occurred,⁴⁹⁵ primarily as a result of the changed attitudes in the then USSR and in Eastern Europe, especially as regards the extent of the detailed provisions and the recognition of concrete rights and duties. The part entitled 'Questions Relating to Security in Europe' contained a Principles section, in which inter alia the parties confirmed their respect for human rights and their determination to guarantee their effective exercise. Paragraphs 13–27 contain in a detailed and concrete manner a list of human rights principles to be respected, ranging from due process rights to equality and non-discrimination and the rights of religious communities, and from the rights of minorities to the rights of refugees.⁴⁹⁶

The Charter of Paris, adopted at the Summit of Heads of State and of Government in 1990,⁴⁹⁷ called for more regular consultations at ministerial and senior official level and marked an important stage in the institutionalisation of the process, with a Council of Foreign Ministers, a Committee of Senior Officials and a secretariat being established. The section on Human Rights, Democracy and Rule of Law consisted of a list of human rights, including the right to effective remedies, full respect for which constituted 'the bedrock' for the construction of 'the new Europe'. The Moscow Human Dimension meeting of 1991⁴⁹⁸ described the Human Dimension mechanism as an essential achievement of the CSCE process and it was strengthened.⁴⁹⁹

By the time of the Helsinki Conference in 1992, the number of participating states had risen to fifty-two,⁵⁰⁰ the political climate in Europe having changed dramatically after the establishment of democratic regimes in Eastern Europe, the ending of the Soviet Union and the rise of tensions in Yugoslavia and other parts of Eastern Europe. At Helsinki, the CSCE was declared to be a regional arrangement in the sense of Chapter VIII of the UN Charter.⁵⁰¹ The post of High ⁴⁹⁵ See the text of the Concluding Document in 10 HRLJ, 1989, p. 270.

⁴⁹⁶ Paragraphs 18 and 32. The part entitled 'Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields' included an important section on Human Contacts in which the right to leave one's country and return thereto was reaffirmed. The Vienna Concluding Document also contained a part entitled 'Human Dimension of the CSCE' in which some implementation measures were provided for. The participating states decided to exchange information and to respond to requests for information and to representations made to them by other participating states on questions relating to the human dimension of the CSCE. Bilateral meetings would be held with other participating states that so requested, in order to examine such questions, while such questions could be brought to the attention of other participating states through diplomatic channels or raised at further 'follow-up' meetings or at meetings of the Conference on the Human Dimension. The procedure was confidential. The mechanism was used over 100 times between 1989 and 1992: see Bloed and Van Dijk, Human Dimension, p. 79, and McGoldrick, 'Development of the CSCE', p. 139. See also H. Tretter, 'Human Rights in the Concluding Document of the Vienna Follow-up Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe of January 15, 1989', 10 HRLJ, 1989, p. 257, and R. Brett, The Development of the Human Dimension Machinery, Essex University, 1992. In the Concluding Document of the Copenhagen meeting in 1990, the participating states proclaimed support for the principles of the rule of law, free and fair elections, democracy, pluralism and due process rights: see further 8 NQHR, 1990, p. 302 and Cm 1324 (1990).

⁴⁹⁷ See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 190. ⁴⁹⁸ See 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1670 and Cm 1771 (1991).

⁴⁹⁹ So that, for example, the written responses to requests for information were to occur within ten days, and the bilateral meetings were to take place as a rule within one week of the date of request: Section I(1). The time limits provided for at Copenhagen were reduced, and a resource list of experts was to be established. The Council of Ministers of the CSCE subsequently decided that the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (formerly the Office for Free Elections) would be the appropriate institution establishing the resource list. A variety of missions have now been employed in, for example, Nagorno-Karabakh, Georgia, Chechnya, Moldova and Croatia. See generally OSCE Handbook, Vienna, 2007.

⁵⁰⁰ There are currently fifty-seven participating states. Note also the report entitled 'Common Purposes: Towards a More Effective OSCE' produced by a Panel of Eminent Persons in 2005 and the new OSCE Rules of Procedure adopted in 2006: see OSCE Handbook.

⁵⁰¹ See further below, p. 775.

Commissioner on National Minorities was established in order to provide early warning and early action where appropriate, concerning tensions relating to national minority issues that have the potential to develop into a conflict within the CSCE area affecting peace, stability or relations between participating states.⁵⁰² The High Commissioner, who acts in confidence, was also mandated to collect relevant information and make visits. Where the High Commissioner concludes that there is a prima facie risk of potential conflict in such situations, an early warning is to be issued, which will be promptly conveyed by the Chairman-in-Office of the CSCE to the Committee of Senior Officials. The High Commissioner is able to make recommendations to participating states regarding the treatment of national minorities. In addition, a number of general recommendations have been made with regard to Roma and other matters.⁵⁰³

The next major step in the process took place at Budapest at the end of 1994.⁵⁰⁴ The CSCE, in recognition of the institutional changes underway in recent years, changed its name to the OSCE (the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe) and took a number of steps in the field of security and conflict management. The Conference emphasised that human rights, the rule of law and democratic institutions represented a crucial contribution to conflict prevention and that the protection of human rights constituted an 'essential foundation of democratic civil society',⁵⁰⁵ and it was decided that Human Dimension issues would be regularly dealt with by the Permanent Council,⁵⁰⁶ with the Office of Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (based in Warsaw) acting as the main institution of the Human Dimension in an advisory capacity to the organisation, with enhanced roles in election monitoring and the dispatch of missions.⁵⁰⁷ States were encouraged to use the Human Dimension mechanism (now termed the Moscow Mechanism) and the Chairman-in-Office was encouraged to inform the Permanent Council of serious cases of alleged non-implementation of Human Dimension commitments. Further, an OSCE Representative on Freedom of the Media was appointed in 1997 and the role increased in 2004 to include the task of combating the misuse of hate speech regulations in order to silence legitimate dissent and alternative opinion.⁵⁰⁸

Thus, step by step over recent years, the Helsinki process has transformed itself into an institutional structure with a particular interest in describing and requiring the implementation

⁵⁰² See Section II of the Helsinki Decisions. Note that the High Commissioner deals with situations and not with individual complaints. See also Quiet Diplomacy in Action: The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities (ed. W. A. Kemp), The Hague, 2001; K. Drzewicki, 'The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities – Confronting Traditional and Emerging Challenges', in OSCE and Minorities. Assessment and Priorities (ed. S. Parzymies), Warsaw, 2007; and J. Packer, 'The OSCE High Commissioner on National Minorities: Pyrometer, Prophylactic, Pyrovestis', in Minorities, Peoples and Self-Determination (ed. N. Ghanea and A. Xanthaki), Leiden, 2005, p. 249.

⁵⁰³ See e.g. the Hague Recommendation on Education Rights of National Minorities, 1996; the Oslo Recommendations on Linguistic Rights of National Minorities, 1998; the Lund Recommendations on Effective Participation of National Minorities in Public Life, 1999; the Guidelines on the Use of Minority Languages in the Broadcast Media, 2003; and the Recommendations on Policing in Multi-Ethnic Societies, 2006; see www.osce.org/hcnm.

⁵⁰⁴ See 5 HRLJ, 1994, p. 449. ⁵⁰⁵ Section VIII of the Budapest Decisions.

⁵⁰⁶ This group is responsible for the day-to-day operations of the OSCE and its members are the permanent representatives of the member states meeting weekly. It is based in Vienna.

⁵⁰⁷ Note also that the Monitoring Section within the ODIHR analyses human rights developments and compliance with Human Dimension commitments by participating states and alerts the Chairman-in-Office to serious deteriorations in respect for human rights.

⁵⁰⁸ See OSCE Handbook, p. 34 and the Sofia Decision 12, para. 16, 2004.

of human rights.⁵⁰⁹ The OSCE has also established a number of missions in order to help mitigate conflicts⁵¹⁰ and adopted a Treaty on Open Skies and a Convention on Conciliation and Arbitration in 1992.⁵¹¹

The CIS Convention on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms⁵¹²

The Commonwealth of Independent States, which links together the former Republics of the Soviet Union (with the exception of the three Baltic states), adopted a Convention on Human Rights in May 1995. Under this Convention, a standard range of rights is included, ranging from the right to life, liberty and security of person, equality before the judicial system, respect for private and family life, to freedom of religion, expression, assembly and the right to marry. The right to work is included (article 14) as is the right to social security, the right to education and the right of every minor child to special protective measures (article 17). The right of persons belonging to national minorities to express and develop their ethnic, linguistic, religious and cultural identity is protected (article 21), while everyone has the right to take part in public affairs, including voting (article 29). It is intended that the implementation of the Convention be monitored by the Human Rights Commission of the CIS (article 34). Under Section II of the Regulations of the Human Rights Commission, adopted in September 1993, states parties may raise human rights matters falling within the Convention with other states parties and, if no satisfactory response is received within six months, the matter may be referred to the Commission. Domestic remedies need to be exhausted. Under Section III of the Regulations, the Commission may examine individual and collective applications submitted by any person or non-governmental organisation. The Convention entered into force on 11 August 1998 upon the third ratification.

Concerned with the level of protection afforded under this Convention (in particular the facts that the members of the Commission are appointed representatives of member states and the Commission implements the instrument by means of recommendations) and the problems of co-existence with the Council of Europe human rights system, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe adopted a resolution in 2001 calling upon member or applicant states which are also members of the CIS not to sign or ratify the CIS Convention. In addition, it recommended that those that already had should issue a legally binding declaration stating that the European Convention procedures would not be replaced or weakened through recourse to the CIS Convention procedures.⁵¹³

⁵⁰⁹ An OSCE Advisory Panel for the Prevention of Torture was established in 1998: see e.g. the Final Report of the Supplementary Human Dimension Meeting on Human Rights and Inhuman Treatment and Punishment 2000, www.osce.org/documents/odihhr/2000/03/1787_en.pdf; and a restructured Advisory Panel of Experts on Freedom of Religion or Belief was established in 2000. Note that as a consequence of the Dayton Peace Agreement on Bosnia, 1995, it was agreed that the OSCE would supervise elections in that country and would closely monitor human rights throughout Bosnia and would appoint an international human rights Ombudsman: see MC (5) Dec/1, 1995. The OSCE also has a role in Kosovo: see OSCE Handbook, p. 46.

⁵¹⁰ See OSCE Handbook, pp. 39 ff. Of particular importance, perhaps, is the Minsk Process, dealing with the Nagorno-Karabakh conflict, ibid., p. 76.

⁵¹¹ This established a Court: see generally www.osce.org/cca.

⁵¹² See H/INF (95) 3, pp. 195 ff. See also the essays contained in 17 HRLJ, 1996 concerning the CIS and human rights.

⁵¹³ Resolution 1249 (2001). See also recommendation 1519 (2001) stating that recourse to the CIS Commission should not be regarded as another procedure of international settlement within the meaning of article 35(2)(b) of the European Convention.

The Inter-American Convention on Human Rights⁵¹⁴

The Inter-American Convention, which came into force in 1978, contains a range of rights to be protected by the states parties.⁵¹⁵ The rights are fundamentally those protected by the European Convention, but with some interesting differences.⁵¹⁶ For example, under article 4 the right to life is deemed to start in general as from conception,⁵¹⁷ while the prohibition on torture and inhuman or degrading treatment is more extensively expressed and is in the context of the right to have one's physical, mental and moral integrity respected (article 5). In addition, articles 18 and 19 of the Inter-American Convention protect the right to a name and the specific rights of the child, article 23 provides for a general right to participation in the context of public affairs and article 26 provides for the progressive achievement of the economic, social and cultural rights contained in the Charter of the Organization of American States, 1948, as amended by the Protocol of Buenos Aires, 1967.⁵¹⁸

The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights was created in 1959 and its first Statute approved by the OAS Council in 1960. In 1971, it was recognised as one of the principal organs of the OAS.⁵¹⁹ Under its original Statute, it had wide powers to promote the awareness and study of human rights in America and to make recommendations to member states. In 1965, the Statute was revised and the Commission's powers expanded to include inter alia the examination of communications. With the entry into force of the 1969 Convention in 1978, the Commission's position was further strengthened. The Commission has powers regarding all member states of the OAS, not just those that have ratified the Convention, and its Statute emphasises that the human rights protected include those enumerated in both the Convention and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man.⁵²⁰ Article 44 of the Convention provides that any person or group of persons or any non-governmental entity legally recognised in one or more of the OAS states may lodge petitions with the Commission alleging a violation of the Convention

⁵¹⁴ See generally C. Medina, The Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, Intersentia, 2014; J. M. Pasqualucci, The Practice and Procedure of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2013; L. Burgorgue-Larsen and A. U. de Torres, The Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Oxford, 2011; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 9; H. J. Steiner, P. Alston and R. Goodman, International Human Rights in Context, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2008, pp. 1020 ff.; The Inter-American System of Human Rights (ed. D. J. Harris and S. Livingstone), Oxford, 1998; T. Buergenthal and D. Shelton, Protecting Human Rights in the Americas, 4th edn, Strasbourg, 1995; D. Shelton, 'The Inter-American Human Rights System', in Guide to International Human Rights Practice (ed. H. Hannum), 4th edn, Ardsley, 2004, p. 127; T. Buergenthal and R. Norris, The Inter-American System, Dobbs Ferry, 5 vols., 1983-4; S. Davidson, The Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Aldershot, 1992; S. Davidson, 'Remedies for Violations of the American Convention on Human Rights', 44 ICLQ, 1995, p. 405; and C. Grossman, 'Proposals to Strengthen the Inter-American System of Protection of Human Rights', 32 German YIL, 1990, p. 264.

⁵¹⁵ The Convention currently has twenty-five parties: see www.oas.org/dil/treaties_B-32_American_Convention_on_Human_Rights_sign.htm.

⁵¹⁶ See e.g. J. Frowein, 'The European and the American Conventions on Human Rights – A Comparison', 1 HRLJ, 1980, p. 44. See also the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, 1948.

⁵¹⁷ See e.g. 10 DR, 1977, p. 100.

⁵¹⁸ The Charter of the OAS has also been amended by the Protocols of Cartagena de Indias, 1985; Washington, 1992; and Managua, 1993.

⁵¹⁹ See e.g. C. Medina, 'The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights: Reflections on a Joint Venture', 12 HRQ, 1990, p. 439.

⁵²⁰ See generally the Basic Documents Pertaining to Human Rights in the Inter-American System, Washington, 1992. The competence of the Commission to hear petitions relates to the rights in the Convention for states parties and to rights in the American Declaration for states not parties to the Convention.

by a state party.⁵²¹ Contrary to the European Convention prior to its reform in Protocol 11, this right is automatic, whereas the right of inter-state complaint, again contrary to the European Convention, is under article 45 subject to a prior declaration recognising the competence of the Commission in this regard. The admissibility requirements in articles 46 and 47 are very broadly similar to those in the European Convention, as is the procedure laid down in article 48 and the drawing-up of a report in cases in which a friendly settlement has been achieved.⁵²² The Commission has dealt with a number of issues in the individual application procedure. During 1994, for example, just under 300 cases were opened and the total number of cases being processed by early 1995 was 641.⁵²³ In 2016, the number of petitions received reached 2,164, with 9, 673 pending initial review.⁵²⁴

The Commission has a wide-ranging competence to publicise human rights matters by way of reports, studies, lectures and so forth. It may also make recommendations to states on the adoption of progressive measures in favour of human rights and conduct on-site investigations with the consent of the state in question.⁵²⁵ It provides states generally with advisory services in the human rights field and submits an annual report to the OAS General Assembly. Many special reports have been published dealing with human rights in particular states, e.g. Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Suriname and Uruguay.⁵²⁶ The Commission has also devoted attention to certain themes, such as disappearances, torture, refugees and economic and social rights, and rights of lesbian, gay and transsexual persons.⁵²⁷ Special Rapporteurs have been appointed, for example, on the rights of indigenous peoples, the rights of women and the rights of the child.⁵²⁸ The Inter-American Court of Human Rights has declared that the Commission also has the authority to determine that any domestic law of a state party has violated the obligations assumed in ratifying or acceding to the Convention⁵²⁹ and that the Commission may consequentially recommend that states repeal or amend the law that is in violation of the Convention. For the Commission to be able to do this, the law may have come to its attention by any means, regardless of whether or not that law is applied in any specific case before the Commission.⁵³⁰

⁵²¹ Note that this is far broader than the equivalent article 34 of the European Convention, which requires that the applicant be a victim.

⁵²² Articles 49–51. The Secretary-General of the OAS has played the role assigned in the European Convention to the Committee of Ministers.

⁵²³ See Annual Report 1994, p. 39. ⁵²⁴ www.oas.org/en/iachr/multimedia/statistics/statistics.html.

⁵²⁵ In 1994, for example, with regard to Guatemala, Haiti, the Bahamas, Ecuador and Jamaica, see Annual Report 1994, pp. 21 ff., while in 2006 on-site visits were made to Haiti, Colombia, Bolivia, Dominican Republic, Brazil, Argentina and Peru, Annual Report 2006, chapter II C, paras. 34 ff. In 2015, an on-site visit was made to Mexico and by October 2015, a total of 95 such visits had been made, www.oas.org/en/iachr/activities/countries_all.asp. See also the Rules of Procedure 2009, 49 ILM, 2010, p. 597.

⁵²⁶ See Annual Report 1994, chapter IV, with regard to Colombia, Cuba, El Salvador and Guatemala, and Annual Report 2006, chapter IV, with regard to Colombia, Cuba, Haiti and Venezuela. See also www.oas.org/en/iachr/reports/country.asp.

⁵²⁷ See e.g. Annual Report 1992–3, pp. 539 ff. and Annual Report 2015, chapter III. See also e.g. AG/Res.443, 1979; AG/Res.666, 1983; AG/Res.547, 1981; AG/Res.624, 1982; and AG/Res.644, 1983 (torture).

⁵²⁸ Annual Report 2006, chapter II D, paras. 49 ff. See as to the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression, Annual Report 2006, vol. II. See also Annual Report 2015, chapter III.

⁵²⁹ Some Powers of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Advisory Opinion OC-13/93 of 16 July 1993, Series A, No. 13, para. 26.

⁵³⁰ International Responsibility for Issuing and Applying Laws in Violation of the Convention, Advisory Opinion OC-14/94 of 9 December 1994, Series A, No. 14, para. 39. In the light of this, the Commission in 1994, for example, made a thorough study of the contempt laws (leyes de desacato), and concluded that many of these do not meet

In 1985, the OAS General Assembly adopted the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture,⁵³¹ while in 1988 an Additional Protocol on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights was signed.⁵³²

A Protocol on the Abolition of the Death Penalty was adopted on 8 June 1990⁵³³ and a Convention on Forced Disappearances of Persons was adopted on 9 June 1994.⁵³⁴ Under article 13 of this Convention, states parties agree that the processing of petitions or communications presented to the Inter-American Commission alleging the forced disappearance of persons will be subject to the procedures established under the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights, the Statute and Regulations of the Commission and the Statute and Rules of the Court. Particular reference is made to precautionary measures.⁵³⁵ Under article 14, when the Commission receives a petition or communication alleging forced disappearance, its Executive Secretariat shall urgently and confidentially address the respective government and shall request that government to provide as soon as possible information as to the whereabouts of the allegedly disappeared person. The OAS also adopted the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence against Women in 1994, which entered into force in March the following year. Article 10 provides that states parties are to include in their national reports to the Inter-American Commission of Women information on measures taken in this area, while under article 11, both states parties and the Commission of Women may request of the Inter-American Court advisory opinions on the interpretations of this Convention. Article 12 international human rights standards. The Commission recommended that all member states of the OAS that have such laws should repeal or amend them to bring them into line with international instruments, and with the obligations acquired under those instruments, so as to harmonise their laws with human rights treaties: Annual Report 1994, pp. 199 ff.

⁵³¹ This entered into force in February 1987. Under the Convention, states parties agree to inform the Inter-American Commission of measures taken in application of the Convention, and the Commission 'will endeavour in its annual report to analyse the existing situation in the member states of the Organization of American States in regard to the prevention and elimination of torture': article 17.

⁵³² This came into force in November 1999. Eleven states parties were required for the Additional Protocol to come into force. See also L. Le Blanc, 'The Economic, Social and Cultural Rights Protocol to the American Convention and its Background', 10 NQHR, 1992, 130. Under article 19 of this instrument, states parties agreed to provide periodic reports on the progressive measures undertaken to ensure respect for the rights set forth therein. Such reports go to the Secretary-General of the OAS, who sends them to the Inter-American Economic and Social Council and the Inter-American Council for Education, Science and Culture, with a copy to both the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights and the specialised agencies of the inter-American system. Violations by a state party of the rights to organise and join trades unions (article 8(a)) and to education (article 13) 'may give rise' to application of the system of individual or inter-state petition under the Inter-American Convention on Human Rights.

⁵³³ This entered into force the following year. It currently has thirteen parties. See e.g. C. Cerna, 'US Death Penalty Tested Before the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights', 10 NQHR, 1992, p. 155.

⁵³⁴ This entered into force in March 1996.

⁵³⁵ Article 63(2) of the Convention states that in cases of extreme gravity and urgency, and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court shall adopt such provisional measures as it deems pertinent in matters it has under consideration. With respect to a case not yet submitted to the Court, it may act at the request of the Commission. Article 19(c) of the Statute of the Commission provides that the Commission has the power to request the Court to take such provisional measures as it considers appropriate in serious and urgent cases which have not yet been submitted to it for consideration, whenever this becomes necessary to prevent irreparable injury to persons. Under article 29 of the Regulations of the Commission, the Commission may on its own initiative or at the request of a party take any action it considers necessary for the discharge of its functions. In particular, in urgent cases, when it becomes necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Commission may request that provisional measures be taken to avoid irreparable damage in cases where the denounced facts are true. Article 24 of the Rules of Procedure of the Inter-American Court provides that at any stage of the proceeding involving cases of extreme gravity and urgency and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court may, at the request of a party or on its own motion, order whatever provisional measures it deems appropriate, pursuant to article 63(2) of the Convention.

provides a procedure whereby any person, group of persons or any non-governmental entity legally recognised in one or more member states of the OAS may lodge petitions with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights alleging violations of the duties of states under article 7 to pursue without delay and by all appropriate means policies to prevent, punish and eradicate violence against women.⁵³⁶ The question of indigenous peoples has also been addressed and on 18 September 1995, the Inter-American Commission adopted a Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.⁵³⁷

The Commission itself consists of seven members elected in a personal capacity by the OAS General Assembly for four-year terms.⁵³⁸ The Commission may indicate precautionary measures as provided for in article 25 of the Commission's Rules of Procedure. This grants the Commission the power in serious and urgent cases, and whenever necessary according to the information available, either on its own initiative or upon request by a party, to request that the state concerned adopt precautionary measures to prevent irreparable harm to persons. The Commission may also request information from the interested parties related to any aspect of the adoption and observance of the precautionary measures.⁵³⁹ Of particular interest has been the granting of precautionary measures in favour of individuals captured in connection with the US-led military operation against the former Taliban regime in Afghanistan and the Al-Qaida organisation and their detention at the US naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.⁵⁴⁰

Where, in the case of petitions received, a friendly settlement has not been achieved,⁵⁴¹ then under article 50 a report will be drawn up, together with such proposals and recommendations as are seen fit, and transmitted to the parties. The Commission may, under article 46 of the Rules of Procedure, adopt the follow-up measures it deems appropriate, such as requesting information from the parties and holding hearings in order to verify compliance with friendly settlement agreements and its recommendations and report thereon. It also publishes a table indicating whether its recommendations have achieved total or partial compliance from the state concerned or whether compliance is pending.⁵⁴²

After its report, a three-month period is then available during which the Commission or the state concerned (but not the individual concerned) may go to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights.⁵⁴³ The Court consists of seven judges serving in an individual capacity and elected by an ⁵³⁶ Note also the Inter-American Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities, 1999. This came into force in September 2001. The Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Forms of Intolerance was signed in June 2013.

⁵³⁷ See above, p. 230. ⁵³⁸ See articles 34–38 of the Convention.

⁵³⁹ See e.g. Annual Report 2001, chapter III C. I and Annual Report 2006, chapter III C. I.

⁵⁴⁰ See Annual Report 2006, chapter III E and see also 45 ILM, 2006, pp. 669 ff. Such measures were first granted on 12 March 2002 and requested that the United States take the 'urgent measures necessary to have the legal status of the detainees at Guantanamo determined by a competent tribunal'. Such measures were repeated on a number of separate occasions. As these measures were not complied with – the US arguing that the Commission lacked jurisdiction – the Commission adopted resolution no. 2/06 on 28 July 2006, noting that the failure of the United States to give effect to the Commission's precautionary measures had resulted in irreparable prejudice to the fundamental rights of the detainees at Guantanamo Bay, including their rights to liberty and to humane treatment, and urging the US to close the Guantanamo Bay facility without delay; see also www.oas.org/en/iachr/pdl/decisions/Guantanamo.asp.

⁵⁴¹ See, for examples of friendly settlement procedures, Annual Report 2001, chapter III C. 4.

⁵⁴² See e.g. Annual Report 2006, chapter III D and Annual Report 2015, chapter II.

⁵⁴³ Article 51. If this does not happen and the matter is not settled with the state concerned, the Commission by a majority vote may set forth its own opinion and conclusions on the matter, which may be published. See, for example, Annual Report 1983–4, pp. 23–75. See also www.corteidh.or.cr/.

absolute majority of the states parties to the Convention in the OAS General Assembly for six-year terms.⁵⁴⁴ The jurisdiction of the Court is subject to a prior declaration under article 62. Article 63(2) of the Convention provides that, in cases of extreme gravity and urgency, and when necessary to avoid irreparable damage to persons, the Court, in matters not yet submitted to it, may adopt such provisional measures as it deems pertinent in matters under its consideration. Where a case has not yet been submitted to it, the Court may act at the request of the Commission. This power has been used on a number of occasions.⁵⁴⁵

Under article 64, the Court also possesses an advisory jurisdiction with regard to the interpretation of the Inter-American Convention and other conventions concerning the protection of human rights in the American states at the request of any member state of the OAS. The Court has dealt with a variety of important issues by way of advisory opinions.⁵⁴⁶ In Definition of Other Treaties Subject to the Interpretation of the Inter-American Court,⁵⁴⁷ the Court took the view that the object of the Convention was to integrate the regional and universal systems of human rights protection and that, therefore, any human rights treaty to which American states were parties could be the subject of an advisory opinion. In The Effect of Reservations,⁵⁴⁸ the Court stressed that human rights treaties involve the establishment of legal orders within which obligations are created towards all individuals within their jurisdiction and concluded that an instrument of ratification of adherence containing a reservation compatible with the object and purpose of the Convention does not require acceptance by the other states parties and the instrument thus enters into force as of the moment of deposit.⁵⁴⁹ In a manner reminiscent of, and clearly influenced by, the European Court of Human Rights, the Inter-American Court stated that human rights treaties were different in nature from traditional multilateral treaties, since they focused not upon the reciprocal exchange of rights for the mutual benefit of the contracting states, but rather upon the protection of the basic rights of individuals. The obligations were erga omnes, rather than with regard to particular other states.⁵⁵⁰

In an important discussion of freedom of expression in the Licensing of Journalists case,⁵⁵¹ the Court advised that the compulsory licensing of journalists was incompatible

⁵⁴⁴ Articles 52–54. See also L. L. Burgogue-Larsen, A. A. Ubeda de Torres and R. R. Greenstein, The Inter-American Court of Human Rights: Case-Law and Commentary, Oxford, 2011; Davidson, Inter-American Court; C. Cerna, 'The Structure and Functioning of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (1979–1992)', 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 135; and L. E. Frost, 'The Evolution of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights', 14 HRQ, 1992, p. 171.

⁵⁴⁵ The first time was in January 1988, against Honduras, following the killing of a person due to testify before it and concerns expressed about the safety of other witnesses, H/Inf. (88) 1, p. 64. See also the provisional measures adopted by the Court against Peru, in similar circumstances, in August 1990, 11 HRLJ, 1990, p. 257; and the Alemán Lacayo v. Nicaragua case, Series E, Order of 2 February 1996; the Álvarez et al. v. Colombia case, Series E, Order of 22 July 1997; and the Constitutional Court case, Series E, Order of 14 August 2000. See also Hilaire and Others v. Trinidad and Tobago, Judgment of 21 June 2002. The Court also granted provisional measures, for example, to protect the lives and personal integrity of witnesses in the Mapiripán Massacre case against Colombia, see Annual Report of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights 2005, p. 39, and in the case of the Children and Adolescents Deprived of Liberty in the 'Complexo do Tatuapé' of FEBEM against Brazil, ibid., p. 41.

⁵⁴⁶ The twenty-three advisory opinions issued between 1959 and 2015, fifteen concerned the interpretation of the Convention, five concerned the interpretation of other treaties and three concerned the compatibility between domestic laws and international instruments: see Annual Report 2005, p. 60 and www.corteidh.or.cr/cf/Jurisprudencia2/busqueda_opiniones_consultivas.cfm?lang=en.

⁵⁴⁷ 22 ILM, 1983, p. 51; 67 ILR, p. 594. ⁵⁴⁸ 22 ILM, 1983, p.33; 67 ILR, p. 559.

⁵⁴⁹ Paragraph 37. See article 74 of the Convention. ⁵⁵⁰ Ibid., para. 29. See also below, p. 611.

⁵⁵¹ 7 HRLJ, 1986, p. 74; 75 ILR, p. 31.

with article 13, the freedom of expression provision in the Convention, if it denied any person access to the full use of the media as a means of expressing opinions. The Court emphasised that freedom of expression could only be restricted on the basis of ‘compelling governmental interest’ and that the restriction must be ‘closely tailored to the accomplishment of the legitimate governmental objective necessitating it’.⁵⁵² The Court has also addressed the issue of the relationship between itself and the American Declaration of the Rights and Duties of Man, 1948 in the Interpretation of the American Declaration case.⁵⁵³ In an opinion likely to be of significance in view of the fact that, for example, the USA is not a party to the Convention but, as a member of the OAS, has signed the Declaration, the Court stressed that in interpreting the Declaration regard had to be had to the current state of the Inter-American system and that, by a process of authoritative interpretation, the member states of the OAS have agreed that the Declaration contains and defines the human rights norms referred to in the OAS Charter.⁵⁵⁴ Since the Charter was a treaty, the Court could, therefore, interpret the Declaration under article 64.⁵⁵⁵

The exercise of the Court’s contentious jurisdiction was, however, less immediately successful. In the Gallardo case,⁵⁵⁶ the Court remitted the claim to the Commission declaring it inadmissible, noting that a state could not dispense with the processing of the case by the Commission, while in the *Velásquez Rodríguez*⁵⁵⁷ and *Godínez Cruz*⁵⁵⁸ cases the Court in ‘disappearance’ situations found that Honduras had violated the Convention.⁵⁵⁹ In the former case, it was emphasised that states had a legal responsibility to prevent human rights violations and to use the means at their disposal to investigate and punish such violations. Where this did not happen, the state concerned had failed in its duty to ensure the full and free exercise of these rights within the jurisdiction.⁵⁶⁰ In Loayza Tamayo v. Peru, the Court held Peru responsible for a number of breaches of the Convention concerned with the detention and torture of the applicant and for the absence of a fair trial.⁵⁶¹ In Chumbipuma Aguirre v. Peru, the Barrios Altos case, the Court tackled the issue

⁵⁵² Ibid., para. 45. See also the Sunday Times case, European Court of Human Rights, Series A, vol. 30, 1979. In the Habeas Corpus case, the Court declared that the writ of habeas corpus was a non-suspendable ‘judicial guarantee’ for the protection of rights from which no derogation was permitted under article 27. Reference was made to the ‘inseparable bond between the principle of legality, democratic institutions and the rule of law’. The Court also emphasised that only democratic governments could avail themselves of the right to declare a state of emergency and then only under closely circumscribed conditions, 9 HRLJ, 1988, p. 94; 96 ILR, p. 392.

⁵⁵³ 28 ILM, 1989, p. 378; 96 ILR, p. 416.

⁵⁵⁴ Ibid., pp. 388–9. See also T. Buergethal, ‘The Revised OAS Charter and the Protection of Human Rights’, 69 AJIL, 1975, p. 828.

⁵⁵⁵ The problem was that the Declaration clearly was not a treaty and article 64 provides for advisory opinions regarding the Convention itself and ‘other treaties’. Note, in addition, that in the Right to Information on Consular Assistance opinion requested by Mexico the Court declared that article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, 1963, providing for the right to consular assistance of detained foreign nationals was part of international human rights law and that the state must comply with its duty to inform the detainee of the rights that the article confers upon him at the time of his arrest or at least before he makes his first statement before the authorities: Series A 16, OC-16/99, 1999 and see chapter 12, p. 583. Note also the advisory opinions on the rights and guarantees of children in the context of migration and/or in need of international protection, Series A, No. 21, 2014, and on the entitlement of legal entities to held rights under the Inter-American Convention, Series A, No. 22, 2016.

⁵⁵⁶ 20 ILM, 1981, p. 1424; 67 ILR, p. 578. ⁵⁵⁷ 9 HRLJ, 1988, p. 212; 95 ILR, p. 232.

⁵⁵⁸ H/Inf (90) 1, p. 80; 95 ILR, p. 320 (note).

⁵⁵⁹ Note also the award of compensation to the victims in both of these cases, ibid., pp. 80–1.

⁵⁶⁰ At paras. 174–6. See also Castillo Páez v. Peru, Series C, No. 34, 1997; 116 ILR, p. 451.

⁵⁶¹ Series C, No. 33, 1997; 116 ILR, p. 338.

of domestic amnesty laws and held that the Peruvian amnesty laws in question were incompatible with the Inter-American Convention and thus void of any legal effect.⁵⁶² The Court has also addressed the question of indigenous peoples in several cases, in which it has emphasised the close ties of such peoples with their traditional lands and the natural resources associated with their culture in the context particularly of the right to the use and enjoyment of property in article 21 of the Convention. It has concluded that the traditional possession of their lands by indigenous peoples has equivalent effects to those of a state-granted full property title; that traditional possession entitles indigenous peoples to demand official recognition and registration of property titles; that members of such peoples who have been obliged to leave their traditional lands maintain property rights thereto even though they lack legal title, unless the lands have been lawfully transferred to innocent third parties; and that, in the latter instance, such members are entitled to restitution thereof or to obtain other lands of equal extension and quality.⁵⁶³ It has also decided that a Chilean court was wrong to revoke custody of children on the basis of a woman's sexual orientation.⁵⁶⁴

The Banjul Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights⁵⁶⁵

This Charter was adopted by the Organisation of African Unity in 1981 and came into force in 1986. Currently fifty-three of the fifty-four members of the African Union (as the OAU was renamed in 2000) are parties.⁵⁶⁶ The Charter contains a wide range of rights, including ⁵⁶² Judgment of 14 March 2001, 41 ILM, 2002, p. 93. See also generally C. Martin, 'Catching Up with the Past: Recent Decisions of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights Addressing Gross Human Rights Violations Perpetrated During the 1970–1980s', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 774.

⁵⁶³ See e.g. Sawhoyamaya Indigenous Community v. Paraguay, Judgment of 29 March 2006.

⁵⁶⁴ Caso Atala Riffo y Ninas v. Chile, Judgment of 24 February 2012. See also the important case of Gonzalez ('Cotton Field') v. Mexico, 49 ILM, 2010, p. 637, concerning violence and discrimination against women; and Kaliña and Lokono Peoples v. Suriname, where the court held that since Suriname did not recognise the collective legal personality of the indigenous and tribal peoples, it was in violation of the convention, Judgment of 25 November 2015.

⁵⁶⁵ See e.g. The African Regional Human Rights System (ed. M. Ssenyonjo), The Hague, 2011; U. O. Umzurike, The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights, The Hague, 1997 and 2012; R. Murray, The African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, London, 2000; The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights: The System in Practice, 1986–2006 (ed. M. Evans and R. Murray), 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2008; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, chapter 10; Steiner, Alston and Goodman, International Human Rights, p. 1062; E. Ankumah, The African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, Dordrecht, 1996; R. Gittleman, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights: A Legal Analysis', 22 Va. JIL, 1981, p. 667; A. Bello, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', 194 HR, 1985, p. 5; S. Neff, 'Human Rights in Africa', 33 ICLQ, 1984, p. 331; U. O. Umzurike, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 902; B. Ramcharan, 'The Travaux Préparatoires of the African Commission on Human Rights', HRLJ, 1992, p. 307; W. Benedek, 'The African Charter and Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights: How to Make It More Effective', 14 NQHR, 1993, p. 25; C. Flinterman and E. Ankumeh, 'The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', in Hannum, Guide to International Human Rights Practice, p. 171; M. A. Baderin, 'Recent Developments in the African Regional Human Rights System', 5 Human Rights Law Review, 2005, p. 117; and C. Beyani, 'Recent Developments in the African Human Rights System 2004–2006', 7 Human Rights Law Review, 2007, p. 582. See also F. Ouguergouz, 'La Commission Africaine des Droits de l'Homme et des Peuples', AFDI, 1989, p. 557; K. Mbaye, Les Droits de l'Homme en Afrique, Paris, 1992; and M. Hamalengwa, C. Flinterman and E. Dankwa, The International Law of Human Rights in Africa – Basic Documents and Annotated Bibliography, Dordrecht, 1988. See also generally www.achpr.org/.

⁵⁶⁶ South Sudan is the one African Union member yet to become a party: see www.achpr.org/instruments/achpr/ratification/.

in addition to the traditional civil and political rights, economic, social and cultural rights and various peoples' rights. In this latter category are specifically mentioned the rights to self-determination, development and a generally satisfactory environment.⁵⁶⁷ The reference to the latter two concepts is unusual in human rights instruments and it remains to be seen both how they will be interpreted and how they will be implemented.

One question that is immediately posed with respect to the notion of 'peoples' rights' is to ascertain the definition of a people. If experience with the definition of self-determination in the context of the United Nations is any guide,⁵⁶⁸ and bearing in mind the extreme sensitivity which African states have manifested with regard to the stability of the existing colonial borders,⁵⁶⁹ then the principle is likely to be interpreted in the sense of independent states. This was confirmed in the Katangese Peoples' Congress v. Zaire,⁵⁷⁰ where the Commission declared that Katanga was obliged to exercise a variant of self-determination that was compatible with the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Zaire.

The African Charter is the first human rights convention that details the duties of the individual to the state, society and family.⁵⁷¹ Included are the duties to avoid compromising the security of the state and to preserve and strengthen social and national solidarity and independence. It remains to be seen whether this distinctive approach brings with it more problems than advantages.

The Charter set up the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, consisting of eleven persons appointed by the Conference of the Heads of State and Government of the OAU for six-year renewable terms, to implement the Charter. The Secretary to the Commission is appointed by the Secretary-General of the Organisation of African Unity. The Commission has important educational and promotional responsibilities,⁵⁷² including undertaking studies, organising conferences, disseminating information and making recommendations to governments. This is quite unlike the European Commission as it used to be prior to Protocol 11, but rather more similar to the Inter-American Commission. The African Commission has developed a range of special mechanisms, including the appointment of Special Rapporteurs (not being independent experts but Commission members)⁵⁷³ and working groups;⁵⁷⁴ and the adoption of country and thematic resolutions.⁵⁷⁵ ⁵⁶⁷ See articles 19–22. ⁵⁶⁸ See above, chapter 5, p. 202.

⁵⁶⁹ See e.g. M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986. ⁵⁷⁰ Case No. 75/92: see 13 NQHR, 1995, p. 478.

⁵⁷¹ See articles 27–29.

⁵⁷² See article 45 and Rule 87 of the Rules of Procedure 1995. See also A. Bello, 'The Mandate of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 1 African Journal of International Law, 1988, p. 31.

⁵⁷³ Covering topics such as the rights of women, refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons in Africa; freedom of expression; human rights defenders in Africa; prisons and conditions of detention in Africa; older persons and disabled persons; and extractive industries, the environment and human rights: see e.g. Beyani, 'Recent Developments', p. 588 and www.achpr.org/mechanisms/.

⁵⁷⁴ Covering issues such as economic, social and cultural rights; indigenous populations and communities; and the death penalty: e.g. ibid., p. 589 and www.achpr.org/mechanisms/.

⁵⁷⁵ Such as the resolutions expressing deep concern about the violation of human rights and international humanitarian law in Darfur, e.g. ACHPR/Res.74(XXXVII)05, 2005 and about the continued attacks on the independence of the judiciary by the government of Zimbabwe, e.g. resolution adopted by the Executive Council of the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights, 9th Ordinary Session, June 2006, Ex. CL/279 (ix), Annex III, p. 99. See also Beyani, 'Recent Developments', pp. 592 ff., and the resolution concerning the protection of human rights defenders in Africa, ACHPR/Res.69(XXXV)04, 2004.

The Commission may hear as of right inter-state complaints.⁵⁷⁶ The first such complaint was brought in 1999 by the Democratic Republic of the Congo alleging inter alia that it had been the victim of aggression perpetrated by Burundi, Rwanda and Uganda. The Commission held that the respondent states had contravened the principle of the peaceful settlement of disputes and had violated article 23 of the African Charter concerning the right to peace. It concluded that the three states concerned had occupied parts of the Congo in violation of the Charter and had committed a series of human rights violations as a consequence.⁵⁷⁷

Other, non-state, communications may also be sent to the Commission and the terminology used is far more flexible than is the case in the other regional human rights systems.⁵⁷⁸ Where it appears that one or more communications apparently relates to special cases which reveal the existence of a series of serious or massive violations of rights, the Commission will draw the attention of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government to these special cases. The Commission may then be asked to conduct an in-depth study of these cases and make a factual report, accompanied by its finding and recommendations.⁵⁷⁹ The Commission is able to suggest provisional measures where appropriate.⁵⁸⁰ The Commission adopted Rules of Procedure in 1988, which were amended in 1995 and again in 2010.⁵⁸¹ A number of important individual communications have been dealt with.⁵⁸² In addition, there is an obligation upon states parties to produce reports every two years upon the measures taken to implement the rights under the Charter.⁵⁸³ The Commission was given authority by the OAU to study the reports and make observations upon them and has indeed adopted guidelines. However, to date, it is fair to conclude that the reporting procedure has encountered serious problems, not least in that many states have failed to submit reports or adequate reports,⁵⁸⁴ while the financial resources difficulties faced by the Commission have been significant.

⁵⁷⁶ Articles 47–54. See also Rules 88 ff. of the Rules of Procedure.

⁵⁷⁷ Communication 227/99, African Commission, Twentieth Activity Report, EX.CL/279 (IX), Annex IV, pp. 111 ff. See also Beyani, 'Recent Developments', pp. 598 ff.

⁵⁷⁸ See article 55. There are a number of admissibility requirements: see article 56. For recent decisions on communications, see www.achpr.org/communications/.

⁵⁷⁹ Article 58(1) and (2). Further, a case of emergency duly noted by the Commission shall be submitted to the Chairman of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government who may request an in-depth study: article 58(3).

⁵⁸⁰ Rule 111. See e.g. G. J. Naldi, 'Interim Measures of Protection in the African System for the Protection of Human and Peoples' Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 1. The Commission has taken the view that the adoption of interim measures is binding on the parties: see e.g. Saro-Wiwa v. Nigeria, 7 International Human Rights Reports, 2000, p. 274.

⁵⁸¹ See 40 The Review, International Commission of Jurists, 1988, p. 26 and www.achpr.org/instruments/rules-of-procedure-2010/.

⁵⁸² See e.g. Lawyers for Human Rights v. Swaziland, Communication 251/2002, 13 International Human Rights Reports, 2006, p. 887, concerning the overthrow of constitutional democracy and the banning of political parties. See also Zimbabwe Human Rights NGO Forum v. Zimbabwe, African Commission, Twenty-First Activity Report, Annex III, pp. 54 ff.; and Sudan Human Rights Org. v. Sudan and Ctr for Housing Rights and Evictions v. Sudan 49 ILM, 2010, p. 1569. See S. Gumedz, 'Bringing Communications Before the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 3 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2003, p. 118.

⁵⁸³ Article 62. See also Rules 81–86.

⁵⁸⁴ See e.g. G. Oberleitner and C. Welch, 'Africa: 15th Session African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights', 12 NQHR, 1994, p. 333; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, p. 255; and M. Vans, T. Ige and R. Murray, 'The Reporting Mechanism of the African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights', in The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights (ed. M. Evans and R. Murray), Cambridge, 2002, p. 36. Several states currently have over 10 overdue reports, such as Comoros, Cape Verde, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Guinea-Bissau and Somalia: see www.achpr.org/states/.

No provision was made for a Court in the Charter, but a Protocol on the Establishment of an African Court of Human and Peoples' Rights was signed in 1998.⁵⁸⁵ Under this Protocol, the Court has advisory, conciliatory and contentious jurisdiction. The African Commission, states parties and African intergovernmental organisations have automatic access to the Court,⁵⁸⁶ but not individuals or non-governmental organisations, whose access depends upon the state concerned having made a declaration accepting the jurisdiction of the Court to hear relevant applications.⁵⁸⁷ A Protocol to the Statute of the African Union was adopted in 2003 concerning the Court of Justice of the African Union. The AU decided to merge the two courts in 2004 and the protocol accomplishing this was adopted in 2008. This requires that the Constitutive Act of the AU be read in reference to the African Court of Justice and Human Rights. The new Court was to be divided into two Sections, a General Affairs Section and a Human Rights Section, each composed of eight judges. The former has the competence to hear all cases, except those concerning human and/or peoples' rights, which are reserved for the Human Rights Section. Each Section may decide to refer a case to the Full Court for consideration.⁵⁸⁸ A number of other regional courts exist in Africa,⁵⁸⁹ including with regard to Arab states,⁵⁹⁰ and elsewhere.⁵⁹¹ ⁵⁸⁵ This came into force on 25 January 2004. Judges were first elected in 2006. See e.g. D. Padilla, 'An African Human Rights Court: Reflections from the Perspective of the Inter-American System', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 185; R. W. Eno, 'The Jurisdiction of the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 223; and R. Murray, 'A Comparison Between the African and European Courts of Human Rights', 2 African Human Rights Law Journal, 2002, p. 195. To date, thirty states are parties to the Protocol, <http://en.african-court.org/index.php/12-homepage/1-1-welcome-to-the-african-court>. See generally www.african-court.org/en/.

⁵⁸⁶ Article 5. See also Rule 33 of the Rules of Procedure 2010.

⁵⁸⁷ Article 34(6). As of February 2016, only seven states had made the necessary declaration. By June 2012, twenty-four applications had been made to the court, and twelve cases decided. The Court delivered its first judgment in 2009 following an application dated 11 August 2008 by Michelot Yogogombaye against the Republic of Senegal, ibid. and see 49 ILM, 2010, p. 850.

⁵⁸⁸ See 48 ILM, 2009, p. 334. Fifteen ratifications are required for the protocol to come into force. As of April 2016 there were only five ratifications, http://au.int/en/sites/default/files/treaties/7792-sl-protocol_on_statute_of_the_african_court_of_justice_and_hr_0.pdf.

⁵⁸⁹ See e.g. the ECOWAS (Economic Community of West African States) Community Court of Justice, following the ECOWAS treaty of 1975 and the Protocol establishing the court in 1991. Since the Supplemental Protocol of 2005, the court has been able to hear communications alleging breaches of human rights: see www.courtecawas.org/site2012/index.php?lang=en. See also 'Court for West Africa: The ECOWAS Community Court of Justice', 107 AJIL, 2013, p. 737. Note also the SADC (Southern African Development Community) Tribunal established by a Protocol adopted in 2000 and operative since 2005. After several judgments holding Zimbabwe in breach of human rights (see e.g. Campbell v. Zimbabwe, 48 ILM, 2009, p. 530), the Tribunal was de facto suspended at the 2010 SADC Summit. On 17 August 2012 in Maputo, Mozambique, the SADC Summit decided that a new tribunal should be negotiated and that its mandate should be confined to interpretation of the SADC Treaty and Protocols relating to disputes between Member States: see www.sadc.int/about-sadc/sadc-institutions/tribun/. Note also the existence of the East African Court of Justice, created by the Treaty for the Establishment of the East African Community in 1999 and as amended in 2006 and 2007. This has under article 27(2) 'such other original, appellate, human rights and other jurisdiction as will be determined by the Council [of Ministers of the Community]'. This apparently has yet to be determined: see generally <http://eacj.org/?page>. See also K. J. Alter, J. T. Gathii and L. R. Helfer, 'Backlash against International Courts in West, East and Southern Africa: Causes and Consequences', 27 EJIL, 2016, p. 293.

⁵⁹⁰ An Arab Charter on Human Rights was adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States on 15 September 1994 and a revised version was adopted by the League of Arab States in May 2004. It affirms the principles contained in the UN Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam. A number of traditional human rights are also provided for, including the right to liberty and security of persons, equality of persons before the law, fair trial, protection of persons from torture, the right to own private property, freedom to practise religious observance and freedom of peaceful assembly and association. The right to self-determination is also noted. See e.g. M. Rishmawi, 'The Revised Arab Charter on Human Rights: A Step Forward?', 5 Human Rights Law Review, 2005, p. 361, and

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

- The African Charter on Human and Peoples' Rights* (ed. M. Evans and R. Murray), 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2008
- O. de Schutter, International Human Rights Law, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2014
- Jacobs, White and Ovey: The European Convention on Human Rights (ed. B. Rainey, E. Wicks and C. Ovey), 6th edn, Oxford, 2014
- The Oxford Handbook of International Human Rights Law* (ed. D. Shelton), Oxford, 2013
- J. M. Pasqualucci, The Practice and Procedure of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2013
- J. Rehman, International Human Rights Law, 2nd edn, London, 2010

'The Arab Charter on Human Rights and the League of Arab States: An Update', 10 Human Rights Law Review, 2010, p. 169; Rehman, International Human Rights Law, pp. 377 ff.; R. K. M. Smith, Textbook on International Human Rights, Oxford, 2002, p. 87; and A. A. A. Naim, 'Human Rights in the Arab World: A Legal Perspective', 23 HRQ, 2001, p. 70. The Charter also provides for the election of a seven-person Arab Human Rights Committee to consider states' reports and came into force on 24 January 2008. Note, however, the statement by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressing concern with regard to the incompatibility of some of the provisions of the Arab Charter with international norms and standards. These concerns included the approach to the death penalty for children and the rights of women and non-citizens. The High Commissioner also noted that, in equating Zionism with racism, the Arab Charter was 'not in conformity with General Assembly resolution 46/86, which rejects that Zionism is a form of racism and racial discrimination': see statement of 30 January 2008, www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=25447#.V6tgE5MrJjR.

⁵⁹¹ Note also the ASEAN (Association of South-East Asian Nations) Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights established in 2009, which has various functions including research and promotional activity and which drafted the ASEAN Human Rights Declaration 2012. It is stated to be a consultative body and there is no competence to hear communications, see <http://aichr.org/>. See also Tae-Ung Baik, Emerging Regional Human Rights Systems in Asia, Cambridge, 2012. See also N. Doyle, 'The ASEAN Human Rights Declaration', 63 ICLQ, 2014, p. 67.

7

Individual Criminal Responsibility in International Law¹

The rise of individual criminal responsibility directly under international law marks the coming together of elements of traditional international law with more modern approaches to human rights law and humanitarian law, and involves consideration of domestic as well as international enforcement mechanisms. Although the rights of individuals in international law have evolved significantly in the post-1945 era, the placing of obligations directly upon persons as opposed to states has a distinct, if narrow, pedigree.² Those committing piracy or slave trading³ have long been regarded as guilty of crimes against international society bearing direct responsibility, for which they may be punished by international tribunals or by any state at all. Jurisdiction to hear the offence is not confined to, for example, the state on whose territory the act took place, or the national state of the offender or the victim. This universal jurisdiction over piracy constitutes a long-established principle of the world community.⁴ All states may both arrest and punish pirates, provided of course that they have been apprehended on the high seas⁵ or within the ¹ See e.g. R. O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, Oxford, 2015; The Cambridge Companion to International Criminal Law (ed. W. Schabas), Cambridge, 2016; W. Schabas, Unimaginable Atrocities: Justice, Politics and Rights at the War Crimes Tribunals, Oxford, 2012; E. van Sliedregt, Individual Criminal Responsibility in International Law, Oxford, 2012; K. Ambos, Treatise on International Criminal Law, Oxford, vol. I, 2013; Research Handbook on International Criminal Law (ed. B. S. Brown), Cheltenham, 2011; A. Cassese, International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2008; W. Schabas, An Introduction to the International Criminal Court, 5th edn, Cambridge, 2016 and The International Criminal Court: A Commentary on the Rome Statute, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2016; O. Triffterer and K. Ambos, The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, 3rd edn, Munich, 2016; R. Cryer, H. Friman, D. Robinson and E. Wilmschurst, An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2014; I. Bantekas and S. Nash, International Criminal Law, 3rd edn, London, 2009; G. Werle and F. Jeßberger, Principles of International Criminal Law, 3rd edn, Oxford, 2014; D. Guilfoyle, International Criminal Law, Oxford, 2016; S. R. Ratner and J. Abrams, Accountability for Human Rights Atrocities in International Law: Beyond the Nuremberg Legacy, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2001; and Justice for Crimes Against Humanity (ed. M. Lattimer and P. Sands), Oxford, 2003.

² See e.g. M. C. Bassiouni, Crimes Against Humanity in International Criminal Law, 2nd edn, The Hague, 1999. As to state responsibility for international offences, see below, chapter 13.

³ See as to slave trading, article 99 of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 and below, chapter 10, p. 459.

⁴ See e.g. In re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586; 7 AD, p. 213. See also D. H. Johnson, 'Piracy in Modern International Law', 43 Transactions of the Grotius Society, 1957, p. 63, and G. E. White, 'The Marshall Court and International Law: The Piracy Cases', 83 AJIL, 1989, p. 727. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge Guillaume in Congo v. Belgium, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 3, 37–8; 128 ILR, pp. 60, 92–4; and R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16; 132 ILR, p. 668.

⁵ Article 105 of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 (reproducing article 19 of the Geneva Convention on the High Seas, 1958).

territory of the state concerned. The punishment of the offenders takes place whatever their nationality and wherever they happened to carry out their criminal activities.

Piracy under international law (or piracy jure gentium) must be distinguished from piracy under municipal law. Offences that may be characterised as piratical under municipal laws do not necessarily fall within the definition of piracy in international law, and thus are not susceptible to universal jurisdiction (depending of course upon the content and form of international conventions). Piracy jure gentium was defined in article 15 of the High Seas Convention, 1958 (and reaffirmed in article 101 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea) as illegal acts of violence, detention or depredation committed for private ends by the crew or passengers of a private ship or private aircraft and directed against another ship or aircraft (or persons or property therein) on the high seas or terra nullius.⁶ Attempts to commit such acts are sufficient to constitute piracy and it is not essential for the attempt to have been successful.⁷

However, the range of offences under international law for which individuals bore international responsibility was narrow indeed.⁸ It is doubtful whether it had extended beyond piracy and slave trading by the turn of the twentieth century. Even then, jurisdiction was exercisable in practice only by domestic courts. It is a modern phenomenon to establish international courts or tribunals to exercise jurisdiction directly over individuals with regard to specified crimes. As will be seen in chapter 11, domestic courts are indeed exercising a greater jurisdiction with regard to offences with international elements, for example, with regard to torture or war crimes committed outside the territory of the state concerned provided that the alleged offender is within the territory of the state, but this is only where an international treaty authorises states to exercise such jurisdiction and this has been brought into effect internally.⁹ However, the focus of this chapter is upon courts established internationally or with an international element in order to prosecute individuals directly accused of international offences.

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURTS AND TRIBUNALS¹⁰

After the conclusion of the First World War, a commission set up by the Allied Powers recommended that as the defeated powers had violated the laws of war, high officials, including the Kaiser, be prosecuted for ordering such crimes and on the basis of command responsibility. It was also suggested that an Allied High Tribunal be established to try violations of the laws and customs of war and the laws of humanity.¹¹ Accordingly, the Treaty of Versailles, 1919 noted that the German government recognised the right of the Allied and Associated Powers to bring individuals accused of crimes against the laws and customs of war before military tribunals (article 228) and established the individual responsibility of the Kaiser (article 227). In the event, ⁶ See further below, chapter 10, p. 458. ⁷ In re Piracy Jure Gentium [1934] AC 586; 7 AD, p. 213.

⁸ See the advisory opinion of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in the Re-Introduction of the Death Penalty in the Peruvian Constitution case, 16 HRLJ, 1995, pp. 9, 14, noting that individual responsibility may only be invoked for violations that are defined in international instruments as crimes under international law.

⁹ See below, p. 504.

¹⁰ See e.g. G.-J. Knoops, An Introduction to the Law of International Criminal Tribunals, The Hague, 2014.

¹¹ See the Report of the Commission to the Preliminary Peace Conference, 14 AJIL, 1920, p. 95. See also Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 115–16, and T. Meron, 'Reflections on the Prosecution of War Crimes by International Tribunals', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 551.

the Netherlands refused to hand over the Kaiser and only a few trials were held before German courts in Leipzig with, at best, mixed results.¹²

The Charter annexed to the Agreement for the Prosecution and Punishment of the Major War Criminals, 1945 provided specifically for individual responsibility for crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity. There was also a conspiracy charge.¹³ The Nuremberg Tribunal, composed of four principal judges (from the US, UK, USSR and France) and four alternates, was the first international criminal tribunal and marks the true starting-point for international criminal law. It affirmed in ringing and lasting terms that 'international law imposes duties and liabilities upon individuals as well as upon states' as 'crimes against international law are committed by men, not by abstract entities, and only by punishing individuals who commit such crimes can the provisions of international law be enforced'. Included in the relevant category for which individual responsibility was posited were crimes against peace, war crimes and crimes against humanity.¹⁴ In addition, a number of war crimes trials were instituted within Allied-occupied Germany under the authority of Control Council Law No. 10.¹⁵ The International Military Tribunal for the Far East was established in January 1946 to deal with Japanese war crimes.¹⁶ This Tribunal was composed of judges from eleven states¹⁷ and it essentially reaffirmed the Nuremberg Tribunal's legal findings as to, for example, the criminality of aggressive war and the rejection of the absolute defence of superior orders.¹⁸ The Charter of the Tribunal also provided for individual responsibility with regard to certain crimes.¹⁹

The provisions of the Nuremberg Charter can now be regarded as part of international law, particularly since the General Assembly in 1946 affirmed the principles of this Charter and the decision of the Tribunal.²⁰ The Assembly also stated that genocide was a crime under ¹² See C. Mullins, The Leipzig Trials, London, 1921. See also e.g. the International Convention for the Protection of Submarine Telegraph Cables, 1884; the Agreement for the Suppression of the Circulation of Obscene Publications, 1910; the International Convention for the Suppression of the Circulation of and Traffic in Obscene Publications 1924; the Agreement Concerning the Suppression of Opium-Smoking, 1931; the Convention for the Suppression of the Illicit Traffic in Dangerous Drugs, 1936; and the International Convention for the Suppression of Counterfeiting Currency, 1929 with regard to the establishment of individual responsibility in the case of specific issues.

¹³ See article 6, 39 AJIL, 1945, Supp., p. 259. See also H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950, p. 6, and Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 116 ff.

¹⁴ See 41 AJIL, 1947, p. 220. See also I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963, p. 167; T. Taylor, An Anatomy of the Nuremberg Trial, London, 1993; A. Tusa and J. Tusa, The Nuremberg Trial, London, 1983; and K. J. Heller, The Nuremberg Military Tribunal and the Origins of International Criminal Law, Oxford, 2011.

¹⁵ 36 ILR, p. 31. Twelve major US trials took place in Nuremberg, see H. Levie, Terrorism in War: The Law of War Crimes, New York, 1992, pp. 72 ff., while trials took place in the British-occupied sector of Germany under the Royal Warrant of 1946, see A. P. V. Rogers, 'War Crimes Trials under the Royal Warrant, British Practice 1945–1949', 39 ICLQ, 1990, p. 780; and see also R v. Jones [2006] UKHL 16, para. 22 (Lord Bingham); 132 ILR, p. 679; and Re Sandrock and Others 13 ILR, p. 297.

¹⁶ Established by a proclamation by General MacArthur of 19 January 1946, so authorised by the Allied Powers in order to implement the Potsdam Declaration: see Hirota v. MacArthur 335 US 876 and TIAS, 1946, No. 1589, p. 3; 15 AD, p. 485.

¹⁷ US, UK, USSR, Australia, Canada, China, France, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand and the Philippines.

¹⁸ See e.g. B. V. A. Röling and A. Cassese, The Tokyo Trial and Beyond, Cambridge, 1992, and S. Horowitz, The Tokyo Trial, International Conciliation No. 465 (1950). But see as to criticisms of the process, R. Minear, Victor's Justice: The Tokyo War Crimes Trial, Princeton, 1971. See also Beyond Victor's Justice? The Tokyo War Crimes Trial Revisited (ed. Y. Tanaka, T. McCormack and G. Simpson), The Hague, 2012.

¹⁹ Article 5.

²⁰ Resolution 95(I). See also the International Law Commission's Report on Principles of the Nuremberg Tribunal, Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, p. 195, and the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity, 1968.

international law bearing individual responsibility.²¹ This was reaffirmed in the Genocide Convention of 1948, which also called for prosecutions by either domestic courts or 'an international penal tribunal'.²² The International Law Commission produced a Draft Code of Offences against the Peace and Security of Mankind in 1954, article 1 of which provided that 'offences against the peace and security of mankind, as defined in this Code, are crimes under international law, for which the responsible individuals shall be punishable'.²³

Individual responsibility has also been confirmed with regard to grave breaches of the four 1949 Geneva Red Cross Conventions and 1977 Additional Protocols I and II dealing with armed conflicts. It is provided specifically that the High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing or ordering to be committed any of a series of grave breaches.²⁴ Such grave breaches include wilful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, extensive destruction and appropriation of property not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly, unlawful deportation or transfer of protected persons and the taking of hostages.²⁵ Protocol I of 1977 extends the list to include, for example, making the civilian population the object of attack and launching an attack against works or installations containing dangerous forces in the knowledge that such attack will cause excessive loss of life or damage to civilians or their property when committed wilfully and causing death or serious injury; other activities such as transferring civilian population from the territory of an occupying power to that of an occupied area or deporting from an occupied area, apartheid and racial discrimination, and attacking clearly recognised historic monuments, works of art or places of worship, may also constitute grave breaches when committed wilfully.²⁶

Any individual, regardless of rank or governmental status, would be personally liable for any war crimes or grave breaches committed, while the principle of command (or superior) responsibility means that any person in a position of authority ordering the commission of a war crime or grave breach would be as accountable as the subordinate committing it.²⁷ The International Law Commission in 1991 provisionally adopted a Draft Code of Crimes Against the Peace and Security of Mankind,²⁸ which was revised in 1996.²⁹ The 1996 Draft Code provides for individual criminal responsibility³⁰ with regard to aggression,³¹ genocide,³² a crime against humanity,³³ a crime against United Nations and associated personnel,³⁴ and war crimes.³⁵ The fact that an individual may be responsible for the crimes in question is deemed not to affect the issue of state responsibility.³⁶ The Security Council in two resolutions on the Somali situation in the early 1990s unanimously condemned breaches of humanitarian law and stated that the authors of such breaches or those who had ordered their commission would be held 'individually responsible' for ²¹ Resolution 96(I).

²² Note that the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid of 1973 declared apartheid to be an international crime involving direct individual criminal responsibility.

²³ A/2693, and 45 AJIL, 1954, Supp., p. 123.

²⁴ See article 49 of the First Geneva Convention, article 50 of the Second Geneva Convention, article 129 of the Third Geneva Convention and article 146 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. See further below, chapter 20, p. 919.

²⁵ See e.g. article 50 of the First Geneva Convention, article 51 of the Second Geneva Convention, article 130 of the Third Geneva Convention and article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. See also L. C. Green, The Contemporary Law of Armed Conflict, 3rd edn, Manchester, 2008, chapter 18.

²⁶ See article 85 of Protocol I. ²⁷ See further below, pp. 322 and 315, note 211.

²⁸ 27 A/46/10 and 30 ILM, 1991, p. 1584. ²⁹ A/51/10, p. 9. ³⁰ See article 2. ³¹ See article 16. ³² Article 17.

³³ Article 18. ³⁴ Article 19. ³⁵ Article 20. ³⁶ Article 4.

them,³⁷ while Security Council resolution 674 (1990) concerning Iraq's occupation of Kuwait, reaffirming Iraq's liability under the Fourth Geneva Convention, 1949 dealing with civilian populations of occupied areas, noted that such responsibility for grave breaches extended to 'individuals who commit or order the commission of grave breaches'.³⁸

The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ICTY)³⁹

It was, however, the events in the former Yugoslavia that impelled a renewal of interest in the establishment of an international criminal court, which had long been under consideration, but in a desultory fashion.⁴⁰ The Yugoslav experience, and the Rwanda massacres of 1994, led to the establishment of two specific war crimes tribunals by the use of the authority of the UN Security Council to adopt decisions binding upon all member states of the organisation under Chapter VII of the Charter, rather than by an international conference as was to be the case with the International Criminal Court. This method was used in order both to enable the tribunal in question to come into operation as quickly as possible and to ensure that the parties most closely associated with the subject-matter of the war crimes alleged should be bound in a manner not dependent upon their consent (as would be necessary in the case of a court established by international agreement). The establishment of the Tribunal was preceded by a series of steps. In Security Council resolutions 764 (1992), 771 (1992) and 820 (1993), grave concern was expressed with regard to breaches of international humanitarian law and the responsibilities of the parties were reaffirmed. In particular, individual responsibility for the commission of grave breaches of the 1949 Conventions was emphasised. Under resolution 780 (1992), the Security Council established an impartial Commission of Experts to examine and analyse information concerning evidence of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions and other violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia. The Commission produced a report in early 1993 in which it concluded that grave breaches and other violations of international humanitarian law had been committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia, including wilful killing, 'ethnic cleansing', mass killings, torture, rape, pillage and destruction of civilian property, the destruction of cultural and religious property and arbitrary arrests.⁴¹

³⁷ Resolutions 794 (1992) and 814 (1993).

³⁸ See also e.g. the Special Section on Iraqi War Crimes, 31 Va. JIL, 1991, p. 351.

³⁹ See e.g. Assessing the Legacy of the ICTY (ed. R. Steinbert), The Hague, 2012; The Legacy of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia (ed. B. Swart, A. Zahar and G. Sluiter), Oxford, 2011; M. Shahabuddeen, International Criminal Justice at the Yugoslav Tribunal, Oxford, 2012; W. Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals: The Former Yugoslavia, Rwanda and Sierra Leone, Cambridge, 2006; V. Morris and M. P. Scharf, An Insider's Guide to the International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia, New York, 1995; R. Kerr, The International Criminal Tribunal for Former Yugoslavia: An Exercise in Law, Politics and Diplomacy, Oxford, 2004; the series of articles on the ICTY published in 2 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2004, pp. 353 ff. and 37 New England Law Review, 2002–3, pp. 865 ff.; T. Meron, The Making of International Criminal Justice: A View from the Bench, Oxford, 2011; O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 12; and R. Kolb, 'The Jurisprudence of the Yugoslav and Rwandan Criminal Tribunals on Their Jurisdiction and on International Crimes', 84 BYIL, 2014, p. 131.

⁴⁰ See e.g. B. Ferencz, 'An International Criminal Code and Court: Where They Stand and Where They're Going', 30 Columbia Journal of Transnational Law, 1992, p. 375.

⁴¹ See S/25274. See also M. C. Bassiouni, 'The United Nations Commission of Experts Established Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 780 (1992)', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 784.

The Security Council then adopted resolution 808 (1993) calling for the establishment of an international tribunal to prosecute 'persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991'. The Secretary-General of the UN produced a report incorporating a draft statute and commentary,⁴² which was adopted by the Security Council in resolution 827 (1993) acting under Chapter VII of the UN Charter.⁴³

The Tribunal has the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of the former Yugoslavia since 1991 (articles 1 and 8 of the Statute). The absence of a closing date meant that the later conflict in Kosovo could be the subject of prosecutions.⁴⁴ The Tribunal consists of three main organs: the Registry, the office of the Prosecutor and the Chambers.⁴⁵ The Registry is the administrative body,⁴⁶ while the Office of the Prosecutor is responsible for investigations, issuing of indictments and bringing matters to trial. There are currently three Trial Chambers, each consisting of a presiding judge and two other judges, and an Appeals Chamber, consisting of seven members but sitting in a panel of five, headed by a President. Of the seven, five come from the ICTY and two from the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.⁴⁷ The Chambers have a maximum of sixteen permanent judges and a maximum of twelve ad litem judges drawn from a pool of twenty-seven such judges elected by the General Assembly for four-year renewable terms.⁴⁸

Articles 2 to 5 of the Statute lay down the crimes with regard to which the Tribunal can exercise jurisdiction. These are: grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949, violation of the laws or customs of war, genocide and crimes against humanity.⁴⁹

Article 7 establishes that persons who 'planned, instigated, ordered, committed or otherwise aided and abetted in the planning, preparation or execution' of crimes listed in articles 2 to 5 shall be individually responsible for the crime. This article also provides that the official position of any accused person is not to relieve a person of criminal responsibility nor mitigate punishment, while the fact that a subordinate committed the crime is not to relieve a superior of responsibility if the latter knew or had reason to know that the subordinate was about to or had committed the crime and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent the acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof. It is also stipulated that the fact that an accused person acted pursuant to an order of a government or of a superior will not relieve him of criminal responsibility, although this may constitute a mitigating factor if the Tribunal determines that justice so requires. The Appeals Chamber of the Tribunal in the Tadić case confirmed that customary international law had imposed criminal responsibility for serious violations of humanitarian law governing internal as well as international armed conflicts.⁵⁰

The Tribunal and national courts have concurrent jurisdiction with regard to the prosecution of relevant accused persons, but the Tribunal has primacy over national courts, so that the former ⁴² S/25704 (1993).

⁴³ The Statute has been subsequently amended: see Security Council resolutions 1166 (1998), 1329 (2000), 1411 (2002), 1431 (2002), 1481 (2003), 1597 (2005) and 1660 (2006).

⁴⁴ See Security Council resolution 1160 (1998) and Milutinović, ICTY, A. Ch. 8 June 2004. See also as to events in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, In re: The Republic of Macedonia I, ICTY, T. Ch. 4 October 2002.

⁴⁵ Article 11. ⁴⁶ Article 17. ⁴⁷ Article 14. ⁴⁸ Articles 12 and 13. ⁴⁹ See further below, p. 211.

⁵⁰ See IT-94-1-AR72, 2 October 1995, p. 70; 105 ILR, p. 419. See further below, chapter 20, p. 911.

may request the latter to defer to its competence.⁵¹ States are obliged to co-operate with the International Tribunal in the investigation and prosecution of persons accused of committing serious violations of international humanitarian law and must comply without undue delay with any request for assistance or an order issued by a Trial Chamber, including the identification and location of persons; the taking of testimony and the production of evidence; the arrest or detention of persons; and the surrender or the transfer of the accused to the International Tribunal.⁵² No person may be tried by a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the Statute, for which he or she has already been tried by the International Tribunal, but the Tribunal may try a person for relevant acts after trial by a national court where the act for which he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or where the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case was not diligently prosecuted.⁵³

Investigations into alleged offences under the Statute are initiated by the Prosecutor either ex officio or on the basis of information obtained from any source, particularly from governments, United Nations organs, intergovernmental and non-governmental organisations. Information received is assessed by the Prosecutor, who then decides whether there is a sufficient basis to proceed. The Prosecutor may question suspects, victims and witnesses, collect evidence and conduct on-site investigations. Where it is determined that a prima facie case exists, the Prosecutor shall prepare an indictment containing a concise statement of the facts and the crime or crimes with which the accused is charged, and this indictment is then transmitted to a judge of the Trial Chamber, who will review it. If satisfied that a prima facie case has been established by the Prosecutor, the judge will confirm the indictment. If not so satisfied, the indictment shall be dismissed. Upon confirmation of an indictment, the judge may, at the request of the Prosecutor, issue such orders and warrants for the arrest, detention, surrender or transfer of persons, and any other orders as may be required for the conduct of the trial. It will then be for the Trial Chambers to ensure that the trial is fair and expeditious and that proceedings are conducted in accordance with the rules of procedure and evidence, with full respect for the rights of the accused and due regard for the protection of victims and witnesses.⁵⁴ Judgment will then be reached by the Trial Chamber concerned and punishment, limited to imprisonment, imposed upon conviction.⁵⁵ Appeal is to the Appeals Chamber on the grounds either of an error of law invalidating the decision or of an error of fact occasioning a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber may affirm, reverse or revise the decisions taken by the Trial Chambers.⁵⁶

The Tribunal has dealt with a number of significant issues.⁵⁷ In an early case, the Appeal Chamber held that it had the power to review the question of the legality of the establishment of the Tribunal and noted that the Security Council had adopted a decision under Chapter VII of the ⁵¹ Article 9. Under Rule 9 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence as amended, deferral of national proceedings may be requested where the act being investigated or which is the subject of those proceedings is characterised as an ordinary crime; or there is a lack of impartiality or independence, or the investigations or proceedings are designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case is not diligently prosecuted; or what is in issue is closely related to, or otherwise involves, significant factual or legal questions which may have implications for investigations or prosecutions before the Tribunal. See as to the different situation with regard to the International Criminal Court, below, p. 298.

⁵² Article 29. ⁵³ Article 10. ⁵⁴ Articles 18–20. ⁵⁵ Article 24. ⁵⁶ Article 25.

⁵⁷ See further below, pp. 315 ff.

UN Charter binding on all member states to create the Tribunal in the framework of the restoration of international peace and security.⁵⁸

As of July 2016, the Tribunal had issued 161 indictments, with regard to which 83 individuals had been sentenced, 19 acquitted, 36 indictments withdrawn (including where the accused had died) and 13 persons transferred to national jurisdictions. There were at this date ongoing proceedings with regard to 8 accused (not including 2 individuals being retried before the Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunals).⁵⁹ However, the UN Security Council has confirmed a completion strategy which was intended to ensure a phased and co-ordinated completion of the Tribunal's mission by the end of 2010.⁶⁰ Under this strategy, the ICTY concentrated on the prosecution and trial of the most senior leaders while referring other cases involving intermediate and lower-rank accused to national courts. Two main categories of cases have been referred to national courts in the region of the former Yugoslavia, being those cases that were investigated to different levels by the Tribunal's Prosecution which did not result in the issuance of an indictment by the ICTY and the small number of cases that were investigated by the Tribunal's Prosecution and that resulted in the confirmation of indictments by the Tribunal and the transfer of accused persons to the Tribunal's custody. Cases began to be transferred to the national courts of successor states to the former Yugoslavia, particularly Bosnia and Croatia, in 2005.⁶¹ By mid-2016, thirteen 'lower to mid-level accused' in eight cases had been transferred to local courts.⁶²

The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR)⁶³

Following events in Rwanda during 1994 and the mass slaughter that took place, the Security Council decided in resolution 955 (1994) to establish an International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, with the power to prosecute persons responsible for serious violations of international ⁵⁸ Tadić, IT-94-1-AR72, 2 October 1995, p. 70, paras. 30 ff.; 105 ILR, p. 419. After this decision, the Dayton Peace Agreement was signed, which includes the obligation placed upon all states of the former Yugoslavia to co-operate with the Tribunal: see Article X, Annex 1-A.

⁵⁹ See www.icty.org/en/content/infographic-icty-facts-figures. As to the Mechanism, see below, p. 297. Note the death in custody of the Yugoslav President Slobodan Milošević on 11 March 2006 during his trial on sixty-six counts of violations of the Statute including genocide: see ICTY Annual Report 2006, A/61/271 – S/2006/666, para. 55.

⁶⁰ See resolutions 1503 (2003) and 1534 (2004). Under the resolutions the Trial Chambers were required to complete their business by 2008 and the Appeals Chamber by 2010. See also D. Raab, 'Evaluating the ICTY and Its Completion Strategy', 3 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2005, p. 82.

⁶¹ See M. Bohlander, 'Referring an Indictment from the ICTY and ICTR to Another Court – Rule 11 bis and the Consequences for the Law of Extradition', 55 ICLQ, 2006, p. 219. See also below, pp. 312 ff.

⁶² See ICTY Annual Report 2007, A/62/172 – S/2007/469, para. 10 and S/2013/308. No further transfers were contemplated, see www.icty.org/sid/103 and www.icty.org/en/content/infographic-icty-facts-figures.

⁶³ See e.g. UN Secretary-General Reports S/1994/879 and S/1994/906 and the Report of the Special Rapporteur for Rwanda of the UN Commission on Human Rights, S/1994/1157, annex I and annex II, and the Report of the Commission of Experts, S/1994/1125. See also L. Sadat, 'The Legacy of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda', Washington University in St Louis School of Law, Legal Studies Research Paper Series, 2012 and 'Judicial Dialogue and the Rwandan Genocide: Aspects of Antagonism and Complementarity', 22 Leiden Journal of International Law, 2009, p. 543; A. Dieng, 'Capacity-Building Efforts of the ICTR: A Different Kind of Legacy', Northwestern University Journal of International Human Rights, 2011, p. 403; V. Morris and M. P. Scharf, The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, New York, 1998; L. J. van den Herik, The Contribution of the Rwanda Tribunal to the Development of International Law, The Hague, 2005; R. S. Lee, 'The Rwanda Tribunal', 9 Leiden Journal of International Law, 1996, p. 37; O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 12 and Kolb, 'The Jurisprudence of the Yugoslav and Rwandan Criminal Tribunals'.

humanitarian law. The Statute of this Tribunal was annexed to the body of the Security Council resolution and bears many similarities to the Statute of the Yugoslav Tribunal.

The Rwanda Tribunal consisted of three Trial Chambers, an Office of the Prosecutor and a Registry with the same functions as those of the Yugoslav Tribunal.⁶⁴ The Chambers were composed of sixteen permanent independent judges, no two of whom could be nationals of the same state, and a maximum at any one time of nine ad litem independent judges. The ICTR and the ICTY shared a joint Appeals Chamber, two members of whom were members of the Rwanda Tribunal.⁶⁵

Articles 2 to 4 of the Statute stipulated the crimes over which the Tribunal had jurisdiction. Article 2 dealt with genocide; article 3 with crimes against humanity, being the crimes of (a) murder; (b) extermination; (c) enslavement; (d) deportation; (e) imprisonment; (f) torture; (g) rape; (h) persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds; and (i) other inhumane acts, when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds; and article 4 dealt with violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.⁶⁶ Article 6 provided for individual criminal responsibility with regard to persons planning, ordering, committing or aiding the crimes listed, while provisions similar to the Statute of the Yugoslav Tribunal with regard to the absence of immunity for persons holding official positions, command responsibility and superior orders applied.

The Tribunal had jurisdiction with regard to serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in the territory of Rwanda and Rwandan citizens responsible for such violations committed in the territory of neighbouring states between 1 January 1994 and 31 December 1994.⁶⁷ As in the case of the ICTY, the ICTR had concurrent jurisdiction with national courts and had primacy over national courts of all states, while at any stage of the procedure, the Tribunal could formally request national courts to defer to its competence.⁶⁸ Similarly, no person may be tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law under the present Statute, for which he or she had already been tried by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, while a person who had been tried before a national court for acts constituting serious violations of international humanitarian law could be subsequently tried by the Tribunal only if either the act for which he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility, or the case was not diligently prosecuted.⁶⁹

After several difficult early years, during which problems of mismanagement with regard to the Office of the Prosecutor and the Registry predominated,⁷⁰ the Tribunal began to produce some significant decisions. These commenced with the Kambanda case,⁷¹ which was the first time that a former head of government was convicted for the crime of genocide (after having pleaded guilty), and the Akayesu case,⁷² in which for the first time an international tribunal was called ⁶⁴ Article 10.

⁶⁵ See Security Council resolution 1329 (2000). The two Tribunals shared a Prosecutor until a separate Prosecutor was appointed to the ICTR in 2003; see Security Council resolution 1503 (2003).

⁶⁶ See below, chapter 20, p. 915. ⁶⁷ Article 7. ⁶⁸ Article 8. ⁶⁹ Article 9.

⁷⁰ See e.g. Report of the Secretary-General on the Activities of the Office of Internal Oversight Services, A/51/789 and ICTR Annual Report 1997, A/52/582 - S/1997/868.

⁷¹ ICTR T. Ch. 4 September 1998. ⁷² ICTR T. Ch. 12 September 1998.

upon to interpret the definition of genocide in the Genocide Convention, 1948 and to define the crime of rape in international law. However, the rate of progress was disappointing and tensions with Rwanda have surfaced from time to time.

As in the case of the ICTY, the Rwanda Tribunal formulated a completion strategy, affirmed by Security Council resolutions 1503 (2003) and 1534 (2004), although it had in 2002 adopted Rule 11 bis of the Rules of Procedure permitting the transfer of cases to national jurisdictions, as had the ICTY.⁷³ The Security Council, as with the ICTY, increased the number of ad litem judges and various other management decisions were taken. A separate Prosecutor for the ICTR was appointed in 2003. Attention was focused upon the prosecution of individuals who allegedly were in positions of leadership, and those who allegedly bore the greatest responsibility for the genocide, while the Prosecutor held discussions with states, including Rwanda, regarding the referral of cases to national jurisdictions for trial, in particular with respect to accused persons who were investigated but not indicted by his office. Considerations of fair trial in the state concerned were also a relevant factor, as well as the alleged status and extent of participation of the individual during the genocide, the alleged connection that the individual may have had with other cases, the need to cover the major geographical areas of Rwanda, the availability of evidence with regard to the individual concerned and the availability of investigative material for transmission to a state for national prosecution. The ICTR delivered its final trial judgment on 20 December 2012⁷⁴ and its final appeal judgment on 14 December 2015.⁷⁵ On 31 December 2015, the Tribunal came to a close, handing over its functions to the Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunals.⁷⁶

The Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunals

An international residual mechanism for the international criminal tribunals to carry out a number of essential functions of the ICYT and ICTR after the closure of the Tribunals, including the trial of fugitives who were among the most senior leaders suspected of being most responsible for crimes was established in 2010.⁷⁷ The Mechanism was intended to be a small, temporary and efficient structure. In accordance with its statute,⁷⁸ the Mechanism has a President, a Prosecutor and a Registrar, who together have responsibility over two branches, one in Arusha and one in The Hague. The Mechanism is planned to operate for an initial period of four years and then for subsequent periods of two years following reviews of its progress, unless the Security Council

⁷³ Note that on 16 December 2011, the ICTR Appeals Chamber upheld the first referral of an international criminal indictment to Rwanda for trial, in the case against Jean-Bosco Uwinkindi, ICTR-01-75-AR11 bis. A total of eight ICTR cases were referred to Rwanda. Two additional cases were referred to France for trial. Monitoring in all referred cases is presently being conducted by the Mechanism (see next section).

⁷⁴ <http://unictr.unmict.org/en/news/trial-chamber-delivers-judgement-ngirabatware-case>.

⁷⁵ Nyiramasuhoko et al. (Butare), ICTR-98-42-A.

⁷⁶ See the address to the UN Security Council by the President of the Tribunal on 9 December 2015, <http://unictr.unmict.org/en/news/address-United-nations-security-council-final-report-completion-strategy-international-criminal>.

By its close, the Tribunal had completed its work at the trial level with respect to all of the 93 persons indicted. This included 55 first-instance judgments and 45 appeal judgments: 61 individuals were sentenced, 14 acquitted, 10 referred to national jurisdictions for trial, 3 died prior to or during trial, 3 fugitives were referred to the Mechanism, while 2 indictments were withdrawn before trial, <http://unictr.unmict.org/en/tribunal>. See also the Final Report of the ICTR, S/2015/884, 17 November 2015.

⁷⁷ Security Council resolution 1966 (2010). See also www.unmict.org/. ⁷⁸ Ibid., Annex I.

decides otherwise. The Mechanism commenced operations at its Arusha branch on 1 July 2012, covering functions inherited from the ICTR and the branch in The Hague commenced on 1 July 2013 with regard to functions inherited from the ICTY. Its functions include attending to judicial matters such as the trial of fugitives indicted by the ICTR, providing for witness protection, supervising the enforcement of sentences and managing archives. The third annual report of the Mechanism noted that nine persons indicted by the ICTR remained at large, of whom three were expected to be tried by the Mechanism, and the cases of the remaining six were transferred to Rwanda for trial.⁷⁹

The International Criminal Court (ICC)⁸⁰

Article VI of the Genocide Convention, 1948 provided for persons charged with genocide to be tried either by a court in the territory where the act had been committed or by an 'international penal tribunal' to be established. The International Law Commission was asked to study the possibility of the establishment of such an international court and a report was produced.⁸¹ The matter was then transmitted to the General Assembly which produced a draft statute.⁸² However, the question was postponed until a definition of aggression had been achieved and the draft Code of Offences completed. Due primarily to political reasons, no further progress was made until Trinidad and Tobago proposed the creation of a permanent international criminal court to deal with drug trafficking in 1989. Given additional urgency by the developing Yugoslav situation in the early 1990s, the International Law Commission adopted a Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court in 1994.⁸³ This draft statute proposed that an international criminal court be established with jurisdiction not only over genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity and aggression, but also over certain 'treaty crimes' such as terrorism and drugs offences found in UN conventions. The draft statute was also less expansive than the International Criminal Court Statute proved to be in a number of ways, including not providing for the Prosecutor to initiate investigations on his or her own authority. However, the ILC draft proved very influential and a Preparatory Committee was convened in December 1995.⁸⁴ The work of this Committee⁸⁵ led to the Rome Conference in 1998, which produced after some ⁷⁹ A/70/225-S/2015/586, 31 July 2015.

⁸⁰ See e.g. The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. C. Stahn.), Oxford, 2015; Schabas, Introduction to the International Criminal Court and The International Criminal Court; O. Triffterer and Ambos, The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court; Contested Justice: The Politics and Practice of International Criminal Court Interventions (ed. C. de Vos, S. Kendall and C. Stahn), Cambridge, 2015; T. M. Funk, Victims' Rights and Advocacy at the International Criminal Court, Oxford, 2015; L. Grover, Interpreting Crimes in the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Cambridge, 2014; O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 14; K. Calvo-Goller, La Procédure et al Jurisprudence de la Court Pénale Internationale, Paris, 2012; International Criminal Court; The Permanent International Criminal Court: Legal and Policy Issues (ed. D. McGoldrick, P. Rowe and E. Donnelly), Oxford, 2004; The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ed. A. Cassese, P. Gaeta and J. R. W. D. Jones), Oxford, 2002; M. C. Bassiouni, 'The Permanent International Criminal Court', in Lattimer and Sands, Justice for Crimes Against Humanity, p. 173; and The International Criminal Court: The Making of the Rome Statute (ed. R. Lee), The Hague, 1999.

⁸¹ See General Assembly resolution 260 (III) B and A/CN.4/15 and A/CN.4/20 (1950). ⁸² UNGAOR A/2645.

⁸³ See Report of the ILC on the Work of its 46th Session, A/49/10, pp. 43 ff. See in particular J. Crawford, 'The ILC's Draft Statute for an International Criminal Court', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 140, and Crawford, 'The Making of the Rome Statute', in From Nuremberg to The Hague: The Future of International Criminal Justice (ed. P. Sands), Cambridge, 2003, p. 109.

⁸⁴ General Assembly resolution 50/46. See also resolutions 51/207 and 52/160.

⁸⁵ See A/51/22 and A/CONF.183/13 (III), p. 5.

effort the Rome Statute on the International Criminal Court on 17 July 1998. Sixty states were needed to ratify the Rome Statute in order for it to come into force and this duly happened on 1 July 2002. Unlike the two international criminal tribunals (for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda), the ICC is the product not of a binding Security Council resolution, but of an international treaty. This was essentially because states, while being prepared to accept the creation of geographically limited (the Former Yugoslavia) and temporally constrained (in Rwanda's case) tribunals by Security Council action, were not willing to be so bound by the establishment of a permanent international criminal court with much more extensive jurisdiction without express consent. Secondly, it is to be noted that the range and content of the Rome Statute is far greater than those of the two international criminal tribunals. The Rome Statute contains 128 articles, while the ICTY Statute contains 34 articles and the ICTR Statute 32 articles.

The Statute provides that the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court is limited to the 'most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole', being genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and aggression,⁸⁶ and that a person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of the Court 'shall be individually responsible and liable for punishment' in accordance with the Statute.⁸⁷ The ICC only has jurisdiction with respect to crimes committed after the Statute came into force and with respect to states which have become parties to the Statute.⁸⁸ Further, jurisdiction may only be exercised provided either the state on the territory of which the conduct in question occurred (or if the crime was committed on board a vessel or aircraft, the state of registration of that vessel or aircraft) or the state of which the person accused of the crime is a national is a party to the Statute.⁸⁹ This means that the jurisdiction of the ICC is not universal, but territorial or personal in nature. It also means that the national of a state which is not a party to the Statute may be prosecuted where the crime is committed in the territory of a state which is a party. However, the Court may also have jurisdiction where a situation has been referred to the Prosecutor by the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, which is thereby binding and in which case it is unnecessary that a relevant state be a party to the ⁸⁶ Article 5. These provisions are further defined in detail in articles 6–8 and see below, p. 315. In addition, article 9 provides for the preparation of Elements of Crimes to assist the Court in the interpretation and application of articles 6, 7 and 8. This was adopted on 9 September 2002 by the Assembly of States Parties, together with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. However, jurisdiction could not be exercised with regard to the crime of aggression until the Statute had been amended by its definition and the acceptance of conditions for jurisdiction. A review conference was held in Kampala in 2010 and a definition of the crime of aggression agreed, resulting in the insertion of new article 8 bis into the Rome Statute. Under new article 15 bis, the Court will only have jurisdiction over the crime of aggression one year after the amendment has entered into force for thirty states parties and, on a date after 1 January 2017, the same majority of States Parties as is required for the adoption of an amendment to the Statute (seven-eighths) has voted in favour of allowing the Court to have such jurisdiction, see C.N.651.2010.TREATIES-8 and https://asp.icc-cpi.int/en_menus/asp/crime%20of%20aggression/Pages/default.aspx.

⁸⁷ Article 25.

⁸⁸ Article 11. Note, however, that a state may make a declaration under article 12(3) to permit the Court to exercise jurisdiction in the particular case as from 1 July 2002. Note also that under article 124, a state may, upon ratification, decide not to accept the jurisdiction of the ICC over war crimes with regard to its nationals or to crimes committed on its territory for a period of seven years. In fact, only France and Colombia have taken advantage of this provision. In November 2014, the Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute adopted an amendment for the deletion of article 124, Res. ICC-ASP/14/Res.2, Assembly of States Parties to the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, 14th Session, ICC-ASP/14/20/vol. I, 18–26 November 2015, at 26. See also A. Zimmermann, 'Finally . . . Or Would Rather Less Have Been More', 14 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2016, p. 505. As of July 2016, the amendment has been ratified only by Norway, https://treaties.un.org/Pages/ViewDetails.aspx?src=TREATY&mtdsg_no=XVIII-10-c&chapter=18&clang=_en.

⁸⁹ Article 12(2).

Statute.⁹⁰ This has happened with regard to the situation in Darfur, Sudan, which was referred to the Prosecutor on 31 March 2005 by the Security Council in resolution 1593. After a preliminary examination of the situation, an investigation was opened on 1 June 2005 and after a twenty-month investigation into crimes allegedly committed in Darfur since 1 July 2002, the Prosecutor presented evidence to the judges and a summons to two named Sudanese individuals, one being a government minister and the other a military officer, to appear was issued with regard to charges alleging the commission of war crimes and crimes against humanity.⁹¹ Warrants of arrest were issued on 27 April 2007 against the two individuals by Pre-Trial Chamber I.⁹² Two warrants of arrest were subsequently issued against President Al-Bashir.⁹³ On 26 February 2011, the situation in Libya was referred to the Prosecutor by the Security Council in resolution 1970 (2011). This resulted in warrants of arrest being issued by Pre-Trial Chamber I for Muammar Gaddafi (the then leader of Libya), Saif Al-Islam Gaddafi and Abdulla Al-Senussi.⁹⁴

In addition to the Security Council referral, the ICC is also able to exercise its jurisdiction with regard to one or more of the crimes in question where the situation in which one or more of these crimes appears to have been committed has been referred to the Prosecutor by a state party to the Statute,⁹⁵ or where the Prosecutor has himself or herself initiated an investigation.⁹⁶ In the latter case, where the Prosecutor concludes, after having analysed the seriousness of the information received, that there is a reasonable basis to proceed to an investigation, a request for authorisation of an investigation, together with any supporting material collected, will be submitted to the Pre-Trial Chamber. Victims may also make representations to the Pre-Trial Chamber, in accordance with the Rules of Procedure and Evidence. Where the Pre-Trial Chamber, upon examination of the request and the supporting material, considers that there is a reasonable basis to proceed with an investigation, and that the case appears to fall within the jurisdiction of the Court, it shall authorise the commencement of the investigation, without prejudice to subsequent determinations by the Court with regard to the jurisdiction and admissibility of a case.⁹⁷

⁹⁰ Article 13(b). ⁹¹ See <https://www.icc-cpi.int/darfur>.

⁹² See ICC-02/05-01/07-2 01-05-2007 1/16 CB PT and ICC-02/05-01/07-3 01-05-2007 1/17 CB PT. The Prosecutor applied for a warrant of arrest against the President of Sudan on 14 July 2008 alleging genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, ICC-OTP-20080714-PR341-ENG.

⁹³ On 4 March 2009 and 12 July 2010, see 23rd Report of the Prosecutor to the Security Council Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1593 (2005), 2016, see https://www.icc-cpi.int/iccdocs/otp/23-otp-rep-UNSC-darfur_ENG.pdf

⁹⁴ See <https://www.icc-cpi.int/libya>. The warrant against Muammar Gaddafi was terminated upon his death in November 2011. Saif Gaddafi is at the time of writing in custody in Libya which is contesting the obligation reaffirmed by the Court, rejecting the admissibility challenge, to transfer him to the Court, see e.g. Decision of the Appeals Chamber, ICC-01/11-01/1104A4, 18 July 2013. Proceedings against Abdullah Al-Senussi ended on 24 July 2014 when the Appeals Chamber confirmed a decision of Pre-Trial Chambers I declaring the case inadmissible. The Prosecutor reported that the Tripoli Court of Assize convicted Al-Senussi and sentenced him to death: see Prosecutor's 11th Report to the Security Council Pursuant to Security Council Resolution 1970 (2011), 2016, https://www.icc-cpi.int/itemsDocuments/otp_report_lib_26052016-eng.pdf.

⁹⁵ Articles 13(a) and 14. ⁹⁶ Article 13(c).

⁹⁷ Article 15. The refusal of the Pre-Trial Chamber to authorise the investigation will not preclude the presentation of a subsequent request by the Prosecutor based on new facts or evidence regarding the same situation. If, after the preliminary examination referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2, the Prosecutor concludes that the information provided does not constitute a reasonable basis for an investigation, he or she shall inform those who provided the information. This shall not preclude the Prosecutor from considering further information submitted to him or her regarding the same situation in the light of new facts or evidence.

There have been five examples to date of referral by a state party. In December 2003, Uganda referred to the Prosecutor the situation with regard to the Lord's Resistance Army;⁹⁸ in April 2004, the Democratic Republic of the Congo referred to the Prosecutor the situation of crimes committed in its territory;⁹⁹ in December 2004, the Central African Republic referred the situation in its country during the armed conflict of 2002–3 to the Prosecutor.¹⁰⁰ In May 2014, the Government made a further referral concerning alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in the context of renewed violence as from 2012 in that country.¹⁰¹ In July 2012, the Government of Mali referred the situation in its country to the Prosecutor.¹⁰² The Prosecutor may also initiate an investigation under article 13 proprio motu on the basis of information on crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court received from individuals or organisations. For example, Pre-Trial Chamber II granted the Prosecution authorisation to open an investigation proprio motu in the situation of Kenya on 31 March 2010.¹⁰³ In addition, on 3 October 2011, Pre-Trial Chamber III granted the Prosecutor's request for authorisation to open investigations proprio motu into the situation in Côte d'Ivoire.¹⁰⁴ In January 2016, the Prosecutor was authorised to open a proprio motu investigation concerning alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed during the armed conflict in Georgia between July and ⁹⁸ In July 2004, an investigation was opened by the Prosecutor, and on 8 July 2005, warrants of arrest for crimes against humanity and war crimes against five senior commanders (one of whom died in 2006) of the Lord's Resistance Army were issued under seal by Pre-Trial Chamber II. One member of the LRA surrendered himself in January 2015: see <https://www.icc-cpi.int/uganda>.

⁹⁹ See ICC-OTP-20040419-50-En. An investigation was opened in June 2004, the first such investigation by the Prosecutor: see ICC-OTP-20040623-59-En. An arrest warrant was issued in early 2006 against Thomas Lubanga Dyilo, who was convicted on 14 March 2012 and sentenced to 14 years. The verdict and sentence were confirmed on appeal on 1 December 2014. Reparations proceedings are continuing: see <https://www.icc-cpi.int/drc>. An arrest warrant was issued against Germain Katanga and Mathieu Ngudjolo Chui in July 2007 and, upon trial, the charges were severed and the latter acquitted (the verdict being upheld on appeal on 27 February 2015), while the former was convicted on 7 March 2014 (the appeal was withdrawn), and see <https://www.icc-cpi.int/drc>. A further accused (Mbarushimana) has been released, while in March 2013, Bosco Ntaganda surrendered himself voluntarily and is in custody, ibid.

¹⁰⁰ An investigation was opened by the Prosecutor in May 2007 and an arrest warrant issued. Jean-Pierre Bemba Gombo was convicted on 21 March 2016 and sentenced a month later, <https://www.icc-cpi.int/car>.

¹⁰¹ The investigation is currently proceeding, <https://www.icc-cpi.int/carII>.

¹⁰² <https://www.icc-cpi.int/mali>. After conducting a preliminary examination of the situation, including an assessment of admissibility of potential cases, the Office of the Prosecutor determined that there was a reasonable basis to proceed with an investigation and on 16 January 2013, the investigation was opened. The trial of Ahmad Al Faqi Al Mahdi is currently underway, <https://www.icc-cpi.int/mali/al-mahdi>.

¹⁰³ Charges against four individuals (including Uhuru Kenyatta, the current President of Kenya) were confirmed, although charges against Francis Kirimi Muthaura and Uhuru Kenyatta were withdrawn, and the case against two others was terminated by Trial Chamber V(A). Arrest warrants against three individuals in two further cases (Barasa, and Gicheru and Bett) have been issued and the matter remains at the pre-trial stage pending arrest or voluntary appearance; the case against one person (Kenyatta) was withdrawn due to insufficient evidence in 2011, while on 5 July 2016, the Trial Chamber terminated the case against the two remaining individuals (Ruto and Sang), see <https://www.icc-cpi.int/kenya>.

¹⁰⁴ Côte d'Ivoire had accepted the jurisdiction of the ICC under article 12(3) of the Statute on 18 April 2003 (reconfirmed in December 2010 and in May 2011) even though it only became a party to the Rome Statute on 15 February 2011. Pre-Trial Chamber III granted on 3 October 2011 the Prosecutor's request for authorisation to open investigations proprio motu into alleged crimes committed in that country as from November 2010. The following year, the investigation was extended to cover alleged crimes committed between September 2002 and November 2010. A warrant of arrest was issued against Laurent Gbagbo, who was transferred to the Court in November 2011. Proceedings are ongoing. A warrant of arrest has been issued against Simone Gbagbo, who is not currently in the Court's custody: see <https://www.icc-cpi.int/cdi>.

October 2008.¹⁰⁵ At the time of writing, the Prosecutor is conducting preliminary examinations concerning alleged crimes committed on the territories of Afghanistan, Burundi, Guinea, Colombia, Iraq (with regard to alleged crimes committed by the UK), Nigeria, Palestine,¹⁰⁶ Ukraine and with regard to vessels registered in Comoros, Greece and Cambodia.¹⁰⁷

However, in a concession to obtain the support of states to the ICC, article 16 provides that no investigation or prosecution may be commenced or proceeded with for a period of twelve months after the Security Council, in a resolution adopted under Chapter VII of the Charter, has so requested the Court. Such request may be renewed by the Council under the same conditions.¹⁰⁸ Article 98(2) provides that the Court may not proceed with a request for surrender which would require the requested state to act inconsistently with its obligations under international agreements pursuant to which the consent of a sending state is required to surrender a person of that state to the Court, unless the Court can first obtain the co-operation of the sending state for the giving of consent for the surrender. The provision, which was intended to deal with conflicting obligations, such as the position of soldiers stationed overseas under Status of Forces agreements which allow the sending state to exercise elements of criminal jurisdiction with regard to its soldiers, has been used by the US for a much broader purpose. The US has signed a number of bilateral agreements with states, some parties to the Rome Statute and some not, which provide that no nationals, current or former officials, or military personnel of either party may be surrendered or transferred by the other state to the ICC for any purpose. This tactic has been widely criticised and is highly controversial.¹⁰⁹

A key feature of the ICC, and one that distinguished it from the two international criminal tribunals, is that it is founded upon the concept of complementarity, which means essentially that the national courts have priority. A case will be inadmissible and the Court will be unable to exercise jurisdiction in a number of situations.¹¹⁰ These are: first, where the case is being ¹⁰⁵ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/georgia>.

¹⁰⁶ As to Palestine, which raises complex questions as to statehood, see chapter 5, p. 186 and <https://www.icc-cpi.int/palestine>.

¹⁰⁷ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/>.

¹⁰⁸ See Security Council resolution 1422 (2002) calling for the ICC to defer any exercise of jurisdiction for twelve months if a case arises involving current or former officials or personnel from a contributing state not a party to the Rome Statute over acts or omissions relating to a UN established or authorised operation. This was renewed for a further twelve months in resolution 1487 (2003), but not subsequently: see e.g. D. McGoldrick, 'Political and Legal Responses to the ICC', in McGoldrick et al., The Permanent International Criminal Court, p. 415. However, resolutions 1497 (2003) and 1593 (2005) provide that personnel from a state not a party to the Rome Statute will be subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of that state for all acts related to the multinational force or UN force in Liberia and Darfur respectively. See also C. C. Jalloh, D. Akande and M. du Plessis, 'Assessing the African Union Concerns about Article 16 of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court', 4 African Journal of Legal Studies, 2011, p. 5.

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 173–6; M. Benzing, 'US Bilateral Non-Surrender Agreements and Article 98 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court', 8 Max Planck Yearbook of United Nations Law, 2004, p. 182; and Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 1349 ff.

¹¹⁰ Article 17 and see https://asp.icc-cpi.int/en_menus/asp/complementarity/List-of-Actors/Pages/default.aspx. See also the Thomas Lubanga Dyilo case, ICC-01/04-01/06, Decision on the Prosecutor's Application for a Warrant of Arrest, 10 February 2006; and Schabas, International Criminal Court, pp. 453 ff. Note also K. J. Heller, 'Radical Complementarity', 14 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2016, p. 637; C. Stahn, 'Libya, the International Criminal Court and Complementarity', 10 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2012, p. 325; P. Seils, 'Putting Complementarity in Its Place', in The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. C. Stahn), p. 305; S. M. H. Nouwen, Complementarity in the Line of Fire: The Catalysing Effect of the International Criminal Court in Uganda and Sudan, Cambridge, 2013; M. Benzing, 'The Complementarity Regime of the International Criminal Court: International Criminal Justice Between State Sovereignty and the Fight Against Impunity', 7 Max Planck Yearbook of investigated or prosecuted by a state which has jurisdiction over it, unless the state is unwilling or unable genuinely to carry out the investigation or prosecution; secondly, where the case is being investigated or prosecuted by a state which has jurisdiction over it and the state has decided not to prosecute the person concerned, unless the decision resulted from the unwillingness¹¹¹ or inability¹¹² of the state genuinely to prosecute; and, thirdly, where the person concerned has already been tried for conduct which is the subject of the complaint, unless the proceedings before the court other than the ICC were for the purpose of shielding the person concerned from criminal responsibility for crimes within the jurisdiction of the ICC or where those proceedings were not conducted independently or impartially.¹¹³ Case-law has, however, revealed a variety of problems. While it is clear that the same person must be actively investigated by the domestic court as the Prosecutor,¹¹⁴ it is far from clear what kinds of investigations by the domestic courts would suffice for the purposes of article 17. In the Simone Gbagbo case, the Appeals Chamber reaffirmed that the state in question bears the burden of proof to show that the case is inadmissible and that 'a genuine investigation or prosecution' is being conducted. It must provide the court with 'evidence of a sufficient degree of specificity and probative value' that demonstrates that it is indeed investigating the case with evidence of 'concrete and progressive investigative steps'.¹¹⁵ Similarly it is unclear to what extent the conduct in question being investigated by both the ICC and the domestic system has to be the same. In the Kenyatta case, the Appeals Chamber held that it was sufficient if the domestic proceedings involved 'substantially the same conduct' as the ICC case.¹¹⁶ In the Gaddafi case, the Appeals Chamber noted that the real issue was the degree of overlap required between the ICC and domestic investigations 'with the focus being upon whether the conduct is substantially the same ... this will depend upon the facts of the individual case'.¹¹⁷

The Court consists of four organs. These are, respectively: the Presidency; an Appeals Division, a Trial Division and a Pre-Trial Division; the Office of the Prosecutor; and the Registry.¹¹⁸ The eighteen judges elected must be independent and serve on a full-time basis,¹¹⁹ have competence in criminal law or in relevant areas of international law, and must represent the principal legal systems in the world, as well as reflect equitable geographical representation and

United Nations Law, 2003, p. 591; and M. Tedeschi, 'Complementarity in Practice: The ICC's Inconsistent Approach in the Gaddafi and Al-Senussi Admissibility Decisions', 7 Amsterdam Law Forum, 2015, p. 76.

¹¹¹ In order to determine this, the Court must consider whether the proceedings were being undertaken or the decision made in order to shield the person concerned from criminal responsibility for crimes within the jurisdiction of the ICC; whether there has been an unjustified delay in the proceedings, and whether the proceedings have been conducted independently or impartially: article 17(2)(a)–(c).

¹¹² In order to determine this, the Court must consider whether, due to a total or substantial collapse or unavailability of its national judicial system, the state is unable to obtain the accused or the necessary evidence and testimony or is otherwise unable to carry out its proceedings: article 17(3).

¹¹³ Article 20(3).

¹¹⁴ See Appeals Chamber judgment in Kenyatta case, ICC-01/09-02/11 OA, 30 August 2011, para. 40.

¹¹⁵ Appeals Chamber, ICC-02/11-01/12 OA, 27 May 2015, paras. 128 and 122. The Appeals Chamber also confirmed that the expression 'the case is being investigated' in article 17(1)(a) required the 'taking of steps' directed at ascertaining whether the person is responsible for the alleged conduct. These may include 'interviewing witnesses or suspects, collecting documentary evidence, or carrying out forensic analyses', paras. 27–8. See also Heller, 'Radical Complementarity', Journal of International Criminal Justice.

¹¹⁶ ICC-01/09-02/11 OA, 30 August 2011, para. 39.

¹¹⁷ ICC-01/11-01/11 OA 4, 21 May 2014, paras. 71–2. Emphasis in original. See also the Al-Senussi admissibility case, ICC-01/11-01/11, Appeals Chamber, 11 October 2013, paras. 74–5.

¹¹⁸ Article 34. ¹¹⁹ Article 40.

the need for a fair representation of male and female judges. The judges are elected by the Assembly of States Parties using rather complicated voting rules.¹²⁰ The Presidency, consisting of the President and the First and Second Vice-Presidents, is responsible for the proper administration of the Court (apart from the Office of the Prosecutor),¹²¹ while the Registry is responsible for the non-judicial aspects of the administration and servicing of the Court.¹²² The Office of the Prosecutor acts independently as a separate organ of the Court. It is responsible for receiving referrals and any substantiated information on crimes within the jurisdiction of the Court, for examining them and for conducting investigations and prosecutions before the Court.¹²³ The Office is headed by the Prosecutor who is elected by secret ballot by members of the Assembly of States Parties and assisted by one or more Deputy Prosecutors.¹²⁴

The Pre-Trial Division is composed of judges with predominantly criminal trial experience, who serve in the Division for a period of three years. The Pre-Trial Chamber is composed either of a single judge or of a bench of three judges¹²⁵ and confirms or rejects the authorisation to commence an investigation and makes a preliminary determination that the case falls within the jurisdiction of the Court, without prejudice to subsequent determinations by the Court with regard to the jurisdiction and admissibility of a case. The Pre-Trial Chamber may also review a decision of the Prosecutor not to proceed with an investigation either on its own initiative, or at the request of the state making a referral under article 14, or the United Nations Security Council under article 13(b),¹²⁶ and can issue warrants of arrests and summons to appear before the Court at the request of the Prosecutor, issue orders to grant the rights of the parties in the proceeding, and, where necessary, provide for the protection and privacy of victims and witnesses, the preservation of evidence, the protection of persons who have been arrested or appeared in response to a summons, and the protection of national security information. Within a reasonable time after the person's surrender or voluntary appearance before the Court, the Pre-Trial Chamber holds a hearing in the presence of the Prosecutor, the person charged and his or her counsel to confirm or reject the charges. Once the Pre-Trial Chamber has confirmed the charges and committed the person for trial by the Trial Chamber, the Presidency will establish a Trial Chamber to conduct subsequent proceedings.

The Trial Division is also predominantly composed of judges with criminal trial experience who serve for a period of three years. Three judges of the Division carry out the judicial functions of the Trial Chamber.¹²⁷ The primary function of the Trial Chamber is to ensure that a trial is fair and expeditious, and is conducted with full respect for the rights of the accused with regard for the protection of victims and witnesses.¹²⁸ The Trial Chamber will determine whether the accused is innocent or guilty. In the latter case, imprisonment for a specified number of years, which may not exceed a maximum of thirty years or a term of life imprisonment, may be imposed. Financial penalties may also be imposed¹²⁹ and the Trial Chamber can also order a convicted person to pay money for compensation, restitution or rehabilitation for victims.¹³⁰ The trial must be held in public unless special circumstances require that certain proceedings be in closed session to protect confidential or sensitive information to be given in evidence, or to protect victims and witnesses.¹³¹

¹²⁰ Article 36. ¹²¹ Article 38. ¹²² Article 43. ¹²³ See further articles 53–55. ¹²⁴ Article 42.

¹²⁵ Article 39(2)(b)(iii). ¹²⁶ Article 53. ¹²⁷ Article 39(2)(b)(ii). ¹²⁸ Article 64. ¹²⁹ Article 77.

¹³⁰ Article 75(2). ¹³¹ Article 68.

The Appeals Division is composed of judges with established competence in relevant areas of international law and the Appeals Chamber is composed of all the judges assigned to the Appeals Division.¹³² The Prosecutor or the convicted person can appeal against the decisions of the Pre-Trial and Trial Chambers to the Appeals Chamber. A sentence may be appealed on the ground of procedural error, error of fact, error of law, or any other ground that affects the fairness or reliability of the proceedings or decision. Further, a sentence may be appealed on the ground of disproportion between the crime and the sentence.¹³³ The Appeals Chamber may decide to reverse or amend the decision, judgment or sentence, or order a new trial before a different Trial Chamber.¹³⁴

Hybrid Courts and Other Internationalised Domestic Courts and Tribunals¹³⁵

In addition to the temporary and geographically limited international criminal tribunals and the permanent International Criminal Court, a new style of judicial institution has made an appearance recently in which both international and national elements co-exist in varying combinations. Such institutions, which may for convenience be termed hybrid courts, exist primarily to enhance legitimacy and increase acceptability both locally and internationally, invariably in difficult post-conflict situations where reliance upon purely domestic mechanisms carries significant political risks or costs. However, as will be seen, there are a number of models adopted which differ as to formal legal origin, constitutional status, applicable law and structure. Some of these mechanisms may more correctly be termed internationalised courts or tribunals¹³⁶ as the balance between the international and the domestic tips far to the latter. They are essentially domestic courts applying domestic law, but with a heightened international element in terms, for example, of their function or origins, the basis of their applicable law or the use of international experts. Some courts are difficult to place along the spectrum, but together this category marks an extension of international concern and involvement in issues focusing upon individual criminal responsibility for what are international crimes, even if subsequently incorporated into domestic law.

The Special Court for Sierra Leone

The Special Court for Sierra Leone was established, following a particularly violent civil war, by virtue of an agreement between the UN and Sierra Leone dated 16 January 2002, pursuant to Security Council resolution 1315 (2000), in order to prosecute persons bearing ‘the greatest ¹³² Article 39(2)(b)(i).

¹³³ Article 81. Either party may appeal against decisions as to, for example, jurisdiction or admissibility; decisions as to the grant or denial of the release of the person being investigated or prosecuted; and decisions of the Pre-Trial Chamber to act on its own initiative under article 56(3): see article 82.

¹³⁴ Article 83. The revision of the sentence can be requested if new evidence has been discovered which was not available at the time of the trial and is sufficiently important or decisive for the Appeals Chamber to revise or amend the sentence: see article 84.

¹³⁵ See e.g. A. Fitchelbert, Hybrid Tribunals: A Comparative Examination, Heidelberg, 2015; S. Williams, Hybrid and Internationalised Criminal Tribunals, Oxford, 2013; Internationalized Criminal Courts (ed. C. P. R. Romano, A. Nollkaemper and J. K. Kleffner), Oxford, 2004; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 9; Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals; and L. A. Dickinson, ‘The Promise of Hybrid Courts’, 97 AJIL, 2003, p. 295.

¹³⁶ See for this terminology, M. P. Scharf, ‘The Iraqi High Tribunal’, 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, pp. 258, 259.

responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996' on the basis of individual criminal responsibility.¹³⁷ However, it is stipulated that any transgressions by peacekeepers and related personnel present in the country by virtue of agreements with the UN or other governments or regional organisations or otherwise with the consent of the Sierra Leonean government were within the 'primary jurisdiction' of the sending state.¹³⁸

The Special Court consisted of the Chambers (two Trial Chambers and an Appeals Chamber), the Prosecutor and the Registry. Three judges served in each Trial Chamber, of whom one was appointed by the Sierra Leonean government and two appointed by the UN Secretary-General.¹³⁹ Five judges sat in the Appeals Chamber, of whom two were appointed by the government and three by the UN Secretary-General.¹⁴⁰ The Appeals Chamber heard appeals from persons convicted by the Trial Chamber or from the Prosecutor on the grounds of procedural error, an error on a question of law invalidating the decision or an error of fact which has occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber could affirm, reverse or revise the decisions taken by the Trial Chamber. In so acting, the judges of the Appeals Chamber of the Special Court were to be guided by the decisions of the Appeals Chamber of the International Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda. In the interpretation and application of the laws of Sierra Leone, they were to be guided by the decisions of the Supreme Court of Sierra Leone.¹⁴¹

The Prosecutor, who was appointed by the UN Secretary-General for a three-year term and acted independently as a separate organ of the Special Court, was responsible for the investigation and prosecution of persons who bear the greatest responsibility for serious violations of international humanitarian law and crimes under Sierra Leonean law committed in the territory of Sierra Leone since 30 November 1996. The Office of the Prosecutor had the power to question suspects, victims and witnesses, to collect evidence and to conduct on-site investigations. The Prosecutor was assisted by a Sierra Leonean Deputy Prosecutor, and by a mixture of Sierra Leonean and international staff.¹⁴² The Registry was responsible for the administration and ¹³⁷ Article 1 of the Agreement contained in S/2002/246, Appendix II, and articles 1 and 6 of the Statute of the Special Court, contained in S/2002/246, Appendix III, and see Security Council resolution 1436 (2002) affirming 'strong support' for the Court, and the Report on the Special Court by Professor A. Cassese, the independent expert commissioned by the UN Secretary-General to review the work of the Special Court, 12 December 2006, www.rscsl.org/Documents/Cassese%20Report.pdf. See also The Sierra Leone Special Court and Its Legacy: The Impact for Africa and International Criminal Law (ed. C. C. Jallow), Cambridge, 2013; O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 13; R. Cryer, 'A "Special Court" for Sierra Leone', 50 ICLQ, 2001, p. 435; Schabas, The UN International Criminal Tribunals; A. Smith, 'Sierra Leone: The Intersection of Law, Policy and Practice', P. Mochochoko and G. Tortora, 'The Management Committee for the Special Court for Sierra Leone' and W. A. Schabas, 'Internationalized Courts and their Relationship with Alternative Accountability Mechanisms', in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 125, 141 and 157 respectively; and C. da Silva, 'The Hybrid Experience of the Special Court for Sierra Leone', in Brown, Research Handbook on International Criminal Law, p. 232.

¹³⁸ Article 1(2) of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone.

¹³⁹ Note that with the conclusion of the Charles Taylor trial, the functions of Trial Chamber II came to an end: see Ninth Annual Report of the Special Court for Sierra Leone, 2011–12.

¹⁴⁰ Article 12(1). Eight judges were appointed in July 2002: see UN Press Release SG/A/813.

¹⁴¹ Article 20. Under article 21, the convicted person or the Prosecutor may apply to the Appeals Chamber for review where a new fact has been discovered which was not known at the time of the proceedings before the Trial Chamber or Appeals Chamber and which could have been a decisive factor in reaching the decision. The Appeals Chamber may reject the application, reconvene the Trial Chamber or retain jurisdiction over the matter.

¹⁴² Article 15.

servicing of the Special Court and was appointed by the UN Secretary-General after consultation with the President of the Special Court.¹⁴³

The jurisdiction of the Special Court mirrored the hybrid nature of its creation and staffing. The Court had jurisdiction with regard to crimes against humanity; violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II; other serious violations of international humanitarian law¹⁴⁴ and certain crimes under Sierra Leonean law.¹⁴⁵ Article 8 of the Statute provided that the Special Court and the national courts of Sierra Leone had concurrent jurisdiction, but that the Special Court had primacy over the national courts and that at any stage of the procedure it could formally request a national court to defer to its competence. The Annual Report of the Special Court for 2006–7 noted that thirteen persons were indicted, all between March and September 2003. Of these, nine were in custody, one dead, one still at large, while two indictments were withdrawn. Trials of the nine in custody began in 2004 and 2005 in three joint trials. Of particular interest has been the Charles Taylor case. He was the former President of Liberia. His claim to immunity was rejected by the Appeals Chamber in May 2004¹⁴⁶ and he stood trial in The Hague at the premises of the ICC. He was convicted on all counts on 26 April 2012 and sentenced to fifty years' imprisonment.¹⁴⁷ Judgment in the AFRC trial was handed down on 20 June 2007 and the three accused convicted of offences. Sentencing took place on 19 July 2007 and the appeal against sentencing was dismissed on 22 February 2008.¹⁴⁸ On 2 August 2007, Trial Chamber I reached a decision in the trial of three persons accused of being leaders of the so-called 'Civil Defence Forces', of whom one died prior to pronouncement of judgment, in which the two remaining accused were convicted.¹⁴⁹ The Special Court adopted a completion strategy under which proceedings were due to be completed in 2007.¹⁵⁰ However, this date could not be met and the Residual Special Court for Sierra Leone was created in order to oversee the continuing legal obligations of the Special Court after its closure in 2013, including witness protection, supervision of prison sentences and management of archives.¹⁵¹ The Residual Special Court has a roster of national and international judges and the Prosecutor and Registrar are appointed by the UN Secretary-General.¹⁵²

¹⁴³ Article 16. ¹⁴⁴ Articles 2–4 of the Statute.

¹⁴⁵ Article 5 of the Statute. These crimes relate to offences relating to the abuse of girls under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act 1926 and offences relating to the wanton destruction of property under the Malicious Damages Act 1861. However, the Special Court has no jurisdiction with regard to any person under the age of fifteen at the time of the alleged commission of the crime. No person may be tried before a national court of Sierra Leone for acts for which he or she has already been tried by the Special Court. But a person who has been tried by a national court for the acts referred to in articles 2 to 4 of the Statute may be subsequently tried by the Special Court if either the act for which he or she was tried was characterised as an ordinary crime; or the national court proceedings were not impartial or independent, or were designed to shield the accused from international criminal responsibility or the case was not diligently prosecuted: see article 9.

¹⁴⁶ See www.rscsl.org/Taylor.html. ¹⁴⁷ Ibid. ¹⁴⁸ See www.rscsl.org/AFRC.html.

¹⁴⁹ See www.rscsl.org/CDF_Trial_Chamber_Decisions.html. See also S. M. Meisenberg, 'Legality of Amnesties in International Humanitarian Law: The Lomé Decision of the Special Court for Sierra Leone', 86 International Review of the Red Cross, 2004, p. 837.

¹⁵⁰ See A/59/816 – S/2005/350.

¹⁵¹ In December 2011 the Sierra Leone Parliament passed the Residual Special Court for Sierra Leone Agreement (Ratification) Act, ratifying an agreement between the UN and Sierra Leone, dated 11 August 2010, on the establishment of the Residual Special Court to continue the work of the Special Court. It became law on 1 February 2012. Annexed to this is the Statute of the Residual Special Court: see www.rscsl.org/Documents/RSCSL-Act.pdf.

¹⁵² Articles 13–16 of the Statute of the Residual Special Court.

Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia

The Khmer Rouge regime under Pol Pot took power in Cambodia in 1975 following a civil war and proceeded to commit widescale atrocities which are believed to have resulted in the death of well over 1 million people. The regime was ousted by a Vietnamese invasion in 1979. In 1997, the Cambodian government requested the United Nations (UN) to assist in establishing a trial process in order to prosecute the senior leaders of the Khmer Rouge. In 2001, the Cambodian National Assembly passed a law to create a court to try serious crimes committed during the Khmer Rouge regime. On 13 May 2003, after a long period of negotiation, the UN General Assembly approved a Draft Agreement between the UN and Cambodia providing for Extraordinary Chambers in the courts of Cambodia, with the aim of bringing to trial senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea and those who were most responsible for the crimes and serious violations of Cambodian penal law, international humanitarian law and custom, and international conventions recognised by Cambodia, that were committed during the period from 17 April 1975 to 6 January 1979.¹⁵³ The Agreement was ratified by Cambodia on 19 October 2004.

Article 2 of the Agreement provided that the Extraordinary Chambers were to have subject-matter jurisdiction consistent with that laid down in the Cambodian Law (of 2001) and that the Agreement was to be implemented via that law. However, it is provided also that the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 is to apply to the Agreement. Accordingly, the Agreement must be seen as an international treaty, although one closely linked with the relevant domestic law. The Chambers are composed of a Trial Chamber, consisting of three Cambodian judges and two international judges, and a Supreme Court Chamber, serving as both appellate chamber and final instance and consisting of four Cambodian judges and three international judges. The UN Secretary-General was to nominate seven judges and the Cambodian Supreme Council of Magistracy, the highest domestic judicial body, was to choose five of these to serve in the Chambers.¹⁵⁴ The Agreement also provided for independent co-investigation judges, one Cambodian and one international, who are responsible for the conduct of investigations,¹⁵⁵ and two independent co-prosecutors, one Cambodian and one international, competent to appear in both Chambers, who are responsible for the conduct of the prosecutions.¹⁵⁶

¹⁵³ See General Assembly resolutions 57/228A and 57/228B and A/57/806. See also J. D. Ciorciari and A. Heindel, Hybrid Justice: The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, Ann Arbor, 2014; R. Williams, 'The Cambodian Extraordinary Chambers: A Dangerous Precedent for International Justice?', 53 ICLQ, 2004, p. 227; G. Acquaviva, 'New Paths in International Criminal Justice? The Internal Rules of the Cambodian Extraordinary Chambers', 6 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2008, p. 129; C. Etcheson, 'The Politics of Genocide Justice in Cambodia'; E. E. Meijer, 'The Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia for Prosecuting Crimes Committed by the Khmer Rouge: Jurisdiction, Organization and Procedure of an Internationalized Tribunal', in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 181 and 207 respectively; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 185; and B. N. McGonigle, 'Two for the Price of One', 22 Leiden Journal of International Law, 2009, p. 127. See also www.eccc.gov.kh/en.

¹⁵⁴ Article 3 of the Agreement. The Secretary-General nominated seven judges in March 2006 and the Supreme Council of Magistracy approved a list of thirty Cambodian and international judges in May that year to be followed by appointment by Royal Decree. The judges were duly sworn in in July 2006 and Internal Rules were adopted in June 2007 and revised, most recently on 16 January 2015.

¹⁵⁵ Article 5.

¹⁵⁶ Article 6. In the case of both the co-investigating judges and co-prosecutors, the UN Secretary-General was to make two nominations out of which the Supreme Council of Magistracy was to choose one international investigating judge and one international prosecutor. Any differences between the two co-investigating judges and the two co-prosecutors are to be settled by a Pre-Trial Chamber of five judges, three appointed by the Supreme Council of the

The jurisdiction of the Extraordinary Chambers covers the crime of genocide as defined in the Genocide Convention, 1948, crimes against humanity as defined in the 1998 Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions and such other crimes as are defined in Chapter II of the Cambodian Law of 2001 with respect to senior leaders of Democratic Kampuchea.¹⁵⁷ The procedure of the Chambers is to be in accordance with Cambodian law, but where Cambodian law does not deal with a particular matter, or where there is uncertainty regarding the interpretation or application of a relevant rule of Cambodian law, or where there is a question regarding the consistency of such a rule with international standards, guidance may also be sought in procedural rules established at the international level. It is also provided that the Extraordinary Chambers are to exercise their jurisdiction in accordance with international standards of justice, fairness and due process of law, as set out in Articles 14 and 15 of the 1966 International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, to which Cambodia is a party.¹⁵⁸

A list of five suspects was submitted by the prosecutors on 19 July 2007 to the Chambers with a request that they be indicted and, on 31 July 2007, the first suspect (Khang Khék Ieu, known as 'Duch') was indicted.¹⁵⁹ He was convicted on 26 July 2010 of crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the 1949 Geneva Conventions. The decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court on 3 February 2012.¹⁶⁰ Further proceedings are continuing against other suspects.¹⁶¹

Kosovo Regulation 64 Panels¹⁶²

Following the conflict between the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (as it then was, today Serbia) and NATO in 1999, the Security Council adopted resolution 1244, which inter alia called for the establishment of an 'international civil presence' in Kosovo. The international civil presence was granted responsibilities, including: promoting 'the establishment, pending a final settlement, of substantial autonomy and self-government'; performing basic civilian administrative functions; organising the development of provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government pending a political settlement; and protecting and promoting human rights.¹⁶³ The competence of the international civil presence carried out by the UN Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) was extensive. Section 1.1 of the first regulation issued by UNMIK in 1999 stated that: 'All legislative and executive authority with respect to Kosovo, including the administration of the judiciary, is vested in UNMIK and is exercised by the Special Representative of the Secretary General',¹⁶⁴ while section 1.2 provided that the Special Representative could appoint any person to perform functions in Magistracy, with one as President, and two appointed by the Supreme Council of the Magistracy upon nomination by the Secretary-General: see article 7.

¹⁵⁷ Article 9. ¹⁵⁸ Article 12. ¹⁵⁹ Case file No. 001/18-07-2007-ECCC/OCIJ. See also Annual Report 2007, p. 11.

¹⁶⁰ www.eccc.gov.kh/en/case/topic/1. Note that the Supreme Court partially confirmed and amended the Trial Chamber Judgment as well as overturning the decision on sentencing. Subsequently he has been found guilty pursuant to Articles 5, 6 and 29 (new) of the ECCC Law of a number of crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions, ibid.

¹⁶¹ See <https://www.eccc.gov.kh/en/caseload>.

¹⁶² See e.g. J. Cerone and C. Baldwin, 'Explaining and Evaluating the UNMIK Court System' and J. C. Cady and N. Booth, 'Internationalized Courts in Kosovo: An UNMIK Perspective', in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, at pp. 41 and 59 respectively. See also Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 191; S. de Bertodano, 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts', 1 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2003, pp. 226, 239 ff.; and Finding the Balance: The Scales of Justice in Kosovo, International Crisis Group, 2002.

¹⁶³ Paragraphs 10 and 11. ¹⁶⁴ UNMIK/REG/1991/1, S/1999/987, p. 14.

the civil administration in Kosovo, including the judiciary, or remove such person in accordance with the applicable law.¹⁶⁵

Following a series of disturbances in 2000, UNMIK Regulation 2000/6 was adopted, providing for the appointment of international judges and prosecutors,¹⁶⁶ and UNMIK Regulation 2000/64 was adopted, providing for UNMIK to create panels (known as Regulation 64 panels) of three judges, including at least two international judges, at the request of the accused, defence counsel or prosecutor. Such international judges functioned as regular court judges in Kosovo with powers derived from domestic legislation, but their involvement in a case was under either their own control or at the behest of the UN Secretary-General's Special Representative in Kosovo. The applicable law was stated to be regulations promulgated by the Special Representative and subsidiary instruments issued thereunder and the law in force in Kosovo on 22 March 1989.¹⁶⁷ However, problems surfaced, particularly with regard to the high rate of national judge convictions overturned by retrials by international judges and lack of systematic publication of case decisions and the brevity of such decisions.¹⁶⁸ Kosovo declared independence in early 2008.¹⁶⁹ Subsequently the Panels were replaced by a system involving EULEX (European Union Rule of Law Mission in Kosovo) judges up until 15 April 2014, thereafter criminal investigations and new criminal trials were to be conducted by Kosovo authorities, with judicial panels composed of Kosovo judges. However, and only in extraordinary circumstances, a case could be assigned to a EULEX Prosecutor or a panel be composed of a majority of EULEX judges.¹⁷⁰ On 3 August 2015, the Kosovo Assembly adopted article 162 of the Kosovo Constitution and the Law on Specialist Chambers and Specialist Prosecutor's Office, following an Exchange of Letters between the President of Kosovo and the High Representative of the European Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy in 2014. This followed a Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly report in 2011 alleging serious violations of international law, including illicit trafficking in human organs.¹⁷¹ The Specialist Chambers are attached to each level of the court system in Kosovo and are to operate under Kosovo law as well as customary international law and international human rights law. Their jurisdiction is limited to certain crimes against humanity allegedly committed between 1 January 1998 and 31 December 2000. The Specialist Chambers consists of Chambers and a Registry with a Specialist Prosecutor's Office as an independent office for the investigation and prosecution of the crimes within the jurisdiction of the Chambers. Both the Specialist Chambers and the Specialist Prosecutor's Office are ¹⁶⁵ As amended in UNMIK/REG/2000/54.

¹⁶⁶ Initially in Mitrovica and then in all domestic courts and the Supreme Court: see UNMIK Regulation 2000/34. Note that attempts to establish a Kosovo War and Ethnic Crimes Court were abandoned in September 2000: see Cady and Booth, 'Internationalized Courts in Kosovo', p. 60.

¹⁶⁷ See UNMIK/REG/1999/24 and UNMIK/REG/2000/59. Section 1.3 provided that all persons exercising public functions were to observe internationally recognised human rights standards as reflected in particular in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights, the European Convention on Human Rights, the Racial Discrimination Convention, the Women's Discrimination Convention, the Torture Convention and the Rights of the Child Convention.

¹⁶⁸ See e.g. de Bertodano, 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts', pp. 239 ff.

¹⁶⁹ See above, chapter 5, p. 185.

¹⁷⁰ See www.eulex-kosovo.eu/?page=2,2 and www.eulex-kosovo.eu/?page=2,16. See also S. Williams, 'The Specialist Chambers of Kosovo', 14 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2016, p. 25.

¹⁷¹ <http://assembly.coe.int/nw/xml/XRef/X2H-Xref-ViewPDF.asp?FileID=12608&lang=en>.

staffed with international judges, prosecutors and officers and have a seat in The Hague, the Netherlands.¹⁷²

East Timor Special Panels for Serious Crimes¹⁷³

Following a period of violence in East Timor instigated by pro-Indonesian militia after the ending of the long Indonesian occupation, the Security Council established the UN Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET) with a wide-ranging mandate to administer the territory.¹⁷⁴ By Regulation No. 1 adopted on 27 November 1999, all legislative and executive authority with respect to East Timor, including the administration of the judiciary, was vested in UNTAET and exercised by the Transitional Administrator. This administrator was given the competence further to appoint any person to perform functions in the civil administration in the territory, including the judiciary, or remove such person and to issue regulations and directives. UNTAET created a new courts system,¹⁷⁵ including the establishment of special panels to deal with serious crimes within the District Court of Dili and in the Court of Appeal.¹⁷⁶ These serious crimes were defined as genocide, war crimes, crimes against humanity, murder, sexual offences and torture,¹⁷⁷ for which there was individual criminal responsibility.¹⁷⁸ The applicable law was the law of East Timor as promulgated by sections 2 and 3 of UNTAET Regulation No. 1999/1 and any subsequent UNTAET regulations and directives; and, where appropriate, applicable treaties and recognised principles and norms of international law, including the established principles of the international law of armed conflict.

The Panels in the District Court of Dili were to be composed of two international judges and one East Timorese judge, as were the Panels in the Court of Appeal in Dili. In cases of special importance or gravity, a panel of five judges composed of three international and two East Timorese judges could be established.¹⁷⁹ However, the system had barely started before 2003 and in the Armando Dos Santos case, the Court of Appeal held, in a decision much criticised,¹⁸⁰ that since the Indonesian occupation was illegal, Indonesian law was never validly in force so that domestic law was Portuguese law, and, further, Regulation 2000/15 could not be applied retroactively so that only Portuguese law could be applied to crimes committed before 6 June 2000.¹⁸¹ On 20 May 2002, the UN handed over its authority to the new institutions of East Timor and UNTAET was replaced by the UN Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISSET), although UNTAET regulations continued in force. In May 2005, UNMISSET came to an end and the Serious Crimes Unit closed. Partly no doubt as a consequence, the Special Panels suspended operations ¹⁷² <https://www.scp-ks.org/en>.

¹⁷³ See e.g. S. de Bertodano, 'East Timor: Trials and Tribulations', in Romano et al., Internationalized Criminal Courts, p. 79; S. Linton, 'Prosecuting Atrocities at the District Court of Dili', 2 Melbourne Journal of International Law, 2001, p. 414; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 193; and S. Linton and C. Reiger, 'The Evolving Jurisprudence and Practice of East Timor's Special Panels for Serious Crimes on Admission of Guilt, Duress and Superior Orders', 4 Yearbook of International Humanitarian Law, 2001, p. 1. See also <http://jsmp.tl/en/>.

¹⁷⁴ Resolution 1272 (1999). See also resolution 1264 (1999) and S/1999/24.

¹⁷⁵ UNTAET Regulations 2000/11 and 2000/14.

¹⁷⁶ Regulation 2000/15.

¹⁷⁷ Defined in sections 4–10 of Regulation 2000/15.

¹⁷⁸ Section 14.

¹⁷⁹ Section 22.

¹⁸⁰ See de Bertodano, 'East Timor', pp. 90 ff. and 'Current Developments in Internationalized Courts: East Timor – Justice Denied', 2 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2004, p. 910.

¹⁸¹ Case No. 16/201: see also G. S. McNeal, 'Analysis of the Judgements in Republica Democratica de Timor-Leste, Dili District Court, the Special Panels for Serious Crimes', 16 Annotated Leading Cases of International Criminal Tribunals, 2011.

indefinitely. By this time, fifty-five trials, most involving relatively low-level defendants, had taken place, eighty-four individuals had been convicted and three acquitted.¹⁸²

The Bosnia War Crimes Chamber¹⁸³

In January 2003, the Office of the High Representative in Bosnia¹⁸⁴ and the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia issued a set of joint conclusions recommending the creation of a specialised chamber within the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina to try war crimes cases.¹⁸⁵ This was supported by the UN Security Council.¹⁸⁶ The Chamber came into being in 2005 with jurisdiction concerning cases referred to it by the ICTY pursuant to Rule 11 bis of the ICTY Rules of Procedure and Evidence with regard to lower- to mid-level accused persons. As such, this procedure forms part of the completion strategy of the ICTY.¹⁸⁷ In addition, the Chamber has jurisdiction with regard to cases submitted to it by the Office of the Prosecutor of the ICTY where investigations have not been completed, and the first case was referred to the Chamber on 1 September 2005.¹⁸⁸ Further, the Chamber also has jurisdiction over what have been termed 'Rules of the Road' cases. The 'Rules of the Road' procedure was first established in response to the widespread fear of arbitrary arrest and detention immediately after the conflict in Bosnia. Originally, the Bosnian authorities were obliged to submit every war crimes case proposed for prosecution in Bosnia to the Office of the Prosecutor of the ICTY to determine whether the evidence was sufficient by international standards before proceeding to arrest. This review function was subsequently assumed by the Special Department for War Crimes within the Office of the Prosecutor of the State Court of Bosnia in October 2004. Where the case has not yet led to a confirmed indictment and where the prosecutor determines that the case is 'highly sensitive', it will be passed to the Chamber, otherwise it will be tried before the relevant cantonal or district court. If, however, the indictment has been confirmed, the case will remain with the relevant cantonal or district court.

The Chamber has both trial and appeals chambers. The Office of the Prosecutor of the State Court includes a Special Department for War Crimes and there were five international prosecutors and one international acting prosecutor, as well as eight local prosecutors, including the deputy prosecutor.¹⁸⁹ The Registry managed the process of appointing and engaging international judges and prosecutors. The international judges were appointed by the High Representative after a joint recommendation of the President of the State Court and the President of the High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council, while the international prosecutors were appointed by the ¹⁸² See the digest of cases before the Special Panels, produced in 2007, www.jsmp.minihub.org/Reports/2007/SPSC/SERIOUS%20CRIMES%20DIGEST%20\(Megan\)%20250407.pdf%20250407.pdf). See also C. Reiger and M. Wierda, The Serious Crimes Process in Timor-Leste: In Retrospect, International Center for Transnational Justice, 2006.

¹⁸³ See Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 194; Bohlander, 'Referring an Indictment from the ICTY and the ICTR to Another Court', p. 219; Looking for Justice: The War Crimes Chamber in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Human Rights Watch, 2006; and Narrowing the Impunity Gap: Trials Before Bosnia's War Crimes Chamber, Human Rights Watch, 2007. See also B. Ivanišević, The War Crimes Chamber in Bosnia and Herzegovina: From Hybrid to Domestic Court, 2008, International Center for Transitional Justice.

¹⁸⁴ As to the High Representative, see above, chapter 5, p. 181.

¹⁸⁵ See www.un.org/icty/pressreal/2003/p723-e.htm. ¹⁸⁶ See resolution 1503 (2003).

¹⁸⁷ See above, p. 292. And see also www.sudbih.gov.ba/?jezik=e.

¹⁸⁸ Prosecutor v. Radovan Stanković, ICTY, Case No. IT-96-23/2-AR11 bis.1, Decision on Rule 11 bis Referral (Appeals Chamber), 1 September 2005, para. 30.

¹⁸⁹ See Human Rights Watch, Looking for Justice, pp. 4 ff.

High Representative following a joint recommendation from the Bosnian Chief Prosecutor, the President of the High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council and the Registry.¹⁹⁰

As of the tenth anniversary of the Chamber in 2015, the Chamber had dealt with a total of 130 war crimes cases, including six cases transferred to it by the ICTY.¹⁹¹ The applicable law is that of Bosnia, including criminal and criminal procedure codes introduced by the High Representative in 2003. However, the European Court of Human Rights held in Maktouf-Damjanović v. Bosnia-Herzegovina that the Chamber had violated article 7 of the European Convention on Human Rights as the applicants had been convicted on the basis of the retroactive application of criminal legislation in their war crimes cases.¹⁹²

The Special Tribunal for Lebanon¹⁹³

Following the assassination of Rafiq Hariri, the former Prime Minister of Lebanon, in February 2005, the Security Council established an International Independent Investigation Commission to aid the Lebanese authorities in their investigation. As a result of its report and the request of the Lebanese government to establish 'a tribunal of an international character' to try those persons accused of the assassination,¹⁹⁴ the Security Council adopted resolution 1664 (2006) calling upon the UN Secretary-General to negotiate an agreement with the government of Lebanon aimed at establishing a tribunal of an international character based on the highest international standards of criminal justice. The Secretary-General's report¹⁹⁵ was accepted by the Council in resolution 1757 (2007). Acting under Chapter VII of the Charter, the Council established the Special Tribunal for Lebanon by virtue of an agreement with the government of Lebanon, annexed to the resolution. The Statute of the Tribunal is attached to the agreement.

The Tribunal has jurisdiction not only with regard to those responsible for the assassination of Rafiq Hariri but also with regard to those responsible for other attacks that occurred in Lebanon between 1 October 2004 and 12 December 2005, or any later date decided by the parties and with the consent of the Security Council, that are seen as connected in accordance with the principles of criminal justice and are of a nature and gravity similar to the attack of 14 February 2005.¹⁹⁶ The Tribunal was inaugurated on 1 March 2009 and is composed of four organs: the Chambers, the Office of the Prosecutor, the Registry and the Defence Office. The Chambers is composed of ¹⁹⁰ The appointments by the High Representative were made under the powers vested in him by article 5, annex 10, of the Dayton Peace Accord. The international prosecutors and judges were phased out in 2012: see Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 195.

¹⁹¹ See Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 10th Anniversary of Section I for War Crimes at the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Sarajevo, 2015, p. 7. See also Human Rights Watch, Narrowing the Impunity Gap, p. 5 and Human Rights Watch, Justice for Atrocity Crimes: Lessons of International Support for Trials before the State Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina, 2012.

¹⁹² Judgment of 18 July 2013.

¹⁹³ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 188; B. Fassbender, 'Reflections on the International Legality of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon'; C. Aptel, 'Some Innovations in the Statute of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon'; and N. N. Jurdi, 'The Subject-Matter Jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, pp. 1091, 1107 and 1125 respectively. See also www.stl-tsl.org/en/.

¹⁹⁴ See Security Council resolutions 1595 (2005), 1636 (2005) and 1644 (2005). See also S/2005/783 and S/2006/375.

¹⁹⁵ S/2006/893 and S/2007/150. See resolutions 1686 (2006) and 1748 (2007) calling for the work of the Commission to continue.

¹⁹⁶ Article 1 of the Statute.

eleven independent judges, divided into a Pre-Trial Judge, a Trial Chamber and an Appeals Chamber. A single international judge serves as Pre-Trial Judge, while three judges serve in the Trial Chamber, being one Lebanese judge and two international judges. Five judges serve in the Appeals Chamber, of whom two are Lebanese and three international judges.¹⁹⁷ The Prosecutor and the Registrar were appointed by the UN Secretary-General after consultation with the Lebanese government, while the Head of the Defence Office was appointed by the Secretary-General after consultation with the President of the Tribunal.¹⁹⁸ The applicable law is Lebanese criminal law and the Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with Lebanese courts and possesses primacy over them.¹⁹⁹ A number of cases are currently before the Tribunal and a decision has been taken, for example, to hold a trial in absentia.²⁰⁰ In an important interlocutory decision, the Appeals Chamber held that customary international law now recognises a distinct crime of terrorism, applicable to individuals, in peacetime.²⁰¹ In a judgment on 15 July 2016, the Contempt Judge of the Special Tribunal convicted a corporation of contempt, the first time, it is believed, that such a decision has been taken by an international criminal tribunal, albeit relying upon domestic law.²⁰²

The Iraqi High Tribunal²⁰³

The Governing Council of Iraq was authorised by the Coalition Provisional Authority on 10 December 2003 to establish the Iraqi Special Tribunal to hear crimes alleged against the former regime of Saddam Hussein.²⁰⁴ A revised Statute was enacted in 2005 and the tribunal renamed the Iraqi High Tribunal. The Tribunal has jurisdiction over genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, the definitions of which are based upon the provisions of the Rome Statute and newly incorporated into Iraqi law, committed between 16 July 1968 and 1 May 2003²⁰⁵ by Iraqi nationals or residents.²⁰⁶ Persons accused of committing crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal bear individual criminal responsibility.²⁰⁷ The Tribunal has concurrent jurisdiction with national courts but primacy over them. Article 6(b) of the Statute provides that the President of the Tribunal shall be required to appoint non-Iraqi nationals to act ¹⁹⁷ Articles 7 and 8 of the Statute. See also www.stl-tsl.org/en/about-the-stl/structure-of-the-stl/chambers.

¹⁹⁸ Articles 11, 12 and 13 of the Statute. The Registrar was appointed on 11 March 2008: see www.un.org/apps/news/story.asp?NewsID=25925&Cr=Leban&Cr1. See also www.stl-tsl.org/en/about-the-stl/structure-of-the-stl/the-office-of-the-prosecutor.

¹⁹⁹ Articles 2 and 4 of the Statute.

²⁰⁰ The Merhi case, STL-13-04/1/TCF0037 /20 131220/R099167 -R099204/EN/af. Hearings in absentia in the Ayyash case started on 16 January 2014, www.stl-tsl.org/en/news-and-press/press-releases/2799-16-01-2014-ayyash-et-al-case-opens-at-the-special-tribunal-for-lebanon.

²⁰¹ Prosecutor v. Ayyash, STL Casebook, 2011, p. 27, paras. 61 ff.; www.stl-tsl.org/en/2015-06-15-15-22-50. However, see Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 341.

²⁰² Akhbar Beirut SAL and Ibrahim Mohammed Ali Al Amin, STL-14-06/T/CJ.

²⁰³ See e.g. Scharf, 'The Iraqi High Tribunal'; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 195; I. Bantekas, 'The Iraqi Special Tribunal for Crimes against Humanity', 54 ICLQ, 2004, p. 237; M. C. Bassiouni, 'Post-Conflict Justice in Iraq: An Appraisal of the Iraq Special Tribunal', 38 Cornell International Law Journal, 2005, p. 327; M. Sissons and A. S. Bassin, 'Was the Dujail Trial Fair?', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 272; G. Mettraux, 'The 2005 Revision of the Statute of the Iraqi Special Tribunal', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 287; S. de Bertodano, 'Were There More Acceptable Alternatives to the Iraqi High Tribunal?', 5 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2007, p. 294.

²⁰⁴ Order No. 48.

²⁰⁵ The dates reflect the commencement of the Ba'ath party control of Iraq and the end of the Saddam Hussein regime.

²⁰⁶ Articles 1 and 11–14 of the Statute of the Tribunal. ²⁰⁷ Article 15.

in advisory capacities or as observers to the Trial Chambers and to the Appeals Chamber. The role of the non-Iraqi nationals is stated to be to provide assistance to the judges with respect to international law and the experience of similar tribunals (whether international or otherwise), and to monitor the protection by the Tribunal of general due process of law standards. In appointing such non-Iraqi experts, the President of the Tribunal is entitled to request assistance from the international community, including the United Nations. However, the judges and prosecutors of the Tribunal are all Iraqi nationals. Criticisms have been made of the Tribunal, including the fact that it can impose the death penalty, as for example with regard to Saddam Hussein upon his conviction in the Dujail case.²⁰⁸

The Serbian War Crimes Chamber

On 1 July 2003, the Serbian National Assembly adopted a law establishing a specialised War Crimes Chamber within the Belgrade District Court to prosecute and investigate crimes against humanity and serious violations of international humanitarian law as defined in Serbian law. A War Crimes Prosecutor's Office was established in Belgrade. The Chamber consists of two panels of three judges each selected from the Belgrade District Court or seconded from other courts, and two investigative judges.²⁰⁹ The International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia has referred some cases to this Chamber, both where no indictment was issued and under rule 11 bis.²¹⁰ It is, however, essentially a national court.

INTERNATIONAL CRIMES²¹¹

A brief survey of some of the main features of international crimes for which individual criminal responsibility now exists will follow, noting that issues concerning the jurisdiction of purely ²⁰⁸ See e.g. J. Trahan, 'A Critical Guide to the Iraqi High Tribunal's Anfal Judgment', 30 Michigan Journal of International Law, 2009, p. 305; N. Bhuta, 'Fatal Errors: The Trial and Appeal Judgments in the Dujail Case', 6 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2008, p. 39; M. P. Scharf and M. A. Newton, 'The Iraq High Tribunal's Dujail Trial Opinion', ASIL Insight, 18 December 2006; and Human Rights Watch report on the Dujail trial, <http://hrw.org/english/docs/2007/06/22/iraq16230.htm>.

²⁰⁹ The War Crimes Chamber's first trial, the Ovcara case, began on 9 March 2004. As of 2006, three trials had been completed and three others were ongoing: see Unfinished Business: Serbia's War Crimes Chamber, Human Rights Watch, 2007, pp. 1 ff. See also Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 197; M. Ellis, 'Coming to Terms with its Past: Serbia's New Court for the Prosecution of War Crimes', 22 Berkeley Journal of International Law, 2004, p. 165. See also www.icty.org/en/outreach/capacity-building/development-local-judiciaries and www.tuzilastvorz.org.rs/html_trz/pocetna_eng.htm.

²¹⁰ Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, p. 197; see e.g. Vladimir Kovačević, ICTY Referral Bench, 2006.

²¹¹ See e.g. K. Ambos, Treatise on International Criminal Law, vol. II, The Crimes and Sentencing, Oxford, 2014. Note, among a number of relevant issues that cannot be covered in this work, the principle of command responsibility, whereby a superior is criminally responsible for acts committed by subordinates that he knew or had reason to know had been or were about to be committed and no action was taken: see e.g. G. Mettraux, The Law of Command Responsibility, Oxford, 2009; Green, Armed Conflict, pp. 303–4; I. Bantekas, 'The Contemporary Law of Superior Responsibility', 93 AJIL, 1999, p. 573; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law and Practice, p. 384; and O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, p. 201. See also article 87 of Additional Protocol I, 1977; article 7(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 1993; article 6(3) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 1994; and article 28 of the Statute of the International Criminal Court, 1998. Note the Čelebići case, IT-96-21, 16 November 1998, paras. 370 ff.; the Krnjela case, IT-97-25-A, 17 September 2003; and the Blagojević case, IT-02-60-A, 2007. Further, military necessity may not be pleaded as a defence, see e.g. In re Lewinski (called von Manstein), 16 AD, p. 509, and the claim of superior orders will not provide a defence, although it may be taken in mitigation depending upon the circumstances: see e.g. Green, Armed Conflict, domestic courts for those international crimes that have been incorporated into domestic legislation are covered in chapter 11, while state responsibility for such offences is covered in chapter 13.

Genocide²¹²

Prohibition of genocide

The Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide signed in 1948 reaffirmed that genocide, whether committed in time of war or peace, was a crime under international law. Genocide was defined as any of the following acts committed ‘with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such’:

- (a) killing members of the group; (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
- (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

The Convention, which does not have an implementational system,²¹³ provides that persons charged with genocide shall be tried by a competent tribunal of the state in the territory of which the act was committed or by an international penal tribunal. Several points should be noted. First, the question of intent is such that states may deny genocidal activity by noting that the relevant intent to destroy in whole or in part was in fact absent.²¹⁴ Secondly, the groups protected do not include political groups.²¹⁵ Thirdly, the concept of cultural genocide is not included,²¹⁶ and, pp. 305–7; Green, Superior Orders in National and International Law, Leiden, 1976; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law and Practice, p. 411; and Y. Dinstein, The Defence of ‘Obedience to Superior Orders’ in International Law, Leiden, 1965. See also article 8 of the Nuremberg Charter, 39 AJIL, 1945, Supp., p. 259; Principle IV of the International Law Commission’s Report on the Principles of the Nuremberg Tribunal 1950, Yearbook of the ILC, 1950, vol. II, p. 195; article 7(4) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, 1993; article 6(4) of the Statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 1994; and article 33 of the Statute of the ICC.

²¹² See e.g. W. Schabas, Genocide in International Law, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2009; P. Akhavan, Reducing Genocide to Law: Definition, Meaning and the Ultimate Crime, Cambridge, 2015; N. Robinson, The Genocide Convention, London, 1960; R. Lemkin, Axis Rule in Occupied Europe, London, 1944; The UN Genocide Convention: A Commentary (ed. P. Gaeta), Oxford, 2009; P. Akhavan, Reducing Genocide to Law, Cambridge, 2014; L. Kuper, Genocide, Harmondsworth, 1981; and International Action Against Genocide, Minority Rights Group Report No. 53, 1984; Genocide and Human Rights (ed. J. Porter), Washington 1982; and I. Horowitz, Taking Lives: Genocide and State Power, New Brunswick, 1980. See also N. Ruhashyankiko, Study on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 1978, E/CN.4/Sub.2/416; B. Whittaker, Revised and Updated Report on the Question of the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, 1985, E/CN.4/Sub.2/1985/6; ‘Contemporary Practice of the United States Relating to International Law’, 79 AJIL, 1985, pp. 116 ff.; M. Shaw, War and Genocide, Oxford, 2003; C. Fournet, The Crime of Destruction and the Law of Genocide, London, 2007; M. N. Shaw, ‘Genocide and International Law’, in International Law at a Time of Perplexity (ed. Y. Dinstein), Dordrecht, 1989, p. 797; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 10; O’Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 4(V); C. Kreß, ‘The ICC’s First Encounter with Crime of Genocide’, in The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. Stahn), p. 669; and G. Verdirame, ‘The Genocide Definition in the Jurisprudence of the Ad Hoc Tribunals’, 49 ICLQ, 2000, p. 578.

²¹³ But see Sub-Commission resolution 1994/11.

²¹⁴ See Kuper, Genocide, pp. 32–5, and N. Lewis, ‘The Camp at Cecilio Baez’, in Genocide in Paraguay (ed. R. Arens), Philadelphia, 1976, p. 58. See also Ruhashyankiko, Study, p. 25.

²¹⁵ See e.g. Kuper, Genocide, pp. 25–30, and Ruhashyankiko, Study, p. 21. See also Robinson, Genocide Convention, p. 59.

²¹⁶ See e.g. Kuper, Genocide, p. 31; Robinson, Genocide Convention, p. 64; and Ruhashyankiko, Study, pp. 21 ff.

fourthly, there is virtually no mention of means to prevent the crime (although the obligation is stated).

In the 1990s, the issue of genocide unfortunately ceased to be an item of primarily historical concern. Events in the former Yugoslavia and in Rwanda stimulated increasing anxiety in this context. The Statutes of both the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda provide for the prosecution of individuals for the crime of genocide and a significant case-law has now developed through these tribunals. In addition, the question of state responsibility for the crime of genocide has been raised.²¹⁷ The International Court of Justice in the Bosnian Genocide case reaffirmed in its Order of 8 April 1993 on provisional measures²¹⁸ the view expressed in the Advisory Opinion on Reservations to the Genocide Convention that the crime of genocide 'shocks the conscience of mankind, results in great losses to humanity . . . and is contrary to moral law and to the spirit and aims of the United Nations'.²¹⁹ The Court called upon both parties not to take any action that might aggravate or extend the dispute over the prevention or punishment of the crime of genocide.²²⁰

On 11 July 1996, the Court rejected the Preliminary Objections raised by Yugoslavia.²²¹ In particular, the Court emphasised that it followed from the object and purpose of the Genocide Convention that the rights and obligations contained therein were rights and obligations erga omnes and that the obligation upon each state to prevent and punish the crime of genocide was not dependent upon the type of conflict involved in the particular situation (whether international or domestic) and was not territorially limited by the Convention.²²² The type of state responsibility envisaged under article IX of the Convention did not exclude any form of state responsibility.²²³ In addition, the Court observed that the Convention did not contain any clause the object or effect of which was to limit the scope of its jurisdiction ratione temporis so as to exclude events prior to a particular date.²²⁴ On 26 February 2007, the Court rendered its judgment on the merits. The Court affirmed that the effect of the categorisation of genocide as a 'crime under international law', coupled with the obligation to prevent genocide contained in the Genocide Convention, is to prohibit states from committing genocide through the ²¹⁷ See further generally below, chapter 13.

²¹⁸ ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 3, 16 and 23; 95 ILR, pp. 1, 31. See also R. Maison, 'Les Ordonnances de la CIJ dans l'Affaire Relative à l'Application de la Convention sur la Prévention et la Répression du Crime du Génocide', 5 EJIL, 1994, p. 381.

²¹⁹ ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 15, 23; 18 ILR, pp. 364, 370, quoting the terms of General Assembly resolution 96(II) of 11 December 1946.

²²⁰ The government of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) was requested to take all measures within its power to prevent commission of the crime of genocide, and was specifically called upon to ensure that 'any military, paramilitary or irregular armed units which may be directed or supported by it, as well as any organisations and persons which may be subject to its control, direction or influence, do not commit any acts of genocide', ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 3, 24; 95 ILR, pp. 1, 39. These provisional measures were reaffirmed by the Court in its Order on Provisional Measures of 13 September 1993 as measures which should be 'immediately and effectively implemented', ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 350; 95 ILR, pp. 43, 68. See also the Separate Opinion of Judge Lauterpacht, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 407, 431–2; 95 ILR, pp. 125, 149–50. Yugoslavia introduced an application in April 2001 for revision of the 1996 judgment on the basis that a 'new fact' had appeared since that state had become a new member of the UN during 2000. This was rejected by the Court, ICJ Reports, 2003, p. 7. See further below, chapter 18, p. 842.

²²¹ Now so called, rather than the former Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro), as from, and in consequence of, the Dayton Peace Agreement initialled at Dayton, USA, on 11 November 1995 and signed in Paris on 14 December 1995.

²²² ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 595, 615; 115 ILR, p. 1. ²²³ ICJ Reports, 1996, p. 616.

²²⁴ Ibid., p. 617. See also the Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, ICJ Reports, 1996, pp. 226, 240; 110 ILR, p. 163. Yugoslavia subsequently withdrew the counter-claims it had introduced against Bosnia: ICJ, Order of 10 September 2001.

actions of their organs or persons or groups whose acts are attributable to them.²²⁵ The Court also held that state responsibility could arise under the Convention for genocide and complicity, without an individual being convicted of the crime or an associated one,²²⁶ and that such responsibility for genocide applied to a state wherever it may be acting.²²⁷ It was noted that the essence of the intent, at the heart of the definition of genocide, is to destroy the protected group, in whole or in part, as such. It is a group which must have particular positive characteristics – national, ethnical, racial or religious – and not the lack of them. The intent must also relate to the group ‘as such’. That means that the crime requires an intent to destroy a collection of people who have a particular group identity²²⁸ and such intent refers to the intent to destroy at least a substantial part of the particular group and this may apply to a geographically limited area (such as Srebrenica).²²⁹ The Court, however, was not convinced, on the basis of the evidence before it, that it had been conclusively established that the massive killings of members of the protected group were committed with the specific intent (dolus specialis) on the part of the perpetrators to destroy, in whole or in part, the group as such,²³⁰ nor that deportations and expulsions of the protected group amounted to genocide for the same reason, nor indeed the imposition of terrible conditions on camp detainees and other allegations.²³¹ The exception to this was with regard to Srebrenica, where the Court found that the necessary intent had been established to the required standard of proof.²³² The Court emphasised that claims against a state involving charges of exceptional gravity, such as genocide, must be proved by evidence that is fully conclusive.²³³

However, the Court emphasised that the Convention established a separate and distinct duty to prevent genocide, which was both ‘normative and compelling’²³⁴ and an obligation of conduct, not of result,²³⁵ provided that the offence was actually committed.²³⁶ Such obligation arose at the instant that the state learned of, or should normally have learned of, the existence of a serious risk that genocide would be committed.²³⁷ It was also held that Serbia was in violation of its duty to punish genocide.²³⁸

²²⁵ ICJ Reports, 2007, paras. 161–7. See also Democratic Republic of the Congo v. Rwanda, ICJ Reports, 2006, pp. 6, 31–2, where the Court noted that the rights and obligations in the Genocide Convention were rights and obligations erga omnes and stated that the prohibition of genocide was ‘assuredly’ a norm of jus cogens.

²²⁶ ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 43, 119–20. See also Croatia v. Serbia, ICJ Reports, 2015, para. 129.

²²⁷ Bosnian Genocide case, p. 120.

²²⁸ Ibid., pp. 124–5. The Court noted in Croatia v. Serbia, ICJ Reports, 2015, para. 139, that ‘Since it is the group, in whole or in part, which is the object of the genocidal intent, the Court is of the view that it is difficult to establish such intent on the basis of isolated acts. It considers that, in the absence of direct proof, there must be evidence of acts on a scale that establishes an intent not only to target certain individuals because of their membership of a particular group, but also to destroy the group itself in whole or in part’.

²²⁹ Ibid., pp. 126–7. The Court in Croatia v. Serbia, ICJ Reports, 2015, para. 142, reaffirmed this, but noted that ‘Account must also be taken of the prominence of the allegedly targeted part within the group as a whole. With respect to this criterion, the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY specified in its Judgment rendered in the Krstić case that “[i]f a specific part of the group is emblematic of the overall group, or is essential to its survival, that may support a finding that the part qualifies as substantial within the meaning of Article 4 [of the ICTY Statute, paragraph 2 of which essentially reproduces Article II of the Convention]” (IT-98-33-A, Judgment of 19 April 2004, para. 12)’.

²³⁰ Bosnian Genocide case, p. 155. The Court accepted the possibility that genocidal intent could be established indirectly by reference, ibid., pp. 196–7, and in Croatia v. Serbia, it noted that this meant that ‘in order to infer the existence of dolus specialis from a pattern of conduct, it is necessary and sufficient that this is the only inference that could reasonably be drawn from the acts in question’, para. 148.

²³¹ Ibid., pp. 181–2, 190, 194–5 and 198. ²³² Ibid., pp. 15–66. ²³³ Ibid., pp. 128–9 and see also p. 175.

²³⁴ Ibid., pp. 219–20. ²³⁵ Ibid., p. 221. ²³⁶ Ibid., pp. 221–2. ²³⁷ Ibid.

²³⁸ Ibid., p. 229. Note the appointment of the UN Special Adviser on the Prevention of Genocide commencing in 2004, www.un.org/en/preventgenocide/adviser/.

The prohibition of genocide also appears in the relevant instruments in the sphere of international criminal law.²³⁹ Article 4 of the Statute of the ICTY, by way of example, provides that:

2. Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group, as such: (a) killing members of the group; (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group; (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction in whole or in part; (d) imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group and that the following acts shall be punishable:

(a) genocide; (b) conspiracy to commit genocide; (c) direct and public incitement to commit genocide; (d) attempt to commit genocide; (e) complicity in genocide.²⁴⁰

Genocide has been regarded as an international crime since the Second World War and the Genocide Convention, 1948 was a critical step in that process. The crime of genocide has also been included in the operative provisions of the statutes of most of the courts and tribunals discussed in the previous section. Case-law before the two international criminal tribunals (ICTY and ICTR) has, however, helped clarify many of the relevant principles. For example, perhaps the distinctive feature of the crime is the importance of establishing the specific intent to destroy the group in question in whole or in part, for genocide is more than the act of killing. This was emphasised by the ICTY in the Jelisić case, which noted that ‘it is in fact the mens rea [i.e. the intention as distinct from the actual act] which gives genocide its speciality and distinguishes it from an ordinary crime and other crimes against international humanitarian law’.²⁴¹ This was reaffirmed by the ICTR in the Akayesu case,²⁴² which defined the specific intent necessary as ‘the specific intention, required as a constitutive element of the crime, which demands that the perpetrator clearly seeks to produce the act charged’. The Trial Chamber underlined the difficulties in establishing the critical intent requirement and held that recourse may be had in the absence of confessions to inferences from facts.²⁴³ In the Ruggiu case, the ICTR held that a person who incites others to commit genocide must himself have a specific intent to commit genocide.²⁴⁴ However, in the Jelisić case, the ICTY pointed to the difficulty in practice of proving the genocidal ²³⁹ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 10; Werle, Principles of International Criminal Law, part 3; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 6. See also Human Rights Watch, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity: A Digest of the Case Law of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 2010, Chapter 1. Note also Vasiliaskas v. Lithuania, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 20 October 2015, paras. 170 ff., reaffirming the definition of genocide as contained in the 1948 Convention, particularly noting the absence of political groups amongst the list of target groups and concluding in para. 175 that ‘there is no sufficiently strong basis for finding that customary international law as it stood in 1953 included “political groups” among those falling within the definition of genocide’.

²⁴⁰ See also article 2 of the Statute of the ICTR and article 6 of the Statute of the ICC, which repeats article 4(2). See also ICC Elements of Crimes, 2011, which adds a further material element so that with regard to each prohibited act, the element requires that ‘The conduct takes place in the context of a manifest pattern of similar conduct directed against that group or was conduct that could itself effect such destruction’.

²⁴¹ IT-95-10, para. 66. ²⁴² ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, para. 498.

²⁴³ Ibid., para. 523. See also the cases of Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, 1999, paras. 7 ff. and Musema, ICTR-96-13-T, 2000, paras. 884 ff.

²⁴⁴ ICTR-97-32-I, 2000, para. 14.

intention of an individual if the crimes committed were not widespread or backed up by an organisation or a system.²⁴⁵ This may be distinguished from the Ruggiu case, where a systematic scheme to destroy the Tutsis was not in doubt.

The element of intention was further discussed by the ICTY in the Krstić case, where it was noted that the intent to eradicate a group within a limited geographical area, such as a region of a country or even a municipality, could be characterised as genocide,²⁴⁶ while ‘the intent to destroy a group, even if only in part, means seeking to destroy a distinct part of the group as opposed to an accumulation of isolated individuals within it’. The part of the group sought to be destroyed had to constitute a distinct element.²⁴⁷ In the decision of the Appeal Chamber in this case, it was emphasised that it was well established that where a conviction for genocide relies on the intent to destroy a protected group ‘in part’, the part must be a substantial part of that group. The aim of the Genocide Convention is to prevent the intentional destruction of entire human groups, and the part targeted must be significant enough to have an impact on the group as a whole.²⁴⁸

It was concluded that the intent requirement of genocide under article 4 of the Statute was satisfied where evidence shows that the alleged perpetrator intended to destroy at least a substantial part of the protected group. The determination of when the targeted part is substantial enough to meet this requirement may involve a number of considerations. The numeric size of the targeted part of the group is the necessary and important starting point, though not in all cases the ending point of the inquiry. The number of individuals targeted should be evaluated not only in absolute terms, but also in relation to the overall size of the entire group. In addition to the numeric size of the targeted portion, its prominence within the group can be a useful consideration. If a specific part of the group is emblematic of the overall group, or is essential to its survival, that may support a finding that the part qualifies as substantial within the meaning of Article 4.²⁴⁹

It was also emphasised that each perpetrator must possess the necessary specific intent.²⁵⁰

The intention to ‘destroy’ means the physical or biological destruction of all or part of the group and not, for example, attacks upon the cultural or sociological characteristics of a group in order to remove its separate identity.²⁵¹ The sometimes difficult question of the definition of membership of the groups specifically referred to in the relevant instruments has also been analysed. In Akayesu,²⁵² the Trial Chamber of the Rwanda Tribunal leaned towards ²⁴⁵ IT-95-10, paras. 100–1. ²⁴⁶ IT-98-33-T, 2001, para. 589. See also Croatia v. Serbia, ICJ Reports, 2015, para. 142.

²⁴⁷ Krstić, para. 590. ²⁴⁸ IT-98-33-A, 2004, para. 8.

²⁴⁹ Ibid., para. 12. In Vasiliaskas v. Lithuania, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 20 October 2015, the Court reaffirmed subsequent case-law that ‘the intentional destruction of a “distinct” part of the protected group could be considered as genocide of the entire protected group, provided that the “distinct” part was substantial because of the very large number of its members. Furthermore, in addition to the numerical size of the targeted part, judicial interpretation confirmed that its “prominence” within the protected group could also be a useful consideration’, para. 177.

²⁵⁰ Krstić, para. 134. ²⁵¹ Ibid., para. 25. ²⁵² ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, paras. 511 ff.

the objective definition of membership of groups,²⁵³ but this has been mitigated by other cases emphasising the importance of subjective elements as part of the relevant framework.²⁵⁴

In so far as the material elements of the crime are concerned, killing is clearly the key conduct involved and it has been held that the act in question must be intentional if not necessarily premeditated.²⁵⁵ Forced migration (or 'ethnic cleansing') as such does not constitute genocide,²⁵⁶ but may amount to a pattern of conduct demonstrating genocidal intent.²⁵⁷ The Akayesu case has also been important in emphasising that rape and sexual violence may amount to genocide when committed with the necessary specific intent to commit genocide. The Trial Chamber concluded that 'Sexual violence was an integral part of the process of destruction, specifically targeting Tutsi women and specifically contributing to their destruction and to the destruction of the Tutsi group as a whole.'²⁵⁸ Further, where it is intended to prevent births within the group whether by impelling the child born of rape to be part of another group or where the woman raped refuses subsequently to procreate, this may amount to genocide.²⁵⁹ The Rwanda Tribunal has also held that genocide may be committed by omission as well as by acts.²⁶⁰

As far as the International Criminal Court is concerned, the first person charged with the crime of genocide was President Al Bashir of Sudan in the context of the Darfur situation and following a referral by the Security Council in resolution 1593 (2005). Arrest warrants were issued on 4 March 2009 and on 12 July 2010, but Al Bashir remains free.²⁶¹

The International Court of Justice has also addressed the question of the relationship between the Genocide Convention and international humanitarian law, in Croatia v. Serbia,²⁶² where it was emphasised that these two sources were two distinct bodies of rules with different aims. While the Convention seeks to prevent and punish genocide as a crime under international law, humanitarian law governs the actual conduct of hostilities in an armed conflict, protecting diverse categories of persons and objects. In so far as both of these bodies of rules may be applicable in the context of a particular armed conflict, the Court noted that the rules of international humanitarian law could be relevant in order to decide whether the acts alleged by the Parties constituted genocide within the meaning of the Convention.

²⁵³ In Kayishema and Ruzindana, ICTR-95-1-T, 1999, paras. 522 ff., the Trial Chamber emphasised the importance of the designation contained in identity cards.

²⁵⁴ See Rutaganda, ICTR-96-3-T, 1999, paras. 55 ff. See also Bagilishima, ICTR-95-1A-T, 2001, para. 65, where the Trial Chamber concluded that 'if a victim was perceived by a perpetrator as belonging to a protected group, the victim could be considered by the Chamber as a member of the protected group, for the purposes of genocide'. See also the Report of the UN Commission of Inquiry on Darfur, S/2005/60, paras. 500 ff.

²⁵⁵ See e.g. Stakić, IT-97-24-T, 2003, para. 515.

²⁵⁶ See e.g. the Eichmann case, 36 ILR, p. 5 and the Brdjanin case, IT-99-36-T, 2004, para. 118. See also the Blagojević case, where, in addition, the Appeals Chamber of the ICTY held that awareness of facts related to the forcible transfer operation was insufficient to prove complicity in genocide in the absence of knowledge of mass killings at Srebrenica, IT-02-60-A, 2007, paras. 119 ff.

²⁵⁷ See e.g. the Review of the Indictments Concerning Karadžić and Mladić Pursuant to Rule 61 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence, ICTY, IT-95-5-R61 and IT-95-18-R61, 11 July 1996, para. 94, 108 ILR, pp. 134–5. See also ad hoc Judge Lauterpacht's Separate Opinion in the Genocide Convention (Bosnia and Herzegovina v. Yugoslavia) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 325, 431–2, and the ICC Elements of Crimes, article 6(c), footnote 4, UN Doc. PCNICC/2000/1/Add.2 (2000).

²⁵⁸ ICTR-96-4-T, para. 731. ²⁵⁹ Ibid., paras. 507–8. ²⁶⁰ Kambanda, ICTR-97-23-S, 1998, paras. 39–40.

²⁶¹ <https://www.icc-cpi.int/darfur>. See also the Popović case, IT-05-88-A, Appeals Chamber, 30 January 2015, particularly paras. 1065 ff. concerning the complex joint criminal enterprise doctrine in this context.

²⁶² ICJ Reports, 2015, para. 153. See also chapter 20.

War Crimes²⁶³

War crimes are essentially serious violations of the rules of customary and treaty law concerning international humanitarian law, otherwise known as the law governing armed conflicts.²⁶⁴

Article 2 of the Statute of the ICTY, by way of example, provides for jurisdiction with regard to:

grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949, namely the following acts against persons or property protected under the provisions of the relevant Geneva Convention: (a) wilful killing; (b) torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments; (c) wilfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body or health; (d) extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly; (e) compelling a prisoner of war or a civilian to serve in the forces of a hostile power; (f) wilfully depriving a prisoner of war or a civilian of the rights of fair and regular trial; (g) unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a civilian; (h) taking civilians as hostages.

Article 3 provides for jurisdiction for violation of the laws or customs of war. Such violations include, but are not be limited to:

(a) employment of poisonous weapons or other weapons calculated to cause unnecessary suffering; (b) wanton destruction of cities, towns or villages, or devastation not justified by military necessity; (c) attack, or bombardment, by whatever means, of undefended towns, villages, dwellings, or buildings; (d) seizure of, destruction or wilful damage done to institutions dedicated to religion, charity and education, the arts and sciences, historic monuments and works of art and science; (e) plunder of public or private property.²⁶⁵

Accordingly, war crimes are a discrete part of the principles of international humanitarian law, being those which have become accepted as criminal offences for which there is individual responsibility (in addition to state responsibility). Essentially, war crimes law applies to individuals and international humanitarian law to states. There is a long history of provision for ²⁶³ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 12; O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 4(III); M. A. Newton, 'Charging War Crimes: Policy and Prognosis from a Military Perspective', in The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. Stahn), p. 732; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 4. See also Human Rights Watch, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity: A Digest of the Case Law of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 2010, Chapter 3.

²⁶⁴ See further as to international humanitarian law, below, chapter 20.

²⁶⁵ See article 8 of the Statute of the ICC, which is exhaustive rather than illustrative in its exposition of fifty offences and is divided into sections dealing with: grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949; other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in international armed conflict, within the established framework of international law; in the case of an armed conflict not of an international character, serious violations of article 3 common to the four Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 and other serious violations of the laws and customs applicable in armed conflicts not of an international character, within the established framework of international law. Note in particular article 8(2)(b)(xxii): rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution and any other form of sexual violence were deemed to constitute grave breaches of the Geneva Convention and thus war crimes. In addition, article 8(2)(b)(viii) differs from article 49 of Geneva Convention IV in that it adds a key phrase to the definition, so that the former provision reads: 'The transfer, directly or indirectly, by the Occupying Power of parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies, or the deportation or transfer of all or parts of the population of the occupied territory within or outside this territory' (the added phrase is emphasised; to this extent it cannot be regarded as reflective of customary international law). Note also the ICC Elements of Crimes. See also article 4 of the Statute of the ICTR concerning violations of article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II of 1977; article 3 of the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone and article 14 of the Statute of the Iraqi High Tribunal.

individual responsibility for war crimes,²⁶⁶ and article 6(b) of the Nuremberg Charter included war crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, while the concept of grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 recognised certain violations as crimes subject to universal jurisdiction. Traditionally, international humanitarian law has distinguished between international and non-international armed conflicts, with legal provision being relatively modest with regard to the latter. However, common article 3 to the Geneva Conventions laid down certain minimum standards which were elaborated in Additional Protocol II of 1977.²⁶⁷ In addition, since the conflict in Rwanda was clearly an internal one, the ICTR Statute necessarily provided for individual responsibility for violations of the principles concerning non-international armed conflicts, in effect recognising that common article 3 and Additional Protocol II formed the basis of criminal liability.

The key modern decision has been the Tadić case before the ICTY. The Appeals Chamber in the jurisdictional phase of the case noted that an armed conflict existed whenever there was a resort to armed force between states or protracted armed violence between governmental authorities and organised armed groups or between such groups within a state. International humanitarian law applied from the initiation of such armed conflicts and extended beyond the cessation of hostilities until a general conclusion of peace was reached; or, in the case of internal conflicts, a peaceful settlement achieved. Until that moment, international humanitarian law continued to apply in the whole territory of the warring states or, in the case of internal conflicts, the whole territory under the control of a party, whether or not actual combat takes place there.²⁶⁸ The distinction between international and non-international armed conflicts was thus minimised. Although it was noted that international law did not regulate internal conflict in all aspects, it was held to 'cover such areas as protection of civilians from hostilities, in particular from indiscriminate attacks, protection of civilian objects, in particular cultural property, protection of all those who do not (or no longer) take active part in hostilities, as well as prohibition of means of warfare proscribed in international armed conflicts and ban of certain methods of conducting hostilities'.²⁶⁹ Further, it was held that individual criminal responsibility existed with regard to violations laid down in customary and treaty law, irrespective of whether the conflict was an international or an internal one.²⁷⁰ It was concluded that in order for article 3 of the ICTY Statute to be applicable, the violation had to be 'serious', which meant that it had to constitute a breach of a rule protecting important values, and the breach must involve grave consequences for the victim. In addition, the violation of the rule must entail, under customary or conventional law, the individual criminal responsibility of the person breaching the rule.²⁷¹

This Tadić judgment can now be taken as reflecting international law and it is to be noted that a significant number of provisions dealing with international conflicts now apply to internal conflicts as laid down in the Statute of the International Criminal Court.²⁷²

²⁶⁶ See e.g. the US Army Lieber Code, April 1864. ²⁶⁷ See below, chapter 20, p. 915.

²⁶⁸ IT-94-1-T, Decision of 2 October 1995, para. 70; 105 ILR, pp. 453, 486. ²⁶⁹ Ibid., para. 127.

²⁷⁰ Ibid., para. 129.

²⁷¹ Ibid., para. 94. See also e.g. the Galić case, IT-98-29-T, 2003, para. 11 and the Kanyabashi decision on jurisdiction, ICTR-96-15-T, 1997, para. 8.

²⁷² See article 8(2)(c) and (e) of the Statute.

Crimes against Humanity²⁷³

Article 6(c) of the Nuremberg Charter included ‘crimes against humanity’ within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal and these were defined as ‘murder, extermination, enslavement, deportation and other inhumane acts committed against any civilian population, before or during the war, or persecutions on political, racial or religious grounds in execution of or in connection with any crime within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal, whether or not in violation of the law of the country where perpetrated’.²⁷⁴

Article 5 of the Statute of the ICTY provided for jurisdiction with regard to the following crimes when committed in armed conflict, whether international or internal in character, and directed against any civilian population: ‘(a) murder; (b) extermination; (c) enslavement; (d) deportation; (e) imprisonment; (f) torture; (g) rape; (h) persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds; (i) other inhumane acts’. Article 3 of the Statute of the ICTR is in similar form, other than that it is specified that the crimes in question (which are the same as those specified in the ICTY Statute) must have been committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds. Article 7 of the Statute of the ICC notes that the crimes in question (enforced disappearance and apartheid are added to the list appearing in the Statutes of the two international criminal tribunals) have to be committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack.²⁷⁵

Although article 5 of the ICTY Statute did not specifically refer, unlike the other instruments, to the necessity of a widespread or systematic attack as the required framework for the commission of acts amounting to crimes against humanity, this was incorporated into the jurisprudence through the Tadić trial decision of 7 May 1997. This interpreted the phrase ‘directed against any civilian population’ as meaning ‘that the acts must occur on a widespread or systematic basis, that there must be some form of a governmental, organizational or group policy to commit these acts and that the perpetrator must know of the context within which his actions are taken’.²⁷⁶

The requirement of ‘widespread or systematic’ was examined in Akayesu, where the Trial Chamber declared that the concept of widespread could be defined as ‘massive, frequent, large scale action, carried out collectively with considerable seriousness and directed against ²⁷³ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 11; O’Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 4(IV); D. Robinson, ‘Crimes against Humanity: A Better Policy on “Policy”’, in The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. Stahn), p. 705; and Cassese, International Criminal Law, chapter 5. See also Bassiouni, Crimes Against Humanity in International Criminal Law and Human Rights Watch, Genocide, War Crimes and Crimes Against Humanity: A Digest of the Case Law of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, 2010, Chapter 2. Note that the UN International Law Commission included the topic of Crimes against Humanity in its programme of work at its 66th session in July 2014 and appointed a Special Rapporteur (Prof. Sean Murphy): see his second report, A/CN.4/690, 21 January 2016.

²⁷⁴ The Tokyo Charter was in similar terms, as was Allied Control Council Law No. 10 save that it added rape, imprisonment and torture to the list of inhumane acts and did not require a connection to war crimes or aggression: see Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 120 ff.

²⁷⁵ Article 7(1)(g) of the ICC Statute specifically refers to ‘Rape, sexual slavery, enforced prostitution, forced pregnancy, enforced sterilization, or any other form of sexual violence of comparable gravity’. See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure, p. 251. See also Akayesu, ICTR-96-4-T, 2 September 1998, paras. 597 ff.; Kunarac, IT-96-23-T and IT-96-23/1-T, 22 February 2001, paras. 437 ff.; and the Elements of Crimes, article 7(1)(g)(1)-I, Element 1, 2011.

²⁷⁶ IT-94-1-T, para. 644; 112 ILR, pp. 1, 214. See also paras. 645 ff. This was reaffirmed in the decision of the Appeals Chamber of 15 July 1999, para. 248; 124 ILR, pp. 61, 164.

a multiplicity of victims', while 'systematic' could be defined as 'thoroughly organised and following a regular pattern on the basis of a common policy involving substantial public or private resources'. It was noted that there was no requirement that this policy must be adopted formally as the policy of a state, although there had to be some kind of preconceived plan or policy.²⁷⁷ In Blaškić, the ICTY Trial Chamber defined 'systematic' in terms of the existence of a political objective, a plan pursuant to which the attack is perpetrated or an ideology, in the broad sense of the word, that is, to destroy, persecute or weaken a community; the perpetration of a criminal act on a very large scale against a group of civilians or the repeated and continuous commission of inhumane acts linked to one another; the preparation and use of significant public or private resources, whether military or other, and the implication of high-level political and/or military authorities in the definition and establishment of the methodical plan. The plan, however, need not necessarily be declared expressly or even stated clearly and precisely. It may be surmised from the occurrence of a series of events.²⁷⁸

In Kunarac, the ICTY Appeals Chamber held that while proof that the attack was directed against a civilian population and proof that it was widespread or systematic were legal elements of the crime, it was not necessary to show that they were the result of the existence of a policy or plan. The existence of a policy or plan could be evidentially relevant, but it was not a legal element of the crime.²⁷⁹ In Mudacumura, the ICC Pre-Trial Chamber II held that it must be demonstrated that a state or organisational policy existed which had a civilian population as the primary object of the attack.²⁸⁰ As to the nature of the organisation in question, the Chamber emphasised the elements of hierarchical structure and well-defined decision-making processes.²⁸¹

Many of the same acts may constitute both war crimes and crimes against humanity, but what is distinctive about the latter is that they do not need to take place during an armed conflict. However, to constitute crimes against humanity the acts in question have to be committed as part of a widespread or systematic activity, and to be committed against any civilian population, thus any reference to nationality is irrelevant. However, it is important to maintain a clear distinction between civilian and non-civilian in this context. The Trial Chamber in the Martić case noted that one could not allow the term 'civilian' for the purposes of a crime against humanity to include all persons who were not actively participating in combat, including those who were hors de combat, at the time of the crimes, as this would blur the necessary distinction between combatants and non-combatants.²⁸²

Of course, any act of genocide by definition will constitute also a crime against humanity, although the reverse is clearly not the case. What is required for crimes against humanity is an 'attack' and this has been broadly defined. In the Akayesu case, for example, this term was defined as an ²⁷⁷ ICTR-96-4-T, 2 September 1998, para. 580. ²⁷⁸ IT-95-14-T, 2000, paras. 203–4; 122 ILR, pp. 1, 78.

²⁷⁹ IT-96-23 & 23/1, 2002, para. 98.

²⁸⁰ ICC-01/04-01/12, 13 July 2012, para. 22. Note that the ICC Elements of Crimes added that the 'policy to commit such attack' required that the state or organisation 'actively promote or encourage such an attack against the civilian population', article 7(3) of the Elements of Crimes. See also Pre-Trial Chamber II, 'Decision Pursuant to Article 61(7)(a) and (b) of the Rome Statute on the Charges of the Prosecutor Against Jean-Pierre Bemba Gombo', ICC-01/05-01/08-424, para. 76.

²⁸¹ ICC-01/04-01/12, para. 24. ²⁸² IT-95-11-T, 2007, paras. 55–6.

unlawful act of the kind enumerated in Article 3(a) to (i) of the Statute, like murder, extermination, enslavement etc. An attack may also be non-violent in nature, like imposing a system of apartheid, which is declared a crime against humanity in Article 1 of the Apartheid Convention of 1973, or exerting pressure on the population to act in a particular manner, may come under the purview of an attack, if orchestrated on a massive scale or in a systematic manner.²⁸³

It is also necessary for the alleged perpetrator to be aware that his act was part of a broader attack. The Appeals Chamber in its jurisdiction decision in Tadić concluded that to convict an accused of crimes against humanity, it had to be proved that the crimes were related to the attack on a civilian population and that the accused knew that his crimes were so related.²⁸⁴ This is so even if he does not identify with the aims of the attack and his act was committed for personal reasons.²⁸⁵

Aggression²⁸⁶

Aggression is recognised as a crime in customary international law. Article 6 of the Nuremberg Charter defined its jurisdiction as including ‘(a) Crimes against peace. Namely, planning, preparation, initiation, or waging of a war of aggression or a war in violation of international treaties, agreements or assurances, or participation in a common plan or conspiracy for the accomplishment of any of the foregoing’ and a number of defendants were convicted of offences under this head. General Assembly resolution 95(1) affirmed the principles recognised by the Nuremberg Charter and its judgment. Aggression was termed the ‘supreme international crime’ in one of the judgments.²⁸⁷ The Tokyo Charter included the same principle as did Allied Control Council Law No. 10. General Assembly resolution 3314 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974 contained a definition of aggression in contravention of the Charter.²⁸⁸ The crime of aggression is referred to in article 5 of the Statute of the ICC, but in no other such instrument. Indeed, article 5(2) provides that the Court cannot exercise jurisdiction over the crime of aggression until a provision is adopted defining the crime and setting out the conditions under which the Court may exercise jurisdiction with respect to it. The delay in achieving this has been caused by several problems. The first is that, unlike the other ²⁸³ ICTR-96-4-T, 1998, para. 581. ²⁸⁴ IT-94-1-A, 1999, para. 271; 124 ILR, pp. 61, 173. ²⁸⁵ Ibid., paras. 255 ff.

²⁸⁶ See e.g. The Crime of Aggression; A Commentary (ed. Claus Kreß and S. Barriga), Cambridge, 2016; P. Grzebyk, Criminal Responsibility for the Crime of Aggression, London, 2013; H. H. Koh and T. F. Buchwald, ‘The Crime of Aggression: The United States Perspective’, 109 AJIL, 2015, p. 257; A. Pellet, ‘Response to Koh and Buchwald’s Article: Don Quixote and Sancho Panza Tilt at Windmills’, 109 AJIL, 2015, p. 557; C. McDougall, The Crime of Aggression under the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, Cambridge, 2015; S. D. Murphy, ‘Aggression, Legitimacy and the International Criminal Court’, 20 EJIL, 2010, p. 1147; Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, chapter 13; O’Keefe, International Criminal Law, chapter 4(VI); R. S. Clark, ‘The Crime of Aggression’, in The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. Stahn), p. 778; and Y. Dinstein, War, Aggression and Self-Defence, 5th edn, Cambridge, 2011, chapter 5; and see further below, chapter 21, p. 854ff.

²⁸⁷ See Judgment 186, 41 AJIL, 1947, p. 172.

²⁸⁸ See also the General Treaty for the Renunciation of War (the ‘Kellogg–Briand Pact’), 1928, which condemned recourse to war as an instrument of international policy; article 1 of the International Law Commission’s Draft Code of Offences against Peace and Security, 1954, and article 1(2) of the revised Draft Code adopted in 1996. Article 16 of the latter instrument provides that a leader who as leader or organiser actively participates in or orders the planning, preparation, initiation or waging of aggression committed by a state shall be responsible for a crime of aggression.

substantive international crimes, aggression is a crime of 'leadership' and necessarily requires that it be determined as an initial point that the state, of whom the accused is a 'leader' in some capacity, has committed aggression. This is a wholly different proposition from asserting the responsibility of individuals for genocide, war crimes or crimes against humanity. It is also unclear what differences may exist between the state's act of aggression and the individual's crime of aggression. Secondly, article 5(2) of the ICC Statute provides that the conditions for the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction must be consistent with the relevant provisions of the UN Charter. The Security Council has the competence under Chapter VII of the Charter to determine whether an act of aggression has taken place and it has been argued that a prior determination by the Council is necessary before the Court may exercise jurisdiction with regard to individual responsibility for aggression. This has been contested.²⁸⁹ At the ICC Review Conference held in Kampala in 2010, amendments to the Statute were adopted,²⁹⁰ which defined the crime of aggression in a new article 8 bis,²⁹¹ and laid down jurisdictional conditions.²⁹²

²⁸⁹ See e.g. Cryer et al., Introduction to International Criminal Law, pp. 276 ff. See also A. Carpenter, 'The International Criminal Court and the Crime of Aggression', 64 Nordic Journal of International Law, 1995, p. 223; A. Zimmermann, 'The Creation of a Permanent International Criminal Court', 25 Suffolk Transnational Law Review, 2005, p. 1; and C. Kress, 'Versailles–Nuremberg–The Hague: Germany and the International Criminal Law', 40 International Lawyer, 2006, p. 15.

²⁹⁰ See e.g. A. Zimmermann, 'Amending the Amendment Provisions of the Rome Statute: The Kampala Compromise on the Crime of Aggression and the Law of Treaties', 10 Journal of International Criminal Justice, 2012, p. 209.

²⁹¹ This states that: '1. For the purpose of this Statute, "crime of aggression" means the planning, preparation, initiation or execution, by a person in a position effectively to exercise control over or to direct the political or military action of a State, of an act of aggression which, by its character, gravity and scale, constitutes a manifest violation of the Charter of the United Nations.

2. For the purpose of paragraph 1, "act of aggression" means the use of armed force by a State against the sovereignty, territorial integrity or political independence of another State, or in any other manner inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations. Any of the following acts, regardless of a declaration of war, shall, in accordance with United Nations General Assembly resolution 3314 (XXIX) of 14 December 1974, qualify as an act of aggression:

- (a) The invasion or attack by the armed forces of a State of the territory of another State, or any military occupation, however temporary, resulting from such invasion or attack, or any annexation by the use of force of the territory of another State or part thereof;
- (b) Bombardment by the armed forces of a State against the territory of another State or the use of any weapons by a State against the territory of another State;
- (c) The blockade of the ports or coasts of a State by the armed forces of another State;
- (d) An attack by the armed forces of a State on the land, sea or air forces, or marine and air fleets of another State;
- (e) The use of armed forces of one State which are within the territory of another State with the agreement of the receiving State, in contravention of the conditions provided for in the agreement or any extension of their presence in such territory beyond the termination of the agreement;
- (f) The action of a State in allowing its territory, which it has placed at the disposal of another State, to be used by that other State for perpetrating an act of aggression against a third State;
- (g) The sending by or on behalf of a State of armed bands, groups, irregulars or mercenaries, which carry out acts of armed force against another State of such gravity as to amount to the acts listed above, or its substantial involvement therein.' See Resolution 6, https://asp.icc-cpi.int/iccdocs/asp_docs/Resolutions/ICC-ASP-8-Res.6-ENG.pdf.

²⁹² See article 15 bis and ter. In order for this special jurisdictional regime to come into force, thirty ratifications of the amendments were required and, in addition, a decision to be taken by two-thirds of the States Parties to activate the jurisdiction at any time after 1 January 2017. As of July 2016, thirty states had become parties to the amendment, https://treaties.un.org/pages/ViewDetails.aspx?src=TREATY&tmdsg_no=XVIII-10-b&chapter=18&clang=en.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

The Cambridge Companion to International Criminal Law (ed. W. Schabas), Cambridge, 2016

R. Cryer, H. Friman, D. Robinson and E. Wilmschurst, An Introduction to International Criminal Law and Procedure, 3rd edn, Cambridge, 2014

The Law and Practice of the International Criminal Court (ed. C. Stahn), Oxford, 2015

R. O'Keefe, International Criminal Law, Oxford, 2015

W. Schabas, An Introduction to the International Criminal Court, 5th edn, Cambridge, 2016

8

Recognition

International society is not an unchanging entity, but is subject to the ebb and flow of political life.¹ New states are created and old units fall away. New governments come into being within states in a manner contrary to declared constitutions whether or not accompanied by force. Insurgencies occur and belligerent administrations are established in areas of territory hitherto controlled by the legitimate government. Each of these events creates new facts and the question that recognition is concerned with revolves around the extent to which legal effects should flow from such occurrences. Each state will have to decide whether or not to recognise the particular eventuality and the kind of legal entity it should be accepted as.

Recognition involves consequences both on the international plane and within municipal law. If an entity is recognised as a state in, for example, the United Kingdom, it will entail the consideration of rights and duties that would not otherwise be relevant. There are privileges permitted to a foreign state before the municipal courts that would not be allowed to other institutions or persons.

It is stating the obvious to point to the very strong political influences that bear upon this topic.² In more cases than not the decision whether or not to recognise will depend more upon political considerations than exclusively legal factors. Recognition is not merely applying the relevant legal consequences to a factual situation, for sometimes a state will not want such consequences to follow, either internationally or domestically.

¹ See generally e.g. J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006; Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992; H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1947; T. C. Chen, The International Law of Recognition, London, 1951; J. Charpentier, La Reconnaissance Internationale et l'Évolution du Droit des Gens, Paris, 1956; T. L. Galloway, Recognising Foreign Governments, Washington, 1978; J. Verhoeven, La Reconnaissance Internationale dans la Pratique Contemporaine, Paris, 1975 and Verhoeven, 'La Reconnaissance Internationale, Déclin ou Renouveau?', AFDI, 1993, p. 7; M. Fabry, Recognizing States, Oxford, 2010; Recognition in International Relations (ed. C. Daase, C. Fehl, A. Geis and G. Kolliarkis), Basingstoke, 2015; C. Rynjaert and S. Sobrie, 'Recognition of States: International Law or Realpolitik?', 24 Leiden Journal of International Law, 2011, p. 467; J. Dugard, Recognition and the United Nations, Cambridge, 1987 and The Secession of States and Their Recognition in the Wake of Kosovo, The Hague, 2013; H. Blix, 'Contemporary Aspects of Recognition', 130 HR, 1970-II, p. 587; J. Salmon, 'Reconnaissance d'État', 25 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1992, p. 226; E. Wyler, Théorie pratique de la reconnaissance d'État, Brussels, 2013; L. Trigeaud, 'L'Influence des Reconnaissances d'État sur la Formation des Engagements Conventionnels', 119 RGDIP, 2015, p. 571; S. Talmon, Recognition in International Law: A Bibliography, The Hague, 2000; T. D. Grant, The Recognition of States: Law and Practice in Debate and Evolution, London, 1999, and Third US Restatement on Foreign Relations Law, Washington, 1987, vol. I, pp. 77 ff. See also P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, pp. 619 ff.; P. M. Dupuy, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2006, p. 95; and L. Henkin, R. C. Pugh, O. Schachter and H. Smit, International Law: Cases and Materials, 3rd edn, St Paul, 1993, pp. 244 ff.

² See e.g. H. A. Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 1932, vol. I, pp. 77–80.

To give one example, the United States refused for many years to recognise either the People's Republic of China or North Korea, not because it did not accept the obvious fact that these authorities exercised effective control over their respective territories, but rather because it did not wish the legal effects of recognition to come into operation.³ It is purely a political judgment, although it has been clothed in legal terminology. In addition, there are a variety of options open as to what an entity may be recognised as. Such an entity may, for example, be recognised as a full sovereign state, or as the effective authority within a specific area or as a subordinate authority to another state.⁴ It is a matter of fact in all cases what precisely is being sought and granted and recognition may in certain circumstances constitute a significant political gesture without any legal consequences being intended, such as recognition as 'representative of the people'. More usually, recognition is a statement by an international legal person as to the status in international law of another real or alleged international legal person or of the validity of a particular factual situation. Once recognition has occurred, the new situation is deemed opposable to the recognising state, that is the pertinent legal consequences will flow. As such, recognition constitutes participation in the international legal process generally while also being important within the context of bilateral relations and, of course, domestically.

RECOGNITION OF STATES

There are basically two theories as to the nature of recognition. The constitutive theory maintains that it is the act of recognition by other states that creates a new state and endows it with legal personality and not the process by which it actually obtained independence. Thus, new states are established in the international community as fully fledged subjects of international law by virtue of the will and consent of already existing states.⁵ The disadvantage of this approach is that an unrecognised 'state' may not be subject to the obligations imposed by international law and may accordingly be free from such restraints as, for instance, the prohibition on aggression. A further complication would arise if a 'state' were recognised by some but not other states. Could one talk then of, for example, partial personality?

The second theory, the declaratory theory, adopts the opposite approach and is a little more in accord with practical realities.⁶ It maintains that recognition is merely an acceptance by states of an already existing situation. A new state will acquire capacity in international law not by virtue of the consent of others but by virtue of a particular factual situation. It will be legally constituted by its own efforts and circumstances and will not have to await the procedure of recognition by ³ See e.g. M. Kaplan and N. Katzenbach, The Political Foundations of International Law, New York, 1961, p. 109.

⁴ See e.g. Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler [1967] AC 853; 43 ILR, p. 23, where the Court took the view that the German Democratic Republic was a subordinate agency of the USSR; and the recognition of the Ciskei as a subordinate body of South Africa, Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 All ER 449; 75 ILR, p. 675.

⁵ See e.g. Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 19 ff. and J. Salmon, La Reconnaissance d'État, Paris, 1971. See also R. Rich and D. Turk, 'Symposium: Recent Developments in the Practice of State Recognition', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 36.

⁶ See e.g. J. L. Brierly, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 138; Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law (ed. J. Crawford), 8th edn, Oxford, 2012, p. 144; D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, pp. 128 ff.; S. Talmon, 'The Constitutive Versus the Declaratory Theory of Recognition: Tertium Non Datur?', 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 101; and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 22 ff. See also the Tinoco arbitration, 1 RIAA, p. 369; 2 AD, p. 34; and Wulfsohn v. Russian Republic 138 NE 24; 2 AD, p. 39.

other states. This doctrine owes a lot to traditional positivist thought on the supremacy of the state and the concomitant weakness or non-existence of any central guidance in the international community.

For the constitutive theorist, the heart of the matter is that fundamentally an unrecognised 'state' can have no rights or obligations in international law. The opposite stance is adopted by the declaratory approach that emphasises the factual situation and minimises the power of states to confer legal personality.

Actual practice leads to a middle position between these two perceptions. The act of recognition by one state of another indicates that the former regards the latter as having conformed with the basic requirements of international law as to the creation of a state. Of course, recognition is highly political and is given in a number of cases for purely political reasons. This point of view was emphasised by the American representative on the Security Council during discussions on the Middle East in May 1948. He said that it would be:

highly improper for one to admit that any country on earth can question the sovereignty of the United States of America in the exercise of the high political act of recognition of the de facto status of a state.

Indeed, he added that there was no authority that could determine the legality or validity of that act of the United States.⁷ This American view that recognition is to be used as a kind of mark of approval was in evidence with regard to the attitude adopted towards Communist China for a generation.⁸

The United Kingdom, on the other hand, has often tended to extend recognition once it is satisfied that the authorities of the state in question have complied with the minimum requirements of international law, and have effective control which seems likely to continue over the country.⁹ Recognition is constitutive in a political sense, for it marks the new entity out as a state within the international community and is evidence of acceptance of its new political status by the society of nations. This does not imply that the act of recognition is legally constitutive, because rights and duties do not arise as a result of the recognition.

Practice over the last century or so is not unambiguous but does point to the declaratory approach as the better of the two theories. States which for particular reasons have refused to recognise other states, such as in the Arab world and Israel and the USA and certain communist nations,¹⁰ rarely contend that the other party is devoid of powers and obligations before international law and exists in a legal vacuum. The stance is rather that rights and duties are binding upon them, and that recognition has not been accorded for primarily political reasons. If the constitutive theory were accepted it would mean, for example, in the context of the former Arab non-recognition of Israel, that the latter was not bound by international law rules of non-aggression and non-intervention. This has not been adopted in any of the stances of non-recognition of 'states'.¹¹

⁷ See M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1968, vol. II, p. 10.

⁸ See generally D. Young, 'American Dealings with Peking', 45 Foreign Affairs, 1966, p. 77, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 551 ff. See also A/CN.4/2, p. 53.

⁹ See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 6. ¹⁰ See 39 Bulletin of the US Department of State, 1958, p. 385.

¹¹ See e.g. the Pueblo incident, 62 AJIL, 1968, p. 756 and Keesing's Contemporary Archives, p. 23129; Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 604 ff. and 651; 'Contemporary Practice of the UK in International Law', 6 ICLQ, 1957, p. 507; and British Practice in International Law (ed. E. Lauterpacht), London, 1963, vol. II, p. 90. See also N. Mugerwa, 'Subjects of International Law', in Manual of International Law (ed. M. Sørensen), London, 1968, pp. 247, 269.

Of course, if an entity, while meeting the conditions of international law as to statehood, went totally unrecognised, this would undoubtedly hamper the exercise of its rights and duties, especially in view of the absence of diplomatic relations, but it would not seem in law to amount to a decisive argument against statehood itself.¹² For example, the Charter of the Organization of American States adopted at Bogotá in 1948 notes in its survey of the fundamental rights and duties of states that:

the political existence of the state is independent of recognition by other states. Even before being recognised the state has the right to defend its integrity and independence.¹³

And the Institut de Droit International emphasised in its resolution on recognition of new states and governments in 1936 that the existence of the new state with all the legal effects connected with that existence is not affected by the refusal of one or more states to recognise.¹⁴

In the period following the end of the First World War, the courts of the new states of Eastern and Central Europe regarded their states as coming into being upon the actual declaration of independence and not simply as a result of the Peace Treaties. The tribunal in one case pointed out that the recognition of Poland in the Treaty of Versailles was only declaratory of the state which existed 'par lui-même'.¹⁵ In addition, the Arbitration Commission established by the International Conference on Yugoslavia in 1991 stated in its Opinion No. 1 that 'the existence or disappearance of the state is a question of fact' and that 'the effects of recognition by other states are purely declaratory'.¹⁶

On the other hand, the constitutive theory is not totally devoid of all support in state practice. In some cases, the creation of a new state, or the establishment of a new government by unconstitutional means, or the occupation of a territory that is legally claimed will proceed uneventfully and be clearly accomplished for all to see and with little significant opposition. However, in many instances, the new entity or government will be insecure and it is in this context that recognition plays a vital role. In any event, and particularly where the facts are unclear and open to different interpretations, recognition by a state will amount to a declaration by that state of how it understands the situation, and such an evaluation will be binding upon it. It will not be able to deny later the factual position it has recognised, unless, of course, circumstances radically alter in the meantime. In this sense, recognition can be constitutive. Indeed, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission noted in Opinion No. 8 that 'while recognition of a state by other states has only declarative value, such recognition, along with membership of ¹² See above, chapter 5.

¹³ Article 9. This became article 12 of the Charter as amended in 1967. See also the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933, article 3.

¹⁴ 39 Annuaire de L'Institut de Droit International, 1936, p. 300. See also Third US Restatement, pp. 77–8.

¹⁵ Deutsche Continental Gas-Gesellschaft v. Polish State 5 AD, p. 11.

¹⁶ 92 ILR, pp. 162, 165. See also the decision of the European Court of Human Rights in Loizidou v. Turkey (Preliminary Objections), Series A, No. 310, 1995, at p. 14; 103 ILR, p. 621, and Chuan Pu Andrew Wang and Others v. Office of the Federal Prosecutor, Swiss Supreme Court, First Public Law Chamber, decision of 3 May 2004, No. 1A.3/2004; partly published as BGE 130 II 217, para. 5.3.

international organisations, bears witness to these states' conviction that the political entity so recognised is a reality and confers on it certain rights and obligations under international law'.¹⁷ By way of contrast, the fact of non-recognition of a 'new state' by a vast majority of existing states will constitute tangible evidence for the view that such an entity has not established its conformity with the required criteria of statehood.¹⁸

Another factor which leans towards the constitutive interpretation of recognition is the practice in many states whereby an unrecognised state or government cannot claim the rights available to a recognised state or government before the municipal courts. This means that the act of recognition itself entails a distinct legal effect and that after recognition a state or government would have enforceable rights within the domestic jurisdiction that it would not have had prior to the recognition.¹⁹

This theoretical controversy is of value in that it reveals the functions of recognition and emphasises the impact of states upon the development of international law. It points to the essential character of international law, poised as it is between the state and the international community. The declaratory theory veers towards the former and the constitutive doctrine towards the latter.

There have been a number of attempts to adapt the constitutive theory.²⁰ Lauterpacht maintained, for example, that once the conditions prescribed by international law for statehood have been complied with, there is a duty on the part of existing states to grant recognition. This is because, in the absence of a central authority in international law to assess and accord legal personality, it is the states that have to perform this function on behalf, as it were, of the international community and international law.²¹

This operation is both declaratory, in that it is based upon certain definite facts (i.e. the entity fulfils the requirements of statehood) and constitutive in that it is the acceptance by the recognising state of the particular community as an entity possessing all the rights and obligations that are inherent in statehood. Before the act of recognition, the community that is hoping to be admitted as a state will only have such rights and duties as have been expressly permitted to it, if any.

The Lauterpacht doctrine is an ingenious bid to reconcile the legal elements in a coherent theory. It accepts the realities of new creations of states and governments by practical (and occasionally illegal) means, and attempts to assimilate this to the supremacy of international law as Lauterpacht saw it. However, in so doing it ignores the political aspects and functions of recognition, that is, its use as a method of demonstrating or withholding support from a particular government or new community. The reality is that in many cases recognition is applied to demonstrate political approval or disapproval. Indeed, if there is a duty to grant recognition, would the entity involved have a right to demand this where a particular state (or states) is proving recalcitrant? If this were so, one would appear to be faced with the possibility of a non-state with as yet no rights or duties enforcing rights against non-recognising states.

¹⁷ 92 ILR, pp. 199, 201. ¹⁸ See Democratic Republic of East Timor v. State of the Netherlands 87 ILR, pp. 73, 74.

¹⁹ See below, p. 349

²⁰ Note the reference to the 'relativism inherent in the constitutive theory of recognition' with regard to the situation where some states recognised the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia as the continuator of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and others did not: see the Genocide Convention (Bosnia v. Serbia) case, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 43, 241, 244, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Al-Khasawneh.

²¹ Recognition, pp. 24, 55, 76–7.

Nevertheless, state practice reveals that Lauterpacht's theory has not been adopted.²² The fact is that few states accept that they are obliged in every instance to accord recognition. In most cases they will grant recognition, but that does not mean that they have to, as history with regard to some Communist nations and with respect to Israel illustrates. This position was supported in Opinion No. 10 of the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission in July 1992, which emphasised that recognition was 'a discretionary act that other states may perform when they choose and in a manner of their own choosing, subject only to compliance with the imperatives of general international law'.²³

The approach of the United States was emphasised in 1976. The Department of State noted that:

[i]n the view of the United States, international law does not require a state to recognise another entity as a state; it is a matter for the judgment of each state whether an entity merits recognition as a state. In reaching this judgment, the United States has traditionally looked to the establishment of certain facts. These facts include effective control over a clearly defined territory and population; an organised governmental administration of that territory and a capacity to act effectively to conduct foreign relations and to fulfil international obligations. The United States has also taken into account whether the entity in question has attracted the recognition of the international community of states.²⁴

The view of the UK government was expressed as follows:

The normal criteria which the government apply for recognition as a state are that it should have, and seem likely to continue to have, a clearly defined territory with a population, a government who are able of themselves to exercise effective control of that territory, and independence in their external relations. Other factors, including some United Nations resolutions, may also be relevant.²⁵

Recent practice suggests that 'other factors' may, in the light of the particular circumstances, include human rights and other matters. The European Community adopted a Declaration on 16 December 1991 entitled 'Guidelines on the Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and in the Soviet Union' in which a common position on the process of recognition of the new states was adopted. It was noted in particular that recognition required:

- respect for the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the commitments subscribed to in the Final Act of Helsinki and in the Charter of Paris,²⁶ especially with regard to the rule of law, democracy and human rights;
- guarantees for the rights of ethnic and national groups and minorities in accordance with the commitments subscribed to in the framework of the CSCE;²⁷
- respect for the inviolability of all frontiers which can only be changed by peaceful means and by common agreement;

²² See e.g. H. Waldock, 'General Course on Public International Law', 106 HR, 1962, p. 154. See also Mugerwa, 'Subjects', pp. 266–90.

²³ 92 ILR, pp. 206, 208. ²⁴ DUSPIL, 1976, pp. 19–20.

²⁵ 102 HC Deb., col. 977, Written Answer, 23 October 1986. See also 169 HC Deb., cols. 449–50, Written Answer, 19 March 1990. As to French practice, see e.g. Journal Officiel, Débats Parl., AN, 1988, p. 2324.

²⁶ See above, chapter 6, p. 273. ²⁷ See above, chapter 6, p. 275.

- acceptance of all relevant commitments with regard to disarmament and nuclear non-proliferation as well as to security and regional stability;
- commitment to settle by agreement, including where appropriate by recourse to arbitration, all questions concerning state succession and regional disputes.²⁸

On the same day that the Guidelines were adopted, the European Community also adopted a Declaration on Yugoslavia,²⁹ in which the Community and its member states agreed to recognise the Yugoslav republics fulfilling certain conditions. These were that such republics wished to be recognised as independent; that the commitments in the Guidelines were accepted; that provisions laid down in a draft convention under consideration by the Conference on Yugoslavia were accepted, particularly those dealing with human rights and the rights of national or ethnic groups; and that support would be given to the efforts of the Secretary-General of the UN and the Security Council and the Conference on Yugoslavia. The Community and its member states also required that the particular Yugoslav republic seeking recognition would commit itself prior to recognition to adopting constitutional and political guarantees ensuring that it had no territorial claims towards a neighbouring Community state. The United States took a rather less robust position, but still noted the relevance of commitments and assurances given by the new states of Eastern Europe and the former USSR with regard to nuclear safety, democracy and free markets within the process of both recognition and the establishment of diplomatic relations.³⁰

Following a period of UN administration authorised by Security Council resolution 1244 (1999),³¹ the Yugoslav (later Serbian) province of Kosovo declared independence on 17 February 2008. This was preceded by the Comprehensive Proposal for the Kosovo Status Settlement formulated by Martti Ahtisaari which had in March 2007 called for independence for Kosovo with international supervision.³² This was rejected by Serbia. The international community was divided as to the question of recognition of Kosovo's independence. It was recognised swiftly by the US, the UK, Germany and the majority of EU states, Japan and others. Russia and Serbia, on the other hand, made it clear that they opposed recognition, as did Spain and Greece. Accordingly, in the current circumstances, while many countries recognise Kosovo, many do not and entry into the UN is not possible until, for example, Russia is prepared to lift its opposition in view of its veto power.³³ For those states that have recognised Kosovo, the latter will be entitled to ²⁸ UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 559–60. On 31 December 1991, the European Community issued a statement noting that Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Moldova, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan had given assurances that the requirements in the Guidelines would be fulfilled. Accordingly, the member states of the Community declared that they were willing to proceed with the recognition of these states, ibid., p. 561. On 15 January 1992, a statement was issued noting that Kyrgyzstan and Tadzhikistan had accepted the requirements in the Guidelines and that they too would be recognised, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 637.

²⁹ UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 560–1.

³⁰ See the announcement by President Bush on 25 December 1991, 2(4 & 5) Foreign Policy Bulletin, 1992, p. 12, as cited in Henkin et al., International Law, pp. 252–3. See also, as to the importance of democratic considerations, S. D. Murphy, 'Democratic Legitimacy and the Recognition of States and Governments', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 545.

³¹ See above, chapter 5, p. 182. ³² See S/2007/168 and S/2007/168/Add.1.

³³ One month after the declaration of independence, twenty-eight states had recognised the independence of Kosovo, including sixteen of the twenty-seven EU member states and six of the UN Security Council's fifteen members: see 'Kosovo's First Month', International Crisis Group Europe Briefing No. 47, 18 March 2008, p. 3. As of the time of writing Kosovo is recognised by 113 states, see www.mfa-ks.net/?page=2,224 and see above, chapter 5, p. 185.

all the privileges and responsibilities of statehood in the international community and within the legal systems of the recognising states. However, for those that have not, the state and diplomatic agents of Kosovo will not be entitled to, for example, diplomatic and state immunities, while the international status of Kosovo will be controversial and disputed.³⁴ While recognition may cure difficulties in complying with the criteria of statehood, a situation where the international community is divided upon recognition will, especially in the absence of UN membership, ensure the continuation of uncertainty.

There are many different ways in which recognition can occur and it may apply in more than one kind of situation. It is not a single, constant idea but a category comprising a number of factors. There are indeed different entities which may be recognised, ranging from new states, to new governments, belligerent rights possessed by a particular group and territorial changes. Not only are there various objects of the process of recognition, but recognition may itself be de facto or de jure and it may arise in a variety of manners.

Recognition is an active process and should be distinguished from cognition, or the mere possession of knowledge, for example, that the entity involved complies with the basic international legal stipulations as to statehood. Recognition implies both cognition of the necessary facts and an intention that, so far as the acting state is concerned, it is willing that the legal consequences attendant upon recognition should operate. For example, the rules as to diplomatic and sovereign immunities should apply as far as the envoys of the entity to be recognised are concerned. It is not enough for the recognising state simply to be aware of the facts, it must desire the coming into effect of the legal and political results of recognition. This is inevitable by virtue of the discretionary nature of the act of recognition, and is illustrated in practice by the lapse in time that often takes place between the events establishing a new state or government and the actual recognition by other states. Once given, courts have generally regarded recognition as retroactive so that the statehood of the entity recognised is accepted as of the date of statehood (which is a question of fact), not from the date of recognition.³⁵

RECOGNITION OF GOVERNMENTS³⁶

The recognition of a new government is quite different from the recognition of a new state. As far as statehood is concerned, the factual situation will be examined in terms of the accepted criteria.³⁷ Different considerations apply where it is the government which changes. Recognition will only really be relevant where the change in government is unconstitutional. In addition, recognition of governments as a category tends to minimise the fact that the precise capacity or status of the entity so recognised may be characterised in different ways. Recognition may be of a *de facto*³⁸ government or administration or of a government or administration in effective control of only part of the territory of the state in question. Recognition constitutes acceptance of a particular situation by the recognising state both in terms of the relevant factual criteria and in terms of the consequential legal repercussions, so that, for example, recognition of an entity as the government of a state implies not only that this government is deemed to have satisfied the required conditions, but also that the recognising state will deal with the government as the governing authority of the state and accept the usual legal consequences of such status in terms of privileges and immunities within the domestic legal order.

³⁴ Note, however, the EU mediated normalisation agreements signed by Serbia and Kosovo particularly with regard to ethnic Serbs in Kosovo: see e.g. statements by EU High Representative/Vice-President Mogherini made on 25 August 2015 and 27 January 2016, www.eeas.europa.eu/dialogue-pristina-belgrade/index_en.htm.

³⁵ See e.g. Chen, Recognition, pp. 172 ff. See also the views of the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission as to the date of succession of the former Yugoslav republics, Opinion No. 11, 96 ILR, p. 719. Note that retroactivity of recognition is regarded by Oppenheim as a rule of convenience rather than of principle: see Oppenheim's International Law, p. 161.

³⁶ See e.g. I. Brownlie, 'Recognition in Theory and Practice', 53 BYIL, 1982, p. 197; C. Warbrick, 'The New British Policy on Recognition of Governments', 30 ICLQ, 1981, p. 568; M. J. Peterson, 'Recognition of Governments Should Not Be Abolished', 77 AJIL, 1983, p. 31; and Peterson, Recognition of Governments: Legal Doctrine and State Practice, London, 1997; N. Ando, 'The Recognition of Governments Reconsidered', 28 Japanese Annual of International Law, 1985, p. 29; C. Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition of the Doctrine of Recognition: A Rose by Another Name', Public Law, 1981, p. 248; S. Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments: An Analysis of the New British Policy and Practice', 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 231 and Talmon, Recognition of Governments in International Law, Oxford, 1998; B. R. Roth, Governmental Illegitimacy in International Law, Oxford, 1999; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 150; Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 415; and Galloway, Recognising Foreign Governments.

Political considerations have usually played a large role in the decision whether or not to grant recognition. However, certain criteria have emerged to cover recognition of illegal changes in government. Such criteria amounted to an acceptance of the realities of the transfer of power and suggested that once a new government effectively controlled the country and that this seemed likely to continue, recognition should not be withheld. The United Kingdom on a number of occasions adopted this approach.³⁹ It was declared by the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in 1970 that the test employed was whether or not the new government enjoyed, 'with a reasonable prospect of permanence, the obedience of the mass of the population . . . effective control of much of the greater part of the territory of the state concerned'.⁴⁰

It is this attitude which prompted such policies as the recognition of the communist government of China and the Russian-installed government of Hungary in 1956 after the failure of the uprising. However, this general approach cannot be regarded as an absolute principle in view of the British refusal over many years to recognise as states North Vietnam, North Korea and the German Democratic Republic.⁴¹ The effective control of a new government over the territory of the state is thus an important guideline to the problem of whether to extend recognition or not, providing such control appears well established and likely to continue. But it was no more than that and in many cases appeared to yield to political considerations.

The Tinoco arbitration⁴² constitutes an interesting example of the 'effective control' concept. In 1919, the government of Tinoco in Costa Rica was overthrown and the new authorities repudiated certain obligations entered into by Tinoco with regard to British nationals. Chief Justice Taft, the sole arbitrator, referred to the problems of recognition or non-recognition as relating to the Tinoco administration. He decided that since the administration was in effective control of the country, it was the valid government irrespective of the fact that a number of states, including the United Kingdom, had not recognised it. This was so despite his opinion that:

³⁷ See above, chapter 5, p. 157. ³⁸ See further below, p. 341.

³⁹ See the Morrison statement, 485 HC Deb., cols. 2410–11, 21 March 1951.

⁴⁰ 799 HC Deb., col. 23, 6 April 1970. See also Foreign Office statements, 204 HL Deb., col. 755, 4 July 1957 and 742 HC Deb., cols. 6–7, Written Answer, 27 February 1967.

⁴¹ See e.g. D. Greig, 'The Carl-Zeiss Case and the Position of an Unrecognised Government in English Law', 83 LQR, 1967, pp. 96, 128–30 and Re Al-Fin Corporation's Patent [1970] Ch. 160; 52 ILR, p. 68.

⁴² 1 RIAA, p. 369 (1923); 2 AD, p. 34.

the non-recognition by other nations of a government claiming to be a national personality, is usually appropriate evidence that it has not attained the independence and control entitling it by international law to be classed as such.⁴³

Where recognition has been refused because of the illegitimacy or irregularity of origin of the government in question, rather than because of the lack of effectiveness of its control in the country, such non-recognition loses some of its evidential weight. In other words, where the degree of authority asserted by the new administration is uncertain, recognition by other states will be a vital factor. But where the new government is firmly established, non-recognition will not affect the legal character of the new government. The doctrine of effective control is an indication of the importance of the factual nature of any situation. But in those cases where recognition is refused upon the basis of the improper origins of the new government, it will have less of an impact than if recognition is refused because of the absence of effective control. Taft's view of the nature of recognition is an interesting amalgam of the declaratory and constitutive theories, in that recognition can become constitutive where the factual conditions (i.e. the presence or absence of effective control) are in dispute, but otherwise is purely declaratory or evidential.

A change in government, however accomplished, does not affect the identity of the state itself. The state does not cease to be an international legal person because its government is overthrown. That is not at issue. The recognition or non-recognition of a new administration is irrelevant to the legal character of the country. Accordingly one can see that two separate recognitions are involved and they must not be confused. Recognition of a state will affect its legal personality, whether by creating or acknowledging it, while recognition of a government affects the status of the administrative authority, not the state.

It is possible, however, for recognition of state and government to occur together in certain circumstances. This can take place upon the creation of a new state. Israel, to take one example, was recognised by the United States and the United Kingdom by the expedient of having its government recognised de facto.⁴⁴ Recognition of the government implies recognition of the state, but it does not work the other way.

It should be noted that recognition of a government has no relevance to the establishment of new persons in international law. Where it is significant is in the realm of diplomatic relations. If a government is unrecognised, there is no exchange of diplomatic envoys and thus problems can arise as to the enforcement of international rights and obligations.

Although the effective control doctrine is probably accepted as the most reliable guide to recognition of governments, there have been other theories put forward, the most prominent amongst them being the Tobar doctrine or the so-called doctrine of legitimacy. This suggested that governments which came into power by extra-constitutional means should not be recognised, at least until the change had been accepted by the people.⁴⁵ This policy was applied particularly by the United States in relation to Central America and was designed to protect stability in that delicate area adjacent to the Panama Canal. Logically, of course, the concept amounts to the promotion of non-recognition in all revolutionary situations and it is, and was, difficult to reconcile with reality and political consideration. In American eyes it became transmuted into the Wilson policy of democratic legitimacy. Where the revolution was supported by the people, it would be recognised. Where it was not, there would be no grant of recognition. It was elaborated with respect to the Soviet Union until 1933, but gradually declined until it can now be properly accepted merely as a political qualification for recognition to be considered by the recognising state.⁴⁶

⁴³ 1 RIAA, p. 380; 2 AD, p. 37. ⁴⁴ See e.g. Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 168.

⁴⁵ See e.g. Mugerwa, 'Subjects', p. 271, and 2 AJIL, 1908, Supp., p. 229.

A doctrine advocating the exact opposite, the automatic recognition of governments in all circumstances, was put forward by Estrada, the Mexican Secretary of Foreign Relations.⁴⁷ But this suffers from the same disadvantage as the legitimacy doctrine. It attempts to lay down a clear test for recognition in all instances excluding political considerations and exigencies of state and is thus unrealistic, particularly where there are competing governments.⁴⁸ It has also been criticised as minimising the distinction between recognition and maintenance of diplomatic relations.⁴⁹

The problem, of course, was that recognition of a new government that has come to power in a non-constitutional fashion was taken to imply approval. Allied with the other factors sometimes taken into account in such recognition situations,⁵⁰ an unnecessarily complicated process had resulted. Accordingly, in 1977 the United States declared that:

US practice has been to de-emphasise and avoid the use of recognition in cases of changes of governments and to concern ourselves with the question of whether we wish to have diplomatic relations with the new governments . . . The Administration's policy is that establishment of relations does not involve approval or disapproval but merely demonstrates a willingness on our part to conduct our affairs with other governments directly.⁵¹

In 1980, the UK government announced that it would no longer accord recognition to governments as distinct from states.⁵² This was stated to be primarily due to the perception that recognition meant approval, a perception that was often embarrassing, for example, in the case of regimes violating human rights. There were, therefore, practical advantages in not ⁴⁶ See e.g. G. H. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, DC, 1940, vol. I, pp. 181 ff. See also 17 AJIL, 1923, Supp., p. 118; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 137–9; and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 69.

⁴⁷ See e.g. 25 AJIL, 1931, Supp., p. 203; P. Jessup, 'The Estrada Doctrine', 25 AJIL, 1931, p. 719; and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, p. 85. See also Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', p. 263; Chen, Recognition, p. 116; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 134–5; and C. Rousseau, Droit International Public, Paris, 1977, vol. III, p. 555.

⁴⁸ See e.g. Peterson, 'Recognition', p. 42, and C. Rousseau, 'Chroniques des Faits Internationaux', 93 RGDIP, 1989, p. 923.

⁴⁹ Warbrick, 'New British Policy', p. 584.

⁵⁰ For example, the democratic requirement noted by President Wilson, President Rutherford Hayes' popular support condition and Secretary of State Seward's criterion of ability to honour international obligations: see statement by US Department of State, DUSPIL, 1977, pp. 19, 20. See also Third US Restatement, para. 203, note 1. The Organization of American States adopted a resolution in 1965 recommending that states contemplating recognition of a new government should take into account whether that government proposes to hold elections within a reasonable time: 5 ILM, 1966, p. 155.

⁵¹ DUSPIL, 1977, p. 20. See also DUSPIL, 1981–8, vol. I, 1993, p. 295. Note that Deputy Secretary of State Christopher stated in 1977 that unscheduled changes of government were not uncommon in this day and age and that 'withholding diplomatic relations from these regimes after they have obtained effective control penalises us', DUSPIL, 1977, p. 18. See also, as regards Afghanistan and the continuation of diplomatic relations, 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 879. Cf. the special circumstances of the recognition of the government of China, DUSPIL, 1978, pp. 71–3 and ibid., 1979, pp. 142 ff. But cf. Petersen, 'Recognition'.

⁵² See 408 HL Deb., cols. 1121–2, 28 April 1980. See also Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition', p. 249.

according recognition as such to governments. This change to a policy of not formally recognising governments had in fact taken place in certain civil law countries rather earlier. Belgium⁵³ and France⁵⁴ appear, for example, to have adopted this approach in 1965. By the late 1980s, this approach was also adopted by both Australia⁵⁵ and Canada,⁵⁶ and indeed by other countries.⁵⁷

The change, however, did not remove all problems, but rather shifted the focus from formal recognition to informal ‘dealings’. The UK announced that it would continue to decide the nature of dealings with unconstitutional regimes:

in the light of [an] assessment of whether they are able of themselves to exercise effective control of the territory of the state concerned, and seem likely to continue to do so.⁵⁸

The change, therefore, is that recognition of governments is abolished but that the criterion for dealing with such regimes is essentially the same as the former test for the recognition of governments.⁵⁹ In that context, regard should also be had to the phrase ‘of themselves’.⁶⁰

However, this change of policy should not be taken as meaning that no significant comments as to a change of government would be made in controversial circumstances and it did not, apparently, preclude the exceptional recognition of governments as such. For example, following the elections in the Côte d’Ivoire in November 2010 and the acceptance by ECOWAS and the African Union of the election of Mr Ouattara (and the hostility of the sitting president), the UK recognised Mr Ouattara as the democratically elected president of the country.⁶¹ Further, the UK decided on 27 July 2011 to recognise and deal with the Libyan National Transitional Council, which was engaged in an armed conflict with the Gaddafi government in that country, ‘as the sole governmental authority in Libya’.⁶² This recognition of the Council as the government of Libya was affirmed in an executive certificate dated 24 August 2011 in British Arab Commercial Bank v. The National Transitional Council of the State of Libya.⁶³

⁵³ See 11 Revue Belge de Droit International, 1973, p. 351.

⁵⁴ See 69 RGDIP, 1965, p. 1089. See also 83 RGDIP, 1979, p. 808; G. Charpentier, ‘Pratique Française du Droit International’, AFDI, 1981, p. 911; and Rousseau, Droit International Public, p. 555.

⁵⁵ See J. G. Starke, ‘The New Australian Policy of Recognition of Foreign Governments’, 62 Australian Law Journal, 1988, p. 390.

⁵⁶ See 27 Canadian YIL, 1989, p. 387. See also Re Chateau-Gai Wines Ltd and Attorney-General for Canada [1970] Ex CR 366; 55 ILR, p. 38.

⁵⁷ See e.g. the Netherlands, 22 Netherlands YIL, 1991, p. 237; and New Zealand, Attorney-General for Fiji v. Robt Jones House Ltd [1989] 2 NZLR 69 at 70–1; 80 ILR, p. 1. The European Union has stated that ‘it does not recognise governments, and even less political personalities, but states, according to the most common international practice’, Bulletin of the European Union, 1999–7/8, p. 60 and UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 424.

⁵⁸ 408 HL Deb., cols. 1121–2, 28 April 1980. This has been reaffirmed on a number of occasions: see e.g. UKMIL, 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 477 and UKMIL, 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 577.

⁵⁹ See Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa [1987] 1 QB 599; 75 ILR, p. 675.

⁶⁰ See, as regards the different approaches adopted to the Cambodian and Ugandan experiences, Symmons, ‘United Kingdom Abolition’, p. 250, and UKMIL, 50 BYIL, 1979, p. 296. See also above, chapter 4, p. 153. See, as to recognition of belligerency and insurgency, e.g. O’Connell, International Law, pp. 148–53; Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 270; and Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 161 ff.

⁶¹ UKMIL, 82 BYIL, 2011, p. 737–8. See also Security Council resolution 1962 (2010).

⁶² UKMIL, 82 BYIL, 2011, p. 742. This followed the meeting on 15 July 2011 of the Libya Contact Group underlining that the parties would deal only with the National Transitional Council as the ‘legitimate governing authority’ in Libya: www.mfa.gov.tr/fourth-meeting-of-the-libya-contact-group-chair_s-statement_-15-july-2011_-istanbul.en.mfa.

⁶³ [2011] EWHC 2274 (Comm), para. 23.

De Facto and de Jure Recognition⁶⁴

In addition to the fact that there are different entities to be recognised, recognition itself may take different forms. It may be either de facto or de jure. A more correct way of putting this might be to say that a government (or other entity or situation) may be recognised de facto or de jure.

Recognition de facto implies that there is some doubt as to the long-term viability of the government in question. Recognition de jure usually follows where the recognising state accepts that the effective control displayed by the government is permanent and firmly rooted and that there are no legal reasons detracting from this, such as constitutional subservience to a foreign power. De facto recognition involves a hesitant assessment of the situation, an attitude of wait and see, to be succeeded by de jure recognition when the doubts are sufficiently overcome to extend formal acceptance. To take one instance, the United Kingdom recognised the Soviet government de facto in 1921 and de jure in 1924.⁶⁵ A slightly different approach is adopted in cases of civil war where the distinction between de jure and de facto recognition is sometimes used to illustrate the variance between legal and factual sovereignty. For example, during the 1936–9 Spanish Civil War, the United Kingdom, while recognising the Republican government as the de jure government, extended de facto recognition to the forces under General Franco as they gradually took over the country. Similarly, the government of the Italian conquering forces in Ethiopia was recognised de facto by the UK in 1936, and de jure two years later.⁶⁶

By this method a recognising state could act in accordance with political reality and its own interests while reserving judgment on the permanence of the change in government or its desirability or legality. It is able to safeguard the affairs of its citizens and institutions by this, because certain legal consequences will flow in municipal law from the recognition.⁶⁷

There are in reality few meaningful distinctions between a de facto and a de jure recognition, although only a government recognised de jure may enter a claim to property located in the recognising state.⁶⁸ Additionally, it is generally accepted that de facto recognition does not of itself include the exchange of diplomatic relations.

PREMATURE RECOGNITION⁶⁹

There is often a difficult and unclear dividing line between the acceptable recognition of a new state, particularly one that has emerged or is emerging as a result of secession, and intervention in the domestic affairs of another state by way of premature or precipitate recognition, such as, for example, the view taken by the Nigerian federal government with ⁶⁴ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 154.

⁶⁵ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, p. 161. See also the Morrison statement, above, note 39.

⁶⁶ See below, pp. 351 and 352. ⁶⁷ See below, p. 349.

⁶⁸ See e.g. Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2) [1939] 1 Ch. 182; 9 AD, p. 94.

⁶⁹ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 143 ff.

respect to the recognition of 'Biafra' by five states.⁷⁰ In each case, the state seeking to recognise will need to consider carefully the factual situation and the degree to which the criteria of statehood (or other relevant criteria with regard to other types of entity with regard to which recognition is sought) have been fulfilled. It is therefore a process founded upon a perception of fact. In the case of Croatia, it could be argued that the recognition of that state by the European Community and its member states (together with Austria and Switzerland) on 15 January 1992 was premature.⁷¹ Croatia at that time, and for several years thereafter, did not effectively control some one-third of its territory. In addition, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission had taken the view in Opinion No. 5 on 11 January 1992 that Croatia did not meet fully the conditions for recognition laid down in the European Community Guidelines of 16 December 1991,⁷² since the Constitutional Act adopted by Croatia did not fully incorporate the required guarantees relating to human rights and minority rights.⁷³ It could also be argued that the recognition of Bosnia-Herzegovina on 6 April 1992 by the European Community and member states and on 7 April 1992 by the USA was premature, particularly since the government of that state effectively controlled less than one-half of its territory, a situation that continued until the Dayton Peace Agreement of November 1995.⁷⁴ On the other hand, it could be argued that in the special circumstances of Former Yugoslavia, the international community (particularly by means of membership of the UN which is restricted to states) was prepared to accept a loosening of the traditional criteria of statehood, so that essentially international recognition compensated for lack of effectivity. A clear example of premature recognition is that of the Georgian regions of South Ossetia and Abkhazia, which have established separate de facto governments with Russian support.⁷⁵ Russia and a very few states have recognised them as independent states, but in the light of effective Russian control, the maintenance and international acceptance of Georgia's sovereignty entitlement and the paucity of international recognition, any such recognition can only be regarded at best as premature.⁷⁶

Recognition may also be overdue, in the sense that it occurs long after it is clear as a matter of fact that the criteria of statehood have been satisfied, but in such cases, different ⁷⁰ See e.g. J. Stremlau, The International Politics of the Nigerian Civil War, 1967–70, Princeton, 1977, pp. 127–9, and D. Ijalaye, 'Was "Biafra" at Any Time a State in International Law?', 65 AJIL, 1971, p. 51. See also Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 7–8.

⁷¹ See e.g. R. Müllerson, International Law, Rights and Politics, London, 1994, p. 130, and R. Rich, 'Recognition of States: The Collapse of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union', 4 EJIL, 1993, p. 36.

⁷² See above, p. 163.

⁷³ 92 ILR, pp. 179, 181. Note that the President of Croatia on 15 January 1992 announced that Croatia would abide by the necessary conditions and on 8 May 1992 its Constitution was amended. The amended Constitution was considered by the Arbitration Commission on 4 July 1992, which concluded that the requirements of general international law with regard to the protection of minorities had been satisfied, ibid., p. 209. Note, however, the critical views of the UN Human Rights Committee with regard to the distinctions made in the Croatian Constitution between ethnic Croats and other citizens: see CCPR/C/79/Add.15, p. 3. Croatia became a member of the UN on 22 May 1992. See also M. Weller, 'The International Response to the Dissolution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia', 86 AJIL, 1992, p. 569.

⁷⁴ See e.g. Weller, 'International Response'. Cf. the views of the UK Minister of State at the Foreign Office, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 645. Note that Bosnia became a member of the UN on 22 May 1992.

⁷⁵ See above, chapter 5, p. 189.

⁷⁶ Similar comments would apply to the secession of Crimea and its subsequent annexation by Russia: see chapter 9, p. 389. See also with regard to Palestine, above, chapter 5, p. 186.

considerations apply since recognition is not compulsory and remains a political decision by states.⁷⁷

IMPLIED RECOGNITION⁷⁸

Recognition itself need not be express, that is in the form of an open, unambiguous and formal communication, but may be implied in certain circumstances.⁷⁹ This is due to the fact that recognition is founded upon the will and intent of the state that is extending the recognition. Accordingly, there are conditions in which it might be possible to declare that in acting in a certain manner, one state has by implication recognised another state or government. Because this facility of indirect or implied recognition is available, states may make an express declaration to the effect that a particular action involving another party is by no means to be interpreted as comprehending any recognition. This attitude was maintained by Arab countries with regard to Israel, and in certain other cases.⁸⁰ It automatically excludes any possibility of implied recognition but does suggest that without a definite and clear waiver, the result of some international actions may be recognition of a hitherto unrecognised entity in certain circumstances.

The point can best be explained by mentioning the kind of conditions which may give rise to the possibility of a recognition where no express or formal statement has been made. A message of congratulations to a new state upon attaining sovereignty will imply recognition of that state, as will the formal establishment of diplomatic relations,⁸¹ but the maintenance of informal and unofficial contacts (such as those between the United States and Communist China during the 1960s and early 1970s in Warsaw) will not.⁸² The issuing of a consular exequatur, the accepted authorisation permitting the performance of consular functions, to a representative of an unrecognised state will usually amount to a recognition of that state, though not in all cases.⁸³ A British Consul has operated in Taiwan, but the UK does not recognise the Taiwan government.⁸⁴ It is possible that the conclusion of a bilateral treaty

⁷⁷ See e.g. with regard to the delays in recognising Macedonia, Henkin et al., International Law, p. 253. Israel, of course, remained unrecognised by its Arab neighbours until long after its establishment in 1948. It was recognised in 1979 by Egypt and in 1995 by Jordan.

⁷⁸ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 169; Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 369–408; and Chen, Recognition, pp. 201–16. See also Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', pp. 255 ff., and M. Lachs, 'Recognition and Modern Methods of International Co-operation', 35 BYIL, 1959, p. 252.

⁷⁹ Note that article 7 of the Montevideo Convention on Rights and Duties of States, 1933 provides that 'the recognition of a state may be express or tacit. The latter results from any act which implies the intention of recognising the new state.' See also R. Higgins, The Development of International Law by the Political Organs of the United Nations, Oxford, 1963, pp. 140 ff.

⁸⁰ See e.g. UK and North Vietnam, Cmd 9763, p. 3, note 1, and Israel and Arab countries, International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965: see Human Rights International Instruments, UN, ST/HR/4/rev.4, 1982. Note that Egypt withdrew its declarations regarding non-recognition of Israel with regard to this Convention on 18 January 1980, ibid., p. 86.

⁸¹ See O'Connell, International Law, pp. 154–5. Note that the UK stated that in the case of Namibia 'there was no formal recognition of statehood, but it was implicit in the establishment of diplomatic relations in March 1990', UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 642. Instructing an ambassador to make suitable, friendly contact with the new administration in question might also suffice: see UKMIL, 50 BYIL, 1979, p. 294.

⁸² See e.g. Pan American World Airways Inc. v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co. 13 ILM, 1974, pp. 1376, 1397.

⁸³ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 171, note 9.

⁸⁴ Discussions with an unrecognised entity conducted by consular officers will not of itself imply recognition: see e.g. H. de Smith, Great Britain and the Law of Nations, London, 1932, vol. I, p. 79, and Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [1953] AC 70, 88–9. The establishment of an office in the UK, for example, of an unrecognised between the recognising and unrecognised state, as distinct from a temporary agreement, might imply recognition, but the matter is open to doubt since there are a number of such agreements between parties not recognising each other. One would have to study the circumstances of the particular case to clarify the issue.⁸⁵ The making of claims by a state against an entity will not necessarily imply recognition.⁸⁶

Recognition is not normally to be inferred from the fact that both states have taken part in negotiations and signed a multilateral treaty,⁸⁷ for example the United Nations Charter. Practice shows that many of the member states or their governments are not recognised by other member states.⁸⁸ Although Israel and many Arab countries are UN members, this did not affect Arab non-recognition of the Israeli state.⁸⁹ However, where the state concerned has voted in favour of membership in the UN of the entity in question, it is a natural inference that recognition has occurred. The UK, for example, regarded its vote in favour of UN membership for the former Yugoslav republic of Macedonia as amounting to recognition of that entity as a state.⁹⁰ Indeed, irrespective of recognition by individual states, there is no doubt that membership of the UN is powerful evidence of statehood since being a state is a necessary precondition to UN membership by virtue of article 4 of the UN Charter.⁹¹

In the case of common participation in an international conference, similar considerations apply, although the element of doubt has often stimulated non-recognising states to declare expressly that their presence and joint signature on any agreement issuing forth from the meeting is in no way to be understood as implying recognition. Such has been the case particularly with the Arab states over the years with regard to Israel.

State practice has restricted the possible scope of operation of this concept of implied recognition to a few instances only and all the relevant surrounding circumstances will have to be carefully evaluated before one can deduce from conduct the intention to extend recognition. States like to retain their control of such an important political instrument as recognition and are usually not keen to allow this to be inferred from the way they behave. They prefer recognition to be, in general, a formal act accorded after due thought.

entity is not as such prohibited nor does it constitute recognition: see e.g. with regard to the PLO, 483 HL Deb., cols. 1248–52, 27 January 1987 and UKMIL, 58 BYIL, 1987, p. 531. Note that under section 1 of the Diplomatic and Consular Premises Act 1987, the permission of the Foreign Secretary is required if the premises in question are to be regarded as diplomatic or consular.

⁸⁵ See e.g. Republic of China v. Merchants' Fire Assurance Corporation of New York 30 F.2d 278 (1929); 5 AD, p. 42; and Clerget v. Banque Commerciale pour l'Europe du Nord 52 ILR, p. 310. See, with regard to the special position as between the German Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic, Re Treaty on the Basis of Relations Between the Federal Republic of Germany and the German Democratic Republic 78 ILR, p. 150. See also Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 567 ff.

⁸⁶ See e.g. with regard to Formosa/Taiwan, 6 ICLQ, 1957, p. 507 and with regard to Turkish-occupied northern Cyprus, 957 HC Deb., col. 247, Written Answer, 8 November 1978.

⁸⁷ See e.g. UKMIL, 49 BYIL, 1978, p. 339 and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 563 ff. See also Civil Aeronautics Administration v. Singapore Airlines Ltd [2004] 1 SLR 570; [2004] SGCA 3, para. 35; 133 ILR, pp. 371, 383.

⁸⁸ See the Memorandum on the Legal Aspects of the Problem of Representation in the United Nations, S/1466, 1950 and 4 International Organisation, 1950, pp. 356, 359.

⁸⁹ See e.g. Q. Wright, 'Some Thoughts about Recognition', 44 AJIL, 1950, p. 548. See also, with regard to the Ukraine and Byelorussia, members of the UN prior to the demise of the USSR of which they were constituent republics, UKMIL, 55 BYIL, 1978, p. 339.

⁹⁰ See 223 HC Deb., col. 241, Written Answer, 22 April 1993 and UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 601. Note that a similar view was taken with regard to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, 62 BYIL, 1991, p. 559.

⁹¹ See the Conditions of Membership of the United Nations case, ICJ Reports, 1948, pp. 57 ff.; 15 AD, p. 333.

CONDITIONAL RECOGNITION

The political nature of recognition has been especially marked with reference to what has been termed conditional recognition. This refers to the practice of making the recognition subject to fulfilment of certain conditions, for example, the good treatment of religious minorities as occurred with regard to the independence of some Balkan countries in the late nineteenth century, or the granting of most-favoured-nation status to the recognised state. One well-known instance of this approach was the Litvinov Agreement of 1933 whereby the United States recognised the Soviet government upon the latter undertaking to avoid acts prejudicial to the internal security of the USA, and to come to a settlement of various financial claims.⁹²

However, breach of the particular condition does not invalidate the recognition. It may give rise to a breach of international law and political repercussions but the law appears not to accept the notion of a conditional recognition as such. The status of any conditions will depend upon agreements specifically made by the particular parties.⁹³ It is, however, important to distinguish conditional recognition in this sense from the evolution of criteria for recognition generally, although the two categories may in practice overlap.⁹⁴

COLLECTIVE RECOGNITION⁹⁵

The expediency of collective recognition has often been noted. This would amount to recognition by means of an international decision, whether by an international organisation or not. It would, of course, signify the importance of the international community in its collective assertion of control over membership and because of this it has not been warmly welcomed, nor can one foresee its general application for some time to come. The idea has been discussed particularly since the foundation of the League of Nations and was re-emphasised with the establishment of the United Nations. However, it rapidly became clear that member states reserved the right to extend recognition to their own executive authorities and did not wish to delegate it to any international institution. The most that could be said is that membership of the United Nations constitutes powerful evidence of statehood. But that, of course, is not binding upon other member states who are free to refuse to recognise any other member state or government of the UN.⁹⁶

WITHDRAWAL OF RECOGNITION⁹⁷

Recognition once given may in certain circumstances be withdrawn. This is more easily achieved with respect to de facto recognition, as that is by its nature a cautious and temporary assessment

⁹² See e.g. United States v. Pink 315 US 203, 229 (1942); Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 120 ff.; 10 AD, p. 48; and A. Kiss, Répertoire de la Pratique Française en Matière de Droit International Public, Paris, 1962–72, vol. III, pp. 40 ff.

⁹³ See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, chapter 19. See also the Treaty of Berlin, 1878 concerning Bulgaria, Montenegro, Serbia and Romania and the provisions dealing with freedom of religion, articles V, XXVII, XXXV and XLIII.

⁹⁴ See further above, p. 334, with regard to the approach of the European Community to the emergence of new states in Eastern Europe and out of the former USSR and Yugoslavia. This constituted a co-ordinated stand with regard to criteria for recognition by the Community and its member states rather than collective recognition as such.

⁹⁵ See e.g. Higgins, Development of International Law; Dugard, Recognition; Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 400; Chen, Recognition, p. 211; and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 177 ff.

⁹⁶ See further above, p. 330. ⁹⁷ See Lauterpacht, Recognition, p. 349.

of a particular situation. Where a de facto government loses the effective control it once exercised, the reason for recognition disappears and it may be revoked. It is in general a preliminary acceptance of political realities and may be withdrawn in accordance with a change in political factors.⁹⁸ De jure recognition, on the other hand, is intended to be more of a definitive step and is more difficult to withdraw.

Of course, where a government recognised de jure has been overthrown a new situation arises and the question of a new government will have to be faced, but in such instances withdrawal of recognition of the previous administration is assumed and does not have to be expressly stated, providing always that the former government is not still in existence and carrying on the fight in some way. Withdrawal of recognition of one government without recognising a successor is a possibility and indeed was the approach adopted by the UK and France, for example, with regard to Cambodia in 1979.⁹⁹ However, with the adoption of the new British policy on recognition with regard to governments,¹⁰⁰ the position is now that the UK government will neither recognise nor withdraw recognition of regimes.¹⁰¹

Withdrawal of recognition in other circumstances is not a very general occurrence but in exceptional conditions it remains a possibility. The United Kingdom recognised the Italian conquest of Ethiopia de facto in 1936 and de jure two years later. However, it withdrew recognition in 1940, with the intensification of fighting and the dispatch of military aid.¹⁰² Recognition of belligerency will naturally terminate with the defeat of either party, while the loss of one of the required criteria of statehood would affect recognition. It is to be noted that the 1979 recognition of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China entailed the withdrawal of recognition or 'derecognition' of the Republic of China (Taiwan). This was explained to mean that, 'so far as the formal foreign relations of the United States are concerned, a government does not exist in Taiwan any longer'.¹⁰³

Nevertheless, this was not to affect the application of the laws of the United States with respect to Taiwan in the context of US domestic law.¹⁰⁴ To some extent in this instance the usual consequences of non-recognition have not flowed, but this has taken place upon the background of a formal and deliberate act of policy.¹⁰⁵ It does show how complex the topic of recognition has become.

The usual method of expressing disapproval with the actions of a particular government is to break diplomatic relations. This will adequately demonstrate aversion as did, for example, the ⁹⁸ Withdrawal of de facto recognition does not always entail withdrawal of de jure recognition: see, with regard to Latvia, Re Feivel Pikelnys Estate, 32 BYIL, 1955–6, p. 288.

⁹⁹ See 975 HC Deb., col. 723, 6 December 1979, and C. Warbrick, 'Kampuchea: Representation and Recognition', 30 ICLQ, 1981, p. 234. See also AFDI, 1980, p. 888.

¹⁰⁰ See above, p. 339. ¹⁰¹ 424 HL Deb., col. 551, 15 October 1981.

¹⁰² See Azazh Kebedda v. Italian Government 9 AD, p. 93.

¹⁰³ US reply brief in the Court of Appeals in Goldwater v. Carter 444 US 996 (1979), quoted in DUSPIL, 1979, pp. 143–4.

¹⁰⁴ Taiwan Relations Act, Pub. L. 96–8 Stat. 22 USC 3301–3316, s. 4.

¹⁰⁵ Also of interest is the UK attitude to the 'republic of Somaliland'. This territory is part of Somalia but proclaimed independence in 1991. It is totally unrecognised by any state, but the UK maintains 'continuing contacts' with it and works 'very closely' with it: see 677 HL Deb., col. 418, 16 January 2006 and 683 HL Deb., col. 212, 14 June 2006. See also M. Schoiswohl, Status and (Human Rights) Obligations of Non-Recognized De Facto Regimes in International Law: The Case of 'Somaliland', Leiden, 2004. In 2012 a UK Foreign Office Minister noted that Somaliland was 'quasi-independent' and 'autonomous' but that any question of recognition was for the people of Somaliland and a matter on which the African Union would have to lead: HC 1318, 5 January 2012 and UKMIL, 83 BYIL, 2012, pp. 360–2.

rupture in diplomatic relations between the UK and the USSR in 1927, and between some Arab countries and the United States in 1967, without entailing the legal consequences and problems that a withdrawal of recognition would initiate. But one must not confuse the ending of diplomatic relations with a withdrawal of recognition.

Since recognition is ultimately a political issue, no matter how circumscribed or conditioned by the law, it logically follows that, should a state perceive any particular situation as justifying a withdrawal of recognition, it will take such action as it regards as according with its political interests.

NON-RECOGNITION¹⁰⁶

There has been developing since the 1930s a doctrine of non-recognition where, under certain conditions, a factual situation will not be recognised because of strong reservations as to the morality or legality of the actions that have been adopted in order to bring about the factual situation. It is a doctrine that has also been reinforced by the principle that legal rights cannot derive from an illegal situation (ex injuria jus non oritur).¹⁰⁷

This approach was particularly stimulated by the Japanese invasion of Manchuria in 1931. The US Secretary of State declared in 1932 that the illegal invasion would not be recognised as it was contrary to the 1928 Pact of Paris (the Kellogg–Briand Pact) which had outlawed war as an instrument of national policy. The doctrine of not recognising any situation, treaty or agreement brought about by non-legal means was named the Stimson doctrine after the American Secretary of State who put it forward. It was reinforced not long afterwards by a resolution of the Assembly of the League of Nations stressing that League members should not recognise any situation, treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the League's Covenant or the Pact of Paris.¹⁰⁸

However, state practice until the Second World War was not encouraging. The Italian conquest of the Empire of Ethiopia was recognised and the German takeover of Czechoslovakia accepted. The Soviet Union made a series of territorial acquisitions in 1940, ranging from areas of Finland to the Baltic States (of Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia) and Bessarabia. These were recognised de facto over the years by Western powers (though not by the United States).¹⁰⁹

The doctrine was examined anew after 1945. Article 2(4) of the UN Charter prohibits the threat or use of force inter alia against the territorial integrity of states, while the draft Declaration on the Rights and Duties of States, 1949, emphasised that territorial acquisitions by states were not to be recognised by other states where achieved by means of the threat or use of force or in any ¹⁰⁶ See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 416–20, and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 183 ff. See also R. Langer, Seizure of Territory, Princeton, 1947; Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 334; I. Brownlie, International Law and the Use of Force by States, Oxford, 1963, chapter 25; Dugard, Recognition, pp. 24 ff. and 81 ff.; and Crawford, Creation of States, pp. 120 ff. See also S. Talmon La Non Reconnaissance Collective des États Illégaux, Paris, 2007, and M. M. H. Dahir, Legal Implications on Non-Recognition of Somaliland: Possibilities and Barriers to Foreign Investment in Unrecognised De Facto State, Lambert, 2015.

¹⁰⁷ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 183–4, and the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 46–7; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 36–7.

¹⁰⁸ LNOJ, Sp. Supp. no. 101, p. 8. This principle was reiterated in a number of declarations subsequently: see e.g. 34 AJIL, 1940, Supp., p. 197. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 143–6.

¹⁰⁹ O'Connell, International Law, pp. 143–6.

other manner inconsistent with international law and order. The Declaration on Principles of International Law, 1970, also included a provision to the effect that no territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognised as legal,¹¹⁰ and Security Council resolution 242 (1967) on the solution to the Middle East conflict emphasised ‘the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war’.¹¹¹

Rhodesia unilaterally proclaimed its independence in November 1965 and in the years of its existence did not receive official recognition from any state at all, although it did maintain diplomatic relations with South Africa and Portugal prior to the revolution of 1974. The day following the Rhodesian declaration of independence, the Security Council passed a resolution calling upon all states not to accord it recognition and to refrain from assisting it.¹¹² The Council imposed selective mandatory economic sanctions on Rhodesia and these were later made comprehensive.¹¹³ Similar action was also taken with regard to the Bantustans, territories of South Africa declared by that state to be independent.¹¹⁴ The Security Council also adopted resolution 541 in 1983, which deplored the purported secession of part of Cyprus occupied by Turkey in 1974 and termed the proposed Turkish Cypriot state ‘legally invalid’.¹¹⁵ In 1990, the Security Council adopted resolution 662, which declared the Iraqi annexation of Kuwait ‘null and void’ and called on all states and institutions not to recognise the annexation.¹¹⁶ The principle of non-recognition of title to territory acquired through aggression in violation of international law was also reaffirmed in the Brcko Inter-Entity Boundary award with regard to aggression in Bosnia.¹¹⁷

The role of non-recognition as an instrument of sanction as well as a means of pressure and a method of protecting the wronged inhabitants of a territory was discussed more fully in the Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice in the Namibia case, 1971, dealing with South Africa’s presence in that territory. The Court held that since the continued South African occupancy was illegal, member states of the United Nations were obliged to recognise that illegality and the invalidity of South Africa’s acts concerning Namibia and were under a duty to refrain from any actions implying recognition of the legality of, or lending support or assistance to, the South African presence and administration.¹¹⁸

¹¹⁰ See also article 11 of the Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of States, 1933; article 17 of the Bogotá Charter of the OAS, 1948; and article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. Note also article 5(3) of the Consensus Definition of Aggression, 1974, adopted by the General Assembly in resolution 3314 (XXIX).

¹¹¹ See also Security Council resolutions 476 (1980) and 478 (1980) declaring purported changes in the status of Jerusalem by Israel to be null and void, and resolution 491 (1981) stating that Israel’s extension of its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the Golan Heights was without international legal effect.

¹¹² Security Council resolution 216 (1965). See also Security Council resolutions 217 (1965), 277 (1970) and 288 (1970).

¹¹³ See e.g. Security Council resolutions 221 (1961), 232 (1966) and 253 (1968). See also M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986, p. 160; R. Zacklin, The United Nations and Rhodesia, Oxford, 1974; and J. Nkala, The United Nations, International Law and the Rhodesian Crisis, Oxford, 1985.

¹¹⁴ See e.g. General Assembly resolution 31/6A and the Security Council statements of 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981; Shaw, Title to Territory, p. 149. See also J. Dugard, International Law, A South African Perspective, Kenwyn, 1994, chapter 5.

¹¹⁵ See above, chapter 5, p. 184. See also Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 60–1; 120 ILR, p. 10.

¹¹⁶ See below, chapter 21, p. 959. ¹¹⁷ 36 ILM, 1997, pp. 396, 422.

¹¹⁸ ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 54, 56; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 44, 46. Non-member states of the UN were similarly obliged, ibid. The non-recognition obligation did not extend, however, to certain acts of a humanitarian nature the effect of which could only be ignored to the detriment of the inhabitants of the territory: ibid., p. 56 and Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 90–8; 120 ILR, p. 10. See also above, chapter 5, p. 177.

THE LEGAL EFFECTS OF RECOGNITION

In this section some of the legal results that flow from the recognition or non-recognition of an entity, both in the international sphere and within the municipal law of particular states, will be noted. Although recognition may legitimately be regarded as a political tool, it is one that nevertheless entails important consequences in the legal field.

Internationally

In the majority of cases, it can be accepted that recognition of a state or government is a legal acknowledgement of a factual state of affairs. Nevertheless, it should not be assumed that non-recognition of, for example, a state will deprive that entity of rights and duties before international law, excepting, of course, those situations where it may be possible to say that recognition is constitutive of the legal entity.

In general, the political existence of a state is independent of recognition by other states, and thus an unrecognised state must be deemed subject to the rules of international law. It cannot consider itself free from restraints as to aggressive behaviour, nor can its territory be regarded as terra nullius. States which have signed international agreements are entitled to assume that states which they have not recognised but which have similarly signed the agreement are bound by that agreement. For example, the United Kingdom treated the German Democratic Republic as bound by its signature of the 1963 Nuclear Test Ban Treaty even when the state was not recognised by the UK.

Non-recognition, with its consequent absence of diplomatic relations, may affect the unrecognised state in asserting its rights or other states in asserting its duties under international law, but will not affect the existence of such rights and duties. The position is, however, different under municipal law.

Internally

Recognition is fundamentally a political act, so it is reserved to the executive branch of government. This means that the judiciary must as a general principle accept the discretion of the executive and give effect to its decisions. The courts cannot recognise a state or government. They can only accept and enforce the legal consequences which flow from the executive's political decision, although this situation has become more complex with the change in policy from express recognition of governments to acceptance of dealings with such entities.

To this extent, recognition is constitutive, because the act of recognition itself creates legal results within the domestic jurisdiction. In the United Kingdom and the United States particularly, the courts feel themselves obliged to accept the verdict of the executive branch of government as to whether a particular entity should be regarded as recognised or not. If the administration has recognised a state or government and so informs the judiciary by means of a certificate, the position of that state or government within the municipal structure is totally transformed.

It may sue in the domestic courts and be granted immunity from suit in certain instances. Its own legislative and executive acts will be given effect to in the courts of the recognising state and its own diplomatic representatives will be able to claim the various immunities accorded to the official envoys of a recognised state. In addition, it will be entitled to possession in the recognising state of property belonging to its predecessor. It is also important to draw a distinction between the actual grant of recognition by the executive and the discussion of the consequences in the domestic legal system by the domestic courts.

The UK¹¹⁹

The English courts have adopted the attitude over many years that an entity unrecognised by the Foreign Office would be treated before the courts as if it did not exist and accordingly it would not be able to claim immunity before the courts.¹²⁰ This meant in one case that ships of the unrecognised 'Provisional Government of Northern Russia' would not be protected by the courts from claims affecting them.¹²¹ Similarly, an unrecognised state or government is unable to appear before the courts as a plaintiff in an action. This particular principle prevented the revolutionary government of Berne in 1804 from taking action to restrain the Bank of England from dealing with funds belonging to the previous administration of the city.¹²²

The leading case in English law on the issue of effects of recognition of an entity within the domestic sphere is Luther v. Sagor.¹²³ This concerned the operations and produce of a timber factory in Russia owned by the plaintiffs, which had been nationalised in 1919 by the Soviet government. In 1920 the defendant company purchased a quantity of wood from the USSR and this was claimed in England by the plaintiffs as their property since it had come from what had been their factory. It was argued by them that the 1919 Soviet decree should be ignored before the English courts since the United Kingdom had not recognised the Soviet government. The lower court agreed with this contention and the matter then came to the Court of Appeal.¹²⁴

In the meantime the UK recognised the Soviet government de facto and the Foreign Office informed the Court of Appeal of this in writing. The result was that the higher court was bound to take note of the Soviet decree and accordingly the plaintiffs lost their case, since a court must give effect to the legislation of a recognised state or government. The Court also held that the fact that the Soviet government was recognised de facto and not de jure did not affect the issue. Another interesting point is that since the Foreign Office certificate included a statement that the former Provisional Government of Russia recognised by the UK had been dispersed during December 1917, the Court inferred the commencement of the Soviet government from that date.

The essence of the matter was that the Soviet government was now accepted as the sovereign government of the USSR as from December 1917. And since recognition once given is retroactive and relates back to the date that the authority of the government was accepted as being established, and not the date on which recognition is granted, the Soviet decree of 1919 was deemed to be a legitimate act of a recognised government. This was so even though at that date the Soviet government was not recognised by the United Kingdom.

¹¹⁹ See e.g. Talmon, 'Recognition of Governments', pp. 275 ff.; Greig, 'Carl-Zeiss Case'; and J. G. Merrills, 'Recognition and Construction', 20 ICLQ, 1971, p. 476.

¹²⁰ See e.g. Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edn, London, 1977, vol. XVIII, p. 735.

¹²¹ The Annette [1919] P. 105; 1 AD, p. 43. ¹²² The City of Berne v. The Bank of England (1804) 9 Ves. Jun. 347.

¹²³ [1921] 1 KB 456; 1 AD, p. 47. ¹²⁴ [1921] 3 KB 532; 1 AD, p. 49.

The purpose of the retroactivity provision¹²⁵ is to avoid possible influence in the internal affairs of the entity recognised, since otherwise legislation made prior to recognition might be rejected. However, this will depend always upon the terms of the executive certificate by which the state informs its courts of the recognition. Should the Foreign Office insist that the state or government in question is to be recognised as a sovereign state or government as of the date of the action, the courts would be bound by this.

As is the case with legislation, contracts made by an unrecognised government will not be enforced in English courts. Without the required action by the political authorities, an unrecognised entity does not exist as a legal person before the municipal courts. The case of Luther v. Sagor suggested that in general the legal consequences of a de facto recognition would be the same as a de jure one. This was emphasised in Haile Selassie v. Cable and Wireless Ltd (No. 2),¹²⁶ but regarded as restricted to acts in relation to persons or property in the territory which the de facto government has been recognised as effectively controlling.

In other words, a different situation would ensue with regard to persons or property situated outside the territory of the state or government. In the Haile Selassie case, the Emperor of Ethiopia was suing a British company for money owing to him under an agreement. The problem was that when the action was brought, the UK had recognised the Italian forces as the de facto authority in Ethiopia while Haile Selassie was still recognised as the de jure sovereign. The Court held that since the case concerned a debt recoverable in England and not the validity of acts with regard to persons or property in Ethiopia, the de jure authority, Emperor Haile Selassie, was entitled to the sum due from the company, and the de facto control of the Italians did not affect this.

However, before the defendant's appeal was heard, the United Kingdom extended de jure recognition to the Italian authorities in Ethiopia. The Court of Appeal accepted that this related back to, and was deemed to operate as from the date of, the de facto recognition. Since this had occurred prior to the case starting, it meant that the Italian government was now to be recognised as the de jure government of Ethiopia, before and during the time of the hearing of the action. Accordingly, Haile Selassie was divested of any right whatsoever to sue for the recovery of the money owing.

This problem of the relationship between a de facto government and a de jure government as far as English courts were concerned, manifested itself again during the Spanish Civil War. The case of the *Arantzazu Mendi*¹²⁷ concerned a private steamship registered in Bilbao in the Basque province of Spain. In June 1937, following the capture of that region by the forces of General Franco, the opposing Republican government issued a decree requisitioning all ships registered in Bilbao. Nine months later the Nationalist government of Franco also passed a decree taking control over all Bilbao vessels. In the meantime, the Arantzazu Mendi itself was in London when the Republican government issued a writ to obtain possession of the ship. The owners opposed this while accepting the Nationalists' requisition order.

It was an accepted rule of international law that a recognised state cannot be sued or otherwise brought before the courts of another state. Accordingly, the Nationalists argued that since their authority had been recognised de facto by the UK government over the areas they actually controlled, their decree was valid and could not be challenged in the English courts. Therefore, the action by the Republican government must be dismissed.

¹²⁵ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 161, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 728–45.

¹²⁶ [1939] 1 Ch. 182; 9 AD, p. 94. ¹²⁷ [1939] AC 256; 9 AD, p. 60.

The case came before the House of Lords, where it was decided that the Nationalist government, as the de facto authority of much of Spain including the region of Bilbao, was entitled to be regarded as a sovereign state and was able to benefit from the normal immunities which follow therefrom. Thus, the action by the Republican government failed. The House of Lords pointed out that it did not matter that the territory over which the de facto authority was exercising sovereign powers was from time to time increased or diminished.¹²⁸ This case marks the high-point in the attribution of characteristics to a de facto authority and can be criticised for its over-generous assessment of the status of such an entity.¹²⁹

The problems faced by the English court when the rights and obligations of a de jure government and a de facto government, claiming the same territory, appear to be in conflict have been briefly noted. Basically, the actions of a de facto authority with regard to people and property within this sphere of control will be recognised in an English court, but where property is situated and recoverable in England, the de jure sovereign will have precedence. A similarly complicated situation arises where the interests of two recognised de jure governments of the same state are involved, as one supersedes the other. Problems can arise concerning the issue of retroactivity, that is, how far the court will relate back actions of a de jure government, since recognition is normally retroactive to the moment of inception of the particular state or government.

The matter was discussed in the Gdynia Ameryka Linie v. Boguslawski case.¹³⁰ During the Second World War the Polish government-in-exile stationed in London was recognised by the UK as the de jure government of Poland. However, on 28 June 1945 the communist provisional government was established with effective control of the country and at midnight on 5 July the UK recognised that government as the de jure government of Poland. A couple of days prior to this recognition, the Polish government-in-exile made an offer to Polish seamen of compensation in the event of leaving the merchant navy service. The money was to be paid by the particular employers to seamen not wanting to work for the communist provisional government. In the Boguslawski case the employers refused to pay the compensation to seamen requesting it, and argued that the UK recognition de jure of the provisional government was retroactive to 28 June, this being the date that the government effectively took control of the country. If this was the case, then acts of the government-in-exile after 28 June ceased to be of effect and thus the offers of compensation could not be enforced in the English courts.

The House of Lords emphasised the general proposition that recognition operates retroactively. However, they modified the statement by declaring that the courts had to give effect not only to acts done by the new government after recognition, but also to acts done before the recognition 'in so far as those acts related to matters under its control at the time when the acts were done'.¹³¹ It was stated that while the recognition of the new government had certain retroactive effects, the recognition of the old government remained effective down to the date when it was in fact withdrawn. Problems might have arisen had the old government, before withdrawal of recognition, attempted to take action with respect to issues under the control of the new government. However, that was not involved in this case.

¹²⁸ See e.g. Lord Atkin: [1939] AC 256, 264–5. ¹²⁹ See e.g. Lauterpacht, Recognition, pp. 288–94.

¹³⁰ [1953] AC 11; 19 ILR, p. 72. ¹³¹ Lord Reid: [1953] AC 11, 44–5; 19 ILR, pp. 81, 83.

In other words, and in the circumstances of the case, the principle of retroactivity of recognition was regarded as restricted to matters within the effective control of the new government. Where something outside the effective control of the new government is involved, it would appear that the recognition does not operate retroactively and that prior to the actual date of recognition one would have to accept and put into effect the acts of the previous de jure government.

This could lead to many complicated situations, especially where a court is faced with conflicting courses of action, something which is not hard to envisage when one de jure government has been superseded by another. It could permit abuses of government such as where a government, knowing itself to be about to lose recognition, awards its supporters financial or other awards in decrees that may be enforced in English courts. What would happen if the new government issued contrary orders in an attempt to nullify the effect of the old government's decrees is something that was not examined in the Boguslawski case.

Another case which came before the courts in the same year was Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation,¹³² and it similarly failed to answer the question mentioned above. It involved the sale of aircraft belonging to the nationalist government of China, which had been flown to the British Crown Colony of Hong Kong. Such aircraft were sold to an American company after the communist government established effective control over the country but before it had been recognised by the UK. The Court accepted that the nationalist government had been entitled to the aircraft and pointed out that:

retroactivity of recognition operates to validate acts of a de facto Government which has subsequently become the new de jure Government, and not to invalidate acts of the previous de jure Government.¹³³

It is to be noted that the communist government did not attempt to nullify the sale to the American company. Had it done so, a new situation would have been created, but it is as yet uncertain whether that would have materially altered the legal result.

The general doctrine adhered to by the UK with regard to recognition (and now diplomatic dealings) is that it will be accorded upon the evidence of effective control. It is used to acknowledge factual situations and not as a method of exhibiting approval or otherwise. However, this is not so in all cases and there are a number of governments in effective control of their countries and unrecognised by the UK. One major example was the former German Democratic Republic. Since the prime consequence of non-recognition is that the English courts will not give effect to any laws of an unrecognised entity, problems are thus likely to arise in ordinary international political and commercial life.

The issue came before the courts in the Carl Zeiss Stiftung v. Rayner and Keeler Ltd (No. 2) case.¹³⁴ It concerned the Carl Zeiss foundation which was run by a special board, reconstituted in 1952 as the Council of Gera. The problem was that it was situated in the German Democratic Republic (GDR) and the establishment of the Council of Gera as the governing body of the Carl Zeiss foundation was effected by a reorganisation of local government in the GDR. When Carl Zeiss brought a claim before the English courts, the issue was at once raised as to whether, in view of the UK non-recognition of the GDR, the governing body of the foundation could be accepted by the courts. The Court of Appeal decided that since the Foreign Office certified that the UK recognised 'the State and Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics as de jure entitled to exercise governing authority in respect of that zone'¹³⁵ (i.e. the GDR, being the former Soviet zone of occupation), it was not possible to give effect to any rules or regulations laid down by the GDR. The House of Lords, however, extricated the English courts system from a rather difficult position by means of an elaborate fiction.

¹³² [1953] AC 70; 19 ILR, pp. 85, 93, 110. See also F. A. Mann, 'Recognition of Sovereignty', 16 MLR, 1953, p. 226.

¹³³ [1953] AC 70, 90; 19 ILR, pp. 110, 113. ¹³⁴ [1967] AC 853; 43 ILR, p. 42. See also Greig, 'Carl-Zeiss Case'.

It stated that as a Foreign Office certificate is binding on the courts as to the facts it contains, it logically followed that the courts must recognise the USSR as the de jure governing authority of East Germany, irrespective of the creation of the GDR. The courts were not entitled to enter into a political examination of the actual situation but were obliged to accept and give effect to the facts set out in the Foreign Office certificate. Thus, the Soviet Union was the de jure sovereign and the GDR government must be accepted as a subordinate and dependent body.

Accordingly, the Court could recognise the existence of the Carl Zeiss Stiftung by virtue of the UK recognition of the de jure status of the Soviet Union, the GDR as an administrative body being relevant only as a legal creature of the USSR.

The problem brought out in the Carl Zeiss case and sidestepped there was raised again in a series of cases concerning Rhodesia, following the unilateral declaration of independence by the Smith regime in 1965. Basically, if a government or state which exercises effective control over its own territory is unrecognised by the UK a strict enforcement of the 'no recognition, no existence' rule could lead to much hardship and inconvenience. Accordingly, in *Adams v. Adams*¹³⁶ a Rhodesian divorce decree was not recognised in an English court. However, in Hesperides Hotels Ltd v. Aegean Turkish Holidays,¹³⁷ concerning an action in trespass with respect to hotels owned by Greek Cypriots but run by Turkish Cypriots following the Turkish invasion of 1974, Lord Denning stated obiter that he believed that the courts could recognise the laws and acts of an unrecognised body in effective control of territory, at least with regard to laws regulating the day-to-day affairs of the people.¹³⁸ It is certainly an attractive approach, provided it is carefully handled and strictly limited to determinations of a humanitarian and non-sovereign nature.¹³⁹ In Caglar v. Bellingham, it was noted that while the existence of a foreign unrecognised government could be acknowledged in matters relating to commercial obligations or matters of private law between individuals or matters of routine administration such as registration of births, marriages and deaths, the courts would not acknowledge the existence of an unrecognised state if to do so would involve them in acting inconsistently with the foreign policy or diplomatic stance of the UK.¹⁴⁰ In Emin v. Yeldag, the Court held that private acts taking place within an unrecognised state could be regarded as valid within the English legal system provided that there was no statutory prohibition¹⁴¹ and that such acceptance did not compromise

¹³⁵ [1966] 1 Ch. 596; 43 ILR, p. 25. ¹³⁶ [1971] P. 188; 52 ILR, p. 15.

¹³⁷ [1978] QB 205; 73 ILR, p. 9. See also M. N. Shaw, 'Legal Acts of an Unrecognised Entity', 94 LQR, 1978, p. 500.

¹³⁸ [1978] QB 205, 218; 73 ILR, pp. 9, 15. See also Steyn J, Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa Ltd [1986] 3 WLR 583, 589, 592; 75 ILR, p. 675.

¹³⁹ See further the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 56; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 46; and Cyprus v. Turkey, European Court of Human Rights, Judgment of 10 May 2001, paras. 90–8; 120 ILR, p. 10.

¹⁴⁰ 108 ILR, p. 510, at 534.

¹⁴¹ Such as in Adams v. Adams [1970] 3 All ER 572 in view of the relationship between the UK and Southern Rhodesia.

the UK government in the conduct of foreign relations.¹⁴² Indeed, where the issue concerns the lawful acts of a person recognised as existing in English law, they will be justiciable before the English courts and will not be tainted by illegality because the unrecognised state can be associated with the actions.¹⁴³

In many cases, however, the problems with regard to whether an entity is or is not a 'state' arise in connection with the interpretation of a particular statutory provision. The approach of the courts has been to focus upon the construction of the relevant instrument rather than upon the Foreign Office certificate or upon any definition in international law of statehood.¹⁴⁴

Some of the consequential problems of non-recognition were addressed in the Foreign Corporations Act 1991. This provides that a corporation incorporated in a territory not recognised by the UK government as a state would be regarded as having legal personality within the UK where the laws of that territory were applied by a settled court system. In other words, the territory would be treated for this purpose as if it were a recognised state, thereby enabling its legislation to be applied in this circumstance on the normal conflict of rules basis. The point should, however, be stressed that the legislation was not intended at all to impact upon recognition issues as such.¹⁴⁵

Since the UK decision to abandon recognition of governments in 1980, the question arises as to the attitude of the courts on this matter. In particular, it appears that they may be called upon to examine the nature of the UK government's dealings with a new regime in order to determine its status for municipal law purposes.¹⁴⁶

In *Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa*¹⁴⁷ the Court was in fact called upon to decide the status of Ciskei. This territory, part of South Africa, was one of the Bantustans granted 'independence' by South Africa. This was accomplished by virtue of the Status of Ciskei Act 1981. The preliminary issue that came before the Court in a commercial dispute was whether Ciskei had locus standi to sue or be sued in England. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office certified that Ciskei was not recognised as an independent sovereign state either de facto or de jure and that representations were made to South Africa in relation to matters occurring in Ciskei. The Court of Appeal held that it was able to take account of such declarations and legislation as were not in conflict with the certificates.

¹⁴² [2002] 1 FLR 956. This contradicted the earlier case of B v. B [2000] FLR 707, where a divorce obtained in the unrecognised 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus' was not recognised. See also Parent and Others v. Singapore Airlines Ltd and Civil Aeronautics Administration 133 ILR, p. 264. See also Kibris Turk Hava Yollarai and CTA Holidays v. Secretary of State for Transport [2009] EWHC 1918 (Admin), paras. 87 ff. and the decision of the Court of Appeal in this case [2010] EWCA Civ 1093, paras. 75 ff. limiting the Namibia exception to 'private rights, acts of everyday occurrence, routine acts of administration, day to day activities having legal consequences, or matters of that kind' at para. 79.

¹⁴³ See North Cyprus Tourism Centre Ltd v. Transport for London [2005] EWHC 1698 (Admin), para. 50.

¹⁴⁴ See e.g. Re Al-Fin Corporation's Patent [1970] Ch. 160; 52 ILR, p. 68; Reel v. Holder [1981] 1 WLR 1226; 74 ILR, p. 105; and Caglar v. Bellingham 108 ILR, p. 510 at 528, 530 and 539, where the statutory term 'foreign state' was held to mean a state recognised by the UK.

¹⁴⁵ This legislation was adopted essentially to deal with the situation following Arab Monetary Fund v. Hashim (No. 3) [1991] 2 WLR, whereby the legal personality of a company not incorporated in a territory recognised as a state would not be recognised in English law. See UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 565–8. See also the decision of the Special Commissioners in Caglar v. Bellingham, 108 ILR, p. 510 at 530, where it was emphasised that the intention of the legislation was not to affect at all the government's policy on recognition, but to sever the connection with public international law and deal with issues of private international law.

¹⁴⁶ See 409 HL Deb., cols. 1097–8 and Symmons, 'United Kingdom Abolition', pp. 254–60.

¹⁴⁷ [1987] 1 QB 599; 75 ILR, p. 675.

The effect of that, noted Lord Donaldson, was that the Status of Ciskei Act 1981 could be taken into account, except for those provisions declaring the territory independent and relinquishing South African sovereignty. This led to the conclusion that the Ciskei legislature was in fact exercising power by virtue of delegation from the South African authorities.¹⁴⁸ Accordingly, the government of Ciskei could sue or be sued in the English courts 'as being a subordinate body set up by the Republic of South Africa to act on its behalf'.¹⁴⁹ Clearly the Court felt that the situation was analogous to the Carl Zeiss case. Whether this was in fact so is an open question. It is certainly open to doubt whether the terms of the certificates in the cases were on all fours. In the Gur case, the executive was far more cautious and non-committal. Indeed, one of the certificates actually stated that the UK government did not have a formal position regarding the exercise of governing authority over the territory of Ciskei,¹⁵⁰ whereas in Carl Zeiss the certificate noted expressly that the USSR was recognised as de jure entitled to exercise governing authority in respect of the territory (the GDR).¹⁵¹ The gap was bridged by construction and inference.

More widely, it is unclear to what extent the change in policy on recognition of governments has actually led to a change in attitude by the courts. There is no doubt that the attitude adopted by the government in certifying whether or not diplomatic dealings were in existence with regard to the entity in question is crucial. An assertion of such dealing would, it appears, be determinative.¹⁵² The problem arises where the Foreign Office statement is more ambiguous than the mere assertion of dealings with the entity. The consequence is that a greater burden is imposed on the courts as an answer as to status is sought. On the one hand, the Gur case suggests that the courts are not willing to examine for themselves the realities of any given situation, but would seek to infer from the terms of any certificate what the answer ought to be.¹⁵³ On the other hand, Hobhouse J in the High Court in *Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA*¹⁵⁴ took the wider view that in deciding whether a regime was the government of a state, the court would have to take into account the following factors: (a) whether it is the constitutional government of the state; (b) the degree, nature and stability of administrative control, if any, that it of itself exercises over the territory of the state; (c) whether the UK government has any dealings with it, and if so the nature of those dealings; and (d) in marginal cases, the extent of international recognition that it has as the government of the state.¹⁵⁵ Part of the answer as to why a different emphasis is evident is no doubt due to the fact that, in the latter case, there were competing bodies claiming to be the government of Somalia and the situation on the ground as a matter of fact was deeply confused. It should also be noted that in the Republic of Somalia case, the court took the view that Foreign Office statements were no more than part of the evidence in the ¹⁴⁸ [1987] 1 QB 599, 623; 75 ILR, p. 696.

¹⁴⁹ [1987] 1 QB 599, 624. See also Nourse LJ, ibid., pp. 624–66; 75 ILR, pp. 696–9.

¹⁵⁰ [1987] 1 QB 599, 618–19; 75 ILR, p. 690. ¹⁵¹ [1966] 1 Ch. 596; 43 ILR, p. 25.

¹⁵² See e.g. the Arantzazu Mendi [1939] AC 256, 264; 9 AD, p. 60; and Gur Corporation v. Trust Bank of Africa [1987] 1 QB 599, 625; 75 ILR, p. 675. See also Republic of Somalia v. Woodhouse Drake and Carey (Suisse) SA [1993] QB 54, 65–6; 94 ILR, p. 620; and British Arab Commercial Bank plc v. The National Transitional Council of the State of Libya [2011] EWHC 2274, para. 25.

¹⁵³ See e.g. F. A. Mann, 'The Judicial Recognition of an Unrecognised State', 36 ICLQ, 1987, p. 349. and A. Beck, 'A South African Homeland Appears in the English Court: Legitimation of the Illegitimate?', 36 ICLQ, 1987, p. 350.

¹⁵⁴ [1993] QB 54; 94 ILR, p. 608. ¹⁵⁵ [1993] QB 54, 68; 94 ILR, p. 622.

case, although likely to be the best evidence as to whether the government had dealings with the entity in question.¹⁵⁶ It is further to be noted that in this case, as in Kuwait Airways Corp v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos 4 and 5),¹⁵⁷ the Foreign Office had written to the relevant court but not in the form of an actual certificate of recognition.¹⁵⁸

In examining the particular situation, the courts will take note of the constitutional principle that ‘the state cannot speak with two voices on such a matter, the judiciary saying one thing, the executive another’.¹⁵⁹ Where there has been a formal communication from the executive, but in the absence of a categorical assertion of recognition, the court will examine the communication in order to interpret it, but it would not be open to the court to set aside that communication and look at other material in an attempt to identify what the position of the government actually was.¹⁶⁰ However, in such circumstances, the court is not precluded from being able to take account of particular factors. In Secretary of State for the Home Department v. CC and CF,¹⁶¹ the court, in reaffirming Republic of Somalia, held that the fact that the government had dealings with the Somaliland authorities as a matter of evidence led to the conclusion that ‘In the light of the evidence as to the nature of its administration of the territory under its control, . . . the Somaliland administration is the effective government of Somaliland and it is open to this court to take cognizance of its legislative, executive and judicial acts’.¹⁶²

The USA

The situation in the United States with regard to the recognition or non-recognition of foreign entities is similar to that pertaining in the UK, with some important differences. Only a recognised state or government can in principle sue in the US courts and benefit in principle from sovereign immunity and the act of state doctrine when sued.¹⁶³ This applies irrespective of the state of diplomatic relations, providing there is no war between the two.¹⁶⁴ However, an unrecognised state or government may in certain circumstances be permitted access before the American courts. This would appear to depend on the facts of each case and a practical appreciation of the entity in question.¹⁶⁵ For example, in Transportes Aereos de Angola v. Ronair,¹⁶⁶ it was held that in the particular circumstances where the US State Department had clearly stated that allowing the plaintiff (a corporation owned by the unrecognised government of Angola) access to the Court

¹⁵⁶ [1993] QB 54, 65; 94 ILR, p. 619. This was reaffirmed in Sierra Leone Telecommunications Co. Ltd v. Barclays Bank [1998] 2 All ER 821; 114 ILR, p. 466. See also K. Reece Thomas, ‘Non-recognition, Personality and Capacity: The Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestine Authority in English Law’, 29 Anglo-American Law Review, 2000, p. 228.

¹⁵⁷ [2002] 2 AC 883 at para. 359. ¹⁵⁸ See Bouhadi v. Breish [2016] EWHC 602 (Comm), paras. 34 ff.

¹⁵⁹ Ibid.; and see The Arantzazu Mendi [1939] AC 256, p. 264; Kuwait Airways Corp v. Iraqi Airways Co. [1999] CLC 31, p. 67; and Kuwait Airways Corp v. Iraqi Airways Co. (Nos 4 and 5) [2002] 2 AC 883 at para. 358.

¹⁶⁰ Bouhadi v. Breish [2016] EWHC 602 (Comm), para. 43. ¹⁶¹ [2012] EWHC 2837 (Admin), paras. 122 ff.

¹⁶² Ibid., para. 131.

¹⁶³ See e.g. Republic of Vietnam v. Pfizer 556 F.2d 892 (1977); 94 ILR, p. 199. See also Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States, 304 US 126, 137 (1938); National City Bank of NY v. Republic of China, 348 US 356, 358–9 (1955); and Oetjen v. Central Leather Co. 246 US 297, 302–3 (1918). See also C. A. Bradley, International Law in the US Legal System, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2015, pp. 22 ff.

¹⁶⁴ See Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino 376 US 398, 412; 35 ILR, p. 2; and National Oil Corporation v. Libyan Sun Oil Co. 733 F.Supp. 800 (1990); 94 ILR, p. 209.

¹⁶⁵ See above, p. 183, regarding Taiwan after 1 January 1979. See also Wulfsohn v. Russian Republic 234 NY 372 (1924); 2 AD, p. 39.

¹⁶⁶ 544 F.Supp. 858, 863–4 (1982); 94 ILR, pp. 202, 208–9.

would be consistent with the foreign policy interests of the United States, the jurisdictional bar placed upon the Court would be deemed to have been lifted.

As in the UK, a declaration by the executive will be treated as binding the courts and, like the UK, the 'one voice' doctrine has been espoused to permit the executive to make the decision in recognition scenarios.¹⁶⁷ In Zivotofsky v. Kerry,¹⁶⁸ the US Supreme Court underlined that it was the President that had the exclusive power to grant formal recognition to a foreign sovereign, noting that the Nation must 'speak ... with one voice' regarding which governments were legitimate in the eyes of the US and which were not, and the Supreme Court emphasised that such unilateral recognition power had long been recognised by that court.

In the absence of the 'suggestion' clarifying how far the process of non-recognition is to be applied, the courts have been more willing than their UK counterparts to give effect to particular acts of an unrecognised body, although as seen in the previous section the attitude of the English courts has become more flexible. In the Carl Zeiss case, Lords Reid and Wilberforce referred in approving terms to the trend evident in decisions of US courts to give recognition to the 'actual facts or realities found to exist in the territory in question', in the interests of justice and common sense. Such recognition did not apply to every act, but, in Lord Wilberforce's words, it did apply to 'private rights, or acts of everyday occurrence, or perfunctory acts of administration'.¹⁶⁹ How far this extends, however, has never been precisely defined.

It was the difficulties engendered by the American Civil War that first stimulated a reappraisal of the 'no recognition, no existence' doctrine. It was not possible to ignore every act of the Confederate authorities and so the idea developed that such rules adopted by the Confederate states as were not hostile to the Union or the authority of the Central Government, or did not conflict with the terms of the US Constitution, would be treated as valid and enforceable in the courts system.¹⁷⁰ The doctrine was developed in a case before the New York Court of Appeals, when, discussing the status of the unrecognised Soviet government, Judge Cardozo noted that an unrecognised entity which had maintained control over its territory, 'may gain for its acts and decrees a validity quasi-governmental, if violence to fundamental principles of justice or to our public policy might otherwise be done'.¹⁷¹

This thesis progressed rapidly in the period immediately preceding the American recognition of the USSR and led in *Salimoff v. Standard Oil Co. of New York*¹⁷² to the enforcement of a Soviet oil nationalisation decree, with the comment that: 'to refuse to recognise that Soviet Russia is a government regulating the internal affairs of the country, is to give to fictions an air of reality which they do not deserve'.

This decision, diametrically opposed to the Luther v. Sagor approach,¹⁷³ constituted a step towards the abolition of differences between the judicial treatment of the acts of recognised and unrecognised governments.

However, the limits of this broad doctrine were more carefully defined in The Maret,¹⁷⁴ where the Court refused to give effect to the nationalisation of an Estonian ship by the government of ¹⁶⁷ American Ins. Assn v. Garamendi 539 US 396, 424 (2003) (quoting Crosby v. National Foreign Trade Council 530 US 363, 381 (2000)).

¹⁶⁸ 576 US ____ (2015), pp. 11 ff. ¹⁶⁹ [1967] AC 853, 954; 43 ILR, pp. 23, 66.

¹⁷⁰ See e.g. Texas v. White 74 US 700 (1868).

¹⁷¹ Sokoloff v. National City Bank of New York 239 NY 158 (1924); 2 AD, p. 44.

¹⁷² 262 NY 220 (1933); 7 AD, pp. 22, 26. ¹⁷³ [1921] 1 KB 456; 1 AD, p. 47; above, p. 350.

¹⁷⁴ 145 F.2d 431 (1944); 12 AD, p. 29.

the unrecognised Soviet Republic of Estonia. However, the ship in dispute was located in an American port at the date of the nationalisation order, and there appears to be a difference in treatment in some cases depending upon whether the property was situated inside or outside the country concerned.

One can mention, in contrast to The Maret, the case of Upright v. Mercury Business Machines,¹⁷⁵ in which the non-recognition of the German Democratic Republic was discussed in relation to the assignment of a bill to the plaintiff by a state-controlled company of the GDR. The judge of the New York Supreme Court declared, in upholding the plaintiff's claim, that a foreign government, although unrecognised by the executive:

may nevertheless have de facto existence which is judicially cognisable. The acts of such a de facto government may affect private rights and obligations arising either as a result of activity in, or with persons or corporations within, the territory controlled by such de facto government.

However, the creation of judicial entities by unrecognised states will not be allowed to circumvent executive policy. In Kunstsammlungen zu Weimar v. Elicofon,¹⁷⁶ the KZW was an East German governmental agency until 1969, when it was transformed into a separate juristic person in order to avoid the problems relating to unrecognised states in the above litigation. This concerned the recovery of pictures stolen from a museum during the American occupation of Germany.

As a branch of an unrecognised state, the KZW could not of course be permitted to sue in an American court, but the change of status in 1969 was designed to circumvent this. The Court, however, refused to accept this and emphasised that to allow the KZW to intervene in the case 'would render our government's non-recognition of the German Democratic Republic a meaningless gesture'.¹⁷⁷ Further, in Autocephalous Church of Cyprus v. Goldberg, the Court of Appeals held that it would not give effect to confiscatory decrees adopted by the unrecognised 'Turkish Federated State of Cyprus', later called the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'.¹⁷⁸

In Ministry of Defense of the Islamic Republic of Iran v. Gould,¹⁷⁹ the Court was faced with an action in which the unrecognised Iranian government sought to enforce an award. However, the US intervened and filed a statement of interest supporting Iran's argument and this proved of significant influence. This general approach was reinforced in National Petrochemical v. The M/T Stolt Sheaf,¹⁸⁰ where the Court stressed that the executive must have the power to deal with unrecognised governments and that therefore the absence of formal recognition did not necessarily result in a foreign government being barred from access to US courts.¹⁸¹ However, where the executive has issued a non-recognition certificate and makes known its view that in the instant case the unrecognised party should not be permitted access to the courts, the courts appear very willing to comply.¹⁸²

¹⁷⁵ 213 NYS (2d) 417 (1961); 32 ILR, p. 65. ¹⁷⁶ 358 F.Supp. 747 (1972); 61 ILR, p. 143.

¹⁷⁷ 358 F.Supp. 747, 757; 61 ILR, p. 154. See also Federal Republic of Germany v. Elicofon 14 ILM, 1976, p. 806, following the US recognition of the GDR in which KZW was permitted to intervene in the litigation in progress. See also Transportes Aereos de Angola v. Ronair 544 F.Supp. 858.

¹⁷⁸ 917 F.2d 278 (1990); 108 ILR, p. 488. ¹⁷⁹ 1988 Iranian Assets Litig. Rep. 15, 313. See also 82 AJIL, 1988, p. 591.

¹⁸⁰ 860 F.2d 551 (1988); 87 ILR, p. 583. ¹⁸¹ 860 F.2d 551, 554.

¹⁸² See e.g. Republic of Panama v. Republic National Bank of New York 681 F.Supp. 1066 (1988); 86 ILR, p. 1; and Republic of Panama v. Citizens & Southern International Bank 682 F.Supp. 1144 (1988); 86 ILR, p. 10. See also

It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the various American cases or to determine the extent to which the acts of an unrecognised state or government may be enforced in the courts system of the United States. But two factors should be particularly noted. First of all, the declaration of the executive is binding. If that intimates that no effect is to be given to acts of the unrecognised entity, the courts will be obliged to respect this. It may also be the case that the State Department 'suggestions' will include some kind of hint or indication which, while not clearly expressed, may lead the courts to feel that the executive is leaning more one way than another in the matter of the government's status, and this may influence the courts. For example, in the *Salimoff*¹⁸³ case the terms of the certificate tended to encourage the court to regard the Soviet government as a recognised government, whereas in the case of *The Maret*¹⁸⁴ the tone of the executive's statement on the Soviet Republic of Estonia was decidedly hostile to any notion of recognition or enforcement of its decrees.

The second point is the location of the property in question. There is a tendency to avoid the enforcement of acts and decrees affecting property situated outside the unrecognised state or government and in any event the location of the property often introduces additional complications as regards municipal law provision.¹⁸⁵

There is some uncertainty in the United States as to the operation of the retroactivity doctrine, particularly as it affects events occurring outside the country. There is a line of cases suggesting that only those acts of the unrecognised government performed in its own territory could be validated by the retroactive operation of recognition,¹⁸⁶ while, on the other hand, there are cases illustrating the opposite proposition decided by the Supreme Court.¹⁸⁷

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006

J. Dugard, Recognition and the United Nations, Cambridge, 1987

H. Lauterpacht, Recognition in International Law, Cambridge, 1947

Recognition in International Relations (ed. C. Daase, C. Fehl, A. Geis and G. Kolliarkis), Basingstoke, 2015

S. Talmon, Recognition of Governments in International Law, Oxford, 1998

T. Fountain, 'Out From the Precarious Orbit of Politics: Reconsidering Recognition and the Standing of Foreign Governments to Sue in US Courts', 29 Va. JIL, 1989, p. 473.

¹⁸³ 262 NY 220 (1933); 7 AD, p. 22. ¹⁸⁴ 145 F.2d 431 (1944); 12 AD, p. 29.

¹⁸⁵ See e.g. Civil Air Transport Inc. v. Central Air Transport Corporation [1953] AC 70; 19 ILR, p. 85.

¹⁸⁶ See e.g. Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. Russia 21 F.2d 396 (1927); 4 AD, p. 58.

¹⁸⁷ See e.g. US v. Pink 315 US 203 (1942); 10 AD, p. 48; and US v. Belmont 301 US 324 (1937); 8 AD, p. 34.

9

Territory

THE CONCEPT OF TERRITORY IN INTERNATIONAL LAW

International law is based on the concept of the state. The state in its turn lies upon the foundation of sovereignty, which expresses internally the supremacy of the governmental institutions and externally the supremacy of the state as a legal person.¹

But sovereignty itself, with its retinue of legal rights and duties, is founded upon the fact of territory. Without territory a legal person cannot be a state.² It is undoubtedly the basic characteristic of a state and the one most widely accepted and understood. There are currently some 200 distinct territorial units, each one subject to a different territorial sovereignty and jurisdiction.

Since such fundamental legal concepts as sovereignty and jurisdiction can only be comprehended in relation to territory, it follows that the legal nature of territory becomes a vital part in any study of international law. Indeed, the principle whereby a state is deemed to exercise exclusive power over its territory can be regarded as a fundamental axiom of classical international law.³ The development of international law upon the basis of the exclusive authority of the state within an accepted territorial framework meant that territory became 'perhaps the fundamental concept of international law'.⁴ Most nations indeed developed through a close relationship with the land they inhabited.⁵

¹ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 5; V. Prescott and G. Triggs, International Frontiers and Boundaries, Leiden, 2008; J. Castellino and S. Allen, Title to Territory in International Law: A Temporal Analysis, Aldershot, 2002; G. Distefano, L'Ordre International entre Légalité et Effectivité: Le Titre Juridique dans le Contentieux Territorial, Paris, 2002; R. Y. Jennings, The Acquisition of Territory in International Law, Manchester, 1963; Title to Territory (ed. M. Shaw), Dartmouth, 2005; Territoriality and International Law (ed. M. Kohen), Cheltenham, 2016; M. Hébié, Souveraineté Territoriale par Traité, Geneva, 2015; Société Française pour le Droit International, Droit des Frontières Internationales: The Law of International Borders, Paris, 2016; J. H. W. Verzijl, International Law in Historical Perspective, Leiden, 1970, vol. III, pp. 297 ff.; P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, pp. 515 ff. and 590 ff.; M. N. Shaw, 'Territory in International Law', 13 Netherlands YIL, 1982, p. 61; N. Hill, Claims to Territory in International Law and Relations, London, 1945; J. Gottman, The Significance of Territory, Charlottesville, 1973; S. Akweenda, International Law and the Protection of Namibia's Territorial Integrity, The Hague, 1997; S. P. Sharma, Territorial Acquisition, Disputes and International Law, The Hague, 1997; W. Schoenborn, 'La Nature Juridique du Territoire', 30 HR, 1929, p. 85; and K. H. Kaikobad, Interpretation and Revision of International Boundary Decisions, Cambridge, 2007.

² See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 563.

³ See L. Delbez, 'Du Territoire dans ses Rapports avec l'État', 39 Revue Générale de Droit International Public, 1932, p. 46. See also Hill, Claims to Territory, p. 3.

⁴ D. P. O'Connell, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1970, vol. I, p. 403. See also Jennings, Acquisition, p. 87, and Judge Huber, The Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928).

⁵ See generally, Gottman, Significance.

The central role of territory in the scheme of international law may be seen by noting the development of legal rules protecting its inviolability. The principle of respect for the territorial integrity of states is well founded as one of the linchpins of the international system, as is the norm prohibiting interference in the internal affairs of other states.⁶ A number of factors, however, have tended to reduce the territorial exclusivity of the state in international law. Technological and economic changes have had an impact as interdependence becomes more evident and the rise of such transnational concerns as human rights and self-determination have tended to impinge upon this exclusivity.⁷ The growth of international organisations is another relevant factor, as is the development of the 'common heritage' concept in the context of the law of the sea and air law.⁸ Nevertheless, one should not exaggerate the effects upon international law doctrine today of such trends.⁹ Territorial sovereignty remains as a key concept in international law.

Since the law reflects political conditions and evolves, in most cases, in harmony with reality, international law has had to develop a series of rules governing the transfer and control of territory. Such rules, by the very nature of international society, have often (although not always) had the effect of legitimising the results of the exercise of power. The lack of a strong, central authority in international law has emphasised, even more than municipal legal structures, the way that law must come to terms with power and force.

The rules laid down by municipal legislation and judicial decisions regarding the transfer and control of land within a particular state are usually highly detailed, for they deal with one of the basic resources and wealth-creating factors of the nation. Land law has often reflected the power balance within a society, with feudal arrangements being succeeded by free market contracts and latterly the introduction of comprehensive provisions elaborating the rights and duties of landlords and their tenants, and the development of more sophisticated conveyancing techniques. A number of legal interests are capable of existing over land and the possibility exists of dividing ownership into different segments.¹⁰ The treatment of territory in international law has not reached this sophisticated stage for a number of reasons, in particular the horizontal system of territorial sovereignty that subsists internationally as distinct from the vertical order of land law that persists in most municipal systems. There is thus a critical difference in the consequences that result from a change in the legal ownership of land in international law and in municipal law.

⁶ See e.g. articles 2(4) and 2(7) of the UN Charter; the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law adopted by the UN General Assembly, resolution 2625 (XXV); and article 1 of the 1974 Consensus Definition of Aggression adopted by the General Assembly, resolution 3314 (XXIX).

⁷ See e.g. R. Falk, 'A New Paradigm for International Legal Studies: Prospects and Proposals', 84 Yale Law Journal, 1975, pp. 969, 973, 1020. See also H. Lauterpacht, International Law and Human Rights, London, 1950, and C. W. Jenks, The Common Law of Mankind, London, 1958.

⁸ See e.g. the Treaty on Outer Space, 1967 and the Convention on the Law of the Sea, 1982. See also Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 65–6; and below, p. 396.

⁹ See e.g. the Asylum case, ICJ Reports, 1950, pp. 266, 275; 17 ILR, pp. 280, 283. The International Court emphasised in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 51, the 'central importance in international law and relations of state sovereignty over territory and of the stability and certainty of that sovereignty'. See also S. Huh, 'Title to Territory in the Post-Colonial Era: Original Title and Terra Nullius in the ICJ Judgments on Cases Concerning Ligitan/Sipadan (2002) and Pedra Branca (2008)', 26 EJIL, 2015, p. 709.

¹⁰ See e.g. R. Megarry and H. W. R. Wade, The Law of Real Property, 5th edn, London, 1984.

In international law a change in ownership of a particular territory involves also a change in sovereignty, in the legal authority governing the area. This means that the nationality of the inhabitants is altered, as is the legal system under which they live, work and conduct their relations, whereas in municipal law no such changes are involved in an alteration of legal ownership. Accordingly international law must deal also with all the various effects of a change in territorial sovereignty and not confine its attentions to the mere mechanism of acquisition or loss of territory.¹¹

TERRITORIAL SOVEREIGNTY

Judge Huber noted in the Island of Palmas case¹² that:

sovereignty in relation to a portion of the surface of the globe is the legal condition necessary for the inclusion of such portion in the territory of any particular state.

Brierly defined territorial sovereignty in terms of the existence of rights over territory rather than the independence of the state itself or the relation of persons to persons. It was a way of contrasting 'the fullest rights over territory known to the law' with certain minor territorial rights, such as leases and servitudes.¹³ Territorial sovereignty has a positive and a negative aspect. The former relates to the exclusivity of the competence of the state regarding its own territory,¹⁴ while the latter refers to the obligation to protect the rights of other states.¹⁵

The international rules regarding territorial sovereignty are rooted in the Roman law provisions governing ownership and possession, and the classification of the different methods of acquiring territory is a direct descendant of the Roman rules dealing with property.¹⁶ This has resulted in some confusion. Law, being so attached to contemporary life, cannot be easily transposed into a different cultural milieu.¹⁷ And, as shall be noted, the Roman method of categorising the different methods of acquiring territory faces difficulties when applied in international law.

The essence of territorial sovereignty is contained in the notion of title. This term relates to both the factual and legal conditions under which territory is deemed to belong to one particular authority or another. In other words, it refers to the existence of those facts required under international law to entail the legal consequences of a change in the juridical status of a particular territory.¹⁸ As the International Court noted in the Burkina Faso/Mali case,¹⁹ the ¹¹ See below, chapter 16, dealing with the problems of state succession.

¹² 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 104. See also the Report of the Commission of Jurists in the Aaland Islands case, LNOJ, Supp. no. 3, p. 6.

¹³ The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 162.

¹⁴ See Judge Huber, Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 838 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 104.

¹⁵ 2 RIAA, p. 839. See also Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 73 ff., and S. Bastid, 'Les Problèmes Territoriaux dans la Jurisprudence de la Cour Internationale', 107 HR, 1962, pp. 360, 367.

¹⁶ See e.g. Schoenborn, 'Nature Juridique', p. 96. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 403–4. Note in particular the Roman law distinction between imperium and dominium: Shaw, 'Territory', p. 74.

¹⁷ See, as regards the theories concerning the relationship between states and territory, Shaw, 'Territory', pp. 75–9.

¹⁸ See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, p. 4. See also Brownlie's Principles of Public International Law, 8th edn, Oxford, 2012, p. 216.

¹⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 564; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 459.

word 'title' comprehends both any evidence which may establish the existence of a right and the actual source of that right.²⁰

One interesting characteristic that should be noted and which again points to the difference between the treatment of territory under international law and municipal law is that title to territory in international law is more often than not relative rather than absolute.²¹ Thus, a court, in deciding to which of contending states a parcel of land legally belongs, will consider all the relevant arguments and will award the land to the state which relatively speaking puts forward the better (or best) legal case.²² Title to land in municipal law is much more often the case of deciding in uncertain or contentious circumstances which party complies with the legal requirements as to ownership and possession, and in that sense title is absolute. It is not normally a question of examining the facts to see which claimant can under the law put forward a better claim to title. Further, not all rights or links will amount to territorial sovereignty. Personal ties of allegiance may exist but these may not necessarily lead to a finding of sovereignty.²³ The special characteristics of the territory need to be taken into account, as does the particular structure of the sovereignty in question.²⁴

Disputes as to territory in international law may be divided into different categories. The contention may be over the status of the country itself, that is, all the territory comprised in a particular state, as for example Arab claims against Israel at one time and claims formerly pursued by Morocco against Mauritania.²⁵ Or the dispute may refer to a certain area on the borders of two or more states, as for example Somali claims against the north-east of Kenya and south-east of Ethiopia.²⁶ Similarly, claims to territory may be based on a number of different grounds, ranging from the traditional method of occupation or prescription to the newer concepts such as self-determination, with various political and legal factors, for example, geographical contiguity, historical demands and economic elements, possibly being relevant. These issues will be noted during the course of this chapter.

Apart from territory actually under the sovereignty of a state, international law also recognises territory over which there is no sovereign. Such territory is known as terra nullius. In addition, there is a category of territory called res communis which is (in contrast to terra nullius) generally not capable of being reduced to sovereign control. The prime instance of this is the high seas, which belong to no one and may be used by all. Another example would be outer space. The concept of common heritage of mankind has also been raised and will be examined in this chapter.

²⁰ This was reaffirmed in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 388; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 301.

²¹ See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

²² See the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 52; 20 ILR, p. 94. The Court noted in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 150, that the passing of sovereignty may be by way of agreement between states, either in the form of a treaty or tacitly arising from the conduct of the parties. The emphasis was to be placed on the intention of the parties.

²³ Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 48, 64 and 68; 59 ILR, p. 14. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, para. 86. But see as to the confirmatory value of such ties, the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 38–9. Note that there is a critical difference between territorial sovereignty on the one hand and the regular rights of property on the other, ibid., pp. 56–7 and 80.

²⁴ See e.g. the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 41–3; 59 ILR, p. 14; the Rann of Kutch case, 50 ILR, p. 2; the Dubai/Sharjah award, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 587; and the Eritrea/Yemen case, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 116.

²⁵ See below, p. 391 ²⁶ See below, p. 390.

NEW STATES AND TITLE TO TERRITORY²⁷

The problem of how a state actually acquires its own territory in international law is a difficult one and one that may ultimately only be explained in legal–political terms. While with long-established states one may dismiss the question on the basis of recognition and acceptance, new states pose a different problem since, under classical international law, until a new state is created, there is no legal person in existence competent to hold title. None of the traditional modes of acquisition of territorial title satisfactorily resolves the dilemma, which has manifested itself particularly in the post-Second World War period with the onset of decolonisation. The international community has traditionally approached the problem of new states in terms of recognition, rather than in terms of acquisition of title to territory. This means that states have examined the relevant situation and upon ascertainment of the factual conditions have accorded recognition to the new entity as a subject of international law. There has been relatively little discussion of the method by which the new entity itself acquires the legal rights to its lands. The stress has instead been on compliance with factual requirements as to statehood coupled with the acceptance of this by other states.²⁸

One approach to this problem has been to note that it is recognition that constitutes the state, and that the territory of the state is, upon recognition, accepted as the territory of a valid subject of international law irrespective of how it may have been acquired.²⁹ While this theory is not universally or widely accepted,³⁰ it does nevertheless underline how the emphasis has been upon recognition of a situation and not upon the method of obtaining the rights in law to the particular territory.³¹

One major factor that is relevant is the crucial importance of the doctrine of domestic jurisdiction. This constitutes the legal prohibition on interference within the internal mechanisms of an entity and emphasises the supremacy of a state within its own frontiers. Many of the factual and legal processes leading up to the emergence of a new state are therefore barred from international legal scrutiny and this has proved a deterrent to the search for the precise method by which a new entity obtains title to the territory in question.³²

In recent years, however, the scope of the domestic jurisdiction rule has been altered. Discussions in international conferences and institutions, such as the United Nations, have actively concerned themselves with conditions in non-independent countries and it has been accepted that territorial sovereignty in the ordinary sense of the words does not really exist over mandate or trust territories.³³ This is beginning to encourage a re-examination of the procedures of acquiring title. However, the plea of domestic jurisdiction does at least illustrate the fact that not only international law but also municipal law is involved in the process of gaining independence.

²⁷ See Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 36 ff.; J. G. Starke, 'The Acquisition of Title to Territory by Newly Emerged States', 41 BYIL, 1965–6, p. 411; J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006; and M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986, pp. 168–73.

²⁸ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677. ²⁹ Ibid. ³⁰ See above, chapter 8.

³¹ See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, p. 37, and Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413.

³² See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 168–9.

³³ See e.g. International Status of South-West Africa, ICJ Reports, 1950, p. 128; 17 ILR, p. 47; the South West Africa cases, ICJ Reports, 1966, p. 6; 37 ILR, p. 243; the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, p. 16; 49 ILR, p. 2; and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14. See further above, chapter 5, p. 176.

There are basically two methods by which a new entity may gain its independence as a new state: by constitutional means, that is by agreement with the former controlling administration in an orderly devolution of power, or by non-constitutional means, usually by force, against the will of the previous sovereign.

The granting of independence according to the constitutional provisions of the former power may be achieved either by agreement between the former power and the accepted authorities of the emerging state, or by a purely internal piece of legislation by the previous sovereign. In many cases a combination of both procedures is adopted. For example, the independence of Burma was preceded by a Burmese–United Kingdom agreement and treaty (June and October, 1947) and by the Burma Independence Act of 1947 passed by the British legislature, providing for Burmese independence to take effect on 4 January 1948. In such cases what appears to be involved is a devolution or transfer of sovereignty from one power to another and the title to the territory will accordingly pass from the previous sovereign to the new administration in a conscious act of transference.

However, a different situation arises where the new entity gains its independence contrary to the wishes of the previous authority, whether by secession or revolution. It may be that the dispossessed sovereign may ultimately make an agreement with the new state recognising its new status, but in the meantime the new state might well be regarded by other states as a valid state under international law.³⁴

The principle of self-determination is also very relevant here. Where a state gains its sovereignty in opposition to the former power, new facts are created and the entity may well comply with the international requirements as to statehood, such as population, territory and government. Other states will then have to make a decision as to whether or not to recognise the new state and accept the legal consequences of this new status. But at this point a serious problem emerges.

For a unit to be regarded as a state under international law it must conform with the legal conditions as to settled population, a definable area of land and the capacity to enter into legal relations. However, under traditional international law, until one has a state one cannot talk in terms of title to the territory, because there does not exist any legal person capable of holding the legal title. So to discover the process of acquisition of title to territory, one has first to point to an established state. A few ideas have been put forward to explain this. One theory is to concentrate upon the factual emergence of the new state and to accept that since a new state is in existence upon a certain parcel of land, international law should look no further but accept the reality of possession at the moment of independence as denoting ownership, that is, legal title.³⁵ While in most cases this would prove adequate as far as other states are concerned, it can lead to problems where ownership is claimed of an area not in possession and it does little to answer the questions as to the international legal explanation of territorial sovereignty. Another approach is to turn to the constitutive theory of recognition, and declare that by recognition not only is a new state in the international community created, but its title to the territory upon which it is based is conclusively determined.³⁶ The disadvantage of this attitude ³⁴ Shaw, Title to Territory. See also D. Greig, International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1976, p. 156.

³⁵ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677, and Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413.

³⁶ Starke, 'Acquisition of Title', p. 413. See also Jennings, Acquisition, p. 37.

is that it presupposes the acceptance of the constitutive theory by states in such circumstances, something which is controversial.³⁷

One possibility that could be put forward here involves the abandonment of the classical rule that only states can acquire territorial sovereignty, and the substitution of a provision permitting a people to acquire sovereignty over the territory pending the establishment of the particular state. By this method the complicated theoretical issues related to recognition are avoided. Some support for this view can be found in the provision in the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law that the territory of a colony or other non-self-governing entity possesses, under the United Nations Charter, a status separate and distinct from that of the administering power, which exists until the people have exercised the right of self-determination.³⁸ However, the proposition is a controversial one and must remain tentative.³⁹

THE ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL TERRITORY

The classical technique of categorising the various modes of acquisition of territory is based on Roman law and is not adequate.⁴⁰ Many of the leading cases do not specify a particular category or mode but tend to adopt an overall approach. Five modes of acquisition are usually detailed: occupation of terra nullius, prescription, cession, accretion and subjugation (or conquest); and these are further divided into original and derivative modes.⁴¹

Boundary Treaties and Boundary Awards

Boundary treaties, whereby either additional territory is acquired or lost or uncertain boundaries are clarified by agreement between the states concerned, constitute a root of title in themselves. They constitute a special kind of treaty in that they establish an objective territorial regime valid erga omnes.⁴² Such a regime will not only create rights binding also upon third states, but will exist outside the particular boundary treaty and thus will continue even if the treaty in question itself ceases to apply.⁴³ The reason for this exceptional approach is to be found in the need for the stability of boundaries.⁴⁴ Further, the establishment or confirmation of a particular boundary line by way of referring in a treaty to an earlier document (which may or may not be binding of itself) laying down a line is also possible and as such invests the line in question with undoubted validity.⁴⁵ Indeed, this earlier document may also be a map upon which a line has been drawn.

Accordingly, many boundary disputes in fact revolve around the question of treaty interpretation. It is accepted that a treaty should be interpreted in the light of Articles 31 and 32 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, 'in good faith, in accordance with the ordinary ³⁷ See above, chapter 8, p. 330. ³⁸ See the Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1971, pp. 16, 31; 49 ILR, pp. 2, 21.

³⁹ See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 171–3. ⁴⁰ See O'Connell, International Law, p. 405.

⁴¹ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 677. ⁴² See Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, p. 48.

⁴³ See Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37; 100 ILR, p. 1.

⁴⁴ Ibid. and the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 34; 33 ILR, p. 48. See also Bangladesh v. India, Award of 7 July 2014, para. 216, noting that 'maritime delimitations, like land boundaries, must be stable and definitive to ensure a peaceful relationship between the states concerned in the long term'.

⁴⁵ See Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 23; 33 ILR, p. 48. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 340–1.

meaning to be given to its terms in their context and in the light of its object and purpose'.⁴⁶ Essentially the aim is to find the 'common will' of the parties, a concept which includes consideration of the subsequent conduct of the parties.⁴⁷ Since many of the boundary treaties that need to be interpreted long pre-date the coming into force of the Vienna Convention,⁴⁸ the problem of the applicability of its provisions has arisen. Courts have taken the view that the Convention in this respect at least represents customary international law, thus apparently obviating the problem.⁴⁹

More generally, the difficulty in seeking to interpret both general concepts and geographical locations used in early treaties in the light of modern scientific knowledge has posed difficulties. In the Botswana/Namibia case, the Court, faced with the problem of identifying the 'main channel' of the River Chobe in the light of an 1890 treaty, emphasised that 'the present-day state of scientific knowledge' could be used in order to illuminate terms of that treaty.⁵⁰ In the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, the Boundary Commission referred to the principle of contemporaneity, by which it meant that a treaty should be interpreted by reference to the circumstances prevailing when the treaty was concluded. In particular, the determination of a geographical name (whether of a place or of a river) depended upon the contemporary understanding of the location to which that name related at the time of the treaty. However, in seeking to understand what that was, reference to subsequent practice and to the objects of the treaty was often required.⁵¹ In interpreting a boundary treaty, in particular in seeking to resolve ambiguities, the subsequent practice of the parties will be relevant. Even where such subsequent practice cannot in the circumstances constitute an authoritative interpretation of the treaty, it may be deemed to 'be useful' in the process of specifying the frontier in question.⁵² However, where the boundary line as specified in the pertinent instrument is clear, it cannot be changed by a court in the process of interpreting delimitation provisions.⁵³

Like boundary treaties, boundary awards may also constitute roots or sources of legal title to territory.⁵⁴ A decision by the International Court or arbitral tribunal allocating title to a particular territory or determining the boundary line as between two states will constitute establishment or confirmation of title that will be binding upon the parties themselves and for all practical purposes upon all states in the absence of maintained protest.⁵⁵ It is also possible

⁴⁶ Libya/Chad, pp. 21–2.

⁴⁷ See the Argentina/Chile Frontier Award (La Palena) 38 ILR, pp. 10, 89 and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, decision of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34. See also, with regard to acquiescence, below, p. 382.

⁴⁸ See article 4 providing that the Convention applies only to treaties concluded after the coming into force of the Convention itself (27 January 1980).

⁴⁹ See e.g. Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 21–2; the Beagle Channel case, 52 ILR, pp. 93, 124 and the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1059–60. But cf. the Separate Opinion of Judge Oda, ibid., p. 1118. See also D. W. Greig, Intertemporality and the Law of Treaties, British Institute of International and Comparative Law, 2001, pp. 108 ff.

⁵⁰ ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1060. But see here the Declaration of Judge Higgins noting that the task of the Court was to 'decide what general idea the parties had in mind, and then make reality of that general idea through the use of contemporary knowledge' rather than to decide in abstracto 'by a mechanistic appreciation of relevant indicia', ibid., p. 1114. See also the Argentina/Chile Award (La Laguna del Desierto) 113 ILR, pp. 1, 76. In the Cameroon v. Nigeria case, the Court, in seeking to determine the location of the mouth of the River Ebeji, emphasised that 'the Court must seek to ascertain the intention of the parties at the time', ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 346.

⁵¹ Decision of 13 April 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34. ⁵² Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 345.

⁵³ Ibid., p. 370. ⁵⁴ See e.g. Verzijl, International Law, pp. 378–81. See also Brownlie's Principles, p. 229.

⁵⁵ See e.g. the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 401; 97 ILR, p. 112.

that boundary allocation decisions that do not constitute international judicial or arbitral awards may be binding, providing that it can be shown that the parties consented to the initial decision.⁵⁶

Accretion⁵⁷

This describes the geographical process by which new land is formed and becomes attached to existing land, as for example the creation of islands in a river mouth or the change in direction of a boundary river leaving dry land where it had formerly flowed. Where new land comes into being within the territory of a state, it forms part of the territory of the state and there is no problem. When, for example, an island emerged in the Pacific after an under-sea volcano erupted in January 1986, the UK government noted that: 'We understand the island emerged within the territorial sea of the Japanese island of Iwo Jima. We take it therefore to be Japanese territory.'⁵⁸

As regards a change in the course of a river forming a boundary, a different situation is created depending on whether it is imperceptible and slight or a violent shift (avulsion). In the latter case, the general rule is that the boundary stays at the same point along the original river bed.⁵⁹ However, where a gradual move has taken place the boundary may be shifted.⁶⁰ If the river is navigable, the boundary will be the middle of the navigable channel, whatever slight alterations have occurred, while if the river is not navigable the boundary will continue to be the middle of the river itself. This aspect of acquiring territory is relatively unimportant in international law but these rules have been applied in a number of cases involving disputes between particular states of the United States of America.⁶¹

Cession⁶²

This involves the peaceful transfer of territory from one sovereign to another (with the intention that sovereignty should pass) and has often taken place within the framework of a peace treaty following a war. Indeed the orderly transference of sovereignty by agreement from a colonial or ⁵⁶ See e.g. the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 577 (where the Court of Arbitration termed such procedures 'administrative decisions', ibid.) and Qatar/Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 75 ff.

⁵⁷ See e.g. C. C. Hyde, International Law, 2nd edn, Boston, 1947, vol. I, pp. 355–6; O'Connell, International Law, pp. 428–30; and Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 696–8.

⁵⁸ 478 HL Deb., col. 1005, Written Answer, 17 July 1986. See also A. J. Day, Border and Territorial Disputes, 2nd edn, London, 1987, p. 277, regarding a new island appearing after a cyclone in 1970 on a river boundary between India and Bangladesh. Title is disputed. See also Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309; 91 ILR, p. 439.

⁵⁹ See e.g. Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309, 334; 91 ILR, pp. 439, 458. See also the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 546.

⁶⁰ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 546.

⁶¹ See e.g. The Anna 5 C.Rob. 373 (1805); Arkansas v. Tennessee 246 US 158 (1918); Louisiana v. Mississippi 282 US 458 (1940); Georgia v. South Carolina 111 L.Ed.2d 309; 91 ILR, p. 439; and the Chamizal arbitration, 5 AJIL, 1911, p. 782. See also E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-Al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, pp. 208, 216; L. J. Bouchez, 'The Fixing of Boundaries in International Boundary Rivers', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 789; S. McCaffrey, The Law of International Watercourses, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2007; J. Moussa, 'Implications of the Indus Water Kishenganga Arbitration for the International Law of Watercourses and the Environment', 64 ICLQ, 2015, p. 697; Indus Water Kishenganga Arbitration (Pakistan v. India) (Partial Award), Permanent Court of Arbitration, 2013; and the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, p. 1045.

⁶² See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 679–86, and O'Connell, International Law, pp. 436–40.

administering power to representatives of the indigenous population could be seen as a form of cession.

Cession has the effect of replacing one sovereign by another⁶³ over a particular piece of territory, so the acquiring state cannot possess more rights over the land than its predecessor had. This is an important point, so that where a third state has certain rights, for example, of passage over the territory, the new sovereign must respect them. It is expressed in the land law phrase that the burden of obligations runs with the land, not the owner. In other words, the rights of the territorial sovereign are derived from a previous sovereign, who could not, therefore, dispose of more than he had.

This contrasts with, for example, accretion, which is treated as an original title, there having been no previous legal sovereign over the land.

The Island of Palmas case⁶⁴ emphasised this point. It concerned a dispute between the United States and the Netherlands. The claims of the United States were based on an 1898 treaty with Spain, which involved the cession of the island. It was emphasised by the arbitrator and accepted by the parties that Spain could not thereby convey to the Americans greater rights than it itself possessed.

The basis of cession lies in the intention of the relevant parties to transfer sovereignty over the territory in question.⁶⁵ Without this it cannot legally operate. Whether an actual delivery of the property is also required for a valid cession is less certain. It will depend on the circumstances of the case. For example, Austria ceded Venice to France in 1866, and that state within a few weeks ceded the territory to Italy. The cession to the Italian state through France was nonetheless valid.⁶⁶ In the Iloilo case,⁶⁷ it was held that the cession of the Philippines to the United States took place, on the facts of the case, upon the ratification of the Treaty of Paris of 1898, even though American troops had taken possession of the town of Iloilo two months prior to this.

Although instances of cession usually occur in an agreement following the conclusion of hostilities,⁶⁸ it can be accomplished in other circumstances, such as the purchase of Alaska by the United States in 1867 from Russia or the sale by Denmark of territories in the West Indies in 1916 to the United States. It may also appear in exchanges of territories or pure gifts of territory.⁶⁹

⁶³ See Christian v. The Queen [2006] UKPC 47, para. 11; 130 ILR 696, 700, 711, where the Privy Council noted that cession 'contemplates a transfer of sovereignty by one sovereign power to another'.

⁶⁴ 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

⁶⁵ Sovereignty over the territorial sea contiguous to and the airspace above the territory concerned would pass with the land territory: see the Grisbadarna case, 11 RIAA, p. 147 (1909) and the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93. This suggests the corollary that a cession of the territorial sea or airspace would include the relevant land territory: see Oppenheim's International Law, p. 680.

⁶⁶ See Oppenheim's International Law, p. 681. Note also that in 1859 Austria ceded Lombardy to France, which then ceded it to Sardinia without having taken possession: see O'Connell, International Law, p. 438. Cf. The Fama 5 C.Rob. 106, 115 (1804).

⁶⁷ 4 RIAA, p. 158 (1925); 3 AD, p. 336.

⁶⁸ Note now that article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 provides that a treaty is void if its conclusion has been procured by the threat or use of force in violation of the principles of international law embodied in the Charter of the United Nations. However, prior treaties of cession are subject to the rule of intertemporal law: see below, p. 377.

⁶⁹ See, for further examples, Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 681–2.

Conquest and the Use of Force

How far a title based on force can be regarded as a valid, legal right recognisable by other states and enforceable within the international system is a crucial question. Ethical considerations are relevant and the principle that an illegal act cannot give birth to a right in law is well established in municipal law and is an essential component of an orderly society.

However, international law sometimes has to modify its reactions to the consequences of successful violations of its rules to take into account the exigencies of reality. The international community has accepted the results of illegal aggression in many cases by virtue of recognition.

Conquest, the act of defeating an opponent and occupying all or part of its territory, does not of itself constitute a basis of title to the land.⁷⁰ It does give the victor certain rights under international law as regards the territory, the rights of belligerent occupation,⁷¹ but the territory remains subject to the legal title of the ousted sovereign.⁷² Sovereignty as such does not merely pass by conquest to the occupying forces, although complex situations may arise where the legal status of the territory occupied is, in fact, in dispute prior to the conquest.⁷³

Conquest, of course, may result from a legal or an illegal use of force. By the Kellogg–Briand Pact of 1928, war was outlawed as an instrument of national policy, and by article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter all member states must refrain from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state. However, force will be legitimate when exercised in self-defence.⁷⁴ Whatever the circumstances, it is not the successful use of violence that in international law constituted the valid method of acquiring territory. Under the classical rules, formal annexation of territory following upon an act of conquest would operate to pass title. It was a legal fiction employed to mask the conquest and transform it into a valid method of obtaining land under international law.⁷⁵ However, it is doubtful whether an annexation proclaimed while war is still in progress would have operated to pass a good title to territory. Only after a war is concluded could the juridical status of the disputed territory be finally determined. This follows from the rule that has developed to the effect that the control over the relevant territory by the state purporting to annex must be effective and that there must be no reasonable chance of the former sovereign regaining the land.

These points were emphasised by the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal after the Second World War, in discussing the various purported German annexations of 1939 and 1940. The Tribunal firmly declared that annexations taking place before the conclusion of a war were ineffective and invalid in international law.⁷⁶ Intention to annex was a crucial aspect of the equation so that, for example, the conquest of Germany by the Allies in 1945 did not give rise to an implied

⁷⁰ Ibid., p. 699. See also S. Korman, The Right of Conquest, Oxford, 1996.

⁷¹ See e.g. M. S. McDougal and F. P. Feliciano, Law and Minimum World Public Order, New Haven, 1961, pp. 733–6 and 739–44; and J. Stone, Legal Controls of International Conflict, London, 1959, pp. 744–51. See also E. Benveniste, The International Law of Occupation, Princeton, 1993.

⁷² See generally The Arab–Israeli Conflict (ed. J. N. Moore), Princeton, 4 vols., 1974–89.

⁷³ But cf. Y. Blum, 'The Missing Reversioner', in ibid., vol. II, p. 287.

⁷⁴ See article 51 of the UN Charter and below, chapter 19.

⁷⁵ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 699. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 431–6.

⁷⁶ O'Connell, International Law, p. 436. See also e.g. Re Goering 13 AD, p. 203 (1946).

annexation by virtue of the legislative control actually exercised (as it could have done) because the Allies had specifically ruled out such a course in a joint declaration.⁷⁷ It is, however, clear today that the acquisition of territory by force alone is illegal under international law. This may be stated in view of article 2(4) of the UN Charter and other practice. Security Council resolution 242, for example, emphasised the ‘inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war’, while the 1970 Declaration of Principles of International Law adopted by the UN General Assembly provides that:

the territory of a state shall not be the object of acquisition by another state resulting from the threat or use of force. No territorial acquisition resulting from the threat or use of force shall be recognised as legal.⁷⁸

In Security Council resolution 662 (1990), adopted unanimously, the Council decided that the declared Iraqi annexation of Kuwait ‘under any form and whatever pretext has no legal validity and is considered null and void’. All states and institutions were called upon not to recognise the annexation and to refrain from actions which might be interpreted as indirect recognition.⁷⁹

Acquisition of territory following an armed conflict would require further action of an international nature in addition to domestic legislation to annex. Such further necessary action would be in the form either of a treaty of cession by the former sovereign or of international recognition.⁸⁰

The Exercise of Effective Control

It is customary in the literature to treat the modes of occupation and prescription as separate categories. However, there are several crucial factors that link the concepts, so that the acquisition of territory by virtue of these methods, based as they are upon the exercise of effective control, is best examined within the same broad framework. The traditional definition of these two modes will be noted first.

Occupation is a method of acquiring territory which belongs to no one (terra nullius) and which may be acquired by a state in certain situations. The occupation must be by a state and not by private individuals, it must be effective and it must be intended as a claim of sovereignty over the area. The high seas cannot be occupied in this manner for they are res communis, but vacant land may be subjected to the sovereignty of a claimant state. It relates primarily to uninhabited territories and islands, but may also apply to certain inhabited lands.

The issue was raised in the Western Sahara case before the International Court of Justice.⁸¹ The question was asked as to whether the territory in question had been terra nullius at the time of ⁷⁷ Cmd 6648 (1945). See also Oppenheim’s International Law, pp. 699–700.

⁷⁸ See also article 5(3) of the Consensus Definition of Aggression adopted in 1974 by the UN General Assembly. Similarly, by article 52 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, a treaty providing for the transfer of territory may be void for duress.

⁷⁹ See The Kuwait Crisis: Basic Documents (ed. E. Lauterpacht, C. Greenwood, M. Weller and D. Bethlehem), Cambridge, 1991, p. 90.

⁸⁰ See, for example, Security Council resolution 497 (1981), condemning Israel’s decision to extend its laws, jurisdiction and administration to the occupied Golan Heights. The UN has also condemned Israel’s policy of establishing settlements in the occupied territories: see e.g. Security Council resolution 465 (1980). See further below, chapter 20, with regard to self-determination and the use of force.

⁸¹ ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14. See also M. N. Shaw, ‘The Western Sahara case’, 49 BYIL, 1978, pp. 119, 127–34.

colonisation. It was emphasised by the Court that the concept of terra nullius was a legal term of art used in connection with the mode of acquisition of territory known as 'occupation'.⁸² The latter mode was defined legally as an original means of peaceably acquiring sovereignty over territory otherwise than by cession or succession.⁸³ In an important statement, the Court unambiguously asserted that the state practice of the relevant period (i.e. the period of colonisation) indicated that territories inhabited by tribes or peoples having a social and political organisation were not regarded as terrae nullius.⁸⁴ Further, international case-law has recognised that sovereign title may be suspended for a period of time in circumstances that do not lead to the status of terra nullius. Such indeterminacy could be resolved by the relevant parties at a relevant time.⁸⁵

In fact, the majority of territories brought under European control were regarded as acquired by means of cessions, especially in Asia and Africa.⁸⁶ This raised the question of the status of the ceding parties for, with very few exceptions, these territories were not regarded in nineteenth-century international law as states.⁸⁷ However, practice demonstrates that the indigenous entities were regarded as having the capacity in international law to cede all or part of their territory by way of signed agreements with the colonial powers. This appears clearly from Cameroon v. Nigeria,⁸⁸ where the International Court of Justice declared that in sub-Saharan Africa in particular 'treaties termed "treaties of protection" were entered into not with states, but rather with important indigenous rulers exercising local rule over identifiable areas of territory' and reaffirmed the view expressed in the Western Sahara opinion that 'agreements concluded with local rulers . . . were regarded as derivative roots of title'.⁸⁹ It should be noted that personality and title are two different concepts in international law. The fact that a tribe or people possessed sufficient personality to preclude acquisition of its territory by European powers by virtue of occupation of terra nullius and thus necessitated a process of cession (or, much more rarely, conquest) for such an end to be achieved is not the same as saying that such a tribe was sovereign or a state as that term was recognised under the international law of the time, just as the existence of links between groups and a ruler did not necessarily amount to ties of territorial sovereignty. Accordingly, international law, for a period, was prepared to accept an intermediate stage between statehood and a situation of terra nullius, this stage providing that a socially or politically organised entity could enter into an agreement which could form the basis of a derivative title to territorial sovereignty, such title being recognised forthwith through the application of intertemporal law, for, as the Court underlined in Cameroon V. Nigeria, 'the ⁸² ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 39; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 56. ⁸³ Ibid.

⁸⁴ Ibid. This ran counter to some writers of the period: see e.g. M. F. Lindley, The Acquisition and Government of Backward Territory in International Law, London, 1926, pp. 11–20; J. Westlake, Chapters on the Principles of International Law, London, 1894, pp. 141–2; Jennings, Acquisition, p. 20; and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 687, footnote 4.

⁸⁵ See Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 51. See also N. S. M. Antunes, 'The Eritrea-Yemen Arbitration: First Stage – The Law of Title to Territory Re-averred', 48 ICLQ, 1999, p. 362, and A. Yannis, 'The Concept of Suspended Sovereignty in International Law and Its Implications in International Politics', 13 EJIL, 2002, p. 1037.

⁸⁶ See Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 1, and C. H. Alexandrowicz, The European-African Confrontation, Leiden, 1973.

⁸⁷ See e.g. M. Hébié, Souveraineté Territoriale Par Traité, Geneva, 2015, and M. N. Shaw, 'Acquisition of Territory in Nineteenth Century Africa: Some Thoughts', in Common Values in International Law: Essays in Honour of Christian Tomuschat (ed. P.-M. Dupuy, B. Fassbender, M. N. Shaw and K. P. Sommermann), Kehl, 2006, p. 1029.

⁸⁸ ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 404–5.

⁸⁹ Ibid., citing ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 39. See also Island of Palmas, 2 RIAA, pp. 858–9.

principle of intertemporal law requires that the legal consequences of the treaties concluded at that time . . . be given effect today'.⁹⁰

However, there were instances of title by occupation, for example Australia, and many sparsely inhabited islands.

Occupation, both in the normal sense of the word and in its legal meaning, was often preceded by discovery, that is the realisation of the existence of a particular piece of land.⁹¹ But mere realisation or sighting was never considered (except for periods in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and this is not undisputed) as sufficient to constitute title to territory. Something more was required and this took the form of a symbolic act of taking possession, whether it be by the raising of flags or by solemn proclamations or by more sophisticated ritual expressions. As time passed, the conditions changed and the arbitrator in the Island of Palmas case pointed to the modern effect of discovery as merely giving an inchoate title which had to be completed within a reasonable time by the effective occupation of the relevant region. Discovery only put other states on notice that the claimant state had a prior interest in the territory, which, to become legally meaningful, had to be supplemented by effective occupation within a certain period.⁹²

Prescription⁹³ is a mode of establishing title to territory which is not terra nullius and which has been obtained either unlawfully or in circumstances wherein the legality of the acquisition cannot be demonstrated. It is the legitimisation of a doubtful title by the passage of time and the presumed acquiescence of the former sovereign, and it reflects the need for stability felt within the international system by recognising that territory in the possession of a state for a long period of time and uncontested cannot be taken away from that state without serious consequences for the international order. It is the legitimisation of a fact. If it were not for some such doctrine, the title of many states to their territory would be jeopardised.⁹⁴ The International Court in the Botswana/Namibia case, while making no determination of its own, noted that the two parties were agreed that acquisitive prescription was recognised in international law and further agreed on the criteria to be satisfied for the establishment of such a title, viz. the possession must be à titre de souverain, peaceful and uninterrupted, public and endure for a certain length of time. The Court did not contradict this position.⁹⁵

⁹⁰ ICJ Reports, 2002, para. 205. See also the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 845; the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53 at p. 46; Libya/Chad, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37; and R. Higgins, 'Time and the Law: International Perspectives on an Old Problem', 46 ICLQ, 1997, p. 501.

⁹¹ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 689–90, and F. A. F. Von der Heydte, 'Discovery, Symbolic Annexation and Virtual Effectiveness in International Law', 29 AJIL, 1935, p. 448. See also A. S. Keller, O. J. Lissitzyn and F. J. Mann, Creation of Rights of Sovereignty Through Symbolic Acts, 1400–1800, New York, 1938, and H. Hu, 'The Doctrine of Occupation: An Analysis of its Invalidity under the Framework of International Legal Positivism', 15 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2016, p. 75.

⁹² 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 846 (1928); 4 AD, pp. 103, 108.

⁹³ See generally e.g. D. H. Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription in International Law', 27 BYIL, 1950, p. 332, and H. Post, 'International Law Between Dominion and Imperium', in Reflections on Principles and Practice of International Law (ed. T. D. Gill and W. P. Heere), The Hague, 2000, p. 147. See also J. Wouters and S. Verhoeven, 'Prescription', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2008.

⁹⁴ As noted in the Grisbadarna case, 'it is a settled principle of the law of nations that a state of things which actually exists and has existed for a long time should be changed as little as possible', J. B. Scott, Hague Court Reports, New York, 1916, vol. I, pp. 121, 130.

⁹⁵ ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1101 ff.

Prescription differs from occupation in that it relates to territory which has previously been under the sovereignty of a state. In spite of this, both concepts are similar in that they may require evidence of sovereign acts by a state over a period of time. And although distinct in theory, in practice these concepts are often indistinct since sovereignty over an area may lapse and give rise to doubts whether an abandonment has taken place,⁹⁶ rendering the territory terra nullius.

In fact, most cases do not fall into such clear theoretical categories as occupation or prescription. Particular modes of acquisition that can be unambiguously related to the classic definitions tend not to be specified. Most cases involve contesting claims by states, where both (or possibly all) the parties have performed some sovereign acts. As in the instance of occupation, so prescription too requires that the possession forming the basis of the title must be by virtue of the authority of the state or à titre de souverain, and not a manifestation of purely individual effort unrelated to the state's sovereign claims. And this possession must be public so that all interested states can be made aware of it.

This latter requirement also flows logically from the necessity for the possession to be peaceful and uninterrupted, and reflects the vital point that prescription rests upon the implied consent of the former sovereign to the new state of affairs. This means that protests by the dispossessed sovereign may completely block any prescriptive claim.⁹⁷

In the Chamizal arbitration⁹⁸ between the United States and Mexico, the Rio Grande River forming the border between the parties changed course and the United States claimed the ground between the old and the new river beds partly on the basis of peaceful and uninterrupted possession. This claim was dismissed in view of the constant protests by Mexico and in the light of a Convention signed by both parties that there existed a dispute as to the boundary which had to be resolved. The fact that Mexico did not go to war over the issue was not of itself sufficient to make the possession of the tract of land by the United States peaceful.

Thus acquiescence in the case of prescription, whether express or implied from all the relevant circumstances, is essential, whereas in the case of occupation it is merely an evidential point reinforcing the existence of an effective occupation, but not constituting the essence of the legal claim.

Precisely what form the protest is to take is open to question but resort to force is not acceptable in modern international law, especially since the 1928 Kellogg–Briand Pact and article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter.⁹⁹ The bringing of a matter before the United Nations or the International Court of Justice will be conclusive as to the existence of the dispute and thus of the reality of the protests, but diplomatic protests will probably be sufficient. This, however, is not accepted by all academic writers, and it may well be that in serious disputes further steps should be taken such as severing diplomatic relations or proposing arbitration or judicial ⁹⁶ For abandonment of territory, the fact of the loss plus the intention to abandon is required. This is very rare: see e.g. the Delagoa Bay case, C. Parry, British Digest of International Law, Cambridge, 1965, vol. V, p. 535, and the Frontier Land case, ICJ Reports, 1959, p. 209; 27 ILR, p. 62.

⁹⁷ See Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription', pp. 343–8.

⁹⁸ 5 AJIL 1911, p. 782. See also the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 106–8; 20 ILR, pp. 94, 142–4.

⁹⁹ See above, p. 371, and below, chapter 19.

settlement.¹⁰⁰ What is clear is that anything less than sustained and credible protests may well risk the title of the dispossessed party.

The requirement of a 'reasonable period' of possession is similarly imprecise and it is not possible to point to any defined length of time.¹⁰¹ It will depend, as so much else, upon all the circumstances of the case, including the nature of the territory and the absence or presence of any competing claims.

In the Minquiers and Ecrehos case,¹⁰² concerning disputed sovereignty over a group of islets and rocks in the English Channel, claimed by both France and the United Kingdom, the International Court of Justice exhaustively examined the history of the region since 1066. However, its decision was based primarily on relatively recent acts relating to the exercise of jurisdiction and local administration as well as the nature of legislative enactments referable to the territory in question. And upon these grounds, British sovereignty was upheld. The sovereign acts of the United Kingdom relating to the islets far outweighed any such activities by the French authorities and accordingly the claims of the latter were dismissed.

As in other cases, judgment was given not on the basis of clearly defined categories of occupation or prescription, but rather in the light of the balance of competing state activities.

De Visscher has attempted to render the theoretical classifications more consonant with the practical realities by the introduction of the concept of historical consolidation.¹⁰³ This idea is founded on proven long use, which reflects a complex of interests and relations resulting in the acquisition of territory (including parts of the sea). Such a grouping of interests and relations is considered by the courts in reaching a decision as of more importance than the mere passage of time, and historical consolidation may apply to terra nullius as well as to territories previously occupied. Thus it can be distinguished from prescription. It differs from occupation in that the concept has relevance to the acquisition of parts of the sea, as well as of land. And it may be brought into existence not only by acquiescence and consent, but also by the absence of protest over a reasonable period by relevant states.¹⁰⁴

However, de Visscher's discussion, based on the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,¹⁰⁵ does fail to note the important distinction between the acquisition of territory in accordance with the rules of international law, and the acquisition of territory as a permitted exception to the generally accepted legal principles. The passage in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case relied upon¹⁰⁶ is really concerned with general acquiescence with regard to a maritime area, while the criticism has been made¹⁰⁷ that de Visscher has over-emphasised the aspect of 'complex of interests and relations which in themselves have the effect of attaching a territory or an expanse of sea to a given state'.¹⁰⁸ Effectiveness, therefore, rather than consolidation would ¹⁰⁰ See e.g. Johnson, 'Acquisitive Prescription', pp. 353–4, and I. MacGibbon, 'Some Observations on the Part of Protest in International Law', 30 BYIL, 1953, p. 293.

¹⁰¹ In the British Guiana and Venezuela Boundary case, the parties agreed to adopt a fifty-year adverse holding rule, 89 BFSP, 1896, p. 57.

¹⁰² ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94.

¹⁰³ Theory and Reality in Public International Law, 1968, p. 209. See below, p. 386. ¹⁰⁴ Ibid.

¹⁰⁵ ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 138; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 100. ¹⁰⁶ Ibid.

¹⁰⁷ See Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 25–6. See also D. H. Johnson, 'Consolidation as a Root of Title in International Law', Cambridge Law Journal, 1955, pp. 215, 223.

¹⁰⁸ De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 209, emphasis added. See further below, p. 386.

be the appropriate term. Both occupation and prescription rely primarily upon effective possession and control. The element of time is here also relevant as it affects the effectiveness of control.

Intertemporal Law¹⁰⁹

One question that arises is the problem of changing conditions related to particular principles of international law, in other words the relevant time period at which to ascertain the legal rights and obligations in question. This can cause considerable difficulties since a territorial title may be valid under, for example, sixteenth-century legal doctrines but ineffective under nineteenth-century developments. The general rule in such circumstances is that in a dispute the claim or situation in question (or relevant treaty, for example)¹¹⁰ has to be examined according to the conditions and rules in existence at the time it was made and not at a later date. This meant, for example, that in the Island of Palmas case,¹¹¹ the Spanish claim to title by discovery, which the United States declared it had inherited, had to be tested in the light of international legal principles in the sixteenth century when the discovery was made. This aspect of the principle is predicated upon a presumption of, and need for, stability.¹¹²

But it was also noted in this case that while the creation of particular rights was dependent upon the international law of the time, the continued existence of such rights depended upon their according with the evolving conditions of a developing legal system, although this stringent test would not be utilised in the case of territories with an 'established order of things'.¹¹³ This proviso has in practice been carefully and flexibly interpreted within the context of all the relevant rules relating to the acquisition of territory, including recognition and acquiescence.¹¹⁴ However, the Court in the Aegean Sea Continental Shelf case¹¹⁵ declared that the phrase 'disputes relating to the territorial status of Greece' contained in a Greek reservation to the 1928 Kellogg-Briand Pact had to be interpreted 'in accordance with the rules of international law as they exist today, and not as they existed in 1931'. The evolution of international law concerning the continental shelf, therefore, had to be considered, so that the territorial status of Greece was taken to include its continental shelf, although that concept was completely unknown in the 1920s. How far this aspect of the principle of international law

¹⁰⁹ See e.g. the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 38–9; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 55. See also Shaw, 'Western Sahara Case', pp. 152–3; Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 28–31; T. O. Elias, 'The Doctrine of Intertemporal Law', 74 AJLL, 1980, p. 285; Brownlie, Principles, pp. 124–5; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 1281–2; G. Fitzmaurice, The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, Cambridge, 1986, vol. I, p. 135; and H. Thirlway, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice 1960–1989 (Part One)', 60 BYIL, 1989, pp. 4, 128. See also R. Higgins, 'Time and the Law: International Perspectives on an Old Problem', 46 ICLQ, 1997, p. 501; Greig, Intertemporality.

¹¹⁰ See e.g. the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, pp. 6, 37; 31 ILR, pp. 23, 50 and above, p. 69.

¹¹¹ 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 845 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

¹¹² See e.g. Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 46 and 115; Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 2002, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 34; and Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 303, 404–5.

¹¹³ 2 RIAA, pp. 839–45. See P. Jessup, 'The Palmas Island Arbitration', 22 AJLL, 1928, p. 735. See also M. Sørensen, 'Le Problème Dit du Droit Intertemporal dans l'Ordre International', Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, Basle, 1973, pp. 4 ff., and subsequent discussions, ibid., at pp. 50 ff.; and the Resolution adopted by the Institut de Droit International, Annuaire de l'Institut de Droit International, 1975, pp. 536 ff.

¹¹⁴ Note that the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law provides that the concept of non-acquisition of territory by force was not to be affected inter alia by any international agreement made prior to the Charter and valid under international law.

¹¹⁵ ICJ Reports, 1978, pp. 3, 33–4; 60 ILR, pp. 562, 592. See Elias, 'Intertemporal Law', pp. 296 ff. See also the Indian argument regarding the invalidity of Portugal's title to Goa, SCOR, S/PV-987, 11, 18 December 1961.

may be extended is highly controversial. The better view is to see it as one element in the bundle of factors relevant to the determination of effective control, but one that must be applied with care.¹¹⁶

Critical Date

In certain situations there may exist a determining moment at which it might be inferred that the rights of the parties have crystallised so that acts after that date cannot alter the legal position.¹¹⁷ Such a moment might be the date of a particular treaty where its provisions are at issue¹¹⁸ or the date of occupation of territory.¹¹⁹ It is not correct that there will or should always be such a critical date in territorial disputes, but, where there is, acts undertaken after that date will not be taken into consideration, unless such acts are a normal continuation of prior acts and are not undertaken for the purpose of improving the legal position of the party relying on them.¹²⁰

The concept of a critical date is of especial relevance with regard to the doctrine of uti possidetis, which posits that a new state has the boundaries of the predecessor entity, so that the moment of independence itself is invariably the critical date.¹²¹ This does not preclude the possibility that the relevant territorial situation or rights had crystallised at an earlier time, in the sense of having become established and not altered subsequently.¹²² Where there is more than one state involved, then the date of later independence¹²³ or possibly the dates of the independence of the respective states,¹²⁴ may be taken depending on the circumstances.¹²⁵ Further, it is possible for there to be different critical dates for different circumstances (for example, land and maritime disputes within the same case).¹²⁶ However, the date of independence may simply mark the date of succession to boundaries which have been established with binding force by earlier instruments.¹²⁷

The moment of independence may not be 'critical' for these purposes for several possible reasons. There may be a dispute between the parties as to whether the date of independence or the ¹¹⁶ See, as to time and the interpretation of treaties, above, p. 367.

¹¹⁷ L. F. E. Goldie, 'The Critical Date', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 1251. See also G. Fitzmaurice, 'The Law and Procedure of the International Court of Justice, 1951-4: Points of Substance, Part II', 32 BYIL, 1955-6, p. 20; Y. Blum, Historic Titles in International Law, The Hague, 1965, pp. 208-22; and Brownlie's Principles, p. 219. See also M. N. Shaw, 'The Heritage of States: The Principle of Uti Possidetis Juris Today', 67 BYIL, 1996, pp. 75, 130, and Shaw, 'Title, Control and Closure? The Experience of the Eritrea-Ethiopia Boundary Commission', 56 ICLQ, 2007, pp. 755, 760 ff.

¹¹⁸ See e.g. the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, p. 845.

¹¹⁹ See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, p. 45.

¹²⁰ See the Indonesia/Malaysia case, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682; Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 697-8; and Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 652, 653 and 657. See also Argentina/Chile 38 ILR, pp. 10, 79-80, and Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 27-8.

¹²¹ The Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 568; 80 ILR, p. 440. See also Burkina Faso/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2013, pp. 44, 79. This may be reinforced by the terms of the compromis itself. For example, in the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, the parties referred specifically to the principle of respect for borders existing at the moment of independence, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 43, and see further below, p. 391.

¹²² Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 1, 102-3. ¹²³ Ibid., p. 43.

¹²⁴ See the Benin/Niger case, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 120. See also the views of the Arbitration Commission of the Conference on Yugoslavia in Opinion No. 11 as to the varying dates of succession (and independence) of the successor states of the Former Yugoslavia: see 96 ILR, pp. 719, 722.

¹²⁵ See the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 590-4 for examples of where the concept was held to be of little or no practical value.

¹²⁶ See e.g. Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 697 ff.

¹²⁷ As in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 6; 100 ILR, p. 1.

date of the last exercise of jurisdiction for administrative organisational purposes by the former sovereign is the more appropriate date¹²⁸ or the uti possidetis line may in some circumstances only be determined upon a consideration of materials appearing later than the date of independence,¹²⁹ or such a 'critical date' may have been moved to a later date than that of independence by a subsequent treaty¹³⁰ or by an adjudication award.¹³¹ The importance of the critical date concept, thus, is relative and depends entirely upon the circumstances of the case.¹³²

Sovereign Activities (Effectivités)

The exercise of effective authority, therefore, is the crucial element. As Huber argued, 'the actual continuous and peaceful display of state functions is in case of dispute the sound and natural criterion of territorial sovereignty'.¹³³

However, control, although needing to be effective, does not necessarily have to amount to possession and settlement of all of the territory claimed. Precisely what acts of sovereignty are necessary to found title will depend in each instance upon all the relevant circumstances of the case, including the nature of the territory involved, the amount of opposition (if any) that such acts on the part of the claimant state have aroused, and international reaction.

Indeed in international law many titles will be deemed to exist not as absolute but as relative concepts. The state succeeding in its claim for sovereignty over terra nullius over the claims of other states will in most cases have proved not an absolute title, but one relatively better than that maintained by competing states and one that may take into account issues such as geography and international responses.¹³⁴ The Court noted in the Eastern Greenland case that 'It is impossible to read the records of the decisions in cases as to territorial sovereignty without observing that in many cases the tribunal has been satisfied with very little in the way of the actual exercise of sovereign rights, provided that the other state could not make out a superior claim. This is particularly true in the case of claims to sovereignty over areas in thinly populated or unsettled countries'.¹³⁵ However, the arbitral tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen emphasised that the issue did not ¹²⁸ See the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440.

¹²⁹ See the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 56 ff.; 97 ILR, p. 112.

¹³⁰ See the Beagle Channel case, 21 RIAA, pp. 55, 82–3; 52 ILR, p. 93.

¹³¹ The El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 401; 97 ILR, p. 112. See also the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the Separate Opinion of Judge Ajibola, the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 91; 100 ILR, p. 1.

¹³² See e.g. the Burkina Faso/Mali case, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 570; 80 ILR, p. 440, for an example where the concept was held to be of little or no practical value. A similar view was taken in the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 590–4 and the Eritrea/Yemen Arbitration 114 ILR, pp. 1, 32.

¹³³ 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 840 (1928). The Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen noted that 'The modern international law of the acquisition (or attribution) of territory generally requires that there be: an intentional display of power and authority over the territory, by the exercise of jurisdiction and state functions, on a continuous and peaceful basis', 114 ILR, pp. 1, 69. See also R. O'Keefe, 'Legal Title versus Effectivités', 13 International Community Law Review, 2011, p. 147.

¹³⁴ See the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 840 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103. See also the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95; the Clipperton Island case, 26 AJIL, 1932, p. 390; 6 AD, p. 105; and the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94.

¹³⁵ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, pp. 45–6. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 100, and Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682. Note also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 35–7. See also S. Huh, 'Title to Territory in the Post-Colonial Era: Original Title and Terra Nullius in the ICJ Judgments on Cases Concerning Ligitan/Sipadan (2002) and Pedra Branca (2008)', 26 EJIL, 2015, p. 709.

turn solely upon relativity since ‘there must be some absolute minimum requirement’ for the acquisition of territorial sovereignty.¹³⁶

In the Island of Palmas arbitration¹³⁷ the dispute concerned sovereignty over a particular island in the Pacific. The United States declared that, since by a treaty of 1898 Spain had ceded to it all Spanish rights possessed in that region and since that included the island discovered by Spain, the United States of America therefore had a good title. The Netherlands, on the other hand, claimed the territory on the basis of the exercise of various rights of sovereignty over it since the seventeenth century. The arbitrator, Max Huber, in a judgment which discussed the whole nature of territorial sovereignty, dismissed the American claims derived from the Spanish discovery as not effective to found title.¹³⁸ Huber declared that the Netherlands possessed sovereignty on the basis of ‘the actual continuous and peaceful display of state functions’ evidenced by various administrative acts performed over the centuries.¹³⁹ It was also emphasised that manifestations of territorial sovereignty may assume different forms, according to conditions of time and place. Indeed, ‘the intermittence and discontinuity compatible with the maintenance of the right necessarily differ according as inhabited or uninhabited regions are involved’. Additionally, geographical factors were relevant.¹⁴⁰

The Clipperton Island arbitration¹⁴¹ concerned a dispute between France and Mexico over an uninhabited island. The arbitrator emphasised that the actual, and not the nominal, taking of possession was a necessary condition of occupation, but noted that such taking of possession may be undertaken in different ways depending upon the nature of the territory concerned. In this case, a proclamation of sovereignty by a French naval officer later published in Honolulu was deemed sufficient to create a valid title. Relevant to this decision was the weakness of the Mexican claims to the guano-rich island, as well as the uninhabited and inhospitable nature of the territory.

These two cases, together with the Eastern Greenland case,¹⁴² reveal that the effectiveness of the occupation may indeed be relative and may in certain rare circumstances be little more than symbolic.¹⁴³ In the Eastern Greenland case before the Permanent Court of International Justice, both Norway and Denmark claimed sovereignty over Eastern Greenland. Denmark had colonies in other parts of Greenland and had granted concessions in the uninhabited Eastern sector. In addition, it proclaimed that all treaties and legislation regarding Greenland covered the territory as a whole, as for example its establishment of the width of the territorial sea, and it sought to have its title to all of the territory recognised by other states. The Court felt that these acts were sufficient upon which to base a good title and were superior to various Norwegian actions such as the wintering of expeditions and the erection of a wireless station in Eastern Greenland, against ¹³⁶ 114 ILR, pp. 1, 118. Other obvious factors in such situations would include consideration of the geographical position, ibid., p. 119.

¹³⁷ 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928). ¹³⁸ Ibid., p. 846. ¹³⁹ Ibid., pp. 867–71.

¹⁴⁰ Ibid., p. 840. See also, in this context, the American claim to the Howland, Baker and Jarvis Islands in the Pacific Ocean, where it was argued that the administration of the islands as part of the US Wildlife Refuge System constituted sufficient occupation: DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 92–4.

¹⁴¹ 26 AJIL, 1932, p. 390; 6 AD, p. 105. ¹⁴² PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

¹⁴³ See also Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 629, 682, and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 712, noting that sovereignty over minor maritime features may be established ‘on the basis of a relatively modest display of state powers in terms of quality and quantity’.

which Denmark had protested. It is also to be noted that it was not until 1931 that Norway actually claimed the territory.

Such activity in establishing a claim to territory must be performed by the state in the exercise of sovereign powers (à titre de souverain)¹⁴⁴ or by individuals whose actions are subsequently ratified by their state,¹⁴⁵ or by corporations or companies permitted by the state to engage in such operations and thus performed on behalf of the sovereign.¹⁴⁶ Otherwise, any acts undertaken are of no legal consequence.¹⁴⁷ Another relevant factor, although one of uncertain strength, is the requirement of the intention by the state in performing various activities to assert claim in its sovereign capacity. In other words, the facts are created pursuant to the will of the state to acquire sovereignty. This point was stressed in the Eastern Greenland case,¹⁴⁸ but appears not to have been considered as of first importance in the Island of Palmas case¹⁴⁹ or in the Minquiers and Ecrehos case,¹⁵⁰ where concern centred upon the nature and extent of the actual actions carried out by the contending states. Whatever the precise role of this subjective element, some connection between the actions undertaken and the assertion of sovereignty is necessary.

Account will also be taken of the nature of the exercise of the sovereignty in question, so that in the Rann of Kutch case, it was noted that:

the rights and duties which by law and custom are inherent in and characteristic of sovereignty present considerable variations in different circumstances according to time and place, and in the context of various political systems.¹⁵¹

Similarly, the Court was willing to take into account the special characteristics of the Moroccan state at the relevant time in the Western Sahara case¹⁵² in the context of the display of sovereign authority, but it was the exercise of sovereignty which constituted the crucial factor. While international law does appear to accept a notion of geographical or natural unity of particular areas, whereby sovereignty exercised over a certain area will raise the presumption of title with regard to an outlying portion of the territory comprised within the claimed unity,¹⁵³ it is important not to overstate this. It operates to raise a presumption and no more and that within the wider concept of display of effective sovereignty which need not apply equally to all parts of the territory.¹⁵⁴ Neither geographical unity nor contiguity are as such sources of title with regard ¹⁴⁴ That is, those made as a 'public claim of right or assertion of sovereignty . . . as well as legislative acts', Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 69. See also the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, ICJ Reports, 1953, pp. 47, 65 and 69; 20 ILR, p. 94. Such acts need to relate clearly to the territory in question: Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 682–3. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 713–22, and Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 655.

¹⁴⁵ The Court has emphasised that 'activities by private persons cannot be seen as effectivités if they do not take place on the basis of official regulations or under governmental authority': Indonesia/Malaysia, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 683.

¹⁴⁶ Botswana/Namibia, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1105.

¹⁴⁷ See Judge McNair, the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 184; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 113; and McNair, International Law Opinions, Cambridge, 1956, vol. I, p. 21. See also O'Connell, International Law, pp. 417–19.

¹⁴⁸ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95. ¹⁴⁹ 2 RIAA, p. 829 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103.

¹⁵⁰ ICJ Reports, 1953, p. 47; 20 ILR, p. 94. ¹⁵¹ Annex I, 7 ILM, 1968, pp. 633, 674; 50 ILR, p. 2.

¹⁵² ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 43–4; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 60. See also the Dubai/Sharjah Border Arbitration, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 585–90.

¹⁵³ Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 120 ff., and see Fitzmaurice, Law and Procedure, vol. I, pp. 312 ff.

¹⁵⁴ See the Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, p. 840.

to all areas contained within the area in question, nor is the proximity of islands to the mainland determinative as such of the question of legal title.¹⁵⁵ The Tribunal in the Eritrea/Yemen case felt able to consider separately the legal situation with regard to sub-groups existing within such natural unities,¹⁵⁶ as did the Boundary Commission in the Eritrea/Ethiopia case.¹⁵⁷ However, the significance in law of state activities or effectivités will depend upon the existence or not of a legal title to the territory. Where there is such a valid legal title, this will have pre-eminence and effectivités may play a confirmatory role. However, where the effectivités are in contradiction to the title, the latter will have pre-eminence. In the absence of any legal title, then effectivités must invariably be taken into consideration, while where the legal title is not capable of exactly defining the relevant territorial limits, effectivités then play an essential role in showing how the title is interpreted in practice.¹⁵⁸ Accordingly, examples of state practice may confirm or complete but not contradict legal title established, for example, by boundary treaties.¹⁵⁹ In the absence of any clear legal title to any area, state practice comes into its own as a law-establishing mechanism. But its importance is always contextual in that it relates to the nature of the territory and the nature of competing state claims.¹⁶⁰ Relative state practice would include legislative acts or acts of administrative control, acts relating to the application and enforcement of criminal or civil law, acts regulating immigration, acts regulating fishing and other economic activities, naval patrols, and search and rescue operations,¹⁶¹ as well as the conduct of inquiries.¹⁶²

The Role of Subsequent Conduct: Recognition, Acquiescence and Estoppel

Subsequent conduct may be relevant in a number of ways: first, as a method of determining the true interpretation of the relevant boundary instrument in the sense of the intention of the parties;¹⁶³ secondly, as a method of resolving an uncertain disposition or situation, for example, whether a particular area did or did not fall within the colonial territory in question for purposes of determining the uti possidetis line;¹⁶⁴ or, thirdly, as a method of modifying such an instrument or pre-existing arrangement. The Eritrea/Ethiopia Boundary Commission explained the general principle that ‘the effect of subsequent conduct may be so clear in relation to matters that appear to be the subject of a given treaty that the application of an otherwise pertinent treaty provision may be varied, or may even cease to control the situation, regardless of its original meaning’.¹⁶⁵ The various manifestations of the subsequent conduct of relevant parties have a common foundation in that they all rest to a stronger or weaker extent upon the notion of consent.¹⁶⁶ They reflect expressly or impliedly the presumed will of a state, which in turn may in some ¹⁵⁵ See Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 708–9. ¹⁵⁶ 114 ILR, pp. 1, 120 ff.

¹⁵⁷ Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, pp. 1, 84 ff.

¹⁵⁸ Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 586–7; 80 ILR, p. 440, and the El Salvador/Honduras case where the Chamber also noted that these principles applied to both colonial and post-colonial effectivités, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 398; 97 ILR, p. 266. See also Benin/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 120, 127 and 149.

¹⁵⁹ See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 353–5.

¹⁶⁰ See also the general statement of principle in Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, pp. 1, 42. As to the role of equity in territorial disputes, see above, chapter 3, p. 78.

¹⁶¹ Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 655. ¹⁶² Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 83.

¹⁶³ See Article 31(3)(b) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969. See also the Argentina/Chile case, 38 ILR, pp. 10, 89.

¹⁶⁴ See the El Salvador/Honduras case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 401, 558 ff.

¹⁶⁵ Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, p. 35. See also Shaw, ‘Title, Control and Closure?’, pp. 776 ff.

¹⁶⁶ Consent, of course, is the basis of cession: see above, p. 369.

situations prove of great importance in the acquisition of title to territory. However, there are significant theoretical differences between the three concepts (recognition, acquiescence and estoppel), even if in practice the dividing lines are often blurred. In any event, they flow to some extent from the fundamental principles of good faith and equity.

Recognition is a positive act by a state accepting a particular situation and, even though it may be implied from all the relevant circumstances, it is nevertheless an affirmation of the existence of a specific factual state of affairs,¹⁶⁷ even if that accepted situation is inconsistent with the term in a treaty.¹⁶⁸ Acquiescence, on the other hand, occurs in circumstances where a protest is called for and does not happen¹⁶⁹ or does not happen in time in the circumstances.¹⁷⁰ In other words, a situation arises which would seem to require a response denoting disagreement and, since this does not transpire, the state making no objection is understood to have accepted the new situation.¹⁷¹ The idea of estoppel in general is that a party which has made or consented to a particular statement upon which another party relies in subsequent activity to its detriment or the other's benefit cannot thereupon change its position.¹⁷² This rests also upon the notion of preclusion.¹⁷³

While, of course, the consent of a ceding state to the cession is essential, the attitude adopted by other states is purely peripheral and will not affect the legality of the transaction. Similarly, in cases of the acquisition of title over terra nullius, the acquiescence of other states is not strictly relevant although of useful evidential effect.¹⁷⁴ However, where two or more states have asserted competing claims, the role of consent by third parties is much enhanced. In the Eastern Greenland case,¹⁷⁵ the Court noted that Denmark was entitled to rely upon treaties made with other states (apart from Norway) in so far as these were evidence of recognition of Danish sovereignty over all of Greenland.

Recognition and acquiescence are also important in cases of acquisition of control contrary to the will of the former sovereign. Where the possession of the territory is accompanied by emphatic protests on the part of the former sovereign, no title by prescription can arise, for such title is founded upon the acquiescence of the dispossessed state, and in such circumstances

¹⁶⁷ See e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 51–2; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100; and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 49–57; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 66. See also G. Schwarzenberger, 'Title to Territory: Response to a Challenge', 51 AJIL, 1957, p. 308.

¹⁶⁸ See e.g. the Taba case, 80 ILR, pp. 224, 297–8 and 306.

¹⁶⁹ See I. MacGibbon, 'The Scope of Acquiescence in International Law', 31 BYIL, 1954, p. 143. See also Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 50–1 and the joint dissenting opinion of Judges Simma and Abraham, ibid., pp. 116 ff.

¹⁷⁰ See the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 577; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 493; and Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 84.

¹⁷¹ See e.g. the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 35; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 34, where the Court noted that 'If a serious dispute had indeed existed regarding frontiers, eleven years after the conclusion of the 1955 Treaty, one would expect it to have been reflected in the 1966 Treaty.' See also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 82 ff., and Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 658–9.

¹⁷² See the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 29 ff.; 33 ILR, p. 48; the Cameroon v. Nigeria (Preliminary Objections) case, ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303; and the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 68 ff.

¹⁷³ See e.g. the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, p. 305; 71 ILR, p. 74. The Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 81–2, emphasised that a party relying on an estoppel must show, among other things, that 'it has taken distinct acts in reliance on the other party's statement'.

¹⁷⁴ Note that the Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen emphasised that 'Repute is also an important ingredient for the consolidation of title', 114 ILR, pp. 1, 136.

¹⁷⁵ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 51–2; 6 AD, pp. 95, 100.

consent by third states is of little consequence. However, over a period of time recognition may ultimately validate a defective title, although much will depend upon the circumstances, including the attitude of the former sovereign. Where the territory involved is part of the high seas (i.e. res communis), acquiescence by the generality of states may affect the subjection of any part of it to another's sovereignty, particularly by raising an estoppel.¹⁷⁶

Acquiescence and recognition¹⁷⁷ are also relevant where the prescriptive title is based on what is called immemorial possession, that is, the origin of the particular situation is shrouded in doubt and may have been lawful or unlawful but is deemed to be lawful in the light of general acquiescence by the international community or particular acquiescence by a relevant other state. Accordingly, acquiescence may constitute evidence reinforcing a title based upon effective possession and control, rendering it definitive.¹⁷⁸ In such cases, failure to protest would be particularly significant.¹⁷⁹

Estoppel is a legal technique whereby states deemed to have consented to a state of affairs cannot afterwards alter their position.¹⁸⁰ It has been noted that a party relying on estoppel must show, among other things, that it has taken distinct actions in reliance upon the other party's statement.¹⁸¹ Although it cannot found title by itself, it is of evidential and often of practical importance. Estoppel may arise either by means of a prior recognition or acquiescence, but the nature of the consenting state's interest is vital. Where, for example, two states put forward conflicting claims to territory, any acceptance by one of the other's position will serve as a bar to a renewal of contradictory assertions. This was illustrated in the Eastern Greenland case,¹⁸² where the Court regarded the Norwegian acceptance of treaties with Denmark, which incorporated Danish claims to all of Greenland, as preventing Norway from contesting Danish sovereignty over the area.

The leading case on estoppel is the Temple of Preah Vihear,¹⁸³ which concerned a border dispute between Cambodia and Thailand. The frontier was the subject of a treaty in 1904 between Thailand and France (as sovereign over French Indo-China, which included Cambodia) that provided for a delimitation commission. The border was duly surveyed but was ambiguous as to the siting of the Preah Vihear temple area. Thailand called for a map from the French authorities and this placed the area within Cambodia. The Thai government accepted the map

¹⁷⁶ See the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86. The Court referred to the evidence of third parties which, while not amounting to clear recognition of claims, might afford a measure of support to such claims: Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 660.

¹⁷⁷ Note also the role of recognition in the context of new states and territory, above, p. 365.

¹⁷⁸ See the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 579; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 495. The Court, for example, in the Indonesia/Malaysia case felt that it 'cannot disregard' the failure of Indonesia or its predecessor, the Netherlands, to protest at the construction of lighthouses and other administrative activities on territory claimed to be Indonesian and noted that 'such behaviour is unusual': ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 625, 685.

¹⁷⁹ Costa Rica v. Nicaragua, ICJ Reports, 2009, pp. 213, 265–6.

¹⁸⁰ See e.g. D. W. Bowett, 'Estoppel before International Tribunals and its Relation to Acquiescence', 33 BYIL, 1957, p. 176; Thirlway, 'Law and Procedure', p. 29; A. Martin, L'Estoppel en Droit International Public, Paris, 1979; C. Dominicé, 'A Propos du Principe de l'Estoppel en Droit des Gens', in Recueil d'Études de Droit International en Hommage à Paul Guggenheim, Geneva, 1968, p. 327; and I. Sinclair, 'Estoppel and Acquiescence', in Fifty Years of the International Court of Justice (ed. A. V. Lowe and M. Fitzmaurice), Cambridge, 1996, p. 104.

¹⁸¹ Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 81.

¹⁸² PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, pp. 46, 68; 6 AD, pp. 95, 102.

¹⁸³ ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 6; 33 ILR, p. 48. See D. H. Johnson, 'The Case Concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear', 11 ICLQ, 1962, p. 1183, and J. P. Cot, 'Cour Internationale de Justice: Affaire du Temple de Préah Vihéar', AFDI, 1962, p. 217.

and asked for further copies.¹⁸⁴ A number of other incidents took place, including a visit by a Thai prince to the temple area for an official reception with the French flag clearly flying there, which convinced the International Court that Thailand had tacitly accepted French sovereignty over the disputed area.¹⁸⁵ In other words, Thailand was estopped by its conduct from claiming that it contested the frontier in the temple area. However, it is to be noted that estoppel in that case was one element in a complexity of relevant principles which included prescription and treaty interpretation. The case also seemed to show that in situations of uncertainty and ambiguity, the doctrines of acquiescence and estoppel come into their own,¹⁸⁶ but it would not appear correct to refer to estoppel as a rule of substantive law.¹⁸⁷ The extent to which silence as such may create an estoppel is unclear and much will depend upon the surrounding circumstances, in particular the notoriety of the situation, the length of silence maintained in the light of that notoriety and the type of conduct that would be seen as reasonable in the international community in order to safeguard a legal interest.¹⁸⁸ The existence of an estoppel should not, however, be lightly assumed.¹⁸⁹ The Arbitral Tribunal in the Chagos Marine Protected Area case,¹⁹⁰ summarised current jurisprudence as follows:

estoppel may be invoked where (a) a State has made clear and consistent representations, by word, conduct, or silence; (b) such representations were made through an agent authorized to speak for the State with respect to the matter in question; (c) the State invoking estoppel was induced by such representations to act to its detriment, to suffer a prejudice, or to convey a benefit upon the representing State; and (d) such reliance was legitimate, as the representation was one on which that State was entitled to rely.

Subsequent conduct itself would in the material sense include the examples of the exercise of sovereign activity, various diplomatic and similar exchanges and records, and maps. So far as the status of maps is concerned, this will depend upon the facts of their production as an item of evidence. It was noted in the Burkina Faso/Mali case that 'maps are only extrinsic evidence of varying reliability or unreliability which may be used, along with other evidence of a circumstantial kind, to establish or reconstitute the real facts'.¹⁹¹ In such circumstances, courts have often exhibited a degree of caution, taking into account, for example, that some maps may be politically self-serving and that topographic knowledge at the time the map is ¹⁸⁴ ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 23; 33 ILR, pp. 48, 62. ¹⁸⁵ ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 30–2; 33 ILR, p. 68.

¹⁸⁶ See also the Award of the King of Spain case, ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 192; 30 ILR, p. 457.

¹⁸⁷ See e.g. Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 47–51.

¹⁸⁸ See e.g. the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 139; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 101; the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 26; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 55; the Gulf of Maine case, ICJ Reports, 1984, pp. 246, 308; 71 ILR, pp. 74, 135; and the ELSI case, ICJ Reports, 1989, pp. 15, 44; 84 ILR, pp. 311, 350. See also M. Koskenniemi, 'L'Affaire du Passage par le Great Belt', AFDI, 1992, p. 905.

¹⁸⁹ In Cameroon v. Nigeria (Preliminary Objections), the Court emphasised that, 'An estoppel would only arise if by its acts or declarations Cameroon had consistently made it fully clear that it had agreed to settle the boundary dispute submitted to the Court by bilateral avenues alone. It would further be necessary that, by relying on such an attitude, Nigeria had changed its position to its own detriment or had suffered some prejudice', ICJ Reports, 1998, pp. 275, 303. See also Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 81.

¹⁹⁰ Award of 18 March 2015, para. 438.

¹⁹¹ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 582; 80 ILR, p. 440. Note that the Court in the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 94–5 observed that a map may give a good indication of the official position of the party concerned, particularly where it is an admission against interest. See also Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 661–2, and Burkina Faso/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2013, pp. 44, 76 ff.

made may be unreliable.¹⁹² However, maps annexed to treaties illustrating the boundary so delimited will be accepted as authoritative.¹⁹³ Where there is a conflict between the text of an instrument and an annexed map, all the relevant circumstances will need to be considered in order to arrive at a correct understanding of the intentions of the authors of the relevant delimitation instrument.¹⁹⁴ Beyond this, it is possible that cartographic material, prepared in order to help draft a delimitation instrument, may itself be used as assistance in seeking to determine the intentions of the parties where the text itself is ambiguous, while more generally the effect of a map will in other circumstances vary according to a number of factors ranging from its provenance and cartographic quality to its consistency with other maps and the use made of it by the parties.¹⁹⁵

One argument has been that peaceful possession coupled with acts of administration may in the absence of protest found the basis of title by way of 'historical consolidation'.¹⁹⁶ However, the International Court has emphasised that this doctrine is 'highly controversial and cannot replace the established modes of acquisition of title under international law'. It was also noted that a period of such activity of some twenty years was 'far too short, even according to the theory relied on it'.¹⁹⁷

Conclusions

It will be clear from the above that apart from the modes of acquisition that rely purely on the consent of the state and the consequences of sovereignty (cession or accretion), the method of acquiring additional territory is by the sovereign exercise of effective control. Both occupation and prescription are primarily based upon effective possession and, although the time element is a factor in prescription, this in fact is really concerned with the effectiveness of control.

The principle of effective control applies in different ways to different situations, but its essence is that 'the continuous and peaceful display of territorial sovereignty . . . is as good as title'.¹⁹⁸ Such control has to be deliberate sovereign action, but what will amount to effectiveness is relative and will depend upon, for example, the geographical nature of the region, the existence or not of competing claims and other relevant factors, such as international reaction.¹⁹⁹ It will not be necessary for such control to be equally effective throughout the region.²⁰⁰ The doctrine of effectiveness has displaced earlier doctrines relating to discovery

¹⁹² See the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 38 ff. See also the Eritrea/Yemen case, 114 ILR, pp. 1, 94 ff.

¹⁹³ 114 ILR, pp. 1, 94 ff., and Eritrea/Ethiopia 130 ILR, pp. 39 and 45 ff. Note that a treaty provision may provide for an avowedly incorrect geographical feature on an annexed map as part of the boundary line: see Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 372.

¹⁹⁴ ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 383–4. See also p. 385.

¹⁹⁵ Ibid., pp. 366 ff. See also the Eritrea/Ethiopia case, 130 ILR, pp. 39 ff.

¹⁹⁶ See e.g. the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 138, and De Visscher, Theory and Reality, p. 209.

¹⁹⁷ Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, p. 352. But see the comments of the International Court on 'convergent evolution' of the parties regarding title, Malaysia/Singapore, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 96 and note the reference to the presumption in favour of maintaining sovereignty in the hands of the initial holder in the joint dissenting opinion of Judges Simma and Abraham, pp. 12, 116, 119. See also above, p. 374.

¹⁹⁸ Judge Huber, Island of Palmas case, 2 RIAA, pp. 829, 839 (1928); 4 AD, p. 103. ¹⁹⁹ See further above, p. 379.

²⁰⁰ See above, p. 379.

and symbolic annexation as in themselves sufficient to generate title.²⁰¹ Effectiveness has also a temporal as well as a spatial dimension as the doctrine of intertemporal law has emphasised, while clearly the public or open nature of the control is essential. The acquiescence of a party directly involved is also a very important factor in providing evidence of the effectiveness of control. Where a dispossessed sovereign disputes the control exercised by a new sovereign, title can hardly pass. Effectiveness is related to the international system as a whole, so that mere possession by force is not the sole determinant of title. This factor also emphasises and justifies the role played by recognition.

Bilateral recognition is important as evidence of effective control and should be regarded as part of that principle. International recognition, however, involves not only a means of creating rules of international law in terms of practice and consent of states, but may validate situations of dubious origin. A series of recognitions may possibly validate an unlawful acquisition of territory and could similarly prevent effective control from ever hardening into title.²⁰² The significance of UN recognition is self-evident, so that the UN Security Council itself could adopt a binding resolution ending a territorial dispute by determining the boundary in question.²⁰³

Sovereign territory may not only be acquired, it may also be lost in ways that essentially mirror the modes of acquisition. Territory may be lost by express declaration or conduct such as a treaty of cession or acceptance of secession; by loss of territory by erosion or natural geographic activity or by acquiescence through prescription. Further, territory may be abandoned, but in order for this to operate both the physical act of abandonment and the intention to surrender title are required.²⁰⁴

TERRITORIAL INTEGRITY, SELF-DETERMINATION AND SUNDRY CLAIMS

There are a number of other concepts which may be of some relevance in territorial situations ranging from self-determination to historical and geographical claims. These may not necessarily be legal principles as such but rather purely political or moral expressions. Although they may be extremely persuasive within the international political order, they would not necessarily be juridically effective. One of the core principles of the international system is ²⁰¹ See in this context article 35 of the General Act of the Congress of Berlin, 1885, in which the parties recognised the obligation to 'ensure the establishment of authority in the regions occupied by them on the coast of the African continent'.

²⁰² See e.g. Security Council resolution 216 (1965) concerning Rhodesia; General Assembly resolution 31/6A and Security Council Statements of 21 September 1979 and 15 December 1981 concerning the South African Bantustans; Security Council resolution 541 (1983) with regard to the 'Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus'; and Security Council resolution 662 (1990) concerning the Iraqi annexation of Kuwait.

²⁰³ See particularly Security Council resolution 687 (1991) in which the international boundary between Kuwait and Iraq was deemed to be that agreed by both parties in 'Minutes' agreed in 1963. This boundary was then formally guaranteed by the Council in Section A, paragraph 4 of this resolution. See e.g. M. H. Mendelson and S. C. Hulton, 'The Iraq-Kuwait Boundary', 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 135. See also Security Council resolution 833 (1993) and S/26006.

²⁰⁴ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 716–18, and G. Marston, 'The British Acquisition of the Nicobar Islands, 1869', 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 245. See also e.g. the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 47; 6 AD, p. 95, and the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 49, 74, 80, 82 and 96.

the need for stability and finality in boundary questions and much flows from this.²⁰⁵ Case-law has long maintained this principle.²⁰⁶ Reflective of this concept is the principle of territorial integrity.

The principle of the territorial integrity of states is well established and constitutes a foundational principle of international law.²⁰⁷ It is protected by a series of consequential rules prohibiting interference within the domestic jurisdiction of states as, for example, article 2(7) of the United Nations Charter, and forbidding the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity and political independence of states, particularly article 2(4) of the United Nations Charter. This principle has been particularly emphasised by Developing Countries and also by other regions.²⁰⁸ The International Court recently noted that, 'Once a dispute regarding territorial sovereignty has been resolved and uncertainty removed, each party must fulfil in good faith the obligation which all states have to respect the territorial integrity of all other states'.²⁰⁹

However, it does not apply where the territorial dispute centres upon uncertain frontier demarcations. In addition, the principle appears to conflict on the face of it with another principle of international law, that of the self-determination of peoples.²¹⁰

This principle, noted in the United Nations Charter and emphasised in the 1960 Colonial Declaration, the 1966 International Covenants on Human Rights and the 1970 Declaration on Principles of International Law, can be regarded as a rule of international law in the light of, inter alia, the number and character of United Nations declarations and resolutions and actual state practice in the process of decolonisation. However, it has been interpreted as referring only to the inhabitants of non-independent territories.²¹¹ Practice has not supported its application as a principle conferring the right to secede upon identifiable groups within already independent states.²¹² The Canadian Supreme Court in the Reference Re Secession of Quebec case declared that 'international law expects that the right to self-determination will be exercised by peoples within the framework of existing sovereign states and consistently with the maintenance of the territorial integrity of those states',²¹³ and that the right to ²⁰⁵ See K. H. Kaikobad, 'Some Observations on the Doctrine of the Continuity and Finality of Boundaries', 54 BYIL, 1983, p. 119, and Shaw, 'Heritage of States', pp. 75, 81. See also the Malaysia/Singapore case, ICJ Reports, 2008, pp. 12, 51.

²⁰⁶ See e.g. the Temple case, ICJ Reports, 1962, pp. 6, 34; 33 ILR, p. 48; the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 37; 100 ILR, p. 1; the Beagle Channel case, 21 RIAA, pp. 55, 88; 52 ILR, p. 93; and the Dubai/Sharjah case, 91 ILR, pp. 543, 578.

²⁰⁷ See Advisory Opinion of 22 July 2010 on Accordance with International Law of the Unilateral Declaration of Independence in respect of Kosovo, ICJ Reports, 2010, p. 403, 437.

²⁰⁸ See generally, Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. But see, as regards Europe, Principle III of the Helsinki Final Act, 14 ILM, 1975, p. 1292, and the Guidelines on Recognition of New States in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union adopted by the European Community and its member states on 16 December 1991, 92 ILR, p. 173.

²⁰⁹ The Temple Interpretation case, ICJ Reports, 2013, pp. 281, 317.

²¹⁰ See Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 565; 80 ILR, p. 469.

²¹¹ As to the application of the principle to Gibraltar, see UKMIL, 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 443.

²¹² See J. Crawford, 'State Practice and International Law in Relation to Secession', 69 BYIL, 1998, p. 85; Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 584; Self-Determination in International Law: Quebec and Lessons Learned (ed. A. Bayefsky), The Hague, 2000; K. Del Mar, 'The Myth of Remedial Secession', in Statehood and Self-Determination (ed. D. French), Cambridge, 2013, p. 79; Secession: International Law Perspectives (ed. M. Kohen), Cambridge, 2006; The Ashgate Research Companion to Secession (ed. A. Pavković and P. Radan), Farnham, 2011; Self-Determination and Secession in International Law (ed. C. Walter, A. von Ungern-Sternberg and K. Abushov), Oxford, 2014; and J. Dugard, The Secession of States and Their Recognition in the Wake of Kosovo, The Hague, 2013. See also above, chapter 5, p. 202. Self-determination does have a continuing application in terms of human rights situations within the territorial framework of independent states (i.e. internal self-determination), ibid.

²¹³ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 436; 115 ILR, p. 536.

unilateral secession 'arises only in the most extreme of cases and, even then, under carefully defined circumstances'.²¹⁴ The only arguable exception to this rule that the right to external self-determination applies only to colonial situations (and arguably situations of occupation) might be where the group in question is subject to 'extreme and unremitting persecution' coupled with the 'lack of any reasonable prospect for reasonable challenge',²¹⁵ but even this is controversial not least in view of definitional difficulties.²¹⁶ The situation of secession is probably best dealt with in international law within the framework of a process of claim, effective control and international recognition. The International Court made the point in the Kosovo advisory opinion that Security Council resolutions criticising declarations of independence in Rhodesia, Turkish North Cyprus and Republika Srpska were so acting not because of the unilateral nature of these declarations but because they were or would have been associated with the unlawful use of force or some other egregious violations of the rules of international law. Accordingly, no general prohibition against unilateral declarations of independence could be inferred from the practice of the Security Council.²¹⁷ Thus there is no international law right of secession held by groups within independent states. Similarly, there is no international law duty upon such groups not to secede. It is a matter for the relevant domestic law in the absence of egregious violations of international law.

Crimea's claimed secession from Ukraine in March 2014 has to be seen in the first place as contrary to the applicable domestic law, which does not permit regions to secede in the absence of an all-Ukrainian referendum (article 73 of the Ukrainian constitution). The secession was not contrary to international law as such. However, Russia's threat or use of force in the process of taking control of Crimea may be seen as, at the least, intervention in the internal affairs of another state and at most an act of aggression.²¹⁸ The context of this situation also includes the violation of treaties to which Russia is a party which guarantee the sovereignty and territorial ²¹⁴ (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, 438.

²¹⁵ A. Cassese, Self-Determination of Peoples, Cambridge, 1995, p. 120. See also T. Musgrave, Self-Determination and National Minorities, Oxford, 1997, pp. 188 ff.; J. Castellino, International Law and Self-Determination, The Hague, 2000; and K. Knop, Diversity and Self-Determination in International Law, Cambridge, 2002, pp. 65 ff. See also Judge Wildhaber's Concurring Opinion (joined by Judge Rysdhal) in Loizidou v. Turkey, Judgment of 18 December 1996, 108 ILR, pp. 443, 470–3. See also Secession: International Law Perspectives (ed. Kohen). See also e.g. the Written Statement of the Russian Federation in the Kosovo case, www.icj-cij.org/docket/index.php?p1=3&tp2=4&k=21&case=141&code=kos&tp3=1 at pp. 39–40, underlining that, 'outside the colonial context, international law allows for secession of a part of a state against the latter's will only as a matter of self-determination of peoples, and only in extreme circumstances, when the people concerned is continuously subjected to most severe forms of oppression that endangers the very existence of the people'.

²¹⁶ The Court in the Quebec case, citing Cassese, Self-Determination, suggested that the right to external self-determination (i.e. secession) might apply to cases of foreign occupation and as a last resort where a people's right to internal self-determination (i.e. right to public participation, etc.) was blocked: (1998) 161 DLR (4th) 385, pp. 438 ff. See also J. Dugard, 'The Secession of States and Their Recognition in the Wake of Kosovo', 357 HR, 2013, p. 9.

²¹⁷ ICJ Reports, 2010, pp. 403, 437–8.

²¹⁸ www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-middle-east-26248275. See also T. D. Grant, Aggression against Ukraine: Territory, Responsibility and International Law, New York, 2015; but note V. Tolstykh, 'Reunification of Crimea with Russia: A Russian Perspective', 13 Chinese Journal of International Law, 2014, p. 879, and A. Pronin, 'Republic of Crimea: A Two-Day State', 3 Russian Law Journal, 2015, p. 133. The International Court stated in the Kosovo Advisory Opinion, ICJ Reports, 2010, pp. 403, 437, that unilateral and non-consensual declarations of independence, while not as such illegal, may be contrary to international law where 'connected with the unlawful use of force or other egregious violations of norms of general international law, in particular those of a peremptory character (ius cogens)'.

integrity of Ukraine.²¹⁹ The decision by Russia to annex Crimea on 18 March 2014²²⁰ was contrary to international law being in violation of Ukraine's sovereignty and territorial integrity.²²¹ These factors mitigate the disinterest of international law with regard to the actual declaration of secession and position it as an aggravating factor in violations of international law.

However, in certain situations there may be a pertinent Security Council decision which calls upon particular groups seeking to secede from a specific independent state to respect the national unity and territorial integrity of that state. In such a case, it may be argued there does exist an international legal duty not to secede.²²² This would be subject to any agreement to the contrary by the parties in question, for example, the agreed independence of South Sudan from Sudan in 2011.

Accordingly, the principle of self-determination as generally accepted fits in with the concept of territorial integrity,²²³ as it cannot apply once a colony or trust territory attains sovereignty and independence, except, arguably, in extreme circumstances. Probably the most prominent exponent of the relevance of self-determination to post-independence situations has been Somalia with its claims to those parts of Ethiopia and Kenya populated by Somali tribes, but that country received very little support for its demands.²²⁴

Self-determination cannot be used to further larger territorial claims in defiance of internationally accepted boundaries of sovereign states, but it may be of some use in resolving cases of disputed frontier lines on the basis of the wishes of the inhabitants. In addition, one may point to the need to take account of the interests of the local population where the determination of the boundary has resulted in a shift in the line, at least in the view of one of the parties.²²⁵ Geographical claims have been raised throughout history.²²⁶ France for long maintained that its natural frontier in the east was the west bank of the Rhine, and the European powers in establishing their presence upon African coastal areas often claimed extensive hinterland territories. Much utilised also was the doctrine of contiguity, whereby areas were claimed on the basis of the occupation of territories of which they formed a geographical continuation.

²¹⁹ See the Budapest Memorandum 1994 and the 1997 Partition Treaty on the Status and Conditions of the Black Sea Fleet with Ukraine. See also the UN Charter and the OSCE Helsinki Final Act 1976; www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-26630062.

²²⁰ See also the Russian war with Georgia in 2008 following the latter's attack upon secessionist enclaves of Abkhazia and South Ossetia (in the territory of Georgia) backed by Russia and Russia's support of the self-proclaimed independence of the entities; see the EU commission Independent Fact-Finding Mission on the Conflict in Georgia, 2009.

²²¹ See, for example, Security Council resolutions 1766 (2007), 1801 (2008) and 1853 (2008) with regard to Somalia; and resolutions 1756 (2007), 1794 (2007) and 1804 (2008) with regard to the Democratic Republic of Congo.

²²² See, for example, Security Council resolutions 1766 (2007), 1801 (2008) and 1853 (2008) with regard to Somalia; and resolutions 1756 (2007), 1794 (2007) and 1804 (2008) with regard to the Democratic Republic of Congo.

²²³ This analysis is supported by Burkina Faso/Mali, ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 459.

²²⁴ Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. See also the Moroccan approach, ibid.

²²⁵ See, with regard to the preservation of acquired rights, El Salvador/Honduras, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 400; 97 ILR, p. 112. See also Cameroon v. Nigeria, ICJ Reports, 2002, pp. 370 and 373–4. In particular, the Court stated in relation to the Bakassi peninsula and Lake Chad regions which contain Nigerian populations, that 'the implementation of the present judgment will afford the parties a beneficial opportunity to co-operate in the interests of the population concerned, in order notably to enable it to continue to have access to educational and health services comparable to those it currently enjoys', ibid., p. 452. The Court also referred to the commitment of the Cameroon Agent made during the Oral Pleadings to protect Nigerians living in the areas recognised as belonging to Cameroon, ibid., p. 452 and para. V(C) of the Dispositif.

²²⁶ Shaw, Title to Territory, p. 195; Jennings, Acquisition, p. 74; and Hill, Claims to Territory, pp. 77–80.

However, such claims, although relevant in discussing the effectivity and limits of occupation, are not able in themselves to found title, and whether or not such claims will be taken into account at all will depend upon the nature of the territory and the strength of competing claims.²²⁷ A rather special case is that of islands close to the coast of the mainland. The Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen stated that: 'There is a strong presumption that islands within the twelve-mile coastal belt will belong to the coastal state', to be rebutted only by evidence of a superior title.²²⁸

Of some similarity are claims based upon historical grounds.²²⁹ This was one of the grounds upon which Iraq sought to justify its invasion and annexation of the neighbouring state of Kuwait in August 1990,²³⁰ although the response of the United Nations demonstrated that such arguments were unacceptable to the world community as a whole.²³¹ Morocco too has made extensive claims to Mauritania, Western Sahara and parts of Algeria as territories historically belonging to the old Moroccan empire.²³² But such arguments are essentially political and are of but little legal relevance. The International Court of Justice in the Western Sahara case²³³ of 1975 accepted the existence of historical legal ties between the tribes of that area and Morocco and Mauritania, but declared that they were not of such a nature as to override the right of the inhabitants of the colony to self-determination and independence.²³⁴

The Doctrine of *Uti Possidetis*²³⁵

The influence of the principle of territorial integrity may be seen in the Latin American idea of uti possidetis, whereby the administrative divisions of the Spanish empire in South America were ²²⁷ See the Eastern Greenland case, PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95; and the Western Sahara case, ICJ Reports, 1975, pp. 12, 42–3; 59 ILR, pp. 14, 59. See generally, B. Feinsein, 'Boundaries and Security in International Law and Practice', 3 Finnish YIL, 1992, p. 135.

²²⁸ 114 ILR, pp. 1, 124 and 125. But see Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, para. 161, where the Court noted that 'proximity [of islands to the mainland] as such is not necessarily determinative of legal title'.

²²⁹ See e.g. Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 193–4; Jennings, Acquisition, pp. 76–8; and Hill, Claims to Territory, pp. 81–91.

²³⁰ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 37635, 1990. Note that Iraq made a similar claim to Kuwait in the early 1960s, although not then taking military action: see Jennings, Acquisition, p. 77, note 2.

²³¹ See e.g. Security Council resolution 662 (1990); Lauterpacht et al., The Kuwait Crisis: Basic Documents, p. 90.

²³² Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 193–4. Note also the claims advanced by Indonesia to West Irian, ibid., p. 22.

²³³ ICJ Reports, 1975, p. 12; 59 ILR, p. 14.

²³⁴ See also Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 37 ff. The Tribunal also discounted the notion of reversion of title, ibid., pp. 40 and 115.

²³⁵ See e.g. Dirdeiry M. Ahmed, Boundaries and Secession in Africa and International Law: Challenging Uti Possidetis, Cambridge, 2015; G. Oduntan, International Law and Boundary Disputes in Africa, London, 2015; A. Beaudoin, Uti Possidetis et Sécession, Paris, 2011; H. Ghebwebet, Identifying Units of Statehood and Determining International Boundaries, Frankfurt am Main, 2006; A. O. Cukwurah, The Settlement of Boundary Disputes in International Law, Manchester, 1967, p. 114; P. De La Pradelle, La Frontière, Paris, 1928, pp. 86–7; D. Bardonnnet, 'Les Frontières Terrestres et la Relativité de leur Tracé', 153 HR, 1976 V, p. 9; Shaw, 'Heritage of States', p. 75; M. Kohen, Possession Contestée et Souveraineté Territoriale, Geneva, 1997, chapter 6 and 'Uti Possidetis, Prescription et Pratique Subséquent à un Traité dans l'Affaire de l'Île de Kasikili/Sedudu devant la Cour Internationale de Justice', 43 German YIL, 2000, p. 253; G. Nesi, L'Uti Possidetis Iuris nel Diritto Internazionale, Padua, 1996; S. Lalonde, Determining Boundaries in a Conflicted World, Ithaca, 2002; Luis Sánchez Rodríguez, 'L'Uti Possidetis et les Effectivités dans les Contentieux Territoriaux et Frontaliers', 263 HR, 1997, p. 149; J. M. Sorel and R. Mehdi, 'L'Uti Possidetis Entre la Consécration Juridique et la Pratique: Essai de Réactualisation', AFDI, 1994, p. 11; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 669–70; T. Bartoš, 'Uti Possidetis. Quo Vadis?', 18 Australian YIL, 1997, p. 37; 'L'Applicabilité de l'Uti Possidetis Juris dans les Situations de Sécession ou de Dissolution d' États', Colloque, RBDI, 1998, p. 5; deemed to constitute the boundaries for the newly independent successor states, thus theoretically excluding any gaps in sovereignty which might precipitate hostilities and encourage foreign intervention.²³⁶ It is more accurately reflected in the practice of African states, explicitly stated in a resolution of the Organisation of African Unity in 1964, which declared that colonial frontiers existing as at the date of independence constituted a tangible reality and that all member states pledged themselves to respect such borders.²³⁷

Practice in Africa has reinforced the approach of emphasising the territorial integrity of the colonially defined territory; witness the widespread disapproval of the attempted creation of secessionist states whether in the former Belgian Congo, Nigeria or Sudan. Efforts to prevent the partition of the South African controlled territory of Namibia into separate Bantustans as a possible prelude to a dissolution of the unity of the territory are a further manifestation of this.²³⁸

The question of uti possidetis was discussed by a Chamber of the International Court in Burkina Faso v. Republic of Mali,²³⁹ where the compromis (or special agreement) by which the parties submitted the case to the Court specified that the settlement of the dispute should be based upon respect for the principle of the 'intangibility of frontiers inherited from colonisation'.²⁴⁰ It was noted, however, that the principle had in fact developed into a general concept of contemporary customary international law and was unaffected by the emergence of the right of peoples to self-determination.²⁴¹ In the African context particularly, the obvious purpose of the principle was 'to prevent the independence and stability of new states being endangered by fratricidal struggles provoked by the challenging of frontiers following the withdrawal of the administering power'.²⁴² The application of the principle has the effect of freezing the territorial title existing at the moment of independence to produce what the Chamber described as the 'photograph of the territory' at the critical date.²⁴³ The Chamber, however, went further than emphasising the application of the principle to Africa. It declared that the principle applied Démembrements d' États et Délimitations Territoriales (ed. O. Corten), Brussels, 1999; and A. Peters, 'The Principle of Uti Possidetis Juris: How Relevant is it for Issues of Secession?', in Self-Determination and Secession in International Law (ed. C. Walter, A. von Ungern-Sternberg and K. Abushov), p. 95.

²³⁶ See the Colombia–Venezuela arbitral award, 1 RIAA, pp. 223, 228 (1922); 1 AD, p. 84; the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93; and Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 544; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 299–300.

²³⁷ AHG/Res.16(1). See Security Council resolution 1234 (1999) which refers directly to OAU resolution 16(1) and see also article 4(i) of the Protocol Relating to the Establishment of the Peace and Security Council of the African Union, 2002, and the preamble to the Protocol on Politics, Defence and Security Cooperation adopted by the Southern African Development Community in 2001: see further below, chapter 17, p. 776. See Shaw, Title to Territory, pp. 185–7. See also the Separate Opinion by Judge Ajibola in the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, pp. 6, 83 ff.; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 81 ff.

²³⁸ Shaw, Title to Territory, chapter 5. The principle has also been noted in Asian practice: see e.g. the Temple of Preah Vihear case, ICJ Reports, 1962, p. 6; 33 ILR, p. 48; and the Rann of Kutch case, 7 ILM, 1968, p. 633; 50 ILR, p. 2.

²³⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 459. ²⁴⁰ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 557; 80 ILR, p. 462.

²⁴¹ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 565; 80 ILR, p. 469. ²⁴² Ibid.

²⁴³ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 568; 80 ILR, p. 473. Judge Yusuf in his Separate Opinion in Burkina Faso/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2013, pp. 44, 134, 138–9, put it as follows:

the principle of respect for boundaries in the Cairo Resolution places the boundaries existing at the time of independence in a "holding pattern", particularly to avoid armed conflict over territorial claims, until a satisfactory and peaceful solution is found by the Parties to a territorial dispute in conformity with international law, or until such time as closer integration and unity is achieved among African States in general, or between the neighbouring countries in particular, in keeping with the Pan-African vision. As such, it implies a prohibition of the use of force in the settlement of boundary disputes and an obligation to refrain from acts of seizure of a portion of the territory of another African State.

See, as to the notion of critical date, above, p. 378.

generally and was logically connected with the phenomenon of independence wherever it occurred in order to protect the independence and stability of new states.²⁴⁴ Uti possidetis was defined as follows:

The essence of the principle lies in its primary aim of securing respect for the territorial boundaries at the moment when independence is achieved. Such territorial boundaries might be no more than delimitations between different administrative divisions or colonies all subject to the same sovereign. In that case, the application of the principle of uti possidetis resulted in administrative boundaries being transformed into international frontiers in the full sense of the term.²⁴⁵

The term 'jus' in this principle refers not to international law as such but rather to the constitutional or administrative law of the previous sovereign.²⁴⁶ The International Court has also emphasised that 'the uti possidetis juris principle requires not only that reliance be placed on existing legal titles, but also that account be taken of the manner in which those titles were interpreted and applied by the competent public authorities of the colonial Power'.²⁴⁷ However, the doctrine of uti possidetis is dependent upon there being a clear boundary delimitation prior to independence. The doctrine cannot create a boundary where there was none (or an ambiguous one) at the relevant time.²⁴⁸

The application of this principle beyond the purely colonial context was underlined particularly with regard to the former USSR²⁴⁹ and the former Yugoslavia. In the latter case, the Yugoslav Arbitration Commission established by the European Community and accepted by the states of the former Yugoslavia made several relevant comments. In Opinion No. 2, the Arbitration Commission declared that 'whatever the circumstances, the right to self-determination must not involve changes to existing frontiers at the time of independence (uti possidetis juris) except where the states concerned agree otherwise'.²⁵⁰ In Opinion No. 3, the Arbitration Commission emphasised that, except where otherwise agreed, the former boundaries²⁵¹ became frontiers protected by international law. This conclusion, it was stated, derived from the principle of respect for the territorial status quo and from the principle of uti possidetis.²⁵² It is thus ²⁴⁴ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 565; 80 ILR, p. 470.

²⁴⁵ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 566; 80 ILR, p. 459. This was reaffirmed by the Court in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 386–7; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 299–300. The Court in the latter case went on to note that 'uti possidetis juris is essentially a retrospective principle, investing as international boundaries administrative limits intended originally for quite other purposes', ibid., p. 388; 79 ILR, p. 301. See M. N. Shaw, 'Case Concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute', 42 ICLQ, 1993, p. 929. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 706 ff.

²⁴⁶ El Salvador/Honduras, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 559. See also Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 651.

²⁴⁷ Benin/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 148, and Burkina Faso/Niger, ICJ Reports, 2013, pp. 44, 75.

²⁴⁸ See e.g. Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 651.

²⁴⁹ See e.g. R. Yakemtchouk, 'Les Conflits de Territoires and de Frontières dans les États de l'Ex-URSS', AFDI, 1993, p. 401. See also, with regard to the application of uti possidetis to the dissolution of the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic, J. Malenovsky, 'Problèmes Juridiques Liés à la Partition de la Tchécoslovaquie', ibid., p. 328.

²⁵⁰ 92 ILR, p. 168. See also A. Pellet, 'Note sur la Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yougoslavie', AFDI, 1991, p. 329, and Pellet, 'Activité de la Commission d'Arbitrage de la Conférence Européenne pour la Paix en Yougoslavie', AFDI, 1992, p. 220.

²⁵¹ The Arbitration Commission was here dealing specifically with the internal boundaries between Serbia and Croatia and Serbia and Bosnia-Herzegovina.

²⁵² 92 ILR, p. 171. The Arbitration Commission specifically cited here the views of the International Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case: see above, p. 392. Note also that the Under-Secretary of State of the Foreign and Commonwealth arguable that, at the least, a presumption exists that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, internally defined units within a pre-existing sovereign state will come to independence within the spatial framework of that territorially defined unit.²⁵³

Beyond Uti Possidetis

The principle of uti possidetis is not able to resolve all territorial or boundary problems.²⁵⁴ Where there is a relevant applicable treaty, then this will dispose of the matter completely.²⁵⁵ Indeed, once defined in a treaty, an international frontier achieves permanence so that even if the treaty itself were to cease to be in force, the continuance of the boundary would be unaffected and may only be changed with the consent of the states directly concerned.²⁵⁶ On the other hand, where the line which is being transformed into an international boundary by virtue of the principle cannot be conclusively identified by recourse to authoritative material, then the principle of uti possidetis must allow for the application of other principles and rules. Essentially these other principles focus upon the notion of effectivités or effective control.

The issue was extensively analysed by the International Court in the Burkina Faso/Mali case²⁵⁷ and later in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras; Nicaragua Intervening) case.²⁵⁸ The Court noted the possible relevance of colonial effectivités, immediate post-colonial effectivités and more recent effectivités. Each of these might be relevant in the context of seeking to determine the uti possidetis pre-independence line. In Office stated in January 1992 that 'the borders of Croatia will become the frontiers of independent Croatia, so there is no doubt about that particular issue. That has been agreed amongst the Twelve, that will be our attitude towards those borders. They will just be changed from being republican borders to international frontiers', UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 719.

²⁵³ See e.g. M. N. Shaw, 'Peoples, Territorialism and Boundaries', 3 EJIL, 1997, pp. 477, 504, but cf. S. Ratner, 'Drawing a Better Line: Uti Possidetis and the Borders of New States', 90 AJIL, 1996, pp. 590, 613 ff. and M. Craven, 'The European Community Arbitration Commission on Yugoslavia', 65 BYIL, 1995, pp. 333, 385 ff.

²⁵⁴ See generally K. H. Kaikobad, Interpretation and Revision of International Boundary Decisions, Cambridge, 2007; M. Kohen, 'La Relation Titres/Effectivités dans le Contentieux Territorial à la Lumière de la Jurisprudence Récente', 108 RGDIP, 2004, p. 561; M. Mendelson, 'The Cameroon-Nigeria Case in the International Court of Justice: Some Territorial Sovereignty and Boundary Delimitation Issues', 75 BYIL, 2004, p. 223; B. H. Oxman, 'The Territorial Temptation: A Siren Song at Sea', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 830; and S. R. Ratner, 'Land Feuds and Their Solutions: Finding International Law Beyond the Tribunal Chamber', 100 AJIL, 2006, p. 808. Note that the International Court has emphasised that the principle of uti possidetis applies to territorial as well as boundary problems: see the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras) case, ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 387; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 300; and to maritime disputes, see Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 707 and 729. See further here M. N. Shaw, 'International Law: A System of Relationships', 3 Collected Courses of the Xiamen Academy, 2010, pp. 239, 299 ff.; M. Kohen, 'L'uti possidetis et les delimitations maritimes', in Liber Amicorum Jean-Pierre Cot, Brussels, 2009, p. 155; S. Lalonde, 'The Role of the Uti Possidetis Principle in the Resolution of Maritime Boundary Disputes', in Sovereignty, Statehood and State Responsibility (ed. C. Chinkin and F. Baetens), Cambridge, 2015, p. 248; and Y. Tanaka, 'Reflections on Maritime Delimitation in the Nicaragua/Honduras Case', 68 Zeitschrift für ausländisches öffentliches Recht und Völkerrecht, 2008, pp. 903, 907–9.

²⁵⁵ See the Libya/Chad case, ICJ Reports, 1994, pp. 6, 38–40; 100 ILR, pp. 1, 37–9. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 663. Note that by virtue of article 11 of the Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties, 1978, a succession of states does not as such affect a boundary established by a treaty or obligations or rights established by a treaty and relating to the regime of a boundary. Article 62 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969 provides that the doctrine of rebus sic stantibus does not apply to boundary treaties: see below, chapter 15, p. 720.

²⁵⁶ ICJ Reports, 1994, p. 37; 100 ILR, p. 36. ²⁵⁷ ICJ Reports, 1986, p. 554; 80 ILR, p. 440.

²⁵⁸ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 351; 97 ILR, p. 266. See also Shaw, 'Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute'.

the case of colonial effectivités, i.e. the conduct of the colonial administrators as proof of the effective exercise of territorial jurisdiction in the area during the colonial period, the Court in the former case distinguished between certain situations. Where the act concerned corresponded to the title comprised in the uti possidetis juris, then the effectivités simply confirmed the exercise of the right derived from a legal title. Where the act did not correspond with the law as described, i.e. the territory subject to the dispute was effectively administered by a state other than the one possessing the legal title, preference would be given to the holder of the title. In other words, where there was a clear uti possidetis line, this would prevail over inconsistent practice. Where, however, there was no clear legal title, then the effectivités 'play an essential role in showing how the title is interpreted in practice'.²⁵⁹ It would then become a matter for evaluation by the Court with regard to each piece of practice adduced. This approach was reaffirmed in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case with regard to the grant of particular lands to individuals or to Indian communities or records of such grants.²⁶⁰ Where the colonial effectivités were insufficient to establish the position of the relevant administrative line, the principle of uti possidetis could not operate.²⁶¹ The Court also noted in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case that it could have regard in certain instances to documentary evidence of post-independence effectivités when it considered that they afforded indications with respect to the uti possidetis line, provided that there was a relationship between the effectivités concerned and the determination of the boundary in question.²⁶² Such post-independence practice could be examined not only in relation to the identification of the uti possidetis line but also in the context of seeking to establish whether any acquiescence could be demonstrated both as to where the line was and as to whether any changes in that line could be proved to have taken place.²⁶³ This post-independence practice could even be very recent practice and was not confined to immediate post-independence practice.

Where the uti possidetis line could be determined neither by authoritative decisions by the appropriate authorities at the relevant time nor by subsequent practice with regard to a particular area, recourse to equity²⁶⁴ might be necessary. What this might involve would depend upon the circumstances. In the Burkina Faso/Mali case, it meant that a particular frontier pool would be equally divided between the parties;²⁶⁵ in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute case, it meant that resort could be had to an unratified delimitation of 1869.²⁶⁶ It was also noted that the suitability of topographical features in providing an identifiable and convenient boundary was a material aspect.²⁶⁷

²⁵⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 586–7; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 490–1.

²⁶⁰ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 389; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 302.

²⁶¹ See e.g. Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 710–11.

²⁶² ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 399; 97 ILR, p. 266.

²⁶³ See e.g. ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 408, 485, 514, 525, 563 and 565; 97 ILR, pp. 321, 401, 430, 441, 479 and 481. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 711 ff. Such post-colonial effectivités could show whether either of the contending states had displayed sufficient evidence of sovereign authority in order to establish legal title, ibid.

²⁶⁴ I.e. equity infra legem or within the context of existing legal principles.

²⁶⁵ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 554, 633; 80 ILR, pp. 440, 535.

²⁶⁶ ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 351, 514–15; 97 ILR, pp. 266, 430–1. ²⁶⁷ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 396; 97 ILR, p. 309.

International Boundary Rivers²⁶⁸

Special rules have evolved in international law with regard to boundary rivers. In general, where there is a navigable channel, the boundary will follow the middle line of that channel (the thalweg principle).²⁶⁹ Where there is no such channel or where the parties so choose, the boundary line will, in general, be the middle line of the river itself or of its principal arm.²⁷⁰ These respective boundary lines would continue as median lines (and so would shift also) if the river itself changed course as a result of gradual accretion on one bank or degradation of the other bank. Where, however, the river changed course suddenly and left its original bed for a new channel, the international boundary would continue to be the middle of the deserted river bed.²⁷¹ It is possible for the boundary to follow one of the banks of the river, thus putting it entirely within the territory of one of the states concerned where this has been expressly agreed, but this is unusual.²⁷²

'THE COMMON HERITAGE OF MANKIND'

The proclamation of certain areas as the common heritage of mankind has raised the question as to whether a new form of territorial regime has been, or is, in process of being created.²⁷³ In 1970, ²⁶⁸ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 664–6; S. W. Boggs, International Boundaries, New York, 1940; Prescott and Triggs, International Frontiers, chapter 7; L. J. Bouchez, 'International Boundary Rivers', 12 ICLQ, 1963, p. 789; A. Patry, 'Le Régime des Cours d'Eau Internationaux', 1 Canadian YIL, 1963, p. 172; R. Baxter, The Law of International Waterways, Harvard, 1964; Verzijl, International Law, vol. III, pp. 537 ff.; H. Dipla, 'Les Règles de Droit International en Matière de Délimitation Fluviale: Remise en Question?', 89 RGDI, 1985, p. 589; H. Ruiz Fabri, 'Règles Coutumières Générales et Droit International Fluvial', AFDI, 1990, p. 818; F. Schroeter, 'Les Systèmes de Délimitation dans les Fleuves Internationaux', AFDI, 1992, p. 948; and L. Caflisch, 'Règles Générales du Droit des Cours d'Eaux Internationaux', 219 HR, 1989, p. 75.

²⁶⁹ See e.g. the Botswana/Namibia case, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1062, 1060–1, where the Court stated that "the thalweg" has variously been taken to mean "the most suitable channel for navigation" on the river, the line "determined by the line of deepest soundings", or "the median line of the main channel followed by boatmen travelling downstream". Treaties or conventions which define boundaries in watercourses nowadays usually refer to the thalweg as the boundary when the watercourse is navigable and to the median line between the two banks when it is not, although it cannot be said that practice has been fully consistent; and the Benin/Niger case, ICJ Reports, 2005, pp. 90, 126 and 149. See also State of New Jersey v. State of Delaware 291 US 361 (1934), and the Laguna (Argentina/Chile) case, 113 ILR, pp. 1, 209. See, as to the use of the thalweg principle with regard to wadis (dried river beds), Mendelson and Hutton, 'Iraq-Kuwait Boundary', pp. 160 ff.

²⁷⁰ See e.g. the Argentine-Chile Frontier case, 38 ILR, pp. 10, 93. See also article 2A(1) of Annex I(a) of the Israel-Jordan Treaty of Peace, 1994.

²⁷¹ See e.g. the Chamizal case, 11 RIAA, p. 320.

²⁷² See e.g. the Iran-Iraq agreements of 1937 and 1975. Note e.g. that the Costa Rica-Nicaragua Treaty of Limits fixed the San Juan river boundary at one point along the right bank of that river: see Costa Rica v. Nicaragua, ICJ Reports, 2009, pp. 213, 229 and ICJ Reports, 2015, paras. 59 and 71. See E. Lauterpacht, 'River Boundaries: Legal Aspects of the Shatt-al-Arab Frontier', 9 ICLQ, 1960, p. 208; K. H. Kaikobad, The Shatt-al-Arab Boundary Question, Oxford, 1980, and Kaikobad, 'The Shatt-al-Arab River Boundary: A Legal Reappraisal', 56 BYIL, 1985, p. 49. See, as to the question of equitable sharing of international watercourses, McCaffrey, The Law of International Watercourses; the Gabčíkovo-Nagymaros case, ICJ Reports, 1997, pp. 7, 54; 116 ILR, p. 1; the Convention on the Law of the Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses, 1997; and the Separate Opinion of Judge Kooijmans, Botswana/Namibia, ICJ Reports, 1999, pp. 1045, 1148 ff. See also P. Wouters, 'The Legal Response to International Water Conflicts: The UN Watercourses Convention and Beyond', 42 German YIL, 1999, p. 293. Note that in March 2003, the establishment of a Water Cooperation Facility to mediate in disputes between countries sharing a single river basin was announced: see <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/sci/tech/2872427.stm>.

²⁷³ See e.g. K. Baslar, The Concept of the Common Heritage of Mankind in International Law, The Hague, 1998; A. Cassese, International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2005, pp. 92 ff.; B. Larschan and B. C. Brennan, 'The Common Heritage of the UN General Assembly adopted a Declaration of Principles Governing the Seabed and Ocean Floor in which it was noted that the area in question and its resources were the common heritage of mankind. This was reiterated in articles 136 and 137 of the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea, in which it was provided that no sovereign or other rights would be recognised with regard to the area (except in the case of minerals recovered in accordance with the Convention) and that exploitation could only take place in accordance with the rules and structures established by the Convention.²⁷⁴ Article XI of the 1979 Moon Treaty emphasises that the moon and its natural resources are the common heritage of mankind, and thus incapable of national appropriation and subject to a particular regime of exploitation.²⁷⁵ As is noted in the next section, attempts were being made to establish a common heritage regime over the Antarctic. There are certain common characteristics relating to the concept. Like res communis, the areas in question are incapable of national appropriation. Sovereignty is not an applicable principle and the areas in question would not be 'owned', nor would any jurisdictional rights exist outside the framework of the appropriate common heritage regime institutional arrangements. However, while a res communis regime permits freedom of access, exploration and exploitation, a common heritage regime as envisaged in the examples noted above would strictly regulate exploration and exploitation, would establish management mechanisms and would employ the criterion of equity in distributing the benefits of such activity.

It is too early to predict the success or failure of this concept. The 1982 Law of the Sea Convention entered into force in 1994, while the Moon Treaty has the bare minimum number of ratifications and its exploitation provisions are not yet operative. As a legal concept within the framework of the specific treaties concerned, it provides an interesting contrast to traditional jus communis rules, although the extent of the management structures required to operate the regime may pose considerable problems.²⁷⁶

THE POLAR REGIONS²⁷⁷

The Arctic region is of some strategic importance, constituting as it does a vast expanse of inhospitable territory between North America and Russia. It consists to a large extent of ice packs beneath which submarines may operate.

Mankind Principle in International Law', 21 Columbia Journal of International Law, 1983, p. 305; R. Wolfrum, 'The Principle of the Common Heritage of Mankind', 43 ZaöRV, 1983, p. 312; S. Gorove, 'The Concept of "Common Heritage of Mankind"', 9 San Diego Law Review, 1972, p. 390; and C. Joyner, 'Legal Implications of the Common Heritage of Mankind', 35 ICLQ, 1986, p. 190. See also R. Wolfrum, 'Common Heritage of Mankind', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2009; M. C. W. Pinto, 'The Common Heritage of Mankind: Then and Now', 361 HR, 2013, p. 9.

²⁷⁴ See further below, chapter 10, p. 469. ²⁷⁵ See further below, p. 406.

²⁷⁶ Questions have arisen as to whether the global climate could be regarded as part of the common heritage of mankind. However, international environmental treaties have not used such terminology, but have rather used the phrase 'common concern of mankind', which is weaker and more ambiguous: see e.g. the Convention on Biological Diversity, 1992. See A. Boyle, 'International Law and the Protection of the Global Atmosphere', in International Law and Global Climate Change (ed. D. Freestone and R. Churchill), London, 1991, chapter 1, and P. Birnie and A. Boyle, International Law and the Environment, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2002, p. 143. See also below, chapter 14.

²⁷⁷ See e.g. D. R. Rothwell, The Polar Regions and the Development of International Law, Cambridge, 1996; T. W. Balch, 'The Arctic and Antarctic Regions and the Law of Nations', 4 AJIL, 1910, p. 265; M. Byers, International Law and the Arctic, Cambridge, 2013; D. Pharand, Canada's Arctic Waters in International Law, Cambridge, 1988; G. Triggs, International Law and Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica, Sydney, 1986; The Antarctic Treaty Regime (ed. G.

Denmark possesses Greenland and its associated islands within the region,²⁷⁸ while Norway has asserted sovereign rights over Spitzbergen and other islands. The Norwegian title is based on occupation and long exploitation of mineral resources and its sovereignty was recognised by nine nations in 1920, although the Soviet Union had protested.²⁷⁹

More controversial are the respective claims made by Canada²⁸⁰ and the former USSR.²⁸¹ Use has been made of the concept of contiguity to assert claims over areas forming geographical units with those already occupied, in the form of the so-called sector principle. This is based on meridians of longitude as they converge at the North Pole and as they are placed on the coastlines of the particular nations, thus producing a series of triangular sectors with the coasts of the Arctic states as their baselines.

The other Arctic states of Norway, Finland, Denmark and the United States have abstained from such assertions.²⁸² Accordingly, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the sector principle can be regarded as other than a political proposition.²⁸³ Part of the problem is that such a large part of this region consists of moving packs of ice. The former USSR made some claims to relatively immovable ice formations as being subject to its national sovereignty,²⁸⁴ but the overall opinion remains that these are to be treated as part of the high seas open to all.²⁸⁵ The US and Canada both claim 'pie-shaped' sectors in the Beaufort Sea, Canada and Denmark (Greenland) have a dispute with regard to boundaries in the Lincoln Sea, and Norway and Russia disagree over the boundary between their continental shelves in the Barents Sea.²⁸⁶

Occupation of the land areas of the Arctic region may be effected by states by relatively little activity in view of the decision in the Eastern Greenland case²⁸⁷ and the nature of the territory involved. The fact that climate change appears to be melting Arctic ice on a permanent basis, thus leading to the possibility of Arctic navigation as well as the exploitation of natural resources there, destabilises the current situation.

Triggs), Cambridge, 1987; and M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, 1962, vol. II, pp. 1051–61. See also W. Lakhtine, 'Rights over the Arctic', 24 AJIL, 1930, p. 703; Mouton, 'The International Regime of the Polar Regions', 101 HR, 1960, p. 169; F. Auburn, Antarctic Law and Politics, Bloomington, 1982; International Law for Antarctica (ed. F. Francioni and T. Scovazzi), 2nd edn, The Hague, 1997; A. D. Watts, International Law and the Antarctic Treaty System, Cambridge, 1992; E. J. Sahurie, The International Law of Antarctica, 1992; C. Joyner, Antarctica and the Law of the Sea, The Hague, 1992; The Arctic Legal Regime (ed. C. Joyner and S. Chopra), Dordrecht, 1988; The Antarctic Environment and International Law (ed. P. Sands, J. Verhoeven and M. Bruce), London, 1992; and E. Franckx, Maritime Claims in the Arctic, The Hague, 1993. See also J. Barrett, 'Securing the Polar Regions Through International Law', in Security and International Law (ed. M. E. Footer, J. Schmidt, N. D. White and L. Davies-Bright), Oxford, 2016; D. R. Rothwell, 'Polar Territorial and Maritime Sovereignty in the Twenty-First Century', in Sovereignty, Statehood and State Responsibility (ed. C. Chinkin and F. Baetens), Cambridge, 2015, p. 110; and Challenges of the Changing Arctic: Continental Shelf, Navigation, and Fisheries (ed. M. H. Nordquist, J. N. Moore and R. Long), The Hague, 2016.

²⁷⁸ See G. H. Hackworth, Digest of International Law, Washington, DC, 1940, vol. I.

²⁷⁹ Ibid., pp. 465 ff. See also O'Connell, International Law, p. 499.

²⁸⁰ Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 463. But note Canadian government statements denying that the sector principle applies to the ice: see e.g. 9 ILM, 1970, pp. 607, 613. See also I. Head, 'Canadian Claims to Territorial Sovereignty in the Arctic Regions', 9 McGill Law Journal, 1962–3, p. 200.

²⁸¹ Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 461. Such claims have been maintained by Russia: see e.g. <http://news.nationalgeographic.com/news/2007/09/070921-arctic-russia.html> and see below, chapter 10, p. 437.

²⁸² Note also that parts of Sweden, Finland and Iceland's continental shelf lie within the Arctic Circle: see M. Byers, 'Arctic Region', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2010.

²⁸³ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, p. 693. ²⁸⁴ See e.g. Lakhtine, 'Rights over the Arctic', p. 461.

²⁸⁵ See e.g. Balch, 'Arctic and Antarctic Regions', pp. 265–6. ²⁸⁶ See e.g. Byers, 'Arctic Region'.

²⁸⁷ PCIJ, Series A/B, No. 53, 1933, p. 46; 6 AD, p. 95.

Claims have been made by seven nations (Argentina, Australia, Chile, France, New Zealand, Norway and the United Kingdom) to the Antarctic region, which is an ice-covered landmass in the form of an island.²⁸⁸ Such claims have been based on a variety of grounds, ranging from mere discovery to the sector principle employed by the South American states, and most of these are of rather dubious quality. Significantly, the United States of America has refused to recognise any claims at all to Antarctica, and, although the American Admiral Byrd discovered and claimed Marie Byrd Land for his country, the United States refrained from adopting the claim.²⁸⁹ Several states have recognised the territorial aspirations of each other in the area, but one should note that the British, Chilean and Argentinian claims overlap.²⁹⁰

However, in 1959 the Antarctic Treaty was signed by all states concerned with territorial claims or scientific exploration in the region.²⁹¹ Its major effect, apart from the demilitarisation of Antarctica, is to suspend, although not to eliminate, territorial claims during the life of the treaty. Article IV(2) declares that:

no acts or activities taking place while the present treaty is in force shall constitute a basis for asserting, supporting or denying a claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica or create any rights of sovereignty in Antarctica. No new claim or enlargement of an existing claim to territorial sovereignty in Antarctica shall be asserted while the present treaty is in force.

Since the treaty does not provide for termination, an ongoing regime has been created which, because of its inclusion of all interested parties, appears to have established an international regime binding on all.²⁹² Subsequent meetings of the parties have resulted in a number of recommendations, including proposals for the protection of flora and fauna in the region, and other environmental preservation measures.²⁹³

Of the current parties to the treaty, twelve were original signatories, while a further forty-one have acceded to the treaty. Twenty-nine states have consultative status, while a further twenty-four have non-consultative status.²⁹⁴ Full participation in the work of the consultative meetings of the parties is reserved to the original parties to the treaty and those contracting parties which demonstrate substantial scientific research activity in the area. Antarctic treaty consultative meetings take place annually.²⁹⁵

²⁸⁸ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 450–3; Mouton, 'International Regime'; and G. Triggs, 'Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica – Part I', 13 Melbourne University Law Review, 1981, p. 123, and Triggs, International Law and Australian Sovereignty in Antarctica. See also UKMIL, 54 BYIL, 1983, pp. 488 ff. See also S. Vöneky and S. Addison-Agyei, 'Antarctica', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2011.

²⁸⁹ See Hackworth, Digest, vol. I, p. 457. See also DUSPIL, 1975, pp. 107–11, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. II, pp. 250–4, 1254–6 and 1262.

²⁹⁰ See e.g. Cmd 5900.

²⁹¹ See Handbook of the Antarctic Treaty System, US Department of State, 9th edn, 2002, also available at www.state.gov/e/oes/rls/rpts/ant/.

²⁹² Note that the Federal Fiscal Court of Germany stated in the Antarctica Legal Status case that Antarctica was not part of the sovereign territory of any state, 108 ILR, p. 654. See, as to the UK view that the British Antarctic Territory is the oldest territorial claim to a part of the continent, although most of it was counter-claimed by either Chile or Argentina, UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 603. Nevertheless, it was accepted that the effect of the Antarctic Treaty was to set aside disputes over territorial sovereignty, ibid.

²⁹³ See e.g. the 1980 Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources. See also M. Howard, 'The Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources: A Five Year Review', 38 ICLQ, 1989, p. 104.

²⁹⁴ www.ats.aq/devAS/ats_parties.aspx?lang=e.

²⁹⁵ The most recent being in Spring 2016: see www.ats.aq/devAS/ats_meetings.aspx?lang=e.

The issue of a mineral resources regime has been under discussion since 1979 by the consultative parties and a series of special meetings on the subject held.²⁹⁶ This resulted in the signing in June 1988 of the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities.²⁹⁷ The Convention provided for three stages of mineral activity, being defined as prospecting, exploration and development. Four institutions were to be established, once the treaty came into force (following sixteen ratifications or accessions, including the US, the former USSR and claimant states). The Commission was to consist of the consultative parties, any other party to the Convention engaged in substantive and relevant research in the area and any other party sponsoring mineral resource activity. A Scientific, Technical and Environmental Advisory Committee consisting of all parties to the Convention was to be established, as were Regulatory Committees, in order to regulate exploration and development activity in a specific area. Such committees would consist of ten members of the Commission, including the relevant claimant and additional claimants up to a maximum of four, the US, the former USSR and representation of developing countries. A system for Special Meetings of Parties, consisting of all parties to the Convention, was also provided for. Several countries signed the Convention.²⁹⁸ However, opposition to the Convention began to grow. The signing of the 1988 Convention on mineral resource activities stimulated opposition and in resolution 43/83, adopted by the General Assembly that year, 'deep regret' was expressed that such a convention should have been signed despite earlier resolutions calling for a moratorium on negotiations to create a minerals regime in the Antarctic. France and Australia proposed at the October 1989 meeting of the signatories of the Antarctic Treaty that all mining be banned in the area, which should be designated a global 'wilderness reserve'.²⁹⁹

At a meeting of the consultative parties to the Antarctic Treaty in April 1991 the Protocol on Environmental Protection to the Antarctic Treaty was adopted, article 7 of which prohibited any activity relating to mineral resources other than scientific research. This prohibition is to continue unless there is in force a binding legal regime on Antarctic mineral resource activities that includes an agreed means of determining whether and, if so, under which conditions any such activities would be acceptable. A review conference with regard to the operation of the Protocol may be held after it has been in force for fifty years if so requested.³⁰⁰ In addition, a Committee for Environmental Protection was established.³⁰¹ This effectively marked the end of the limited mining approach, which had led to the signing of the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities. The Protocol came into force in 1998 and may be seen as establishing a comprehensive integrated environmental regime for the area.³⁰²

²⁹⁶ See e.g. Keesing's Contemporary Archives, p. 32834 and 21(9) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 45.

²⁹⁷ See e.g. C. Joyner, 'The Antarctic Minerals Negotiating Process', 81 AJIL, 1987, p. 888.

²⁹⁸ See e.g. the Antarctic Minerals Act 1989, which provided for a UK licensing system for exploration and exploitation activities in Antarctica.

²⁹⁹ See Keesing's Record of World Events, p. 36989, 1989. ³⁰⁰ Article 25.

³⁰¹ Guardian, 30 April 1991, p. 20. See also C. Redgwell, 'Environmental Protection in Antarctica: The 1991 Protocol', 43 ICLQ, 1994, p. 599.

³⁰² See e.g. D. R. Rothwell, 'Polar Environmental Protection and International Law: The 1991 Antarctic Protocol', 11 EJIL, 2000, p. 591. Four of the annexes (on environmental impact assessment, conservation of flora and fauna, waste disposal and marine pollution) to the Protocol came into force in 1998 and the fifth (on the Antarctic protected area system) in 2002. A Malaysian initiative at the UN to consider making Antarctica a 'common heritage of mankind' appears to have foundered: see e.g. Redgwell, 'Environmental Protection', and General Assembly resolutions 38/77 and 39/152, and A/39/583.

LEASES AND SERVITUDES³⁰³

Various legal rights exercisable by states over the territory of other states, which fall short of absolute sovereignty, may exist. Such rights are attached to the land and so may be enforced even though the ownership of the particular territory subject to the rights has passed to another sovereign. They are in legal terminology formulated as rights in rem. They constitute treaty-based regimes, dependent upon the terms of the particular treaty. Thus, for example, the applicable law would be specified in such treaty.³⁰⁴

Leases of land rose into prominence in the nineteenth century as a way of obtaining control of usually strategic points without the necessity of actually annexing the territory. Leases were used extensively in the Far East, as for example Britain's rights over the New Territories amalgamated with Hong Kong,³⁰⁵ and sovereignty was regarded as having passed to the lessee for the duration of the lease, upon which event it would revert to the original sovereign who made the grant. This form of words, however, disguised the reality that ultimate sovereignty lay with the lessor.

An exception to this usual construction of a lease in international law as limited to a defined period occurred with regard to the Panama Canal, with the strip of land through which it was constructed being leased to the United States in 1903 'in perpetuity'. However, by the 1977 Panama Canal Treaty, sovereignty over the Canal Zone was transferred to Panama. The United States had certain operating and defensive rights until the treaty ended in 1999.³⁰⁶ Another such example is Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, which has been leased to the US by virtue of treaties signed in 1903 and in 1934. Under the latter treaty, the lease continues until either the US abandons the base or both states otherwise agree.³⁰⁷ Russia has concluded a number of lease arrangements with former Soviet Republics, now independent states.³⁰⁸

A servitude exists where the territory of one state is under a particular restriction in the interests of the territory of another state. Such limitations are bound to the land as rights in rem and thus restrict the sovereignty of the state concerned, even if there is a change in control of the relevant territory, for instance upon merger with another state or upon decolonisation.³⁰⁹

Examples of servitudes would include the right to use ports or rivers in, or a right of way across, the territory so bound, or alternatively an obligation not to fortify particular towns or areas in the territory.³¹⁰

Servitudes may exist for the benefit of the international community or a large number of states. To give an example, in the Aaland Islands case in 1920, a Commission of Jurists appointed by the Council of the League of Nations declared that Finland since its independence in 1918 had ³⁰³ See e.g. M. J. Strauss, Territorial Leasing in Diplomacy and International Law, The Hague, 2015; Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 670 ff.; H. Reid, International Servitudes, Chicago, 1932; and F. A. Vali, Servitudes in International Law, 2nd edn, London, 1958. See also Parry, Digest, vol. IIB, 1967, pp. 373 ff.; and article 12, Vienna Convention on Succession of States in Respect of Treaties, 1978.

³⁰⁴ See e.g. Y. Ronen, 'Leases', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2008.

³⁰⁵ See 50 BFSP, 1860, p. 10 and 90 BFSP, 1898, p. 17. See now 23 ILM, 1984, pp. 1366 ff. for the UK–China agreement on Hong Kong. See also Cmnd 9543 (1985) and the 1985 Hong Kong Act, providing for the termination of British sovereignty and jurisdiction over the territory as from 1 July 1997.

³⁰⁶ See e.g. 72 AJIL, 1978, p. 225. This superseded treaties of 1901, 1903, 1936 and 1955 governing the Canal. See also A. Rubin, 'The Panama Canal Treaties', YBWA, 1981, p. 181.

³⁰⁷ Article III; see also Ronen, 'Leases'. ³⁰⁸ Ibid.

³⁰⁹ See the Right of Passage case, ICJ Reports, 1960, p. 6; 31 ILR, p. 23. See also S. Marchisio, 'Servitudes', Max Planck Encyclopedia of Public International Law, 2011.

³¹⁰ See e.g. J. B. Briery, The Law of Nations, 6th edn, Oxford, 1963, p. 191.

succeeded to Russia's obligations under the 1856 treaty not to fortify the islands. And since Sweden was an interested state in that the islands are situated near Stockholm, it could enforce the obligation although not a party to the 1856 treaty. This was because the treaty provisions had established a special international regime with obligations enforceable by interested states and binding upon any state in possession of the islands.³¹¹ Further, the Tribunal in Eritrea/Yemen noted that the traditional open fishing regime in the southern Red Sea together with the common use of the islands in the area by the populations of both coasts was capable of creating historic rights accruing to the two states in dispute in the form of an international servitude.³¹² The award in this case emphasised that the findings of sovereignty over various islands in the Red Sea entailed 'the perpetuation of the traditional fishing regime in the region'.³¹³

The situation of the creation of an international status by treaty, which is to be binding upon all and not merely upon the parties to the treaty, is a complex one and it is not always clear when it is to be presumed. However, rights attached to territory for the benefit of the world community were created with respect to the Suez and Panama Canals. Article 1 of the Constantinople Convention of 1888³¹⁴ declared that 'the Suez Maritime Canal shall always be free and open in time of war as in time of peace, to every vessel of commerce or of war without distinction of flag' and this international status was in no way affected by the Egyptian nationalisation of the Canal Company in 1956. Egypt stressed in 1957 that it was willing to respect and implement the terms of the Convention, although in fact it consistently denied use of the canal to Israeli ships and vessels bound for its shores or carrying its goods.³¹⁵ The canal was reopened in 1975 following the disengagement agreement with Israel, after a gap of eight years.³¹⁶ Under article V of the 1979 Peace Treaty between Israel and Egypt, it was provided that ships of Israel and cargoes destined for or coming from Israel were to enjoy 'the right of free passage through the Suez Canal . . . on the basis of the Constantinople Convention of 1888, applying to all nations'.

In the Wimbledon case,³¹⁷ the Permanent Court of International Justice declared that the effect of article 380 of the Treaty of Versailles, 1919 maintaining that the Kiel Canal was to be open to all the ships of all countries at peace with Germany was to convert the canal from an internal to an international waterway 'intended to provide under treaty guarantee easier access to the Baltic for the benefit of all nations of the world'.

Some of the problems relating to the existence of servitudes have arisen by virtue of the North Atlantic Fisheries arbitration.³¹⁸ This followed a treaty signed in 1818 between the United Kingdom and the United States, awarding the inhabitants of the latter country 'forever . . . the liberty to take fish of every kind' from the southern coast of Newfoundland. The argument arose as to Britain's capacity under the treaty to issue fishing regulations binding American nationals. The arbitration tribunal decided that the relevant provision of the treaty did not create a servitude, partly because such a concept was unknown by American and British statesmen at ³¹¹ LNOJ, Sp. Supp. no. 3, 1920, pp. 3, 16–19.

³¹² 114 ILR, pp. 1, 40–1. See also below, chapter 10, p. 417ff on historic waters. ³¹³ Ibid., p. 137.

³¹⁴ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law, pp. 582–7. ³¹⁵ See Security Council Doc. S/3818, 51 AJIL, 1957, p. 673.

³¹⁶ See DUSPIL, 1974, pp. 352–4 and 760.

³¹⁷ PCIJ, Series A, No. 1, 1923, p. 24; 2 AD, p. 99. See generally Baxter, Law of International Waterways.

³¹⁸ 11 RIAA, p. 167 (1910).

the relevant time (i.e. 1818). However, the terms of the award do leave open the possibility of the existence of servitudes, especially since the tribunal did draw a distinction between economic rights (as in the case) and a grant of sovereign rights which could amount to a servitude in international law.³¹⁹

A slightly different situation was faced by the Arbitral Tribunal in the Mauritius v. UK arbitration concerning the Chagos Marine Protected Area.³²⁰ The Tribunal noted that the UK had in the Lancaster House Agreement leading to the independence of Mauritius entered into a number of undertakings as a quid pro quo for the acceptance of the latter of the detachment of Chagos Archipelago from the territory.³²¹ As part of these undertakings, the UK agreed to grant Mauritius a 'reversionary interest' in the Archipelago and return it once it was no longer needed for defence purposes.³²² The Tribunal held that once Mauritius had become independent, the arrangement was transformed from one within the domain of British constitutional law alone to an international agreement, binding in international law.³²³ Mauritius' 'reversionary' sovereignty thus gave that state an 'an interest in significant decisions that bear upon its [the Marine Protected Area] possible future use'.³²⁴

THE LAW OF OUTER SPACE³²⁵

There were a variety of theories prior to the First World War with regard to the status of the airspace above states and territorial waters³²⁶ but the outbreak of that conflict, with its recognition of the security implications of use of the air, changed this and the approach that then prevailed, with little dissension, was based upon the extension of state sovereignty upwards into airspace. This was acceptable both from the defence point of view and in the light of evolving state practice regulating flights over national territory.³²⁷ It was reflected in the 1919 Paris Convention for the Regulation of Aerial Navigation, which recognised the full sovereignty of ³¹⁹ See, as to landlocked states, below, chapter 10, p. 452. ³²⁰ Award of 18 March 2015. ³²¹ Ibid., para. 421.

³²² Ibid., paras. 224, 228 and 291. ³²³ Ibid., paras. 425 and 428. ³²⁴ Ibid., paras. 521 ff.

³²⁵ See e.g. C. Q. Christol, The Modern International Law of Outer Space, New York, 1982, and Christol, Space Law, Deventer, 1991; Space Law (ed. P. S. Dempsey), Oxford, 2004; F. Lyall and P. B. Larsen, Space Law, Aldershot, 2009; D.-E. Rociu, Space Law Treaties and Principles, 2013; J. E. S. Fawcett, Outer Space, Oxford, 1984; S. Gorove, 'International Space Law in Perspective', 181 HR, 1983, p. 349, and Gorove, Developments in Space Law, Dordrecht, 1991; M. Marcoff, Traité de Droit International Public de l'Espace, Fribourg, 1973, and Marcoff, 'Sources du Droit International de l'Espace', 168 HR, p. 9; N. Matte, Aerospace Law, Montreal, 1969; Le Droit de l'Espace (ed. J. Duthéil de la Rochère), Paris, 1988; P. M. Martin, Droit International des Activités Spatiales, Masson, 1992; B. Cheng, 'The 1967 Space Treaty', Journal de Droit International, 1968, p. 532, Cheng, 'The Moon Treaty', 33 Current Legal Problems, 1980, p. 213, Cheng, 'The Legal Status of Outer Space', Journal of Space Law, 1983, p. 89, Cheng, 'The UN and the Development of International Law Relating to Outer Space', 16 Thesaurus Acroasiuum, Thessaloniki, 1990, p. 49, and Cheng, Studies in International Space Law, Oxford, 1997. See also; D. S. Sachdeva, Outer Space: Law, Policy and Governance, 2013; T. L. Masson-Zwaan and S. Hobe, The Law of Outer Space, The Hague, 2010; Oppenheim's International Law, chapter 7; P. Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 1254; R. G. Steinhardt, 'Outer Space', in United Nations Legal Order (ed. O. Schachter and C. C. Joyner), Cambridge, 1995, vol. II, p. 753; Manual on Space Law (ed. N. Jasentulajana and R. Lee), New York, 4 vols., 1979; Space Law - Basic Documents (ed. K. H. Böckstiegel and M. Berkö), Dordrecht, 1991; Outlook on Space Law (ed. S. G. Lafferanderie and D. Crowther), The Hague, 1997; G. H. Reynolds and R. P. Merges, Outer Space, 2nd edn, Boulder, CO, 1997.

³²⁶ See e.g. Oppenheim's International Law, pp. 650–1, and N. Matte, Treatise on Air–Aeronautical Law, Montreal, 1981, chapters 4 and 5.

³²⁷ Matte, Treatise, pp. 91–6.

states over the airspace above their land and territorial sea.³²⁸ Accordingly, the international law rules protecting sovereignty of states apply to the airspace as they do to the land below. As the International Court noted in the Nicaragua case, ‘The principle of respect for territorial sovereignty is also directly infringed by the unauthorised overflight of a state’s territory by aircraft belonging to or under the control of the government of another state.’³²⁹ The Court noted in the Benin/Niger case that ‘a boundary represents the line of separation between areas of state sovereignty, not only on the earth’s surface but also in the subsoil and in the superjacent column of air’.³³⁰

There is no right of innocent passage through the airspace of a state.³³¹ Aircraft may only traverse the airspace of states with the agreement of those states, and where that has not been obtained an illegal intrusion will be involved which will justify interception, though not (save in very exceptional cases) actual attack.³³² However, the principle of the complete sovereignty of the subjacent state is qualified not only by the various multilateral and bilateral conventions which permit airliners to cross and land in the territories of the contracting states under recognised conditions and in the light of the accepted regulations, but also by the development of the law of outer space.

Ever since the USSR launched the first earth satellite in 1957, space exploration has developed at an ever-increasing rate.³³³ Satellites now control communications and observation networks, while landings have been made on the moon and information-seeking space probes dispatched to survey planets like Venus and Saturn. The research material gathered upon such diverse matters as earth resources, ionospheric activities, solar radiation, cosmic rays and the general structure of space and planet formations has stimulated further efforts to understand the nature of space and the cosmos.³³⁴ This immense increase in available information has also led to the development of the law of outer space, formulating generally accepted principles to regulate the interests of the various states involved as well as taking into account the concern of the international community as a whole.

The Definition and Delimitation of Outer Space

It soon became apparent that the usque ad coelum rule, providing for state sovereignty over territorial airspace to an unrestricted extent, was not viable where space exploration was ³²⁸ Article 1. Each party also undertook to accord in peacetime freedom of innocent passage to the private aircraft of other parties so long as they complied with the rules made by or under the authority of the Convention. Articles 5–10 provided that the nationality of aircraft would be based upon registration and that registration would take place in the state of which their owners were nationals. An International Commission for Air Navigation was established. See also the 1928 American Convention on Commercial Aviation.

³²⁹ ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 128; 76 ILR, p. 1. ³³⁰ ICJ Reports, 2005, p. 142.

³³¹ See e.g. Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 652. It should, however, be noted that articles 38 and 39 of the Convention on the Law of the Sea, 1982 provide for a right of transit passage through straits used for international navigation between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone for aircraft as well as ships. Note also that under article 53 of this Convention, aircraft have a right of overflight with regard to designated air routes above archipelagic waters.

³³² See also Pan Am Airways v. The Queen (1981) 2 SCR 565; 90 ILR, p. 213, with regard to the exercise of sovereignty over the airspace above the high seas.

³³³ Note the role played by the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space established in 1958 and consisting currently of sixty-nine states. The Committee has a Legal Sub-Committee and a Scientific and Technical Sub-Committee: see, in particular, Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 13–20, and www.unoosa.org/oosa/en/copuos/index.html.

³³⁴ See e.g. Fawcett, Outer Space, chapter 7.

concerned. To obtain the individual consents of countries to the passage of satellites and other vehicles orbiting more than 100 miles above their surface would prove cumbersome in the extreme and in practice states have acquiesced in such traversing. This means that the sovereignty of states over their airspace is limited in height at most to the point where the airspace meets space itself. Precisely where this boundary lies is difficult to say and will depend upon technological and other factors, but figures between 50 and 100 miles have been put forward.³³⁵

As conventional aircraft are developed to attain greater heights, so states will wish to see their sovereignty extend to those heights and, as well as genuine uncertainty, this fear of surrendering what may prove to be in the future valuable sovereign rights has prevented any agreement on the delimitation of this particular frontier.³³⁶

The Regime of Outer Space

Beyond the point separating air from space, states have agreed to apply the international law principles of res communis, so that no portion of outer space may be appropriated to the sovereignty of individual states. This was made clear in a number of General Assembly resolutions following the advent of the satellite era in the late 1950s. For instance, UN General Assembly resolution 1962 (XVII), adopted in 1963 and entitled the Declaration of Legal Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, lays down a series of applicable legal principles which include the provisions that outer space and celestial bodies were free for exploration and use by all states on a basis of equality and in accordance with international law, and that outer space and celestial bodies were not subject to national appropriation by any means.³³⁷ In addition, the Declaration on International Co-operation in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space adopted in resolution 51/126, 1996, called for further international co-operation, with particular attention being given to the benefit for and the interests of developing countries and countries with incipient space programmes stemming from such international co-operation conducted with countries with more advanced space capabilities.³³⁸ Such resolutions constituted in many cases and in the circumstances expressions of state practice and opinio juris and were thus part of customary law.³³⁹

The legal regime of outer space was clarified by the signature in 1967 of the Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, including ³³⁵ The UK has noted, for example, that, 'for practical purposes the limit [between airspace and outer space] is considered to be as high as any aircraft can fly', 70 BYIL, 1999, p. 520.

³³⁶ See generally Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 10, and see also e.g. UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 689. A variety of suggestions have been put forward regarding the method of delimitation, ranging from the properties of the atmosphere to the lowest possible orbit of satellites. They appear to fall within either a spatial or a functional category: see ibid., and UN Doc. A/AC.105/C.2/7/Add.1, 21 January 1977. Some states have argued for a 110-km boundary: see e.g. USSR, 21(4) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 37; others feel it is premature to establish such a fixed delimitation: e.g. USA and UK, ibid. See also 216 HL Deb., col. 975, 1958–9, and D. Goedhuis, 'The Problems of the Frontiers of Outer Space and Airspace', 174 HR, 1982, p. 367.

³³⁷ See also General Assembly resolutions 1721 (XVI) and 1884 (XVIII).

³³⁸ See also 'The Space Millennium: The Vienna Declaration on Space and Human Development' adopted by the Third United Nations Conference on the Exploration and Peaceful Uses of Outer Space (UNISPACE III), Vienna, 1999.

³³⁹ See above, chapter 3, and B. Cheng, 'United Nations Resolutions on Outer Space: "Instant" International Customary Law?', 5 IJIL, 1965, p. 23.

the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies. This reiterates that outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by any means and emphasises that the exploration and use of outer space must be carried out for the benefit of all countries. The Treaty does not establish as such a precise boundary between airspace and outer space but it provides the framework for the international law of outer space.³⁴⁰ Article 4 provides that states parties to the Treaty agree:

not to place in orbit around the earth any objects carrying nuclear weapons or any other kinds of weapons of mass destruction, install such weapons on celestial bodies, or station such weapons in outer space in any other manner.

There are, however, disagreements as to the meaning of this provision.³⁴¹ The article bans only nuclear weapons and weapons of mass destruction from outer space, the celestial bodies and from orbit around the earth, but article 1 does emphasise that the exploration and use of outer space 'shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries' and it has been argued that this can be interpreted to mean that any military activity in space contravenes the Treaty.³⁴²

Under article 4, only the moon and other celestial bodies must be used exclusively for peaceful purposes, although the use of military personnel for scientific and other peaceful purposes is not prohibited. There are minimalist and maximalist interpretations as to how these provisions are to be understood. The former, for example, would argue that only aggressive military activity is banned, while the latter would prohibit all military behaviour.³⁴³ Article 6 provides for international responsibility for national activities in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, whether such activities are carried on by governmental agencies or by non-governmental entities, and for assuring that national activities are carried out in conformity with the Treaty. The activities of non-governmental entities in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, require authorisation and continuing supervision by the appropriate state party to the Treaty. When activities are carried on in outer space, including the moon and other celestial bodies, by an international organisation, responsibility for compliance with the Treaty is to be borne both by the international organisation and by the states parties to the Treaty participating in such organisation.³⁴⁴

Under article 8, states retain jurisdiction and control over personnel and vehicles launched by them into space and under article 7 they remain responsible for any damage caused to other parties to the Treaty by their space objects.³⁴⁵

³⁴⁰ See e.g. Christol, Modern International Law, chapter 2. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 828.

³⁴¹ The issue became particularly controversial in the light of the US Strategic Defence Initiative ('Star Wars'), which aimed to develop a range of anti-satellite and anti-missile weapons based in space. The UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space considered the issue, although without the participation of the US, which objected to the matter being considered: see e.g. 21(6) UN Chronicle, 1984, p. 18.

³⁴² See e.g. Marcoff, Traité, pp. 361 ff.

³⁴³ See e.g. Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 25–6. See also Goedhuis, 'Legal Issues Involved in the Potential Military Uses of Space Stations', in Liber Amicorum for Rt Hon. Richard Wilberforce (ed. M. Bos and I. Brownlie), Oxford, 1987, p. 23, and Gorove, Developments, part VI.

³⁴⁴ See e.g. B. Cheng, 'Article VI of the 1967 Treaty Revisited', 1 Journal of Space Law, 1998, p. 7.

³⁴⁵ See further Cheng, Studies in Space Law, chapters 17 and 18.

This aspect of space law was further developed by the Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects signed in 1972, article XII of which provides for the payment of compensation in accordance with international law and the principles of justice and equity for any damage caused by space objects. Article II provides for absolute liability to pay such compensation for damage caused by a space object on the surface of the earth or to aircraft in flight, whereas article III provides for fault liability for damage caused elsewhere or to persons or property on board a space object.³⁴⁶ This Convention was invoked by Canada in 1979 following the damage allegedly caused by Soviet Cosmos 954.³⁴⁷ In 2007, the UN General Assembly endorsed the Space Debris Mitigation Guidelines as guidelines for the mission, planning, design, manufacture and operational phases of spacecraft and launch vehicle orbital stages with the aim of limiting space debris.³⁴⁸

As a reinforcement to this evolving system of state responsibility, the Convention on the Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space was opened for signature in 1975, coming into force in 1976. This laid down a series of stipulations for the registration of information regarding space objects, such as, for example, their purpose, location and parameters, with the United Nations Secretary-General.³⁴⁹ In 1993, the UN General Assembly adopted Principles Relevant to the Use of Nuclear Power Sources in Outer Space.³⁵⁰ Under these Principles, the launching state is, prior to the launch, to ensure that a thorough and comprehensive safety assessment is conducted and made publicly available. Where a space object appears to malfunction with a risk of re-entry of radioactive materials to the earth, the launching state is to inform states concerned and the UN Secretary-General and respond promptly to requests for further information or consultations sought by other states. Principle 8 provides that states shall bear international responsibility for national activities involving the use of nuclear power sources in outer space, whether such activities are carried out by governmental agencies or by non-governmental agencies. Principle 9 provides that each state which launches or procures the launching of a space object and each state from whose territory or facility a space object is launched shall be internationally liable for damage caused by such space object or its component parts.

³⁴⁶ See e.g. the Exchange of Notes between the UK and Chinese governments with regard to liability for damages arising during the launch phase of the Asiasat Satellite in 1990 in accordance with, inter alia, the 1967 and 1972 Conventions: UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 689.

³⁴⁷ The claim was for $6,401,174.70. See 18 ILM, 1979, pp. 899 ff. See also Christol, Modern International Law, pp. 59 ff., and Christol, 'International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects', 74 AJIL, 1980, p. 346. B. Cheng has drawn attention to difficulties concerning the notion of damage here as including environmental damage: see International Law Association, Report of the Sixty-ninth Conference, London, 2000, p. 581. Note also that under article 3 of the 1967 Treaty, all states parties to the Treaty agree to carry on activities 'in accordance with international law', which clearly includes rules relating to state responsibility. See also Gorove, Developments, part V, and B. Hurwitz, State Liability for Outer Space Activities in Accordance with the 1972 Convention on International Liability for Damage Caused by Space Objects, Dordrecht, 1992.

³⁴⁸ GA resolution 62/217. The Guidelines were produced by the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, A/62/20, A/AC.105/890, para. 99 and A/AC.105/848, annex II.

³⁴⁹ The International Law Association adopted in 1994 the 'Buenos Aires International Instrument on the Protection of the Environment from Damage Caused by Space Debris'. This provides that each state or international organisation party to the Instrument that launches or procures the launching of a space object is internationally liable for damage arising therefrom to another state, persons or objects, or international organisation party to the Instrument as a consequence of space debris produced by any such object: see Report of the Sixty-sixth Conference at Buenos Aires, London, 1994, p. 7.

³⁵⁰ Resolution 47/68.

The Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space was signed in 1968 and sets out the legal framework for the provision of emergency assistance to astronauts. It provides for immediate notification of the launching authority or, if that is not immediately possible, a public announcement regarding space personnel in distress as well as the immediate provision of assistance. It also covers search and rescue operations as well as a guarantee of prompt return. The Convention also provides for recovery of space objects.³⁵¹

In 1979, the Agreement Governing the Activities of States on the Moon and other Celestial Bodies was adopted.³⁵² This provides for the demilitarisation of the moon and other celestial bodies, although military personnel may be used for peaceful purposes, and reiterates the principle established in the 1967 Outer Space Treaty. Under article IV, the exploration and the use of the moon shall be the province of all mankind and should be carried out for the benefit of all. Article XI emphasises that the moon and its natural resources are the common heritage of mankind and are not subject to national appropriation by any means. That important article emphasises that no private rights of ownership over the moon or any part of it or its natural resources in place may be created, although all states parties have the right to exploration and use of the moon. The states parties also agreed under article XI(5) and (7) to establish an international regime to govern the exploitation of the resources of the moon, when this becomes feasible.³⁵³ The main purposes of the international regime to be established are to include:

- a. the orderly and safe development of the natural resources of the moon;
- b. the rational management of those resources;
- c. the expansion of opportunities in the use of those resources; and
- d. an equitable sharing by all states parties in the benefits derived from those resources, whereby the interests and needs of the developing countries, as well as the efforts of those countries which have contributed either directly or indirectly to the exploration of the moon, shall be given special consideration.

Several points are worth noting. First, the proposed international regime is only to be established when exploitation becomes feasible. Secondly, it appears that until the regime is set up, there is a ³⁵¹ The UK Outer Space Act 1986, for example, provides a framework for private sector space enterprises by creating a licensing system for outer space activities and by establishing a system for indemnification for damage suffered by third parties or elsewhere. The Act also establishes a statutory register of the launch of space objects. Note also that the US has signed a number of agreements with other states providing for assistance abroad in the event of an emergency landing of the space shuttle. These agreements also provide for US liability to compensate for damage and loss caused as a result of an emergency landing, in accordance with the 1972 Treaty: see Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 2269. In 1988 an Agreement on Space Stations was signed between the US, the governments of the member states of the European Space Agency, Japan and Canada. This provides, inter alia, for registration of flight elements as space objects under the Registration Convention of 1975, each state retaining jurisdiction over the elements it so registers and personnel in or on the space station who are its nationals. There is also an interesting provision (article 22) permitting the US to exercise criminal jurisdiction over misconduct committed by a non-US national in or on a non-US element of the manned base or attached to the manned base, which endangers the safety of the manned base or the crew members thereon. Before proceeding to trial with such a prosecution, the US shall consult with the partner state whose nationality the alleged perpetrator holds, and shall either have received the agreement of that partner to the prosecution or failed to have received an assurance that the partner state intends to prosecute.

³⁵² This came into force in July 1984: see C. Q. Christol, 'The Moon Treaty Enters into Force', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 163.

³⁵³ See e.g. Cheng, 'Moon Treaty', pp. 231–2, and Christol, Modern International Law, chapters 7 and 8. See also R. Lee, Law and Regulation of Commercial Mining of Minerals in Outer Space, Heidelberg, 2012.

moratorium on exploitation, although not on 'exploration and use', as recognised by articles XI (4) and VI(2). This would permit the collection of samples and their removal from the moon for scientific purposes. Thirdly, it is to be noted that private ownership rights of minerals or natural resources not in place are permissible under the Treaty.³⁵⁴

An issue of especial concern relates to the commercialisation of activities in outer space, in particular the legal regulation of non-state private activities such as proposed space tourism.³⁵⁵

SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING

- B. Cheng, Studies in International Space Law, Oxford, 1997
J. Crawford, The Creation of States in International Law, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2006
R. Y. Jennings, The Acquisition of Territory in International Law, Manchester, 1963
F. Lyall and P. B. Larsen, Space Law, Aldershot, 2009
V. Prescott and G. Triggs, International Frontiers and Boundaries, Leiden, 2008
M. N. Shaw, Title to Territory in Africa, Oxford, 1986
Territoriality and International Law (ed. M. Kohen), Cheltenham, 2016

³⁵⁴ See below, chapter 10, p. 470, regarding the 'common heritage' regime envisaged for the deep seabed under the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.

³⁵⁵ See e.g. S. Hobe, 'Legal Aspects of Space Tourism', 86 Nebraska Law Review, 2009, p. 439, and Y. Failat, 'Space Tourism: A Synopsis on its Legal Challenges', 1 Irish Law Journal, 2012, p. 120. Note that in 2011, the Permanent Court of Arbitration adopted Optional Rules for the Arbitration of Disputes Relating to Outer Space Activities: see http://pca-cpa.org/shownews.asp?ac=view&pag_id=1261&nws_id=323.

10

The Law of the Sea

The seas have historically performed two important functions: first, as a medium of communication; and, secondly, as a vast reservoir of resources, both living and non-living. Both of these functions have stimulated the development of legal rules.¹ The fundamental principle governing the law of the sea is that 'the land dominates the sea' so that the land territorial situation constitutes the starting point for the determination of the maritime rights of a coastal state.²

The seas were at one time thought capable of subjection to national sovereignties. The Portuguese in particular in the seventeenth century proclaimed huge tracts of the high seas as part of their territorial domain, but these claims stimulated a response by Grotius who elaborated the doctrine of the open seas, whereby the oceans as res communis international law were to be accessible to all nations but incapable of appropriation.³ This view prevailed, partly because it accorded with the interests of the North European states, which demanded freedom of the seas for the purposes of exploration and expanding commercial intercourse with the East.

The freedom of the high seas rapidly became a basic principle of international law, but not all the seas were so characterised. It was permissible for a coastal state to appropriate a maritime belt around its coastline as territorial waters, or territorial sea, and treat it as an indivisible part of its

¹ See e.g. D. R. Rothwell and T. Stephens, The International Law of the Sea, 2nd edn, Oxford, 2016; Y. Tanaka, The International Law of the Sea, 2nd edn, Cambridge, 2015; The IMLI Manual on International Maritime Law (gen. ed. D. J. Attard; ed. M. Fitzmaurice and N. A. Martinez Gutierrez), Oxford, 3 vols., 2014–16; The Oxford Handbook on the Law of the Sea (ed. D. R. Rothwell, A. G. Oude Elferink, K. N. Scott and T. Stephens), Oxford, 2015; UN Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982 (ed. M. Nordquist et al.), The Hague, 6 vols., 1985–2003; D. Anderson, Modern Law of the Sea: Selected Essays, The Hague, 2014; Law of the Sea, Environmental Law and Settlement of Disputes (ed. T. M. Ndiaye and R. Wolfrum), The Hague, 2007; Law of the Sea: Progress and Prospects (ed. D. Freestone, R. Barnes and D. Ong), Oxford, 2006; Oppenheim's International Law (ed. R. Y. Jennings and A. D. Watts), 9th edn, London, 1992, chapter 6; P. Daillier, M. Forteau and A. Pellet, Droit International Public, 8th edn, Paris, 2009, p. 1273; T. Treves, 'Codification du Droit International et Pratique des États dans le Droit de la Mer', 223 HR, 1990 IV, p. 9; R. R. Churchill and A. V. Lowe, The Law of the Sea, 3rd edn, Manchester, 1999; R. J. Dupuy and D. Vignes, Traité du Nouveau Droit de la Mer, Brussels, 1985; Le Nouveau Droit International de la Mer (ed. D. Bardonnet and M. Virally), Paris, 1983; D. P. O'Connell, The International Law of the Sea, Oxford, 2 vols., 1982–4; New Directions in the Law of the Sea, Dobbs Ferry, vols. I–VI (ed. R. Churchill, M. Nordquist and S. H. Lay), 1973–7; ibid., VII–XI (ed. M. Nordquist and K. Simmons), 1980–1; and S. Oda, The Law of the Sea in Our Time, Leiden, 2 vols., 1977. See also the series Limits in the Seas, published by the Geographer of the US State Department.

² See e.g. Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97; North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 51; and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 695–6 and 699.

³ Mare Liberum, 1609. See also O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 9 ff. The closed seas approach was put by e.g. J. Selden, Mare Clausum, 1635.

domain. Much of the history of the law of the sea has centred on the extent of the territorial sea or the precise location of the dividing line between it and the high seas and other recognised zones. The original stipulation linked the width of the territorial sea to the ability of the coastal state to dominate it by military means from the confines of its own shore. But the present century has witnessed continual pressure by states to enlarge the maritime belt and thus subject more of the oceans to their exclusive jurisdiction.

Beyond the territorial sea, other jurisdictional zones have been in process of development. Coastal states may now exercise particular jurisdictional functions in the contiguous zone, and the trend of international law today is moving rapidly in favour of even larger zones in which the coastal state may enjoy certain rights to the exclusion of other nations, such as fishery zones, continental shelves and, more recently, exclusive economic zones. However, in each case whether a state is entitled to a territorial sea, continental shelf or exclusive economic zone is a question to be decided by the law of the sea.⁴

This gradual shift in the law of the sea towards the enlargement of the territorial sea (the accepted maximum limit is now a width of 12 nautical miles in contrast to 3 nautical miles some sixty years ago), coupled with the continual assertion of jurisdictional rights over portions of what were regarded as high seas, reflects a basic change in emphasis in the attitude of states to the sea.

The predominance of the concept of the freedom of the high seas has been modified by the realisation of resources present in the seas and seabed beyond the territorial seas. Parallel with the developing tendency to assert ever greater claims over the high seas, however, has been the move towards proclaiming a 'common heritage of mankind' regime over the seabed of the high seas. The law relating to the seas, therefore, has been in a state of flux for several decades as the conflicting principles have manifested themselves.

A series of conferences have been held, which led to the four 1958 Conventions on the Law of the Sea and then to the 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea.⁵ The 1958 Convention on the High Seas was stated in its preamble to be 'generally declaratory of established principles of international law', while the other three 1958 instruments can be generally accepted as containing both reiterations of existing rules and new rules.

The pressures leading to the Law of the Sea Conference, which lasted between 1974 and 1982 and involved a very wide range of states and international organisations, included a variety of economic, political and strategic factors. Many Developing Countries wished to develop the exclusive economic zone idea, by which coastal states would have extensive rights over a 200-mile zone beyond the territorial sea, and were keen to establish international control over the deep seabed, so as to prevent the technologically advanced states from being able to extract minerals from this vital and vast source freely and without political constraint. Western states were desirous of protecting their navigation routes by opposing any weakening of the freedom of passage through international straits particularly, and wished to protect their economic interests through free exploitation of the resources of the high seas and the deep seabed. Other states and groups of states sought protection of their particular interests.⁶ Examples here would include the landlocked and geographically disadvantaged states, archipelagic states and coastal states. The effect of this kaleidoscopic range of interests was very marked and led to the 'package deal' concept of the final draft. According to this approach, for example, the Developing Countries accepted passage through straits and enhanced continental shelf rights beyond the 200-mile limit from the coasts in return for the internationalisation of deep sea mining.⁷

⁴ El Salvador/Honduras (Nicaragua Intervening), ICJ Reports, 1990, pp. 92, 126; 97 ILR, p. 214.

⁵ The 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone came into force in 1964; the 1958 Convention on the High Seas came into force in 1962; the 1958 Convention on Fishing and Conservation of Living Resources came into force in 1966; and the 1958 Convention on the Continental Shelf came into force in 1964.

The 1982 Convention contains 320 articles and 9 Annexes. It was adopted by 130 votes to 4, with 17 abstentions. The Convention entered into force on 16 November 1994, twelve months after the required 60 ratifications. In order primarily to meet Western concerns with regard to the International Seabed Area (Part XI of the Convention), an Agreement relating to the Implementation of Part XI of the 1982 Convention was adopted on 29 July 1994.⁸

Many of the provisions in the 1982 Convention repeat principles enshrined in the earlier instruments and others have since become customary rules, but many new rules were proposed. Accordingly, a complicated series of relationships between the various states exists in this field, based on customary rules and treaty rules.⁹ All states are prima facie bound by the accepted customary rules, while only the parties to the five treaties involved will be bound by the new rules contained therein, and since one must envisage some states not adhering to the 1982 Conventions, the 1958 rules will continue to be of importance.¹⁰ During the twelve-year period between the signing of the Convention and its coming into force, the influence of its provisions was clear in the process of law creation by state practice.¹¹

THE TERRITORIAL SEA

Internal Waters¹²

Internal waters are deemed to be such parts of the seas as do not form part of the high seas or the territorial sea or the contiguous or exclusive economic zones, and are accordingly classed as appertaining to the land territory of the coastal state. Internal waters, whether harbours, lakes or rivers, are such waters as are to be found on the landward side of the baselines from which the ⁶ See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 15 ff.

⁷ See e.g. H. Caminos and M. R. Molitor, 'Progressive Development of International Law and the Package Deal', 79 AJIL, 1985, p. 871.

⁸ See further below, p. 472.

⁹ See the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, ICJ Reports, 1969, pp. 3, 39; 41 ILR, pp. 29, 68; the Fisheries Jurisdiction (UK v. Iceland) case, ICJ Reports, 1974, p. 1; 55 ILR, p. 238; and the Anglo-French Continental Shelf case, Cmnd 7438, 1978; 54 ILR, p. 6. See also above, chapter 3, p. 63.

¹⁰ Note that by article 311(1) of the 1982 Convention, the provisions of this Convention will prevail as between the states parties over the 1958 Conventions.

¹¹ See e.g. J. R. Stevenson and B. H. Oxman, 'The Future of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea', 88 AJIL, 1994, p. 488. See also Law of the Sea: UNCLOS as a Living Treaty (ed. J. Barrett and R. Barnes), London, 2016.

¹² See e.g. Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 2; Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3(1); Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 5; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 9; V. D. Degan, 'Internal Waters', Netherlands YIL, 1986, p. 1; and Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 3.

width of the territorial and other zones is measured,¹³ and are assimilated with the sovereign territory of the state.¹⁴ They differ from the territorial sea primarily in that there does not exist any right of innocent passage from which the shipping of other states may benefit. There is an exception to this rule where the straight baselines enclose as internal waters what had been territorial waters.¹⁵

In general, a coastal state may exercise its jurisdiction over foreign ships within its internal waters to enforce its laws, although the judicial authorities of the flag state (i.e. the state whose flag the particular ship flies) may also act where crimes have occurred on board ship. This concurrent jurisdiction may be seen in two cases.

In R v. Anderson,¹⁶ in 1868, the Court of Criminal Appeal in the UK declared that an American national who had committed manslaughter on board a British vessel in French internal waters was subject to the jurisdiction of the British courts, even though he was also within the sovereignty of French justice (and American justice by reason of his nationality), and thus could be correctly convicted under English law. The US Supreme Court held in Wildenhus' case¹⁷ that the American courts had jurisdiction to try a crew member of a Belgian vessel for the murder of another Belgian national when the ship was docked in the port of Jersey City in New York.¹⁸

A merchant ship in a foreign port or in foreign internal waters is automatically subject to the local jurisdiction (unless there is an express agreement to the contrary), although where purely disciplinary issues related to the ship's crew are involved, which do not concern the maintenance of peace within the territory of the coastal state, then such matters would by courtesy be left to the authorities of the flag state to regulate.¹⁹ Although some writers have pointed to theoretical differences between the common law and French approaches, in practice the same fundamental proposition applies.²⁰

However, a completely different situation operates where the foreign vessel involved is a warship. In such cases, the authorisation of the captain or of the flag state is necessary before the coastal state may exercise its jurisdiction over the ship and its crew. This is due to the status of the warship as a direct arm of the sovereign of the flag state.²¹

¹³ Article 5(1) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 8(1) of the 1982 Convention. Note the exception in the latter provision with regard to archipelagic states, below, p. 420. See also Regina v. Farnquist (1981) 54 CCC (2d) 417; 94 ILR, p. 238.

¹⁴ Article 2 (1) of the 1982 Convention and Nicaragua v. US, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 111.

¹⁵ Article 5(2) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 8(2) of the 1982 Convention. See below, p. 415.

¹⁶ 1 Cox's Criminal Cases 198. ¹⁷ 120 US 1 (1887). See also Armament Dieppe SA v. US 399 F.2d 794 (1968).

¹⁸ See the Madrid incident, where US officials asserted the right to interview a potential defector from a Soviet ship in New Orleans, 80 AJIL, 1986, p. 622.

¹⁹ 120 US 1 at 20. See also e.g. NNB v. Ocean Trade Company 87 ILR, p. 96, where the Court of Appeal of The Hague held that a coastal state had jurisdiction over a foreign vessel where the vessel was within the territory of the coastal state and a dispute arose affecting not only the internal order of the ship but also the legal order of the coastal state concerned. The dispute concerned a strike on board ship taken on the advice of the International Transport Workers' Federation.

²⁰ See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 65 ff. See also J. L. Lenoir, 'Criminal Jurisdiction over Foreign Merchant Ships', 10 Tulane Law Review, 1935, p. 13. See, with regard to the right of access to ports and other internal waters, A. V. Lowe, 'The Right of Entry into Maritime Ports in International Law', 14 San Diego Law Review, 1977, p. 597, and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, chapter 22. See also the Dangerous Vessels Act 1985.

²¹ See The Schooner Exchange v. McFaddon 7 Cranch 116 (1812). See also 930 HC Deb., col. 450, Written Answers, 29 April 1977.

Baselines²²

The width of the territorial sea is defined from the low-water mark around the coasts of the state. This is the traditional principle under customary international law and was reiterated in article 3 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone in 1958 and article 5 of the 1982 Convention, and the low-water line along the coast is defined 'as marked on large-scale charts officially recognised by the coastal state'.²³

In the majority of cases, it will not be very difficult to locate the low-water line which is to act as the baseline for measuring the width of the territorial sea.²⁴ By virtue of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention, the low-water line of a low-tide elevation²⁵ may now be used as a baseline for measuring the breadth of the territorial sea if it is situated wholly or partly within the territorial sea measured from the mainland or an island. However, a low-tide elevation wholly situated beyond the territorial sea will generate no territorial sea of its own.²⁶ When a low-tide elevation is situated in the overlapping area of the territorial sea of two states, both are in principle entitled to use this as part of the relevant low-water line in measuring their respective territorial sea.²⁷ However, the International Court has taken the view that low-tide elevations may not be appropriated as part of the territory of the state concerned, unless within the territorial sea and thus part of the sovereignty of the coastal state over those waters, and thus cannot be fully assimilated with islands.²⁸ A low-tide elevation with a lighthouse or similar installation built upon it may be used for the purpose of drawing a straight baseline.²⁹

Sometimes, however, the geography of the state's coasts will be such as to cause certain problems: for instance, where the coastline is deeply indented or there are numerous islands

²² See e.g. Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3; Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 2; W. M. Reisman and G. S. Westerman, Straight Baselines in International Maritime Boundary Delimitation, New York, 1992; J. A. Roach and R. W. Smith, United States Responses to Excessive Maritime Claims, 2nd edn, The Hague, 1996; and L. Sohn, 'Base-line Considerations', in International Maritime Boundaries (ed. J. I. Charney and L. M. Alexander), Dordrecht, 1993, vol. I, p. 153.

²³ See Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97, and Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation) 119 ILR, pp. 417, 458. See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 2; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 5; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 607; and M. Mendelson, 'The Curious Case of Qatar v. Bahrain in the International Court of Justice', 72 BYIL, 2001, p. 183.

²⁴ See the Dubai/Sharjah Border Award 91 ILR, pp. 543, 660–3, where the Arbitral Tribunal took into account the outermost permanent harbour works of the two states as part of the coast for the purpose of drawing the baselines.

²⁵ See article 11(1), Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958 and article 13(1), Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. A low-tide elevation is a naturally formed area of land which is surrounded by and above water at low tide, but submerged at high tide. See e.g. G. Marston, 'Low-Tide Elevations and Straight Baselines', 46 BYIL, 1972–3, p. 405; and D. Bowett, 'Islands, Rocks, Reefs and Low-Tide Elevations in Maritime Boundary Delimitations', in Charney and Alexander, International Maritime Boundaries, vol. I, p. 131. See further below, p. 419 on the relationship between low-tide elevations and islands.

²⁶ Article 13(2) of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. Further, low-tide elevations situated within 12 miles of another such elevation but beyond the territorial sea of the state may not themselves be used for the determination of the breadth of the territorial sea, the so-called 'leap-frogging method', Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 102. See also Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 703, but see Eritrea/Yemen 114 ILR, pp. 1, 138.

²⁷ Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, p. 40, 101.

²⁸ Ibid., pp. 40, 102 and Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 703. See also Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 641, noting that low-tide elevations cannot be appropriated; and Philippines v. China, Award of 12 July 2016, para. 309, affirming that low-tide elevations do not form part of the land territory of a state in the legal sense. The Tribunal in the latter case also made the point that subsequent human modifications of low-tide elevations would not be taken into account in ascertaining the status of the feature: ibid., para. 306.

²⁹ See article 7(4) of the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982. See also article 47(4) with regard to archipelagic baselines.

running parallel to the coasts, or where there exist bays cutting into the coastlines. Special rules have evolved to deal with this issue, which is of importance to coastal states, particularly where foreign vessels regularly fish close to the limits of the territorial sea. A more rational method of drawing baselines might have the effect of enclosing larger areas of the sea within the state's internal waters, and thus extend the boundaries of the territorial sea further than the traditional method might envisage.

This point was raised in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case,³⁰ before the International Court of Justice. The case concerned a Norwegian decree delimiting its territorial sea along some 1,000 miles of its coastline. However, instead of measuring the territorial sea from the low-water line, the Norwegians constructed a series of straight baselines linking the outermost parts of the land running along the skjaergaard (or fringe of islands and rocks) which parallels the Norwegian coastline. This had the effect of enclosing within its territorial limits parts of what would normally have been the high seas if the traditional method had been utilised. As a result, certain disputes involving British fishing boats arose, and the United Kingdom challenged the legality of the Norwegian method of baselines under international law. The Court held that it was the outer line of the skjaergaard that was relevant in establishing the baselines, and not the low-water line of the mainland. This was dictated by geographic realities. The Court noted that the normal method of drawing baselines that are parallel to the coast (the tracé parallèle) was not applicable in this case because it would necessitate complex geometrical constructions in view of the extreme indentations of the coastline and the existence of the series of islands fringing the coasts.³¹

Since the usual methods did not apply, and taking into account the principle that the territorial sea must follow the general direction of the coasts, the concept of straight baselines drawn from the outer rocks could be considered.³² The Court also made the point that the Norwegian system had been applied consistently over many years and had met no objections from other states, and that the UK had not protested until many years after it had first been introduced.³³ In other words, the method of straight baselines operated by Norway:

had been consolidated by a constant and sufficiently long practice, in the face of which the attitude of governments bears witness to the fact that they did not consider it to be contrary to international law.³⁴

Thus, although noting that Norwegian rights had been established through actual practice coupled with acquiescence, the Court regarded the straight baseline system itself as a valid principle of international law in view of the special geographic conditions of the area. The Court provided criteria for determining the acceptability of any such delimitations. The drawing of the baselines had not to depart from the general direction of the coast, in view of the close dependence of the territorial sea upon the land domain; the baselines had to be drawn so that the sea area lying within them had to be sufficiently closely linked to the land domain to ³⁰ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86.

³¹ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 128; 18 ILR, p. 91. Note also the Court's mention of the courbe tangente method of drawing arcs of circles from points along the low-water line, ibid.

³² ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 129; 18 ILR, p. 92. Other states had already used such a system: see e.g. H. Waldock, 'The Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries Case', 28 BYIL, 1951, pp. 114, 148.

³³ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 138; 18 ILR, p. 101. Cf. Judge McNair, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 171–80; 18 ILR, p. 123.

³⁴ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 139; 18 ILR, p. 102.

be subject to the regime of internal waters, and it was permissible to consider in the process 'certain economic interests peculiar to a region, the reality and importance of which are evidenced by long usage'.³⁵

These principles emerging from the Fisheries case were accepted by states as part of international law within a comparatively short period.

Article 7 of the 1982 Convention states that the straight baseline system could be used in cases of deeply indented coastlines or where there exist a fringe of islands along the coast in its immediate vicinity (skjaergaard) provided that the line does not depart to any appreciable extent from the general direction of the coast and that there are sufficiently close links between the sea areas within the lines and the land domain to be subject to the regime of internal waters. In addition, particular regional economic interests of long standing may be considered where necessary.³⁶

A number of states now use the system, including, it should be mentioned, the United Kingdom as regards areas on the west coast of Scotland.³⁷ However, there is evidence that, perhaps in view of the broad criteria laid down, many states have used this system in circumstances that are not strictly justifiable in law.³⁸ However, the Court made it clear in Qatar v. Bahrain that the method of straight baselines, which is an exception to the normal rules for the determination of baselines, may only be applied if a number of conditions are met. This method must be applied restrictively. Such conditions are primarily that either the coastline is deeply indented and cut into, or that there is a fringe of islands along the coast in its immediate vicinity.³⁹

Further, the Court emphasised that the fact that a state considers itself a multiple-island state or a de facto archipelago does not allow it to deviate from the normal rules for the determination of baselines unless the relevant conditions are met.⁴⁰

Where the result of the straight baseline method is to enclose as internal waters areas previously regarded as part of the territorial sea or high seas, a right of innocent passage shall be deemed to exist in such waters by virtue of article 5(2) of the 1958 Convention.⁴¹

³⁵ ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 133; 18 ILR, p. 95.

³⁶ See also article 4 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958. Note that straight baselines may not be drawn to and from low-tide elevations, unless lighthouses or similar installations which are permanently above sea level have been built on them: see article 4(3), 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and article 7(4), 1982 Convention on the Law of the Sea. See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 100–1 and 102.

³⁷ Territorial Waters Order in Council, 1964, article 3, s. 1, 1965, Part III, s. 2, p. 6452A. See also the Territorial Sea (Limits) Order 1989 regarding the Straits of Dover. See generally, as regards state practice, Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 38–41, who note that some fifty-five to sixty-five states have used straight baselines; and M. Whiteman, Digest of International Law, Washington, vol. IV, pp. 21–35.

³⁸ See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 39. See also the objection of the European Union to the use by Iran and Thailand of straight baselines along practically their entire coastlines, UKMIL, 69 BYIL, 1998, pp. 540–2, and US objections to the use of straight baselines by Thailand, DUSPIL, 2000, p. 703.

³⁹ ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 103.

⁴⁰ Ibid. The Court rejected Bahrain's claim that certain maritime features east of its main islands constituted a fringe of islands: ibid.

⁴¹ See also article 8(2) of the 1982 Convention.

Bays⁴²

Problems also arise as to the approach to be adopted with regard to bays, in particular whether the waters of wide-mouthed bays ought to be treated as other areas of the sea adjacent to the coast, so that the baseline of the territorial sea would be measured from the low-water mark of the coast of the bay, or whether the device of the straight baseline could be used to 'close off' the mouth of the bay of any width and the territorial limit measured from that line.

It was long accepted that a straight closing line could be used across the mouths of bays, but there was considerable disagreement as to the permitted width of the bay beyond which this would not operate.⁴³ The point was settled in article 7 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea. This declared that: otherwise a straight baseline of 24 miles may be drawn.⁴⁴ if the distance between the low-water marks of the natural entrance points of a bay does not exceed twenty-four miles, a closing line may be drawn between these two low-water marks, and the waters enclosed thereby shall be considered as internal waters,

This provision, however, does not apply to historic bays. These are bays the waters of which are treated by the coastal state as internal in view of historic rights supported by general acquiescence rather than any specific principle of international law.⁴⁵ A number of states have claimed historic bays: for example, Canada with respect to Hudson Bay (although the US has opposed this)⁴⁶ and certain American states as regards the Gulf of Fonseca.⁴⁷ The question of this Gulf came before the International Court in the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras; Nicaragua intervening).⁴⁸ The Court noted that the states concerned and commentators were agreed that the Gulf was a historic bay, but this was defined in terms of the particular historical situation of that Gulf, especially as it constituted a pluri-state bay, for which there were no agreed and codified general rules of the kind well established for single-state bays.⁴⁹ In the light of the particular historical circumstances and taking particular note of the 1917 decision, the Court found that the Gulf, beyond a long-accepted 3-mile maritime belt for the coastal states, constituted historic waters subject to the co-ownership or a condominium of the three coastal states.⁵⁰ The Court continued by noting that the vessels of other states would enjoy a right of innocent passage in ⁴² See e.g. Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 28; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 41 ff.; and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, p. 209. See also G. Westerman, The Juridical Bay, Oxford, 1987.

⁴³ See e.g. the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries case, 11 RIAA, p. 167 (1910) and the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, p. 116; 18 ILR, p. 86, to the effect that no general rules of international law had been uniformly accepted.

⁴⁴ See also article 10 of the 1982 Convention.

⁴⁵ See the Tunisia/Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 74; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 67.

⁴⁶ See Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, pp. 250-7. ⁴⁷ See El Salvador v. Nicaragua 11 AJIL, 1917, p. 674.

⁴⁸ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 351; 97 ILR, p. 266.

⁴⁹ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 589; 97 ILR, p. 505. But cf. the Dissenting Opinion of Judge Oda, ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 745; 97 ILR, p. 661.

⁵⁰ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 601; 97 ILR, p. 517. See also generally C. Symmons, Historic Waters in the Law of the Sea: A Modern Re-appraisal, The Hague, 2007.

the waters beyond the coastal belt in order to ensure access to any one of the three coastal states.⁵¹ Having decided that the three states enjoyed a condominium within the Gulf, the Court concluded that there was a tripartite presence at the closing line of the Gulf.⁵²

The United States Supreme Court has taken the view that where waters are outside the statutory limits for inland waters, the exercise of sovereignty required to establish title to a historic bay amounted to the exclusion of all foreign vessels and navigation from the area claimed. The continuous authority exercised in this fashion had to be coupled with the acquiescence of states. This was the approach in the US v. State of Alaska case⁵³ concerning the waters of Cook Inlet. The Supreme Court held that Alaska had not satisfied the terms and that the Inlet had not been regarded as a historic bay under Soviet, American or Alaskan sovereignty. Accordingly, it was the federal state and not Alaska which was entitled to the subsurface of Cook Inlet.⁵⁴

In response to the Libyan claim to the Gulf of Sirte (Sidra) as a historic bay and the consequent drawing of a closing line of nearly 300 miles in length in 1973, several states immediately protested, including the US and the states of the European Community.⁵⁵ The US in a note to Libya in 1974 referred to 'the international law standards of past open, notorious and effective exercise of authority, and the acquiescence of foreign nations'⁵⁶ and has on several occasions sent naval and air forces into the Gulf in order to maintain its opposition to the Libyan claim and to assert that the waters of the Gulf constitute high seas.⁵⁷ Little evidence appears, in fact, to support the Libyan contention.

The question of historic waters was examined by the Tribunal in the Philippines v. China arbitration on the South China Sea,⁵⁸ where it was underlined that what was required was 'the continuous exercise of the claimed right by the state asserting the claim and acquiescence on the part of other affected states'. The Tribunal particularly noted that:⁵⁹

⁵¹ ICJ Reports, 1992, p. 605; 97 ILR, p. 521.

⁵² ICJ Reports, 1992, pp. 608–9; 97 ILR, pp. 524–5. See also M. N. Shaw, 'Case Concerning the Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras: Nicaragua Intervening)', Judgment of 11 September 1992', 42 ICLQ, 1993, p. 929; and A. Gioia, 'The Law of Multinational Bays and the Case of the Gulf of Fonseca', Netherlands YIL, 1993, p. 81.

⁵³ 422 US 184 (1975). See also L. J. Bouchez, The Regime of Bays in International Law, Leiden, 1963; and the Tunisia–Libya Continental Shelf case, ICJ Reports, 1982, pp. 18, 74; 67 ILR, pp. 4, 67.

⁵⁴ See also United States v. California 381 US 139 (1965); United States v. Louisiana (Louisiana Boundary Case) 394 US 11 (1969); United States v. Maine (Rhode Island and New York Boundary Case) 471 US 375 (1985); and Alabama and Mississippi Boundary Case, United States v. Louisiana 470 US 93 (1985).

⁵⁵ See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 45, and UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 579–80. See also F. Francioni, 'The Gulf of Sidra Incident (United States v. Libya) and International Law', 5 Italian Yearbook of International Law, 1980–1, p. 85.

⁵⁶ See 68 AJIL, 1974, p. 510. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, Washington, 1994, vol. II, p. 1810.

⁵⁷ See e.g. UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, pp. 581–2.

⁵⁸ Award of 12 July 2016, paras. 265 ff. See also Study by the Secretariat, Memorandum on the Juridical Regime of Historic Waters, Including Historic Bays, A/CN.4/143, International Law Commission, 1962.

⁵⁹ Award, para. 268. The Tribunal dismissed the historic claim of China to the South China Sea: ibid., paras. 270, 277–8 and 631. The Tribunal pointed out that the question of historic rights over waters was distinct from that concerning historic rights over land: ibid., para. 272.

historic rights are, in most instances, exceptional rights. They accord a right that a state would not otherwise hold, were it not for the operation of the historical process giving rise to the right and the acquiescence of other states in the process. It follows from this, however, that the exercise of freedoms permitted under international law cannot give rise to a historic right; it involves nothing that would call for the acquiescence of other states and can only represent the use of what international law already freely permits.

Islands⁶⁰

As far as islands are concerned, the general provisions noted above regarding the measurement of the territorial sea apply. Islands are defined in article 121(1) of the 1982 Convention as consisting of 'a naturally-formed area of land, surrounded by water, which is above water at high tide',⁶¹ and they can generate a territorial sea, contiguous zone, exclusive economic zone and continental shelf where relevant.⁶² Where there exists a chain of islands which are less than 24 miles apart, a continuous band of territorial sea may be generated.⁶³ However, article 121(3) of the 1982 Convention provides that 'rocks which cannot sustain human habitation or economic life of their own shall have no exclusive economic zone or continental shelf', although they can generate a territorial sea.⁶⁴ Low-tide elevations do not generate territorial seas of their own when situated outside the territorial sea of the mainland or an island by virtue of article 13(2) of the 1982 Convention, while artificial islands would generate only a 500-metre safety zone under article 60(5) of the Convention. Article 121(3) begs a series of questions, such as the precise dividing line between rocks and islands and as to the actual meaning of an 'economic life of their own', and a number of states have made controversial claims.⁶⁵ Whether this provision over and ⁶⁰ See e.g. H. W. Jayewardene, The Regime of Islands in International Law, Dordrecht, 1990; D. W. Bowett, The Legal Regime of Islands in International Law, New York, 1979; C. Symmons, The Maritime Zone of Islands in International Law, The Hague, 1979; J. Simonides, 'The Legal Status of Islands in the New Law of the Sea', 65 Revue de Droit International, 1987, p. 161; and R. O'Keefe, 'Palm-Fringed Benefits: Island Dependencies in the New Law of the Sea', 45 ICLQ, 1996, p. 408.

⁶¹ See also Article 10(1) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea. The Court noted in Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 645 that the key was whether the island was naturally formed and not its geological composition.

⁶² Article 121(2) of the 1982 Convention. See also the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 37, 64–5; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 432–3; and Nicaragua v. Colombia, ICJ Reports, 2012, pp. 624, 641 and 644. Article 10(2) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea referred only to the territorial sea of islands.

⁶³ See Eritrea/Yemen (Phase Two: Maritime Delimitation) 119 ILR, pp. 417, 463.

⁶⁴ See the Jan Mayen report, 20 ILM, 1981, pp. 797, 803; 62 ILR, pp. 108, 114, and the Declaration by Judge Evensen in the Jan Mayen (Denmark v. Norway) case, ICJ Reports, 1993, pp. 37, 84–5; 99 ILR, pp. 395, 452–3. Note, as regards Rockall and the conflicting UK, Irish, Danish and Icelandic views, Symmons, Maritime Zone, pp. 117–18, 126; E. D. Brown, 'Rockall and the Limits of National Jurisdiction of the United Kingdom', 2 Marine Policy, 1978, pp. 181–211 and 275–303; and O'Keefe, 'Palm-Fringed Benefits'. See also 878 HC Deb., col. 82, Written Answers, and The Times, 8 May 1985, p. 6 (Danish claims) and The Guardian, 1 May 1985, p. 30 (Icelandic claims). UK sovereignty over the uninhabited island of Rockall was proclaimed in 1955 and confirmed by the Island of Rockall Act 1972, UKMIL, 68 BYIL, 1997, p. 589. The UK Minister of State declared that the 12-mile territorial sea around Rockall was consistent with the terms of the 1982 Convention and that there was no reason to believe that this was not accepted by the international community, apart from the Republic of Ireland, UKMIL, 60 BYIL, 1989, p. 666. The UK claim to a 200-mile fishing zone around Rockall made in the Fishery Limits Act 1976 was withdrawn in 1997 consequent upon accession to the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982 and the 12-mile territorial sea confirmed: see UKMIL, 68 BYIL, 1997, pp. 599–600 and UKMIL, 71 BYIL, 2000, p. 601.

⁶⁵ See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 163–4, and J. I. Charney, 'Rocks that Cannot Sustain Human Habitation', 93 AJIL, 1999, p. 873.

above its appearance in the Law of the Sea Convention is a rule of customary law is unclear.⁶⁶ The question of the relationship between islands and low-tide elevations was discussed in the Philippines v. China arbitration concerning the South China Sea,⁶⁷ where the Tribunal underlined that articles 121(3) and 13 needed to be interpreted together. It was particularly noted that a low-tide elevation could not be legally transformed into an island through human efforts and a rock could not be transformed into a fully entitled island through land reclamation. The status of a feature has to be assessed on the basis of its natural condition. The Tribunal concluded that substantial human modifications such as the construction of large installations like desalination plants and airstrips would not suffice to change the original characterisation of the maritime feature from a low-tide elevation into an island in law.

Archipelagic States⁶⁸

Problems have arisen as a result of efforts by states comprising a number of islands to draw straight baselines around the outer limits of their islands, thus 'boxing in' the whole territory. Indonesia in particular has resorted to this method, against the protests of a number of states since it tends to reduce previously considered areas of the high seas extensively used as shipping lanes to the sovereignty of the archipelago state concerned.⁶⁹

There has been a great deal of controversy as to which international law principles apply in the case of archipelagos and the subject was not expressly dealt with in the 1958 Geneva Convention.⁷⁰ Article 46(a) defines an archipelagic state as 'a state constituted wholly by one or more archipelagos and may include other islands', while article 46(b) defines archipelagos as 'a group of islands, including parts of islands, interconnecting waters and other natural features which are so closely interrelated that such islands, waters and other natural features form an intrinsic geographical, economic and political entity, or which historically have been regarded as such'. This raises questions as to whether states that objectively fall within the definition are therefore automatically to be regarded as archipelagic states. The list of states that have not declared that they constitute archipelagic states, although they would appear to conform with the definition, would include the UK and Japan.⁷¹ Bahrain contended in Qatar v. Bahrain that it constituted a 'de facto archipelago or multiple island state' and that it could declare itself an archipelagic state under the Law of the Sea Convention, 1982, enabling it to take advantage of the straight baselines rule contained in article 47. The Court, however, noted that such a claim did not ⁶⁶ Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 164. ⁶⁷ Award of 12 July 2016, PCA Case No. 2013–19, paras. 508 ff.

⁶⁸ See e.g. Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3(5); Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 8; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 6; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 6; Bowett, Legal Regime, chapter 4; C. F. Amerasinghe, 'The Problem of Archipelagos in the International Law of the Sea', 23 ICLQ, 1974, p. 539; and D. P. O'Connell, 'Mid-Ocean Archipelagos in International Law', 45 BYIL, 1971, p. 1.

⁶⁹ O'Connell, 'Mid-Ocean Archipelagos', pp. 23–4, 45–7 and 51, and Whiteman, Digest, vol. IV, p. 284. See also the Indonesian Act No. 4 of 18 February 1960 Concerning Indonesian Waters, extracted in Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, p. 98; the Philippines Act to Define the Baselines of the Territorial Sea of the Philippines, Act No. 3046 of 17 June 1961, and the Philippines Declaration with respect to the 1982 Convention: ibid., pp. 100–1 (with objections from the USSR and Australia: ibid., pp. 101–2). See, as to the US objection to the Philippines Declaration, Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 1066, and to claims relating to the Faroes, Galapagos, Portugal and Sudan, Roach and Smith, United States Responses, pp. 112 ff.

⁷⁰ But see, as regards 'coastal archipelagos', article 4 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea.

⁷¹ See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 121.

fall within Bahrain's formal submissions and thus it did not need to take a position on the issue.⁷² Article 47 provides that an archipelagic state may draw straight archipelagic baselines joining the outermost points of the outermost islands and drying reefs of the archipelago, which would then serve as the relevant baselines for other purposes. There are a number of conditions before this may be done, however, and article 47 provides as follows:

1. An archipelagic state may draw straight archipelagic baselines joining the outermost points of the outermost islands and drying reefs of the archipelago provided that within such baselines are included the main islands and in areas in which the ratio of the area of the water to the area of the land, including atolls, is between 1 to 1 and 9 to 1.
2. The length of such baselines shall not exceed 100 nautical miles, except that up to 3 per cent of the total number of baselines enclosing any archipelago may exceed that length, up to a maximum length of 125 nautical miles.
3. The drawing of such baselines shall not depart to any appreciable extent from the general configuration of the archipelago.
4. Such baselines shall not be drawn from low-tide elevations, unless lighthouses or similar installations which are permanently above sea level have been built on them or where a low-tide elevation is situated wholly or partly at a distance not exceeding the breadth of the territorial sea from the nearest island.
5. The system of such baselines shall not be applied by an archipelagic state in such a manner as to cut off from the high seas or the exclusive economic zone the territorial sea of another state.
6. If a part of the archipelagic waters of an archipelagic state lies between two parts of an immediately adjacent neighbouring state, existing rights and all other legitimate interests which the latter state has traditionally exercised in such waters and all rights stipulated by agreement between those states shall continue and be respected.
7. For the purpose of computing the ratio of water to land under paragraph 1, land areas may include waters lying within the fringing reefs of islands and atolls, including that part of a steep-sided oceanic plateau which is enclosed or nearly enclosed by a chain of limestone islands and drying reefs lying on the perimeter of the plateau.
8. The baselines drawn in accordance with this article shall be shown on charts of a scale or scales adequate for ascertaining their position. Alternatively, lists of geographic co-ordinates of points, specifying the geodetic datum, may be substituted.
9. The archipelagic states shall give due publicity to such charts or lists of geographical co-ordinates and shall deposit a copy of each such chart or list with the Secretary-General of the United Nations.

All the waters within such baselines are archipelagic waters⁷³ over which the state has sovereignty,⁷⁴ but existing agreements, traditional fishing rights and existing submarine cables must be respected.⁷⁵ In addition, ships of all states shall enjoy the rights of innocent passage through archipelagic waters⁷⁶ and all the ships and aircraft are to enjoy a right of archipelagic sea lanes passage through such lanes and air routes designated by the archipelagic state for 'continuous and expeditious passage'.⁷⁷

⁷² ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 96–7.

⁷³ Article 50 provides that within its archipelagic waters, the archipelagic state may draw closing lines for the delimitation of internal waters.

⁷⁴ Article 49. ⁷⁵ Article 51. ⁷⁶ Article 52.

⁷⁷ Article 53. For examples of state practice, see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 125 ff.

In response to a reported closure in 1988 of the Straits of Sunda and Lombok by Indonesia, the US stressed that the archipelagic provisions of the 1982 Convention reflected customary international law and that those straits were subject to the regime of archipelagic sea lanes passage. Accordingly, it was pointed out that any interference with such passage would violate international law.⁷⁸

The Width of the Territorial Sea⁷⁹

There has historically been considerable disagreement as to how far the territorial sea may extend from the baselines. Originally, the ‘cannon-shot’ rule defined the width required in terms of the range of shore-based artillery, but at the turn of the nineteenth century, this was transmuted into the 3-mile rule. This was especially supported by the United States and the United Kingdom, and any detraction had to be justified by virtue of historic rights and general acquiescence as, for example, the Scandinavian claim to 4 miles.⁸⁰

However, the issue was much confused by the claims of many coastal states to exercise certain jurisdictional rights for particular purposes: for example, fisheries, customs and immigration controls. It was not until after the First World War that a clear distinction was made between claims to enlarge the width of the territorial sea and claims over particular zones.

Recently the 3-mile rule has been discarded as a rule of general application to be superseded by contending assertions. The 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea did not include an article on the subject because of disagreements among the states, while the 1960 Geneva Conference failed to accept a United States–Canadian proposal for a 6-mile territorial sea coupled with an exclusive fisheries zone for a further 6 miles by only one vote.⁸¹

Article 3 of the 1982 Convention, however, notes that all states have the right to establish the breadth of the territorial sea up to a limit not exceeding 12 nautical miles from the baselines. This clearly accords with the evolving practice of states.⁸² The UK adopted a 12-mile limit in the Territorial Sea Act 1987, for instance, as did the US by virtue of Proclamation No. 5928 in December 1988.⁸³

The Juridical Nature of the Territorial Sea⁸⁴

The territorial sea appertains to the territorial sovereignty of the coastal state and thus belongs to it automatically. For example, all newly independent states (with a coast) come to independence

⁷⁸ 83 AJIL, 1989, pp. 559–61. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 2060.

⁷⁹ See e.g. Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, pp. 73 ff.; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 71 ff.; and O’Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 4. See also Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 611.

⁸⁰ See e.g. H. S. K. Kent, ‘Historical Origins of the Three-mile Limit’, 48 AJIL, 1954, p. 537; and The Anna (1805) 165 ER 809. See also US v. Kessler 1 Baldwin’s C C Rep. 15 (1829).

⁸¹ See O’Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 163–4.

⁸² See <https://www.gov.uk/guidance/uk-maritime-limits-and-law-of-the-sea#maritime-limits> with regard to the UK, UK Overseas Territories and Crown Dependencies. See also www.un.org/depts/los/LEGISLATIONANDTREATIES/claims.htm.

⁸³ As to delimitation of the territorial sea, see below, p. 440.

⁸⁴ See Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3; Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3; O’Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 3. See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 4.

with an entitlement to a territorial sea.⁸⁵ There have been a number of theories as to the precise legal character of the territorial sea of the coastal state, ranging from treating the territorial sea as part of the res communis, but subject to certain rights exercisable by the coastal state, to regarding the territorial sea as part of the coastal state's territorial domain subject to a right of innocent passage by foreign vessels.⁸⁶ Nevertheless, it cannot be disputed that the coastal state enjoys sovereign rights over its maritime belt and extensive jurisdictional control, having regard to the relevant rules of international law. The fundamental restriction upon the sovereignty of the coastal state is the right of other nations to innocent passage through the territorial sea, and this distinguishes the territorial sea from the internal waters of the state, which are fully within the unrestricted jurisdiction of the coastal nation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958⁸⁷ provide that the coastal state's sovereignty extends over its territorial sea and to the airspace and seabed and subsoil thereof, subject to the provisions of the Convention and of international law. The territorial sea forms an undeniable part of the land territory to which it is bound, so that a cession of land will automatically include any band of territorial waters.⁸⁸

The coastal state may, if it so desires, exclude foreign nationals and vessels from fishing within its territorial sea and (subject to agreements to the contrary) from coastal trading (known as cabotage), and reserve these activities for its own citizens.

Similarly, the coastal state has extensive powers of control relating to, amongst others, security and customs matters. It should be noted, however, that how far a state chooses to exercise the jurisdiction and sovereignty to which it may lay claim under the principles of international law will depend upon the terms of its own municipal legislation, and some states will not wish to take advantage of the full extent of the powers permitted them within the international legal system.⁸⁹

The Right of Innocent Passage

The right of foreign merchant ships (as distinct from warships) to pass unhindered through the territorial sea of a coast has long been an accepted principle in customary international law, the sovereignty of the coast state notwithstanding. However, the precise extent of the doctrine is blurred and open to contrary interpretation, particularly with respect to the requirement that the passage must be 'innocent'.⁹⁰ Article 17 of the 1982 Convention lays down the following principle: 'ships of all states, whether coastal or land-locked, enjoy the right of innocent passage through the territorial sea'.

The doctrine was elaborated in article 14 of the Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958, which emphasised that the coastal state must not hamper innocent passage and must publicise any dangers to navigation in the territorial sea of which it is aware. Passage is defined as navigation ⁸⁵ Nicaragua v. Honduras, ICJ Reports, 2007, pp. 659, 729. See also Nicaragua v. US, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 14, 111.

⁸⁶ O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 60–7. ⁸⁷ See also article 2 of the 1982 Convention.

⁸⁸ See the Grisbadarna case, 11 RIAA, p. 147 (1909); and the Beagle Channel case, HMSO, 1977; 52 ILR, p. 93. See also Judge McNair, Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case, ICJ Reports, 1951, pp. 116, 160; 18 ILR, pp. 86, 113.

⁸⁹ See also R v. Keyn (1876) 2 Ex.D. 63 and the consequential Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act 1878.

⁹⁰ See Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3(3); Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, pp. 230 ff.; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 82 ff.; and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 7. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 615.

through the territorial sea for the purpose of crossing that sea without entering internal waters or of proceeding to or from that sea without entering internal waters or of proceeding to or from internal waters. It may include temporary stoppages, but only if they are incidental to ordinary navigation or necessitated by distress or force majeure.⁹¹

The coastal state may not impose charges for such passage unless they are in payment for specific services,⁹² and ships engaged in passage are required to comply with the coastal state's regulations covering, for example, navigation in so far as they are consistent with international law.⁹³

Passage ceases to be innocent under article 14(4) of the 1958 Convention where it is 'prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the coastal state' and in the case of foreign fishing vessels when they do not observe such laws and regulations as the coastal state may make and publish to prevent these ships from fishing in the territorial sea. In addition, submarines must navigate on the surface and show their flag.

Where passage is not innocent, the coastal state may take steps to prevent it in its territorial sea and, where ships are proceeding to internal waters, it may act to forestall any breach of the conditions to which admission of such ships to internal waters is subject. Coastal states have the power temporarily to suspend innocent passage of foreign vessels where it is essential for security reasons, provided such suspension has been published and provided it does not cover international straits.

Article 19(2) of the 1982 Convention has developed the notion of innocent passage contained in article 14(4) of the 1958 Convention by the provision of examples of prejudicial passage such as: the threat or use of force; weapons practice; spying; propaganda; breach of customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary regulations; wilful and serious pollution; fishing; research or survey activities and interference with coastal communications or other facilities. In addition, a wide-ranging clause includes 'any activity not having a direct bearing on passage'. This would appear to have altered the burden of proof from the coastal state to the other party with regard to innocent passage, as well as being somewhat difficult to define. By virtue of article 24 of the 1982 Convention, coastal states must not hamper the innocent passage of foreign ships, either by imposing requirements upon them which would have the practical effect of denying or impairing the right or by discrimination. Article 17 of the Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea, 1958 provided that foreign ships exercising the right of innocent passage were to comply with the laws and regulations enacted by the coastal state, in particular those relating to transport and navigation. This was developed in article 21(1) of the 1982 Convention, which expressly provided that the coastal state could adopt laws and regulations concerning innocent passage with regard to:

- (a) the safety of navigation and the regulation of maritime traffic;
- (b) the protection of navigational aids and facilities and other facilities or installations;
- (c) the protection of cables and pipelines;
- (d) the conservation of the living resources of the sea;
- (e) the prevention of infringement of the fisheries laws and regulations of the coastal state;

⁹¹ See article 18 of the 1982 Convention. Passage includes crossing the territorial sea in order to call at roadsteads or port facilities outside internal waters: article 18(1); and see the Nicaragua case, ICJ Reports, 1986, pp. 12, 111; 76 ILR, p. 1.

⁹² Article 26 of the 1982 Convention. ⁹³ See article 21(4) of the 1982 Convention.

- (f) the preservation of the environment of the coastal state and the prevention, reduction and control of pollution thereof;
- (g) marine scientific research and hydrographic surveys;
- (h) the prevention of infringement of the customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary laws and regulations of the coastal state.

Breach of such laws and regulations will render the offender liable to prosecution, but will not make the passage non-innocent as such, unless article 19 has been infringed.⁹⁴

One major controversy of considerable importance revolves around the issue of whether the passage of warships in peacetime is or is not innocent.⁹⁵ The question was further complicated by the omission of an article on the problem in the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea, and the discussion of innocent passage in a series of articles headed 'Rules applicable to all ships'. This has led some writers to assert that this includes warships by inference, but other authorities maintain that such an important issue could not be resolved purely by omission and inference, especially in view of the reservations by many states to the Convention rejecting the principle of innocent passage for warships and in the light of comments in the various preparatory materials to the 1958 Geneva Convention.⁹⁶

It was primarily the Western states, with their preponderant naval power, that historically maintained the existence of a right of innocent passage for warships, to the opposition of the then communist and 'Third World' nations. However, having regard to the rapid growth in their naval capacity and the ending of the Cold War, Soviet attitudes underwent a change.⁹⁷

In September 1989, the US and the USSR issued a joint 'Uniform Interpretation of the Rules of International Law Governing Innocent Passage'.⁹⁸ This reaffirmed that the relevant rules of international law were stated in the 1982 Convention. It then provided that:

[a]ll ships, including warships, regardless of cargo, armament or means of propulsion, enjoy the right of innocent passage through the territorial sea in accordance with international law, for which neither prior notification nor authorisation is required.

The statement noted that where a ship in passage through the territorial sea was not engaged in any of the activities laid down in article 19(2), it was 'in innocent passage' since that provision was exhaustive. Ships in passage were under an obligation to comply with the laws and regulations of the coastal state adopted in conformity with articles 21, 22, 23 and 25 of the 1982 Convention, provided such laws and regulations did not have the effect of denying or impairing the exercise of the right of innocent passage.

⁹⁴ Under article 22 of the 1982 Convention, the coastal state may establish designated sea lanes and traffic separation schemes in its territorial sea. See UKMIL, 64 BYIL, 1993, p. 688 for details of traffic separation schemes around the UK.

⁹⁵ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 274–97. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 618.

⁹⁶ O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, pp. 290–2.

⁹⁷ See also Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 54–6. The issue was left open at the Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea and does not therefore appear in the 1982 Convention. Note, however, that Western and communist states both proposed including a reference to warships in early sessions of the Conference: see UNCLOS III, Official Records, vol. III, pp. 183, 203, 192 and 196. See also article 29(2) of the 1975 Informal Single Negotiating Text. The right of warships to innocent passage was maintained by the US following an incident during which four US warships sailed through Soviet territorial waters off the Crimean coast: see The Times, 19 March 1986, p. 5.

⁹⁸ See 84 AJIL, 1990, p. 239.

This important statement underlines the view that the list of activities laid down in article 19(2) is exhaustive so that a ship passing through the territorial sea not engaging in any of these activities is in innocent passage. It also lends considerable weight to the view that warships have indeed a right of innocent passage through the territorial sea and one that does not necessitate prior notification or authorisation.⁹⁹

Jurisdiction over Foreign Ships¹⁰⁰

Where foreign ships are in passage through the territorial sea, the coastal state may only exercise its criminal jurisdiction as regards the arrest of any person or the investigation of any matter connected with a crime committed on board ship in defined situations. These are enumerated in article 27(1) of the 1982 Convention, reaffirming article 19(1) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea, as follows:

(a) if the consequences of the crime extend to the coastal state; or (b) if the crime is of a kind likely to disturb the peace of the country or the good order of the territorial sea; or (c) if the assistance of the local authorities has been requested by the master of the ship or by a diplomatic agent or consular officer of the country of the flag state; or (d) if such measures are necessary for the suppression of illicit traffic in narcotic drugs or psychotropic substances.¹⁰¹

However, if the ship is passing through the territorial sea having left the internal waters of the coastal state, then the coastal state may act in any manner prescribed by its laws as regards arrest or investigation on board ship and is not restricted by the terms of article 27(1). But the authorities of the coastal state cannot act where the crime was committed before the ship entered the territorial sea, providing the ship is not entering or has not entered internal waters.

Under article 28 of the 1982 Convention, the coastal state should not stop or divert a foreign ship passing through its territorial sea for the purpose of exercising civil jurisdiction in relation to a person on board ship, nor levy execution against or arrest the ship, unless obligations are involved which were assumed by the ship itself in the course of, or for the purpose of, its voyage through waters of the coastal state, or unless the ship is passing through the territorial sea on its way from internal waters. The above rules do not, however, prejudice the right of a state to levy execution against or to arrest, for the purpose of any civil proceedings, a foreign ship lying in the territorial sea or passing through the territorial sea after leaving internal waters.¹⁰²

Warships and other government ships operated for non-commercial purposes are immune from the jurisdiction of the coastal state, although they may be required to leave the territorial sea

⁹⁹ See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, pp. 1844 ff.; and UKMIL, 65 BYIL, 1994, pp. 642–7. See also Cumulative DUSPIL 1981–8, vol. II, p. 1854 with regard to the claim by some states that the passage of nuclear-powered ships or ships carrying nuclear substances through territorial waters requires prior authorisation or prior consent. See also UKMIL, 62 BYIL, 1991, pp. 632–3 with regard to UK views on claims concerning prior authorisation or consent with regard to the passage of ships carrying hazardous wastes.

¹⁰⁰ See e.g. O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapters 23 and 24. See also Oppenheim's International Law, p. 620, and Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, pp. 237 ff. Note that these rules are applicable to foreign ships and government commercial ships.

¹⁰¹ The latter phrase was added by article 27(1) of the 1982 Convention.

¹⁰² See also article 20 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone.

immediately for breach of rules governing passage and the flag state will bear international responsibility in cases of loss or damage suffered as a result.¹⁰³

INTERNATIONAL STRAITS¹⁰⁴

Article 16(4) of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea declares that:

there shall be no suspension of the innocent passage of foreign ships through straits which are used for international navigation between one part of the high seas and another part of the high seas or the territorial sea of a foreign state.

This provision should be read in conjunction with the decision in the Corfu Channel case.¹⁰⁵ In this case, British warships passing through the straits were fired upon by Albanian guns. Several months later, an augmented force of cruisers and destroyers sailed through the North Corfu Channel and two of them were badly damaged after striking mines. This impelled the British authorities to sweep the Channel three weeks later, and to clear it of some twenty mines of German manufacture. The Court, in a much-quoted passage, emphasised that:

states in time of peace have a right to send their warships through straits used for international navigation between two parts of the high seas without the previous authorisation of a coastal state, provided that the passage is innocent.¹⁰⁶

It was also noted that the minesweeping operation was in no way ‘innocent’ and was indeed a violation of Albania’s sovereignty, although the earlier passages by British naval vessels were legal.¹⁰⁷

The 1982 Convention established a new regime for straits used for international navigation. The principle is reaffirmed that the legal status of the waters of the straits in question is unaffected by the provisions dealing with passage.¹⁰⁸

¹⁰³ Articles 29–32 of the 1982 Convention. See also articles 21–23 of the 1958 Convention on the Territorial Sea and the Contiguous Zone; and the Ara Libertad (Argentina v. Ghana) case, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea, Order of 15 December 2012, para. 95, www.itlos.org/index.php?id=222.

¹⁰⁴ See e.g. D. Caron, Navigating Straits, The Hague, 2014; H. Caminos and V. P. Cogliati-Bantz, The Legal Regime of Straits: Contemporary Challenges and Solutions, Cambridge, 2014; Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 11; Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3(4); Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 5; O’Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 8; R. Lapidoth, Les Détroits en Droit International, Paris, 1972; T. L. Koh, Straits in International Navigation, London, 1982; J. N. Moore, ‘The Regime of Straits and the Third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea’, 74 AJIL, 1980, p. 77; W. M. Reisman, ‘The Regime of Straits and National Security’, ibid., p. 48; H. Caminos, ‘Le Régime des Détroits dans la Convention des Nations Unies de 1982 sur le Droit de la Mer’, 205 HR, 1987 V, p. 9; S. N. Nandan and D. H. Anderson, ‘Straits Used for International Navigation: A Commentary on Part III of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea 1982’, 60 BYIL, 1989, p. 159; Oppenheim’s International Law, p. 633; and B. B. Jia, The Regime of Straits in International Law, Oxford, 1998.

¹⁰⁵ ICJ Reports, 1949, p. 4; 16 AD, p. 155.

¹⁰⁶ Ibid., p. 28; 16 AD, p. 161. The Court emphasised that the decisive criterion regarding the definition of ‘strait’ was the geographical situation of the strait as connecting two parts of the high seas, coupled with the fact that it was actually used for international navigation: ibid. Note that article 16(4) added to the customary rights the right of innocent passage from the high seas to the territorial sea of a state. This was of particular importance to the question of access through the straits of Tiran to the Israeli port of Eilat: see further below, note 119.

¹⁰⁷ Ibid., pp. 30–1, 33; 16 AD, pp. 163, 166. Note the final settlement of the case, UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 781.

¹⁰⁸ Articles 34 and 35.

A new right of transit passage is posited with respect to straits used for international navigation between one part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone and another part of the high seas or an exclusive economic zone.¹⁰⁹ It involves the exercise of the freedom of navigation and overflight solely for the purpose of continuous and expeditious transit of the strait and does not preclude passage through the strait to enter or leave a state bordering that strait.¹¹⁰ States bordering the straits in question are not to hamper or suspend transit passage.¹¹¹

There are three exceptions to the right: under article 36 where a route exists through the strait through the high seas or economic zone of similar navigational convenience; under article 38(1) in the case of a strait formed by an island of a state bordering the strait and its mainland, where there exists seaward of the island a route through the high seas or economic zone of similar navigational convenience; and under article 45 where straits connect an area of the high seas or economic zone with the territorial sea of a third state. Ships and aircraft in transit must observe the relevant international regulations and refrain from all activities other than those incidental to their normal modes of continuous and expeditious transit, unless rendered necessary by force majeure or by distress.¹¹² Thus, although there is no formal requirement for 'innocent' transit passage, the effect of articles 38 and 39 would appear to be to render transit passage subject to the same constraints. Under article 45, the regime of innocent passage will apply with regard to straits used for international navigation excluded from the transit passage provisions by article 38(1) and to international straits between a part of the high seas or economic zone and the territorial sea of a foreign state. In such cases, there shall be no suspension of the right to innocent passage.¹¹³ The regime of transit passage specifically allows for the passage of aircraft and probably for underwater submarines, while there are fewer constraints on conduct during passage and less power for the coastal state to control passage than in the case of innocent passage.¹¹⁴ Transit passage cannot be suspended for security or indeed any other reasons.¹¹⁵

It is unclear whether the right of transit passage has passed into customary law. Practice is as yet ambiguous.¹¹⁶ Some states have provided explicitly for rights of passage through international straits. When the UK extended its territorial sea in 1987 to 12 miles, one of the consequences was that the high sea corridor through the Straits of Dover disappeared. The following year an agreement was signed with France which related to the delimitation of the territorial sea in the Straits of Dover and a joint declaration was issued in which both governments recognised:

¹⁰⁹ Article 37. See also R. P. Anand, 'Transit Passage and Overflight in International Straits', 26 IJIL, 1986, p. 72, and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 636.

¹¹⁰ Article 38. ¹¹¹ Article 44.

¹¹² Article 39. Under articles 41 and 42, the coastal state may designate sea lanes and traffic separation schemes through international straits.

¹¹³ Article 45(2).

¹¹⁴ See articles 38–42. See also, as to the differences between the regimes of innocent passage through the territorial sea, transit passage and archipelagic sea lanes passage, Nandan and Anderson, 'Straits', p. 169.

¹¹⁵ Article 44.

¹¹⁶ See Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, p. 113, but cf. O. Schachter, 'International Law in Theory and Practice', 178 HR, 1982, pp. 9, 281.

rights of unimpeded transit passage for merchant vessels, state vessels and, in particular, warships following their normal mode of navigation, as well as the right of overflight for aircraft, in the Straits of Dover. It is understood that, in accordance with the principles governing this regime under the rules of international law, such passage will be exercised in a continuous and expeditious manner.¹¹⁷

A number of straits are subject to special regimes, which are unaffected by the above provisions.¹¹⁸ One important example is the Montreux Convention of 1936 governing the Bosphorus and Dardanelles Straits. This provides for complete freedom of transit or navigation for merchant vessels during peacetime and for freedom of transit during daylight hours for some warships giving prior notification to Turkey.¹¹⁹

THE CONTIGUOUS ZONE¹²⁰

Historically some states have claimed to exercise certain rights over particular zones of the high seas. This has involved some diminution of the principle of the freedom of the high seas as the jurisdiction of the coastal state has been extended into areas of the high seas contiguous to the territorial sea, albeit for defined purposes only. Such restricted jurisdiction zones have been established or asserted for a number of reasons: for instance, to prevent infringement of customs, immigration or sanitary laws of the coastal state, or to conserve fishing stocks in a particular area, or to enable the coastal state to have exclusive or principal rights to the resources of the proclaimed zone.

In each case they enable the coastal state to protect what it regards as its vital or important interests without having to extend the boundaries of its territorial sea further into the high seas. It is thus a compromise between the interests of the coastal state and the interests of other maritime nations seeking to maintain the status of the high seas, and it marks a balance of competing claims. The extension of rights beyond the territorial sea has, however, been seen not only in the context of preventing the infringement of particular domestic laws, but also increasingly as a method of maintaining and developing the economic interests of the ¹¹⁷ Cmnd 557. See also 38 ICLQ, 1989, pp. 416–17 and AFDI, 1988, p. 727. ¹¹⁸ Article 35(c).

¹¹⁹ See e.g. Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, pp. 114 ff. See also UKMIL, 57 BYIL, 1986, p. 581; and F. A. Vali, The Turkish Straits and NATO, Stanford, 1972. Note that the dispute as to the status of the Strait of Tiran and the Gulf of Aqaba between Israel and its Arab neighbours was specifically dealt with in the treaties of peace. Article 5(2) of the Israel–Egypt Treaty of Peace, 1979 and article 14(3) of the Israel–Jordan Treaty of Peace, 1994 both affirm that the Strait and Gulf are international waterways open to all nations for unimpeded and non-suspendable freedom of navigation and overflight. As to the US–USSR Agreement on the Bering Straits Region, see 28 ILM, 1989, p. 1429. See also, as to the Great Belt dispute between Finland and Denmark, M. Koskenniemi, 'L'Affaire du Passage par le Grand-Belt', AFDI, 1992, p. 905. See, as to other particular straits: e.g. Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, pp. 102–4; S. C. Truver, Gibraltar and the Mediterranean, Alphen, 1982; M. A. Morris, The Strait of Magellan, Dordrecht, 1989; G. Alexander, The Baltic Straits, Alphen, 1982; and M. Leiffer, Malacca, Singapore and Indonesia, Alphen, 1978.

¹²⁰ See Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 4(2); Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 3(VI); A. V. Lowe, 'The Development of the Concept of the Contiguous Zone', 52 BYIL, 1981, p. 109; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 7; and O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, chapter 27. See also S. Oda, 'The Concept of the Contiguous Zone', ICLQ, 1962, p. 131; and Oppenheim's International Law, p. 625.

coastal state regarding maritime resources. The idea of a contiguous zone (i.e. a zone bordering upon the territorial sea) was virtually formulated as an authoritative and consistent doctrine in the 1930s by the French writer Gidel,¹²¹ and it appeared in the Convention on the Territorial Sea. Article 24 declared that:

In a zone of the high seas contiguous to its territorial sea, the coastal state may exercise the control necessary to:

- (a) Prevent infringement of its customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary regulations within its territory or territorial sea;
- (b) Punish infringement of the above regulations committed within its territory or territorial sea.

Thus, such contiguous zones were clearly differentiated from claims to full sovereignty as parts of the territorial sea, by being referred to as part of the high seas over which the coastal state may exercise particular rights. Unlike the territorial sea, which is automatically attached to the land territory of the state, contiguous zones have to be specifically claimed.

While sanitary and immigration laws are relatively recent additions to the rights enforceable over zones of the high seas and may be regarded as stemming by analogy from customs regulations, in practice they are really only justifiable since the 1958 Convention. On the other hand, customs zones have a long history and are recognised in customary international law as well. Many states, including the UK and the USA, have enacted legislation to enforce customs regulations over many years, outside their territorial waters and within certain areas, in order to suppress smuggling which appeared to thrive when faced only with territorial limits of 3 or 4 miles.¹²²

Contiguous zones, however, were limited to a maximum of 12 miles from the baselines from which the territorial sea is measured. So if the coastal state already claimed a territorial sea of 12 miles, the question of contiguous zones would not arise.

This limitation, plus the restriction of jurisdiction to customs, sanitary and immigration matters, is the reason for the decline in the relevance of contiguous zones in international affairs in recent years. Under article 33 of the 1982 Convention, however, a coastal state may claim a contiguous zone (for the same purpose as the 1958 provisions) up to 24 nautical miles from the baselines. In view of the accepted 12 miles territorial sea limit, such an extension was required in order to preserve the concept. One crucial difference is that while under the 1958 system the contiguous zone was part of the high seas, under the 1982 Convention it would form part of the exclusive economic zone complex.¹²³ This will clearly have an impact upon the nature of the zone.

¹²¹ A. Gidel, 'La Mer Territoriale et la Zone Contigue', 48 HR, 1934, pp. 137, 241.

¹²² E.g. the British Hovering Acts of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. See O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. II, pp. 1034–8, and the similar US legislation, ibid., pp. 1038 ff.

¹²³ See article 55, which states that the exclusive economic zone is 'an area beyond and adjacent to the territorial seas'. See also www.un.org/depts/los/LEGISLATIONANDTREATIES/claims.htm.

THE EXCLUSIVE ECONOMIC ZONE¹²⁴

This zone has developed out of earlier, more tentative claims, particularly relating to fishing zones,¹²⁵ and as a result of developments in the negotiating processes leading to the 1982 Convention.¹²⁶ It marks a compromise between those states seeking a 200-mile territorial sea and those wishing a more restricted system of coastal state power.

One of the major reasons for the call for a 200-mile exclusive economic zone has been the controversy over fishing zones. The 1958 Geneva Convention on the Territorial Sea did not reach agreement on the creation of fishing zones and article 24 of the Convention does not give exclusive fishing rights in the contiguous zone. However, increasing numbers of states have claimed fishing zones of widely varying widths. The European Fisheries Convention, 1964, which was implemented in the UK by the Fishing Limits Act 1964, provided that the coastal state has the exclusive right to fish and exclusive jurisdiction in matters of fisheries in a 6-mile belt from the baseline of the territorial sea; while within the belt between 6 and 12 miles from the baseline, other parties to the Convention have the right to fish, provided they had habitually fished in that belt between January 1953 and December 1962. This was an attempt to reconcile the interests of the coastal state with those of other states who could prove customary fishing operations in the relevant area. In view of the practice of many states in accepting at one time or another a 12-mile exclusive fishing zone, either for themselves or for some other states, it seems clear that there has already emerged an international rule to that effect. Indeed, the International Court in the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases¹²⁷ stated that the concept of the fishing zone, the area in which a state may claim exclusive jurisdiction independently of its territorial sea for this purpose, had crystallised as customary law in recent years and especially since the 1960 Geneva Conference, and that 'the extension of that fishing zone up to a twelve mile limit from the baselines appears now to be generally accepted'. That much is clear, but the question was whether international law recognised such a zone in excess of 12 miles.

In 1972, concerned at the proposals regarding the long-term effects of the depletion of fishing stocks around her coasts, Iceland proclaimed unilaterally a 50-mile exclusive fishing zone. The UK and the Federal Republic of Germany referred the issue to the ICJ and specifically requested the Court to decide whether or not Iceland's claim was contrary to international law.

The Court did not answer that question, but rather held that Iceland's fishing regulations extending the zone were not binding upon the UK and West Germany, since they had in no way acquiesced in them. However, by implication the ICJ based its judgment on the fact that there did not exist any rule of international law permitting the establishment of a 50-mile fishing zone.

¹²⁴ See e.g. The Exclusive Economic Zone and the United Nations Law of the Sea Convention, 1982–2000 (ed. E. Franckx and P. Gautier), Brussels, 2003; Tanaka, International Law of the Sea, chapter 4(3); Rothwell and Stephens, International Law of the Sea, chapter 4; Brown, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapters 10 and 11; Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 9; D. J. Attard, The Exclusive Economic Zone in International Law, Oxford, 1986; O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 15; Oppenheim's International Law, p. 782; and Daillier et al., Droit International Public, p. 1175. See also F. Orrego Vicuña, 'La Zone Economique Exclusive', 199 HR, 1986 IV, p. 9; Orrego Vicuña, The Exclusive Economic Zone, Regime and Legal Nature under International Law, Cambridge, 1989; B. Kwiatowska, The 200 Mile Exclusive Economic Zone in the New Law of the Sea, Dordrecht, 1989; R. W. Smith, Exclusive Economic Zone Claims. An Analysis and Primary Documents, Dordrecht, 1986; and F. Rigaldies, 'La Zone Economique Exclusive dans la Pratique des États', Canadian YIL, 1997, p. 3.

¹²⁵ O'Connell, International Law of the Sea, vol. I, chapter 14. ¹²⁶ Ibid., pp. 559 ff.

¹²⁷ ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 8, 175; 55 ILR, p. 238.

Similarly, it appeared that there was no rule prohibiting claims beyond 12 miles and that the validity of such claims would depend upon all relevant facts of the case and the degree of recognition by other states.

The Court emphasised instead the notion of preferential rights, which it regarded as a principle of customary international law. Such rights arose where the coastal state was 'in a situation of special dependence on coastal fisheries'.¹²⁸ However, this concept was overtaken by developments at the UN Conference and the 1982 Convention. Article 55 of the 1982 Convention provides that the exclusive economic zone is an area beyond and adjacent to the territorial sea, subject to the specific legal regime established under the Convention.

Under article 56(1), the coastal state in the economic zone has, inter alia:

- (a) sovereign rights¹²⁹ for the purpose of exploring and exploiting, conserving and managing the natural resources, whether living¹³⁰ or non-living, of the waters superjacent to the seabed and of the seabed and its subsoil and with regard to other activities for the economic exploitation and exploration of the zone, such as the production of energy from the water, currents and winds;
- (b) jurisdiction with regard to (i) the architecture and use of artificial islands, installations and structures;¹³¹ (ii) marine scientific research;¹³² (iii) the protection and preservation of the marine environment.¹³³

Article 56(2) provides that: 'In exercising its rights and performing its duties under this Convention in the exclusive economic zone, the coastal state shall have due regard to the rights and duties of other states and shall act in a manner compatible with the provisions of this Convention'. This provision was discussed by the Tribunal in the Mauritius v. UK arbitration concerning the Chagos Marine Protected Area,¹³⁴ where it was found that the term 'due regard' meant no more than that the UK should have 'such regard for the rights of Mauritius as is called for by the circumstances and by the nature of those rights'. However, in the circumstances of the case, the Tribunal found a violation of article 56(2) (and article 2(3)) in that 'the United Kingdom failed properly to balance its own rights and interests with Mauritius' rights arising from the Lancaster House Undertakings. Not only did the United Kingdom proceed on the flawed basis that Mauritius had no fishing rights in the territorial sea

¹²⁸ ICJ Reports, 1974, pp. 23–9; 55 ILR, p. 258.

¹²⁹ In Philippines v. China, Award of 12 July 2016, para. 243, the Tribunal emphasised that: 'The notion of sovereign rights over living and non-living resources is generally incompatible with another state having historic rights to the same resources, in particular if such historic rights are considered exclusive' (emphasis in original). It was also held that Mischief Reef was a low-tide elevation and within the exclusive economic zone of the Philippines and that, therefore, China's construction of an artificial island on the reef, including three airstrips, violated the sovereign rights of the Philippines: paras. 290, 378, 381, 399 and 632–3 and 1203(B)(7) and (14).

¹³⁰ See also articles 61–69. Note that in M/V 'Virginia G' (Panama v. Guinea-Bissau), Judgment of 14 April 2014, para. 217, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held that 'the regulation by a coastal state of bunkering of foreign vessels fishing in its exclusive economic zone is among those measures which the coastal state may take in its exclusive economic zone to conserve and manage its living resources under article 56 of the Convention, read together with article 62, paragraph 4, of the Convention' and noted that '[t]his view is confirmed by state practice which has developed after the adoption of the Convention'.

¹³¹ See also article 60.

¹³² See further Part XIII of the Convention and see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 15.

¹³³ See further Part XII of the Convention and see Churchill and Lowe, Law of the Sea, chapter 14.

¹³⁴ Award of 18 March 2015, paras. 518 ff., at 519.

of the Chagos Archipelago, it presumed to conclude—without ever confirming with Mauritius—that the MPA [Marine Protected Area] was in Mauritius' interest'.¹³⁵ In its first advisory opinion, given on 2 April 2015, the International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea held that the primary responsibility to take the necessary measures to prevent, deter and eliminate illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing within its economic zone lay with the coastal state, but that flag states were also under an obligation to take the necessary measures to ensure that their nationals and vessels flying their flag were not engaged in such fishing.¹³⁶ The Tribunal also found that in the absence of specific rules in the Convention, the general rules on state responsibility would apply. Thus, while flag state liability would not as such be engaged as a result of illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing (since this was not attributable to the flag state under the general rules of state responsibility), such responsibility would arise when the flag state failed to comply with its due diligence obligations to take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that vessels flying its flag did not engage in illegal, unreported, and unregulated fishing in the economic zone of member states, irrespective of the frequency of such acts.¹³⁷

Article 55 provides that the zone starts from the outer limit of the territorial sea, but by article 57 shall not extend beyond 200 nautical miles from the baselines from which the breadth of the territorial sea is measured. Accordingly, in reality, the zone itself would be no more than 188 nautical miles where the territorial sea was 12 nautical miles, but rather more where the territorial sea of the coastal state was less than 12 miles. Where the relevant waters between neighbouring states are less than 400 miles, delimitation becomes necessary.¹³⁸ Islands generate economic zones, unless they consist of no more than rocks which cannot sustain human habitation.¹³⁹

Article 58 lays down the rights and duties of other states in the exclusive economic zone. These are basically the high seas freedom of navigation, overflight and laying of submarine cables and pipelines. It is also provided that in exercising their rights and performing their duties, states should have due regard to the rights, duties and laws of the coastal state. In cases of conflict over the attribution of rights and jurisdiction in the zone, the resolution is to be on the basis of equity and in the light of all the relevant circumstances.¹⁴⁰ Article 60(2) provides that in the exclusive economic zone, the coastal state has jurisdiction to apply customs laws and regulations in respect of artificial islands, installations and structures. The International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea took the view in M/V Saiga (No. 2) (Admissibility and Merits) that a coastal state was not competent to apply its customs laws in respect of other parts of the economic zone.¹⁴¹ Accordingly, by applying its customs laws to a customs radius which included parts of the economic zone, Guinea had acted contrary to the Law of the Sea Convention.¹⁴²

¹³⁵ Ibid., para. 535.

¹³⁶ Award, paras. 106, 110 and 124, https://www.itlos.org/fileadmin/itlos/documents/cases/case_no.21/advisory_opinion/C21_AdvOp_02.04.pdf. See below, p. 477.

¹³⁷ Ibid., para. 150. See also Arctic Sunrise (Netherlands v. Russia), Award of 14 August 2015, pp. 69 ff. concerning the rights of the coastal state to enforce its law regarding non-living resources in the economic zone.

¹³⁸ See further below, p. 441.

¹³⁹ Article 121(3). See also Qatar v. Bahrain, ICJ Reports, 2001, pp. 40, 97; and above, p. 419. ¹⁴⁰ Article 59.

¹⁴¹ 120 ILR, pp. 143, 190. ¹⁴² Ibid., p. 192.

A wide variety of states have in the last two decades claimed exclusive economic zones of 200 miles.¹⁴³ A number of states that have not made such a claim have proclaimed fishing zones.¹⁴⁴ It would appear that such is the number and distribution of states claiming economic zones, that the existence of the exclusive economic zone as a rule of customary law is firmly established. This is underlined by the comment of the International Court of Justice in the Libya/Malta Continental Shelf case¹⁴⁵ that ‘the institution of the exclusive economic zone . . . is shown by the practice of states to have become a part of customary law’.¹⁴⁶

In addition to such zones, some other zones have been announced by states over areas of the seas. Canada has, for example, claimed a 100-mile-wide zone along her Arctic coastline as a special, pollution-free zone.¹⁴⁷ Certain states have also asserted rights over what have been termed security or neutrality zones,¹⁴⁸ but these have never been particularly well received and are rare.

In an unusual arrangement, pursuant to a US-USSR Maritime Boundary Agreement of 1 June 1990, it was provided that each party would exercise sovereign rights and jurisdiction derived from the exclusive economic zone jurisdiction of the other party in a ‘special area’ on the other party’s side of the maritime boundary in order to ensure that all areas within 200 miles of either party’s coast would fall within the resource jurisdiction of one party or the other. It would appear that jurisdiction over three special areas within the USSR’s 200-mile economic zone and one special area within the US’s 200-mile economic zone were so transferred.¹⁴⁹

THE CONTINENTAL SHELF¹⁵⁰

The continental shelf is a geological expression referring to the ledges that project from the continental landmass into the seas and which are covered with only a relatively shallow layer of ¹⁴³ See www.un.org/depts/los/LEGISLATIONANDTREATIES/claims.htm. No state has appeared to claim an economic zone of a different width. See also the US Declaration of an exclusive economic zone in March 1983, which did not, however, assert a right of jurisdiction over marine scientific research over the zone: 22 ILM, 1983, pp. 461 ff. On 22 September 1992, eight North Sea littoral states and the European Commission adopted a Ministerial Declaration on the Coordinated Extension of Jurisdiction in the North Sea in which it was agreed that these states would establish exclusive economic zones if they had not already done so: UKMIL, 63 BYIL, 1992, p. 755.

